MANKIN NEGRO BLOC VOTE BRINGS COMMUNIST APPROVAL

FOR ONCE AND ALL, GET THE TRUTH

READ THE TRUTH NOW... VOTE NOVEMBER 5th

ABOUT THE RACE FOR CONGRESS IN THE 5th GEORGIA DISTRICT

MRS. MANKIN ENDORSED BY COMMUNIST PARTY ORGAN

The welfare and interests of nearly half a million citizens are at stake in the present Congressional Campaign.

Judge James C. Davis defeated his two opponents for Congress in the Democratic Primary, and became the nominee, but one of those opponents, Mrs. Helen D. Mankin, still attempts to masquerade as a Democrat. She does this on the flimsy ground that in July four members of a now defunct contest committee made the ridiculous, unprecedented ruling that the party should have two nomi-

Daily Worker

New York, Monday, March 11, 1946 12 I

PUBLISHED DAILY EXCEPT SUNDAY BY THE FREEDOM OF THE PRESS CO., INC., 50 East 13th St., New York 3, N. Y. Telephone ALgonquin Cable Address: "Daiwork," New York, N.Y.

Howard C. Boldt

The welfare and interests of nearly half a million citizens are at stake in the present Congressional Campaign.

Judge James C. Davis defeated his two opponents for Congress in the Democratic Primary, and became the nominee, but one of those opponents, Mrs. Helen D. Mankin, still attempts to masquerade as a Democrat. She does this on the flimsy ground that in July four members of a now defunct contest committee made the ridiculous, unprecedented ruling that the party should have two nominees for Congress, a silly ruling that has been appealed and reversed by the Democratic Party.

Every other defeated candidate has abided by party rules, accepted defeat honorably, and extended congratulations and support to the nominee. But through fraudulent manipulations, Judge Davis is still opposed by one of his defeated opponents, who has no interest in the Democratic Party, who has in this one campaign twice defied its rules and became a bolter from its ranks, and who, if she were able, would destroy the Democratic Party—if by so doing, she could promote her own political advantage. This double-dealing trickster, who lays claim to political respectability in public places, carries the stigma of repeated endorsements by the communist party's official organ, the Daily Worker.

Its issue of March 11, 1946, endorses her and its issue of July 28, 1946, calls upon Georgia Communists and sympathizers to send her back to Washington.

Communists Plan Revolution

This official organ of that party whose avowed purpose is to bring on revolution in America is published by a negro Communist party member of the City Council of New York City. Our present congresswoman who in the February election was defeated until the Ashby Street box came in and elected her with its 956 block votes, and who was defeated in the July Primary, has found great favor with the communist party and its motley crew of red and pink followers who are anti-freedom, anti-church, anti-decency, anti-American. This is the group who want her in Washington to join hands with them in their program to sabotage the American Government, and place American men and women, boys and girls, churches and schools under their filthy, indecent, communistic, un-American doctrines.

PAC Endorses Mankin

The Communistic Political Action Committee has joined hands with its ally the Daily Worker in repeatedly endorsing Mrs. Mankin. The Political Action Committee endorsed her in February when the Ashby Street block vote changed her from a defeated candidate to an elected candidate and sent her to Washington. It again endorsed her in the July primary, when the Ashby Street box again went overwhelmingly for her by a vote of 3,378 to 143, as did the Forrest Avenue box and all other similar boxes, with the result that in just three of those Negro block vote precincts, Mrs. Mankin received nearly 7,000 votes.

This communistic Political

(Continued on Page 6)

Daily Worker

New York, Monday, March 11, 1946 — 12 I

PUBLISHED DAILY EXCEPT SUNDAY BY THE FREEDOM OF THE PRESS CO., INC., 50 East 13th St., New York 3, N. Y. Telephone ALgonquin 4-7954. Cable Address: "Daiwork," New York, N.Y.

Daily Worker

President—Benjamin J. Davis, Jr.; Secretary-Treas.—Howard C. Boldt
Morris Childs — Editor
Milton Howard — Associate Editor
Alan Max — Managing Editor
Rob F. Hall — Washington Editor
General Manager

The President of
"THE DAILY WORKER"

SOME TASKS Georgia progressives face are:

- To support Mrs. Mankin in her campaign to be seated in Congress on the basis of her large plurality.

★

The Proof: —Here are typical endorsements of Mrs. Mankin by Communist enemies of Georgia and the 5th District. These examples are taken from the March 11, 1946, and July 28, 1946 issues of the official organ of the party, The Daily Worker. When The Daily Worker says "Progressives," it means "Communists."

Mrs. Mankin admits some doubts about permanent FEPC legislation, but that doesn't mean her position is identical with that of Rankin and Bilbo. She says she might be persuaded to support it, and progressives think she will.

This should not be surprising. During ten years in the Georgia Assembly, Mrs. Mankin supported the State application of the New Deal program, and thus won the backing of CIO-PAC and the Negro people of Atlanta.

In fact, it was the vote of the overwhelming Negro precinct of Atlanta that elected Mrs. Mankin. There were 17 candidates for the House seat made vacant by the appointment of former Rep. Robert Ramspeck to a judgeship, and toward the end it appeared that Thomas L. Camp, Ramspeck's secretary, had won. But then the returns from the Negro precinct were brought in, Mrs. Mankin had received 956 votes, or 99 percent of the precinct's total, which gave her a plurality of 792 over Camp.

MUST FIGHT FOR SEAT

Negroes were able to vote for Mrs. Mankin because this was a special election and did not come under the white primary law. In September, Mrs. Mankin must fight for her seat in the primaries.

READ HER FALSE CLAIMS..

RE-ELECT HELEN DOUGLAS MANKIN

As Your Representative

HELEN DOUGLAS MANKIN

TO CONGRESS

Mrs. Mankin's success in Congress has been outstanding! Her voting record is excellent. She has supported bills designed to keep down the cost of living; she is responsible for introducing the bill for terminal leave pay for enlisted men; she is support-

Caught in a Falsehood

On this page are photographs of two ads Mrs. Mankin ran in the July Primary.

The ad to the left claims credit for introducing the G. I. Terminal Leave Pay Bill.

The ad below claims she accomplished its passage.

Both claims are false.

She went to Congress February 25, 1946. Congressman Rogers of Florida introduced the G. I. Terminal Leave Pay Bill September 13, 1945. He pushed the bill through—not Mrs. Mankin.

Read his letter on opposite page.

Her claims about the G. I. Terminal Leave Pay Bill are willfully and knowingly false and untruthful.

Are you one of those whom her brazen frauds have deceived?

Will we keep a Representative who cannot perform, and covers up with false claims?

TO CONGRESS

Mrs. Mankin's success in Congress has been outstanding! Her voting record is excellent. She has supported bills designed to keep down the cost of living; she is responsible for introducing the bill for terminal leave pay for enlisted men; she is supporting Federal Aid to education . . . and she is a staunch supporter of better housing for everyone!

She Has Made a Good Representative; Let's Se
Back to Congress

This Space Is Sponsored By Mankin--For-Congress-Cl

774

In the above advertisement Mrs. Mankin falsely claimed credit for introducing the G.I. Terminal Leave Pay Bill. It was introduced by Congressman Rogers of Florida. Read his letter on opposite page.

Her Claims

In these two advertisements Mrs. Mankin falsely claimed to have introduced and passed the G.I. Terminal Leave Pay Bill. It was introduced and passed by Congressman Rogers of Florida. Read his letter on opposite page.

Leave Pay Bill are willfully and knowingly false and untruthful.

Are you one of those whom her brazen frauds have deceived?

Will we keep a Representative who cannot perform, and covers up with false claims?

Helen Douglas Mankin has been your representative in Congress for four months. During that time she has accomplished many things of benefit to you and your families, among these are: Free school lunches, housing for veterans, terminal leave pay for enlisted men —and above all she has fought hard to keep down the cost of living!

"Helen Douglas Mankin gets things done"

VOTE ON JULY 17th

FOR HELEN DOUGLAS MANKIN

.....THEN READ THE TRUTH

Caught in a Falsehood

Study Mrs. Mankin's two ads on the left. Read Congressman Rogers' letter above. You will see her claims about the Terminal Leave Pay Bill are fraudulent.

Study her other claims.

They are fraudulent too.

1. FREE SCHOOL LUNCHES. The free school lunch bill which passed the House was introduced by Congressman Flanagan of Virginia on June 4, 1945, before Mrs. Mankin went to Congress. It passed the House February 21, 1946, four days before she was seated.

It passed the Senate on February 26, 1946, with amendments. Conference committees were appointed, and she was not a member of either. They ironed out the Bill. Their report was agreed to in the House May 23, and in the Senate May 24th.

The last school year before Mrs. Mankin went to Congress, Georgia received from Washington $2,600,000.00 for free

DWIGHT L. ROGERS
FLORIDA

COMMITTEE: INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

SECRETARIES:
HATTIE MAE COKE
WERDNA I. O'BANNON

FILE REF.:

Congress of the United States
House of Representatives
Washington, D. C.

October 19, 1946.

In re: H. R. 4051, granting Terminal Leave Pay, Known as the Rogers Bill.

Honorable James C. Davis,
Judge of the Stone Mountain Judicial Circuit,
Decatur, Georgia.

Dear Judge:

In reply to your inquiry, I wish to say that I introduced in the House of Representatives House Resolution #4051, which passed the House on June 11, 1946, by a vote of 379 to nothing, it being the bill which provides terminal leave pay for enlisted men.

I introduced this bill on September 13, 1945, during the time Honorable Robert Ramspeck was the Representative in Congress of the 5th District of Georgia, and had a hearing on the bill before a sub-committee of the Military Affairs Committee of the House during the latter part of the year 1945.

The members of the House who most assisted me in getting members to sign the discharge petition were Congressmen Wickersham, of Oklahoma, Beckworth of Texas, Earthman of Tennessee, Tarver of Georgia, and Boren, of Oklahoma, and the Congressional Record will show my February 26, 1946, with amendments. Conference committees were appointed, and she was not a member of either. They ironed out the Bill. Their report was agreed to in the House May 23, and in the Senate May 24th.

The last school year before Mrs. Mankin went to Congress, Georgia received from Washington $2,600,000.00 for free school lunches. This year since she went, it is only $1,800,000.00, a cut of nearly one-third. She not only had nothing to do with originating this legislation; she also has been totally ineffective in maintaining it on its former level for her own people.

2. HOUSING FOR VETERANS. This is another "claim" of accomplishment, with nothing to support it. Ask any veteran—look in any newspaper's want ads. See if Mrs. Mankin has provided houses for the veterans. What is this claim worth in the face of the facts?

3. G. I. TERMINAL LEAVE PAY. Mrs. Mankin claims to have been responsible for introducing this bill. (See her advertisement.) The truth is it was introduced by Congressman Dwight L. Rogers of Ft. Lauderdale, Florida, before she went to Congress—Her claim is absolutely false.

READ CONGRESSMAN ROGERS' OWN STORY—over his own signature—OF HOW THIS LEGISLATION CAME INTO BEING. He publicly thanked the Congressmen who helped him with the bill, and Mrs. Mankin was not one of them. (See his letter.)

4. COST OF LIVING. The OPA is the only real medium through which she could have fulfilled her claims about holding the line for low prices— avoiding inflation—and otherwise helping to lower the high cost of living.

Here is her record on OPA.

She voted on BOTH sides of the OPA bill. The Congressional Record shows that she voted FOR the bill—and afterwards, when the President had VETOED the bill, she voted to SUSTAIN the veto.

This is another instance of the provable fraudulency of the claims which Mrs. Mankin is making in a desperate effort to go to Congress—to demonstrate how utterly without truth and conscience she has been in her feverish determination to deceive the people of the Fifth District—to picture her, in short, in her true colors . . . which are completely FALSE and wilfully deceptive.

Have you been duped by her wilfully false claims?

In reply to your inquiry, I wish to say that I introduced in the House of Representatives House Resolution #4051, which passed the House on June 11, 1946, by a vote of 379 to nothing, it being the bill which provides terminal leave pay for enlisted men.

I introduced this bill on September 13, 1945, during the time Honorable Robert Ramspeck was the Representative in Congress of the 5th District of Georgia, and had a hearing on the bill before a sub-committee of the Military Affairs Committee of the House during the latter part of the year 1945.

The members of the House who most assisted me in getting members to sign the discharge petition were Congressmen Wickersham, of Oklahoma, Beckworth of Texas, Earthman of Tennessee, Tarver of Georgia, and Boren, of Oklahoma, and the Congressional Record will show my acknowledgment of their assistance in a speech before the House on June 11, 1946.

I am proud of the authorship and work that I did on this bill, and if there is any other information I can give you, I will be glad to do so.

With kindest regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

Dwight L. Rogers

174

Mrs. Mankin says SHE did it—but here is an unanswerable letter from Congressman Dwight L. Rogers, of Florida, the man who REALLY introduced the bill to provide terminal leave pay for veterans before Mrs. Mankin went to Congress, and pushed it to a successful conclusion.

A Congresswoman who will steal credit from her colleagues in Congress—as Mrs. Mankin has tried to do—can have no possible influence in getting their cooperation and help in passing legislation to benefit her own district. We need in Congress a real man who CAN—by honest dealing and fair play—get this cooperation from his colleagues.

HER CRIES OF "UNFAIRNESS"

Mrs. Helen D. Mankin, as virtually the only plank in her political platform, claims that she has been treated "unfairly" in her race to become Congresswoman from the Fifth Congressional District of Georgia.

She bases that claim on the fact that Judge James C. Davis (only legal nominee of the Democratic party) was named by Georgia's time-honored county unit system, while she obtained a simple majority of the popular vote, in Fulton County because of Negro block voting there.

She neglects, of course, to point out that former Congressman Peterson, of the First Georgia District, and former Congressman Tarver, of the Seventh Georgia District, had the same thing happen to them. THEY received the majority popular vote, lost by the county unit vote—and are taking fair defeat silently and with the good grace becoming the gentlemen they are.

Honorable James V. Carmichael obtained a majority of the popular vote in the governor's race, but lost in the county unit tabulation. And Jimmy Carmichael hasn't screamed to high heaven about "unfairness"—because he knows the system is right and he is one of its most eloquent champions.

Mrs. Mankin charges that "the rules were changed in the middle of the game"—that the plan of nomination was switched from the popular vote system to the county unit system after her race with Judge Davis had already begun.

That charge also needs debunking.

The facts are these:

New rules are made, and always have been made—to bolt the party which had not made her its legal nominee.

It is Mrs. Mankin—and NOT Judge Davis—who wants to change the rules. In fact, she wants to install a complete new set of rules of her own devising . . . after the game is OVER!

Willful Deception of Veterans

Mrs. Mankin's claim that she persuaded 168 Congressmen to sign a petition to put Congressman Rogers' G. I. Terminal Leave Pay Bill on its passage is as dishonest and fraudulent as her claim that she introduced the bill. This popular bill, the work of Congressman Rogers, passed the House by a vote of 379 to nothing. See his letter on page3.

A congresswoman who falsely and dishonestly claims another Congressman's work can do us no good in Congress.

The veterans need an honest worker—not a dishonest claimer.

The schools need an honest worker—not a dishonest claimer.

The housewives need an honest worker—not a dishonest claimer.

Both labor and industry need an honest worker—not a dishonest claimer.

The 5th District needs an honest worker—not a dishonest claimer.

Mrs. Mankin claims that she "gets things done."

She falsely claims credit for federal funds for school lunches—legislation that was evolving long before she ever set her sights on the Capitol dome (See Page 2).

EVERY FIFTH DISTRICT CONGRESSMAN WHO EVER WENT TO WASHINGTON HAS BEEN ELECTED BY THE COUNTY UNIT SYSTEM—AND ONLY ONE WAS EVER RE-ELECTED BY ANY OTHER METHOD.

Just What Is

Masquerading under the misle Practices Commission," the FEPC negroes without any discriminati their total of available jobs.

Think of this in terms of YOU stenographers, clerks, bookkeeper ployers would be forced to place completely equal footing—even t room facilities. It would force th Negro firemen, and force the Pow car operators.

Real Southerners encourage N working conditions for Negroes . . OF OUR CHERISHED SOUTHERN CAUSE A LAW SAYS WE HAVE T

As the matter stands, now sta southern congressmen who are wil the FEPC could put an employer michael hasn't screamed to high heaven about "unfairness"—because he knows the system is right and he is one of its most eloquent champions.

Mrs. Mankin charges that "the rules were changed in the middle of the game"—that the plan of nomination was switched from the popular vote system to the county unit system after her race with Judge Davis had already begun.

That charge also needs debunking.

The facts are these:

New rules are made, and always have been made—brand-new—for EACH Congressional race every two years. Rules for the Democratic Primary of July 17th, 1946, were laid down by the Fifth District Democratic Committee, on May 3rd.

The committee which made these rules was not appointed; it was ELECTED, by the Fifth District Democratic Convention—just as this committee is always elected.

Mrs. Mankin recognized the validity of this committee, because she not only tried to name her own representative to the committee, but she appeared before it to argue her case.

This committee, on May 3rd, duly and legally ruled that the candidate for Congress from the Fifth District should be named by the county unit system—just as Fifth District Congressmen Lon Livingston, William Schley Howard, William D. Upshaw and Leslie J. Steele had been named—and just as Congressman Bob Ramspeck had been nominated for his first term.

The committee simply decided that it was wise, because of new conditions in the district, to return this year to the county unit system after the popular vote system had been tried.

THE COMMITTEE'S ACTION WAS TAKEN WEEKS BEFORE JUDGE DAVIS EVEN DECIDED TO ENTER THE RACE.

No rules were changed—they were followed to the letter, and, when he was nominated on the county unit system—Judge Davis became the sole and only nominee of the Democratic party.

Any subsequent action by any committee of Mrs. Mankin's personal choosing or by any other individual has absolutely no standing in the Democratic party.

She gave her own tacit endorsement to that fact when she circulated a petition to run as an "independent" in the general election—attesting her willingness

The housewives need an honest worker—not a dishonest claimer.

Both labor and industry need an honest worker—not a dishonest claimer.

The 5th District needs an honest worker—not a dishonest claimer.

Mrs. Mankin claims that she "gets things done."

She falsely claims credit for federal funds for school lunches—legislation that was evolving long before she ever set her sights on the Capitol dome (See Page 2).

She WAS able, let it be admitted, to vote on BOTH sides of the OPA question. The Congressional Record testifies to that: her votes are recorded first for the OPA bill, then against the OPA bill. It is because of this kind of wishy-washy action by Congress that we are now in the midst of inflation and constantly rising high prices.

Yes, of course it is confusing. Her whole record of voting is, for that matter.

From February 26, the day after she took office, and June 12, when the active campaign for the July primary began—records of C Mankin failed to answer to and was recorded as "not vo

That is a total of 43 failur in just two weeks.

What was she "getting do

Think of this in terms of YOU stenographers, clerks, bookkeepe ployers would be forced to place completely equal footing—even room facilities. It would force th Negro firemen, and force the Pow car operators.

Real Southerners encourage N working conditions for Negroes . .
OF OUR CHERISHED SOUTHERN CAUSE A LAW SAYS WE HAVE T

As the matter stands, now sta southern congressmen who are wil the FEPC could put an employer a federal penitentiary without eve

MANKIN IS SUPPORTED BY KNOW WHY AND WHAT THEY

She has straddled the fence on La on both sides of the Case anti-stri m

ARE MOCKERY OF THE TRUTH

CT CON-
EVER
INGTON
BY THE STEM —
AS EVER
OTHER

Hon. James V. Carmichael, defeated by the county unit vote for governor, although he won by the popular vote—took his defeat like a gentleman and without complaint. If Mrs. Mankin is entitled to another chance — so is Jimmy Carmichael.

at Is This FEPC?

er the misleading title of "Fair Employment ," the FEPC would force employers to hire discrimination whatsoever in proportion to e jobs.

rms of YOUR own office. If there are 30 bookkeepers, cashiers, etc. in it, the em- ed to place three negroes in his office on a ing—even to such details as common rest uld force the city to hire Negro policemen, rce the Power Company to hire Negro street ncourage Negro employment and improved Negroes . . . . BUT IN THE FRAMEWORK SOUTHERN TRADITIONS AND NOT BE- WE HAVE TO DO IT.

ds, now stalled in congress by your REAL who are willing to stand up and be counted, n employer who resisted the Commission in

She Calls Herself a "Life-long, Genuine Democrat"

Mrs. Mankin, in the first radio speech of this campaign, paid tribute to herself as a "life-long, genuine Democrat."

Will that statement stand up?

Would a life-long, genuine Democrat, having been defeated for nomination in the regular Democratic primary, start immediately in circulation a petition which (if it had been successful, which it wasn't) would have entitled her to bolt the party and run in the general election as an "independent?"

Would a life-long, genuine Democrat refuse to qualify with the regularly constituted Democratic authorities?

Would a life-long, genuine Democrat refuse to sign the party pledge?

These things are among those things which she has —and has not—done.

Do they sound like the performances of a life-long, genuine Democrat?

(Continued from Page 6)

Senators and Congressmen of Georgia are opposed to the Political Action Committee and the Communist Party and its radical Legislative Program, and have shown it. The Democrats of Georgia who elect these Senators and Congressmen are opposed to the Communist Party and their program and have shown it

Congress like Marcantonio, Mankin and Pepper, who have banded together to defeat every candidate for public office who takes a stand for America, AGAINST their legislative program of radical, vicious and communistic bills, chief among which is the ultra-radical, F.E.P.C. bill.

The F.E.P.C. bill will create trouble was never known before. If the F.E.P.C. bill ever becomes law, it's enforcement will cause a wave of strikes, labor troubles, general disorder and work stoppage to sweep over the country from one end to the other.

Have we forgotten that in Philadelphia, in August, 1944, the war time temporary Fair Employment Practice Committee, in its meddlesome efforts to mix whites and blacks, ordered the Philadelphia Transportation Company to hire eight negroes as motormen and operators? 2,000 streetcar and bus operators petitioned this F.E.P.C. enforcement group not to force the hiring of negroes as operators. Their petitions were disregarded, and the negroes put to work. The 6,000 transportation employees then struck, stopping the transportation of 3,300,000 riders. The F.B.I. came in to investigate the strikers—many were arrested. The government broke the strike with soldiers at bayonet point. This was not in Georgia—It was not in the south—It was in Pennsylvania, a Northern State. It is only a sample of what we may expect if the F.E.P.C. bill becomes law.

FEPC Causes Strikes

lasted for weeks and weeks, and the War Department finally took over the Plant. And instead of bettering the condition of negroes, the F.E.P.C. advocates aim to put them into political slavery, to use them as tools for the nefarious and revolutionary schemes of the communists and the PAC, and to turn all the negro vote into a block vote like that of the Ashby Street box which went for Mrs. Mankin 967 to 7 in February and again 3,378 to 143 in July.

FEPC People Support Mankin

In Februrary, just before Mrs. Mankin's block vote election, she ran an advertisement in which eight Atlanta people endorsed her who had previously signe da petition to Congress to pass the F.E.P.C. bill. In July just before she again received all the negro block vote she ran a similar advertisement in which nine Atlanta people endorsed her who had previously signed the petition to Congress to pass the F.E.P.C. bill.

All these things are not coincidence. They are planned acts of vote-getting to dovetail with such political frauds as printing and distribution of marked sample ballots to block voters, and the like.

And when you send Judge bookkeepers, cashiers, etc. in it, the em-ed to place three negroes in his office on a ing—even to such details as common rest uld force the city to hire Negro policemen, rce the Power Company to hire Negro street

ncourage Negro employment and improved
Negroes . . . . BUT IN THE FRAMEWORK
SOUTHERN TRADITIONS AND NOT BE-WE HAVE TO DO IT.

ds, now stalled in congress by your REAL who are willing to stand up and be counted, n employer who resisted the Commission in without even the justice of a trial by jury!

PORTED BY THE FEPC CROWD. THEY HAT THEY ARE DOING!

cords of Congress show that Mrs.
answer to her name at 27 roll calls as "not voting" at 16 other roll calls.
of 43 failures to represent her people s.

"getting done" during all this time?

genuine Democrat?

(Continued from Page 6)

Senators and Congressmen of Georgia are opposed to the Political Action Committee and the Communist Party and its radical Legislative Program, and have shown it. The Democrats of Georgia who elect these Senators and Congressmen are opposed to the Communist Party and their program, and have shown it. Mrs. Mankin is the only Georgian in Washington who has the endorsement of the communist party's official organ, The Daily Worker, and with the facts out in the open, it is easy to understand why she has it.

The Political Action Committee, as you know, is an organized group of racketeers who have many favorites in Congress like Marcantonio, Mankin and Pepper, who have banded together to defeat every candidate for public office who takes a stand for America, AGAINST their legislative program of radical, vicious and communistic bills, chief among which is the ultra-radical, F.E.P.C. bill.

The F.E.P.C. bill will create more friction between whites and blacks than any law ever written. It is the bill which would force the city of Atlanta to hire Negro city firemen and negro policemen and force the Power Company to hire Negro Street Car operators, force the hiring of Negro cotton mill foremen, telephone operators, stenographers, bookkeepers, and clerks. It will foment trouble where struck, stopping the transportation of 3,300,000 riders. The F.B.I. came in to investigate the strikers—many were arrested. The government broke the strike with soldiers at bayonet point. This was not in Georgia—It was not in the south—It was in Pennsylvania, a Northern State. It is only a sample of what we may expect if the F.E.P.C. bill becomes law.

FEPC Causes Strikes

Another sample of F.E.P.C. action was its order to the Western Electric Company at Point Breeze, Maryland, to tear down all walls and partitions between White and Negro wash rooms and rest rooms, although both whites and negroes were satisfied with separate wash rooms. The partitions were torn down, the employees struck, — The strike block vote she ran a similar advertisement in which nine Atlanta people endorsed her who had previously signed the petition to Congress to pass the F.E.P.C. bill.

All these things are not coincidence. They are planned acts of vote-getting to dovetail with such political frauds as printing and distribution of marked sample ballots to block voters, and the like.

And when you send Judge Davis to Congress, there he will be found standing on the side of these other Georgia Senators and Congressmen, filling that gap in their ranks which opened when Mrs. Mankin went to Congress. Judge Davis will be on the side of Georgia, and AGAINST these advocates of the infamous F.E.P.C. bill, who are Mrs. Mankin's friends, supporters and endorsers.

nce on Labor legislation, on price inflation legislation and on FEPC legislation. She voted e anti-strike bill, she voted on both sides of the OPA bill—and has dodged every vote on motions to place the FEPC bill on its passage.

EXCERPTS FROM JUDGE DAVIS' MESSAGES TO THE PEOPLE!

"Throughout the generations, the voters of the Fifth Congressional District have found it wise to use the county unit system. A long list of Congressmen, including Honorables Lon Livingston, William Schley Howard, Leslie J. Steele, William D. Upshaw—all of these men were elected to serve as our congressmen on the county unit system. Hon. Bob Ramspeck was elected to his first term by the county unit vote. Conditions which had arisen in the district caused the committee to return to it this year, after giving the popular vote method a trial during the remainder of Mr. Ramspeck's service.

"Other candidates have been defeated this year and in the past, who received a majority of the popular votes, but lost the county unit majority. Neither Congressman Tarver, in the Seventh District, nor Congressman Peterson, in the First District, will go back to Congress in January. They ran on the county unit system, and both were defeated, although both received larger popular votes than their opponents. They submitted gracefully to that defeat because they honor their party and obey its rules."

"No rules have been 'changed in the middle of the game.' No candidate has been treated 'unfairly.' The rules were made and announced long before I or any other candidate entered the race. The cold truth is that one of the two opponents I defeated in the July primary made an effort to change the rules after the game was over! This candidate wanted to play the whole game over by a set of rules of her own devising."

* * *

"The Fifth District congressional race has taken on peculiar characteristics. In Georgia, which is a traditional and unshakable stronghold of the Democratic Party—a virtual TRAITOR to the Democratic Party is found trying to run for Congress on the Democratic ticket. The ground upon which my already defeated opponent, this block vote candidate, claims to be a Democratic nominee is the freakish, preposterous contention that TWO Democratic nominees should run for Congress in the general election."

"There are two groups of people with whom the ranting demagoguery of Mrs. Mankin has not injured me, and will not injure me—namely, those people who know ME, and those people who know Mrs. Mankin."

* * *

"You have heard my defeated opponent, the block vote candidate, introduce new and foreign terms of scurrility into her radio broadcasts and her other propaganda. She has made us acquainted with such epithets as gangster, political trickster, court-house ring and dictator, imported from the ward-heelers of Chicago, New York and other centers of machine politics where such tactics prevail. She has even introduced Communist terms straight from Moscow—calling me OGPU Davis, a Communistic term known only to her Communistic supporters."

* * *

"My defeated opponent, the Communistically endorsed block-vote, party-bolting candidate, is desperately trying to hold herself in the party she twice repudiated. No official of the Democratic Party has ever sustained Mrs. Mankin's claim for a place on the Democratic ticket, except four members of the now-defunct former State Executive Committee, whose preposterous ruling has now been reversed."

POOR LOSERS — WHEN HONESTLY

Can Labor find out how

A CANDIDATE ELECTED BY A CON-

the past, who received a majority of the popular votes, but lost the county unit majority. Neither Congressman Tarver, in the Seventh District, nor Congressman Peterson, in the First District, will go back to Congress in January. They ran on the county unit system, and both were defeated, although both received larger popular votes than their opponents. They submitted gracefully to that defeat because they honor their party and obey its rules."

tual TRAITOR to the Democratic Party is found trying to run for Congress on the Democratic ticket. The ground upon which my already defeated opponent, this block vote candidate, claims to be a Democratic nominee is the freakish, preposterous contention that TWO Democratic nominees should run for Congress in the general election."

her Communistic supporters.

* * *

"My defeated opponent, the Communistically endorsed block-vote, party-bolting candidate, is desperately trying to hold herself in the party she twice repudiated. No official of the Democratic Party has ever sustained Mrs. Mankin's claim for a place on the Democratic ticket, except four members of the now-defunct former State Executive Committee, whose preposterous ruling has now been reversed."

POOR LOSERS — WHEN HONESTLY DEFEATED — MAY USUALLY BE IDENTIFIED BY THEIR CRIES OF "UNFAIRNESS, UNFAIRNESS"!

Can Labor find out how Mrs. Mankin stands? She voted both FOR and AGAINST the Case anti-strike bill.

A CANDIDATE ELECTED BY A CONTROLLED BLOCK VOTE HAS NO RIGHT TO GROW ELOQUENT ABOUT "FREEDOM OF THE FRANCHISE"

MANKIN ENDORSED BY COMMUNISTS

(Continued from Page 1)

Action Committee wants laws enacted to legalize the program under which they propose for their foreign-born racketeers to bore in and take over honest labor unions and honest American and Georgia workers by such terroristic methods as murder, dynamitings, fires, beatings, shootings and stabbings. They will put their program over, if they can elect and re-elect to Congress their stooges and rubber stamps, who are willing to accept their endorsement and their support, and the endorsement and support of communists, and who are willing to destroy party, surrender principle, and be the willing tool of subversive elements in order to get in office and stay in office.

The Political Action Committee's racketeering legislative program is dangerous and menacing. It is so recognized by every Georgian in the House and Senate EXCEPT the Congresswoman from the Fifth District. The Political Action Committee itself has tabulated the votes of Georgia Senators and Congressmen as they voted for and against its radical bills. The result was published in the Atlanta Constitution of August 19th. This report shows that this kind of action was taken by Georgians in Washington: Senator Russell voted ten times against PAC bills and not once in favor of any of them; Congressman Cox eight times against their bills, not once for them; Congressman Gibson six times against, not once for; Tarver, ten times against, not once for; Wood, eight times against, not once for; Vinson, seven times against, not once for. But when we look at Mankin's place on this list of those standing up to be counted, we find the situation completely and totally reversed. How did SHE vote? In the short period of her four-month service we find that she voted six times in favor of the Political Action Committee's bills and not once against. All the other

(Continued on Page 7)

Another Mankin Claim Shown Completely False

In her letter to DeKalb County voters dated July 6th, Mrs. Mankin claimed she had obtained funds "for the extension of electrical lines into the outlying Districts of DeKalb."

This claim was utterly false. Mr. Hugh Aiken had at that time been President of the Snapping Shoals Electric Membership Corporation for four years and in an affidavit* he says:

"Georgia, ROCKDALE COUNTY:

Personally before me appeared Hugh Aiken, who says on oath that he was president of the Snapping Shoals Electric Membership Corporation on July 6, 1946, and had been since August, 1944. He further says that a part of said R.E.A. Co-operative's lines cover rural sections of DeKalb County. He further says that at no time has Congresswoman Mankin aided or assisted said R.E.A. Co-operative in obtaining any funds for extension of electrical lines in DeKalb County, and has not assisted said R.E.A. Co-operative in any other manner whatsoever. He further says that said R.E.A. Co-operative has never needed congressional assistance in obtaining funds, because the Washington office has GENERALLY WANTED TO ALLOT MORE money to the local corporation than it could use."

Sgd./HUGH AIKEN.

Sworn to and Subscribed before me this October 22, 1946.
Sgd./L. M. McDowell
Clerk Superior Court
Rockdale County

 Original on file.

Mankin's Startling Record of Voting Against the Interests of Georgia and Our Fifth District

The Political Action Committee itself has tabulated the votes of Georgia senators and representatives as they voted for and against the radical bills of the PAC. The result was published in The Atlanta Constitution of August 19. This report shows that Senator Russell voted ten times AGAINST PAC bills and not once in favor of any of them; Congressman Cox eight times AGAINST their bills, not once for them; Congressman Gibson six times AGAINST, not once for; Tarver, ten times AGAINST, not once for; Wood, eight times AGAINST, not once for; Vinson, seven times AGAINST, not once for.

BUT . . . when we look at Mankin's place on this list of those standing up to be counted, we find the situation completely reversed. How did SHE vote?

In the short period of her four-months' service, we find that she voted SIX TIMES IN FAVOR of the PAC's bills—and NOT ONCE AGAINST!

	For PAC Bills	Against PAC Bills
Senator GEORGE	1	10 times
Senator RUSSELL	0	10 times

Controlled Ward Wins

"Controlled wards" have given the political "obts" a chance to tear their hair for many years in Chattanooga. Those who have raved over this condition can cast their eyes on Atlanta and observe how "controlled wards" work when they are "controlled" for the "liberal" side.

Helen Douglas Mankin was nominated for Congress in the Atlanta district yesterday to succeed Robert Ramspeck, Democrat. She was elected over 17 male opponents. Her plurality over Thomas L. Camp, her nearest competitor, once a candidate for the Senate nomination against George, was 770. She ran with CIO support. Negroes voted in the primary for the first time. In the Third Ward of Atlanta, predominantly Negro, the vote was 956 for the woman against seven for Camp. No comment is necessary; merely analyze the figures and realize who picked the winner.

Chattanooga, Tenn. Times

Toledo, Ohio Blade

NEWSWEEK

Georgia's Black Ballots

It was all over but the shouting. Only one precinct was still uncounted in last week's special election in Georgia's Fifth Congressional District. Thomas L. Camp, for fifteen years secretary to Rep. Robert Ramspeck, apparently had won over seventeen opponents to succeed his former boss, who quit to join the Air Transport Association.

Then came the upset. The missing precinct, an overwhelmingly Negro area of Atlanta with only ten white voters, rolled up 956 votes, or 99 per cent of its total, for Mrs. Helen Douglas Mankin, 49-year-old Atlanta lawyer who drove an ambulance in France in 1917-18. That precinct's tally swung the election to Mrs. Mankin by a 792-vote plurality over Camp She thus became Georgia's first congresswoman, and the tenth in the House (five Democrats, five Republicans)

Promptly The Atlanta World, a Negro newspaper, boasted that "the Negro vote [6,800 out of 30,000 voters] had decided the race in a photo finish" White newspapers confined their comment to stiff editorials of congratulations to the Congresswoman.

Mrs Mankin, a veteran of ten years in the Georgia Assembly, had gone down the line for the New Dealish program of Gov Ellis Arnall. She had won the backing of the CIO Political Action Committee and had voted to remove the poll tax. But aware that she might have to run for renomination in a Democratic "white primary"* next September, she avoided the Solid South's hot potato. "I don't recall that I have ever taken an open stand on admitting Negroes to the Democratic primaries."

*Georgia's "white primary," from which Negroes are barred, has been declared unconstitutional, but an appeal will be argued in the Federal Court of Appeals in New Orleans this month.

Newsweek

Thomas L. Stokes

New Day For Negro Voters Seems Possible With Changes In South

ATLANTA, Feb 26—Negro participation in the recent special election in the Fifth Congressional District of this deep south state was much more significant than indicated by the bare facts.

Thomas L. Stokes

In a way, because of the size of the vote and its influence on the result, it was a break with tradition

As already reported, Negroes contributed the margin of victory for Mrs. Helen Douglas Mankin, who has taken her seat in the House of Representatives. This is important as a matter of politics.

But beyond that, exploration of the background of this particular election reveals a most encouraging recognition by the many intelligent Negroes here of the responsibility of citizenship. It explodes some old myths, removes some old phobias, and points out the path for gradual extension of the franchise to Negroes in the south which responsible white leaders now accept as certain. Practical politicians have become conscious of this inevitable trend

Obligation Taken Seriously

This election experience followed a thorough course of preparation by the intelligent Negro leadership which is taking its obligations seriously. They recognize their opportunity and want nothing to happen that will mar it or set back progress toward full citizenship.

Leaders in Atlanta's several Negro colleges and universities have emphasized the obligations and responsibilities of citizenship, so that keen interest has been aroused among the students On a much broader basis, Negro ministers and churches have been active. Sunday evening forums on public affairs have become a regular part of church activity. Both the Negro YMCA and YWCA are holding regular public discussions

Emphasis is on careful study of issues and education in citizenship. Negroes are urged to think for themselves and to vote as individuals. The leaders, for example, were careful in the recent election here to stress such individual responsibility. Though Mrs. Mankin received a large proportion of the Negro vote, not one Negro organization indorsed her candidacy.

Example For Citizenship

White civic leaders have been impressed. They point to it as a fine example for white citizenship. The recent election offered a nice moral, for only 25,000 votes were cast out of a possible 125,000 in this district.

The big Negro vote was in B precinct of the Third Ward, a community which includes two Negro housing projects and some of the Negro university area. About 2,000 Negroes were registered there. About 1,000 voted. The polls were manned by Negro election officials.

Mrs. Mankin received 956 votes in that precinct with only a handful for her leading opponent, Thomas L. Camp. She won by 770 votes. Much has been made of this precinct voting last. But the facts are there was a heavy vote toward the end of the day when the Negroes got off from work and when the doors of the polling place were closed many waiting inside had to be taken care of, so the counting was delayed. Two long lines still waiting outside could not vote.

This was a general election, and Negroes are entitled to vote in general elections, though not many do so. The real test comes in the primary in September when Mrs. Mankin will be up for reelection, along with other members of Congress.

	For PAC Bills	Against PAC Bills
Senator GEORGE	1	10 times
Senator RUSSELL	0	10 times
Congressman COX	0	8 times
Congressman GIBSON	0	6 times
Congressman TARVER	0	10 times
Congressman WOOD	0	8 times
Congressman VINSON	0	7 times
Mrs. H. D. MANKIN	6	0 times

The above table proves beyond shadow of a doubt that the PAC-FEPC Candidate has voted consistently FOR the very things that our true Southerners representing the rest of the state have boldly stood AGAINST. Look at the box-score above and see how completely Mrs. Mankin's voting conflicts with that of other Georgians.

...out of 30,000 voters] had decided that "the Negro vote the race in a photo finish." White newspapers confined their comment to stiff editorials of congratulations to the Congresswoman.

Mrs Mankin, a veteran of ten years in the Georgia Assembly, had gone down the line for the New Dealish program of Gov Ellis Arnall. She had won the backing of the CIO Political Action Committee and had voted to remove the poll tax. But aware that she might have to run for renomination in a Democratic "white primary"* next September, she avoided the Solid South's hot potato. "I don't recall that I have ever taken an open stand on admitting Negroes to the Democratic primaries."

*Georgia's "white primary," from which Negroes are barred, has been declared unconstitutional, but an appeal will be argued in the Federal Court of Appeals in New Orleans this month.

Mrs. Mankin wins Atlanta's Negro vote — Acme

Example For Citizenship

White civic leaders have been impressed. They point to it as a fine example for white citizenship. The recent election offered a nice moral, for only 25,000 votes were cast out of a possible 125,000 in this district.

The big Negro vote was in B precinct of the Third Ward, a community which includes two Negro housing projects and some of the Negro university area. About 2,000 Negroes were registered there. About 1,000 voted. The polls were manned by Negro election officials.

Mrs. Mankin received 956 votes in that precinct with only a handful for her leading opponent, Thomas L. Camp. She won by 770 votes. Much has been made of this precinct voting last. But the facts are there was a heavy vote toward the end of the day when the Negroes got off from work and when the doors of the polling place were closed many waiting inside had to be taken care of, so the counting was delayed. Two long lines still waiting outside could not vote.

This was a general election, and Negroes are entitled to vote in general elections, though not many do so. The real test comes in the primary in September when Mrs. Mankin will be up for reelection, along with other members of Congress.

Test Case In Court

A test case on Negro participation in Georgia primaries now is pending in a Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. Georgia federal court upheld the right of Negroes to participate in primaries. The test case ultimately will go to the Supreme Court which already has decided for Negro participation in primaries in the Texas case.

Whether the final decision comes before September or not, it is believed that the ice is broken in Georgia. A new day for the Negroes as citizens seems in sight, though there will be efforts to restrict and limit the franchise in one way or another.

Missoula, Montana

Not Chivalry

At long last, as the Duke of Windsor might say, Georgia has sent a woman to Congress. But, we judge, it wasn't Southern chivalry that did it. The Negroes of Atlanta claim their votes were responsible and the politicians are in no position to make convincing denial. The whole affair is a bewildering anomaly.

774 IPEC

ADVERTISING GEORGIA throughout the nation as a block-vote state is just one of Mrs. Mankin's sidelines in her political campaigning. These reproductions from the magazine News-Week and other publications are a few of many examples of her efficiency in this respect.

The Communist 'Daily Worker' is AGAINST Secretary of State Byrnes, J. Edgar Hoover, director of the F.B.I., and against Georgia, but is FOR Helen D. Mankin!

WE NEED A REAL MAN TO REPRESENT US IN CONGRESS

A native Georgian, Judge Davis is the grandson of two Confederate veterans,—a dyed-in-the-red-clay Southerner in principle and affections. He was a sergeant in the Marines in World War I, has been a member of the American Legion since 1921, chairman of its potent Americanism committee in Georgia for three consecutive years. He is now serving as a member of the Legion State Commission on Post-war activities.

An alumnus of old Emory College at Oxford, he studied law at night after he went to work in Atlanta, and was admitted to the bar in 1919. He was president of the Atlanta Lawyers Club in 1924-1925, Vice President of the Atlanta Bar Association in 1928 and president of the Stone Mountain Circuit Bar Association in 1934.

He has been judge of the Superior Court of the Stone Mountain Circuit for the past twelve years.

Prior to his popular election to the bench, he has served DeKalb County in the Georgia Legislature (1924-1928), was attorney for the Georgia Department of Industrial Relations (Workmen's Compensation) for three years, and County Attorney for DeKalb County (1921-1924)

Vice President of the Atlanta Bar Association in 1928 and president of the Stone Mountain Circuit Bar Association in 1934.

He has been judge of the Superior Court of the Stone Mountain Circuit for the past twelve years.

Prior to his popular election to the bench, he has served DeKalb County in the Georgia Legislature (1924-1928), was attorney for the Georgia Department of Industrial Relations (Workmen's Compensation) for three years, and County Attorney for DeKalb County (1931-1934).

During his legal, legislative and judicial career, Judge Davis has been acclaimed for his integrity, his courage, his fairness, and his unremitting championship of justice and right for all. His unimpeachable character in private life has been further fortified by a steadfast loyalty to his state, his section and his nation, and he has given freely of his time and energies to civic and patriotic endeavor.

As an example of his unselfish efforts in war services, he was recently awarded a Certificate of Merit by President Truman.

Judge Davis lives on a 120-acre farm and is a notable breeder of Aberdeen-Angus cattle—just one example of how closely his mind is attuned to the agricultural interests of Georgia and the South.

He has never shirked a public duty, never dodged an issue. Judge James C. Davis — true Georgian, fervent Southerner, loyal American — is the fearless, red-blooded, able and energetic type of man we need to give us REAL REPRESENTATION in Washington's halls of Congress.

Vote For The Only Democratic Nominee

Judge James C. DAVIS

General Election Nov. 5th

MAILS FLOODED BY A TORRENT OF RED PROPAGANDA

Myriad Committees Emit Smears, Fund Pleas

BY WILLARD EDWARDS

[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 8—A flood of pro-soviet propaganda jams the mails daily under the letter heads of scores of organizations, most of them with interlocking directorates, indicating a unified management.

Congressional investigators assert some 150 such groups operate out of New York City alone. Some serve their purpose in a few months and disappear. Others become too closely identified with the communist movement and change their names, tho not their officers.

These "societies," "leagues," and "associations" have various methods of attack. Some are smear organizations which specialize in assailing "American fascists," a term applied to all who don't want communism in this country. Some are collection agencies for "Russian relief." Some seek to purge congress of all who have raised a voice against Russian Dictator Stalin. Some emphasize the "one world government" theme.

National Fund Drive On

Those seeking to raise funds to be sent direct to Russia are restrained in their literary output. Leader of these groups is Russian Relief, Inc., successor to Russian War Relief, Inc., which collected $35,735,397 in the 1942-1945 period for Russia. It now is staging a nation-wide drive for additional millions for Russian "rehabilitation."

This organization has a letter from State Secretary Byrnes which it sends along with its requests for contributions. Byrnes says the Russian people's needs are still great and hopes the organization can continue its activities.

A printed speech by W. Averill Harriman, former ambassador to Russia, made in New York March 19, is also used with telling effect. Harriman stated that American funds would serve to remove "ugly suspicions" aroused by "serious differences with the soviet government" and offer "visible proof that we desire in all sincerity to walk with them as comrades along the road to world peace."

Lauds Group's Head

Harriman in the same speech lauded Edward C. Carter, head of the organization. Carter has a long list of affiliations with communist front organizations, according to the records of congressional investigations. He was secretary general of the Institute of Pacific Relations, of which officers of the notorious American Peace Mobilization were leaders. He was a member of the board of directors of the American Russian institute. Of Russian war relief under his leadership, the house committee on un-American activities, reported:

"The organization is firmly in the hands of those who have a history of close coöperation with the soviet union, the Communist party, or its satellite front organizations."

Active propaganda organizations of the moment include the following:

National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, Inc., which circulates a bi-weekly publication known as the Reporter. This publication approaches the hysterical in its defense of soviet policies. It asserted on June 15, for example, that it was "slanderous" to accuse Russia of "expansionist" desires. Corliss Lamont, described by a report of the house committee on un-American activities, as the "most persistent propagandist for the soviet union in the United States," and Richard Morford, chairman and director, respectively, have been cited by the house of representatives for contempt in refusing to disclose the records of this organization to congressional investigators.

Leader Cited for Contempt

The National Federation for Constitutional Liberties. George Marshall, chairman, has just been cited for contempt by the house for insisting that federation records should not be opened to congress or the public. The federation, born in 1940 under direct Communist party sponsorship, called President Roosevelt's foreign policy "fascist" during the Hitler-Stalin pact, but made an abrupt policy switch when Hitler invaded Russia in June, 1941.

Joint Anti-Facist Refugee Committee, which was created in 1942 by the merger of the Exiled Writers' committee, the American Committee to Save Refugees, and the United American Spanish Aid committee. Chairman Edward J. Barsky and Secretary Helen R. Bryan, both with many communist front affiliations, have been cited with 15 other officials for contempt of the house for refusing to disclose the nature of their operations.

Action Committee to Free Spain Now, formed by the American Committee for Spanish Freedom and Veterans of the Abraham Lincoln brigade, which have lengthy communist front records in the list of the house un-American activities committee. The Daily Worker, official communist daily, frequently lauds this group's work.

Independent Citizens Committee of the arts, sciences and professions, headed by Jo Davidson, the sculptor, who sponsored the Congress of American-Soviet friendship, a communist front. James Roosevelt, eldest son of the late President Roosevelt, last month resigned his directorship of this committee to assume duties as chairman of the California State Central Democratic committee. The committee was hailed as "a great political weapon" at the Communist party convention in June. 1945.

National Committee to Win the Peace, which organized a "win-the-peace" conference in Washington last April. In the opinion of congressional investigators, this group is a revival of the old American Peace Mobilization, which picketed the White House during the Stalin-Hitler pact. Its sponsors include Harry R. Bridges, president, CIO International Longshoremen's union; Julius Emspak, secretary-treasurer, CIO United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, and Rep. Marcantonio [A. L., N. Y.], house spokesman for the Daily Worker.

National Citizens Political Action Committee, headed by Jack Kroll, successor to the late Sidney Hillman. This committee has an 83 per cent pro-communist membership, a congressional investigation disclosed, and "represents the Communist party's supreme bid for political power." It recently held a "school for political action techniques" in Washington, at which 500 organizers were taught how to purge congress.

One Sponsors Broadcasts

Forum for Democracy, which sponsors weekly radio broadcasts over a New York station.

Veterans Against Discrimination, backed by the Communist party, according to the Daily Worker.

American Veterans Committee, headed by Charles Bolte, a British army veteran. It denies communist connections, but receives almost daily praise in the communist Daily Worker.

American Youth for Democracy, successor to the Young Communist league which for many years was a major Communist party weapon.

The International Workers Order, cited by the justice department as a subversive organization.

Women Shoppers' Group

The League of Women Shoppers, which has an extensive history in congressional records of coöperation with the communist front movement.

The National Negro Congress, similarly long affiliated with Communist party operations.

Southern Conference for Human Welfare, the communist front organization of southern states, operations of which are lengthily reviewed in the un-American activities committee's history of communist fronts.

Congressional investigators study the Daily Worker, official communist organ, to keep in touch with the activities of communist front organizations. Among groups recently lauded by this newspaper, in addition to those listed above, are the following:

Federation of American Scientists, praised for its "vigorous fight for civilian control of atomic energy" and hailed as "principal factor behind defeat of the military lobby."

Trade Union Group Included

The National Association for Advancement of the Colored People.

World Federation of Trade Unions, support of which was urged by William Z. Foster, head of the Communist Party of the United States.

National Lawyers guild.

Emergency committee for civil rights.

Freedom Films, a motion picture corporation which has produced a film "depicting the Daily Worker's fight for civil liberties."

National Maritime union, CIO, headed by Joseph Curran, who has a long record for pro-communist activities in congressional records.

Others are the New York Committee to Win the Peace, American Youth for Democracy, Interracial fellowship, Union for Democratic Action, Civil Rights Congress, Japanese-American Committee for Democracy, National Council for African Affairs, Jefferson School of Social Science, National Farmers' union, Parents United Against Bigotry, and Contemporary Writers, described by the Worker as an organization of "Marxist and anti-fascist writers."

Tells Communist Operations

All these groups are active in the distribution of propaganda. In connection with their operations in various fields, Ruth McKenney, member of the Communist party, stated some time ago that "the Communist party of America operates in trade unions, farm organizations, ladies' clubs, in Harlem, in the deep south, among the intellectuals."

The justice department's brief in the Harry Bridges deportation case gave this explanation of communist fronts: "Testimony on front organizations showed that they were represented to the public for some legitimate form of justice, or reform objective, but actually used by the Communist party to carry on activities pending the time when the Communists believe they can seize power thru revolution."

A typical example of the propaganda issued by communist fronts is that emanating from the "Reporter on American-Soviet Relations" in its June 15 issue, which was reprinted and distributed by the thousands by the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, Inc. It assailed John Foster Dulles, an adviser at the foreign ministers conference; for two articles on Russia in June issues of Life magazine.

Charge "Slanders"

Dulles merely advanced the theory that Russia was embarked on an expansion program and cited as evidence the north of Finland, eastern Poland, the Baltic states, Port Arthur, the Kurile and Sakhalin Islands. He also mentioned eastern Germany and eastern Austria, Romania, Bulgaria, and Hungary as being under soviet control or behind an iron curtain imposed by soviet policy.

The Reporter shrilly attacked this statement as "a catalogue of fancies, misstatements, and slanders."

"The truth is," the Reporter stated, "that the soviet union has based its foreign policy on consistently seeking to establish peaceful relations with all kinds of nonsoviet nations on a reciprocal basis of recognition. . . . As for the 'iron curtain' it is a rusty Churchillian fable. . . . The United States has virtually instituted an economic boycott of the soviet union."

Denies Wife's Charge

[Associated Press Wirehpoto]

William Lee Gantt Jr., former sailor at Atlanta, Ga., listening at his radio after he was freed on bond on a charge by his wife that he forced her into a lonely grave and threatened her life. Gantt denied that he would "try to force Janie to do anything."

News and Observer
8/27/46

Baptist Leader Reports On His Travels in Russia

Dr. Louie Newton, Southern Baptist Convention President, Gives Report

(Given below are excerpts from an address given by Dr. Louie D. Newton, president of the Southern Baptist Convention, in Atlanta on Sunday. Dr. Newton reported Sunday to a mass meeting on his recent tour of Russia.

(Two pickets carrying a large sign reading "Is Louie D. Newton Selling Communism to the U.S.A.?" were removed by police from in front of the auditorium where he spoke. Earlier reports by Dr. Newton on his trip were criticized by O. K. Armstrong, Missouri Baptist leader).

Let me say by way of explanation that I was in Russia for only 25 days. One cannot see as much of a country so vast as Russia in so short a visit as he would wish to see in order to make a satisfactory report. What I shall say in this address is based on what I did actually see and hear during that short period of 25 days. I may add this further word of explanation, that in the 25 days and nights spent in Russia, I travelled by plane approximately 11,000 miles and by automobile approximately 2,000 miles, and I estimate that I walked more miles in those 25 days and nights than I have in the past 25 years. I estimate that I slept an average of three hours per night, which turned around the other way means that I lost approximately 105 hours of sleep while I was in Russia. Some idea of the territory covered in our tour of Russia may be gained by looking at your map of the USSR and drawing a line from Leningrad northward to the Urals, then southward to the Caspian Sea, then along the southern border back to the Baltic Sea. We operated from Moscow as headquarters, flying in an official Soviet plane to the principal cities of European Russia, and using automobiles, sometimes necessarily jeeps, for the trips where the plane could not be brought down. Always, we walked where even a jeep could not go. In at least one instance, I rode horseback where the jeep could not negotiate the terrain.

The invitation to visit Russia came through the Russia War Relief Society, and read as follows: "To inspect the uses to which gifts of relief from America were put, to inspect medical, educational, cultural and religious institutions, and to confer with Soviet officials." As a matter of fact, the scope of our visit went well beyond these terms. Our extensive tour of the country was under the direction of VOKS, the public relations department of the USSR, and the Russian Red Cross and Crescent Society. Mrs. Mary Naimark, official UNRRA interpreter, was loaned to our delegation as our official interpreter, but in addition to Mrs. Naimark, we had three other expert interpreters.

Gives History.

Russia! How well do you know your history of Russia? Write down this date—862. It was about the middle of the Ninth Century that a Scandinavian adventurer, Rurik by name, settled at Novgorod with a war-like band of followers, and drove back the Scythian and Samatrian tribes. Later came the Slavs from the Baltic region, making a settlement as far inland as Kiev. Thus Kiev became the first capital of the vast area known as Russia. Early rulers were Oleg, Igor, Olga, Vladimir the Great. It was Vladimir who first embraced Christianity and brought the Greek Orthodox Church into Russia, in 988. Vladimir's sons ruled one after another until they became weak, and the Mongol tide from Asia swept across the plains, overwhelming Russia for 200 years. Then came the mighty Ivan, assume to take the record for granted for the purposes of this address. Only remember this: One must read Tolstoi, Marx, Gorki and the other popular Russian and German and French authors of the past several hundred years to understand properly how Socialism and Communism have been enthroned in the Russia of today. Aye, one must follow Lenin and Stalin through their revolutionary underground plans to be conversant with what is going on in the minds of millions of people in Russia and France and China and other parts of the world today.

I wish you might have stood with me in my suite in the National Hotel and looked out upon the long, long lines of people, waiting silently to view the recumbent statue of Lenin in the magnificent tomb of the Kremlin. I wish you might have been with me in the stadium in Moscow with 93,000 people jamming every available seat, when Stalin entered his box—to witness their frightening adulation of their leader. You then would have some conception of how tremendous is the present power of this one man in Russia and in the world today.

Democracy Answer.

What do I think of Communism? I came home from Russia more deeply committed to the doctrine of Democracy than ever before, and I went to Russia believing in Democracy with all my heart. I here and now call upon every person listening to me to examine carefully your understanding of and your belief in Democracy. I tell you that I do not believe Communism is the answer to the world's great need. I tell you that I believe Democracy is the answer—Christian Democracy, if you please. And by Democracy—Christian Democracy—I mean the inalienable right of every sentient soul to pursue liberty and happiness as free moral beings, competent to deal directly with Almighty God without hindrance from civil or ecclesiastical rulers, princes or prelates. But hear me well, unless we can out-think, out-work and out-pray those who have embraced the doctrines of Communism, they are going to make it hard for the democracies of this earth.

I turn now to a detailed report of what I saw in Russia. And, first, I take the subject of religion. What did I see in the field of religion in Russia? There are three major religious groups in Russia today—the Orthodox Greek Christians, the Jews and the Baptists. There are lesser groups—the Roman Catholic Christians the Lutherans, the Episcopalians, the Seventh Day Adventists, the Pentecostals, and then there are Mohammedans and other forms of ancient Asiatic and European religions; but the Greek Orthodox, Jews, and Baptists are the three major religious groups.

I did not attend a Jewish service, nor did I attend a Greek Orthodox service. Every possible hour of time for religious services was devoted to the Baptist churches in the cities we visited. Beginning in Moscow, and continuing in Leningrad, Minsk, Kiev, Stalingrad, Tbilisi, and many other cities, I saw Baptist congregations assembled in meeting houses of varying sizes and in many instances in temporary meeting places, due to the destruction of the meeting houses by the Germans.

Great crowds attended the services where I preached, and a spirit of freedom seemed to characterize every preacher and every believer. The Soviet Government has at last recognized that religion is a vital thing—something that cannot be annihilated—and they are smart enough to grant what appears to be complete freedom of worship and religious ministries such as orphanage and hospital work.

The Baptist preachers with whom I talked told me that they are free to preach what they believe, and I paused to say that they believe the great d[illegible]

tion in Russia is a well known story. They claim the world's record for volume of flying and percentage of accidents. Certainly, the flying that we saw was of a superb character. American planes, of course, predominate.

Heavy industries in Russia were most impressive. What we saw of the heavy industry plants in Leningrad and in the Urals would indicate that within the present fourth Five-Year Plan, they will reach their goal in heavy industries and then begin to catch up on consumer goods. With no thought of labor problems, and with rapidly increasing supply of raw materials, plus an adequate transportation system, Russia will soon be pushing the United States in the field of heavy industries.

Communications.

Communications is an interesting story in Russia. The telephone system, in so far as we had opportunity to appraise it, is quite sufficient, but utterly inadequate. They are doing a grand job with what they have, but they are a long way from covering the country with telephone and telegraph service. Radio is another interesting story. They have the one big centralized system, heading up in Moscow, with all the other stations relaying what originates in Moscow. I was on the radio several times, but never was I asked to submit manuscript. Apparently, the coverage for the entire country is good, judging by the reports which came to me in various cities, where people told me they had heard my broadcasts from Moscow. They are far behind the United States in the number of receiving sets. Their newspapers are, like everything else, state owned and state controlled. There is no such thing as freedom of the press, and yet one must admit that they publish letters everyday in which people are permitted to criticize their government.

Conclusion: With Leland Stowe, I say: "I am not nearly so afraid of Russia as I am of ourselves." It will be a long time before Russia is ready to start a war with the United States, in my judgment. In the first place, the people don't want war, and one would guess that the leaders have too much sense to start another war until they are ready to sustain it—both in terms of atomic energy and essential materials for previous forms of modern warfare. Where for example, would Russia have found herself in the face of the German aggression had it not been for American lend-lease?

A further conclusion: Believing that of the USSR, and the Russian Red Cross and Crescent Society. Mrs. Mary Naimark, official UNRRA interpreter, was loaned to our delegation as our official interpreter, but in addition to Mrs. Naimark, we had three other expert interpreters.

Gives History.

Russia! How well do you know your history of Russia? Write down this date—862. It was about the middle of the Ninth Century that a Scandinavian adventurer, Rurik by name, settled at Novgorod with a war-like band of followers, and drove back the Scythian and Samatrian tribes. Later came the Slavs from the Baltic region, making a settlement as far inland as Kiev. Thus Kiev became the first capital of the vast area known as Russia. Early rulers were Oleg, Igor, Olga, Vladimir the Great. It was Vladimir who first embraced Christianity and brought the Greek Orthodox Church into Russia, in 988. Vladimir's sons ruled one after another until they became weak, and the Mongol tide from Asia swept across the plains, overwhelming Russia for 200 years. Then came the mighty Ivan, who drove the Mongols out, delivered Russia from the Tartar yoke, and in 1547 Ivan the Terrible assumed the title of Czar, inaugurated commerce with England, and all but established Russia as a world power, only to see his hopes shattered in 1571 when the King of Poland formed an alliance with the Crim-Tartars, and burned Moscow, which Ivan the Terrible had built. Feodor was the last of Ivan's descendants to reign in Russia, and in 1613 Romanov was made Czar, ruling with a powerful hand until 1645. In 1689 came Peter the Great, who ruled Russia until his death in 1725, bringing Russia for the first time to a position of acknowled power in Europe. He transferred the capital from Moscow to St. Petersburg, and there laid the foundations for the most beautiful city in Russia. By the Peace of Nystead, 1721, Russia came into possession of Livonia, Estonia, Karelia, and Ingermanland. He almost secured the Sea of Azov and the Black Sea, but the Sultan was too powerful for him. Then followed the reign of Catherine I, and then Peters' daughter, Elizabeth, who joined Austria against Prussia in the Seven Years' War, which resulted in Russian troops marching into Berlin—the greatest shock Frederick the Great ever suffered. Then came the reign of Catherine the Great. She divided Poland, gaining 180,000 square miles of territory for Russia, and 6,000,000 subjects. She took The Crimea in 1783. Then followed the reign of Alexander, with the conflict between Russia and Napoleon—the Treaty of Tilsit in 1807 and the victory of Alexander over Napoleon as reflected in the Congress of Vienna in 1815. Then came Nicholas the First, and finally the last of the Czars, Nicholas the Second, and that brings us to the bloody massacre on the steps of the Winter Palace in 1905 and finally the overthrow of the Czars in 1917. From there on you know well the story of Lenin and Stalin.

Larger than U. S.

Would you have me pursue the story a bit further and remind you that Russia today has an area of 9,619,791 square miles—nearly three times the size of the United States—and a population of 200,000,000 people, representing 16 republics. Would it help you to visualize the Russia of today if I remind you that she has as much timber land as the entire territory of the United States—that it represents one-sixth of the earth's land surface? Russia's potential hydraulic resources is estimated at 280,000,000 kilowatts, and after seeing the great dams in the Don Basin and in the Urals, and after listening to their engineers tell of their future plans of electromotive power. I stand amazed at the possibilities of the utilization of Russia's vast resources, remembering how well-nigh inexhaustible are her supplies of coal, peat, oil, iron, manganese, copper, zinc, lead and lumber.

If space and time permitted, I would like to review with you the long, long story of Russia's slow but steady climb to first rank position amongst the nations of Europe. I would like to take you back into the revealing observations of poets and philosophers and military strategists and political leaders.

Communism! There, there is the word you've been waiting for! Am I correct? And if time permitted, I would like to trace with you the steps that have led on to the enthroning of the Bolsheviks and the overthrow of the Czars, but that is fairly well known, and I

Jews, and Baptists are the three major religious groups.

I did not attend a Jewish service, nor did I attend a Greek Orthodox service. Every possible hour of time for religious services was devoted to the Baptist churches in the cities we visited. Beginning in Moscow, and continuing in Leningrad, Minsk, Kiev, Stalingrad, Tbilisi, and many other cities, I saw Baptist congregations assembled in meeting houses of varying sizes and in many instances in temporary meeting places, due to the destruction of the meeting houses by the Germans.

Great crowds attended the services where I preached, and a spirit of freedom seemed to characterize every preacher and every believer. The Soviet Government has at last recognized that religion is a vital thing—something that cannot be annihilated—and they are smart enough to grant what appears to be complete freedom of worship and religious ministries such as orphanage and hospital work.

The Baptist preachers with whom I talked told me that they are free to preach what they believe, and I paused to say that they believe the great doctrins of our Baptist faith, just as we do here in Georgia. From Soviet officials I received the same assurance. Indeed, not only the Baptists, but apparently all the religious groups in Russia are now free to carry on their work. Will this continue? I cannot say, but we can be thankful for the present attitude of the Russian government and hope that our Baptist and other religious leaders in Russia will do such a good job that the government will realize that it can never again attempt to annihilate religion.

Education.

Education is a Very Vital theme in reporting on Russia. At the turn of the century, only a small percentage of the people of Russia could read and write. In 1940, 91 per cent could read and write, and they told me in Moscow that they believed the percentage was higher today—that they will not stop until every person in Russia can read and write. To that end the government is spending vast sums of money on education. Everywhere I went I was impressed with the fact that the people are reading — reading books and magazines and newspapers. And I would like to emphasize the fact that they are reading the Bible. On the point of reading let me report that they like American authors, particularly Mark Twain, Washington Irving, Nathaniel Hawthorne and Walt Whitman. They do not care for our sexy novels.

Agriculture long has been a major factor in the life of Russia, and today the USSR rapidly is advancing its agricultural program, through the collective farm program. Their present great need is machinery. The Germans took away much of their farm machinery in European Russia, and destroyed what they could not remove to Germany. In Asiatic Russia they have better farm machinery, and today they are producing tremendous grain yields in the virgin Siberian soil. The Ukraine, long the "breadbasket" of Russia, was overrun by the Germans, but now it rapidly is coming back to normal production of grain and potatoes. The Republic of Georgia is one of their greatest agricultural areas, and the Germans did not get into the rich Kura Valley. There they grow corn, cotton, grains and other essential food crops.

Transportation in Russia still is in its formative period—railroads, highways and subways—but in each instance they are making long-range plans that mean ultimate mastery of another basic step in their program. I saw streamline trains, drawn by Diesel engines, although I also saw many very shabby trains, with wornout locomotives. Their highway system already is manifesting itself in four-lane arteries from Moscow to Leningrad, from Moscow to Kiev, from Moscow to Gorki, etc. The subway in Moscow is one of the most beautiful underground railways I have seen in the world. Aviajudging by the reports which came to me in various cities, where people told me they had heard my broadcasts from Moscow. They are far behind the United States in the number of receiving sets. Their newspapers are, like everything else, state owned and state controlled. There is no such thing as freedom of the press, and yet one must admit that they publish letters everyday in which people are permitted to criticize their government.

Conclusion: With Leland Stowe, I say: "I am not nearly so afraid of Russia as I am of ourselves." It will be a long time before Russia is ready to start a war with the United States, in my judgment. In the first place, the people don't want war, and one would guess that the leaders have too much sense to start another war until they are ready to sustain it—both in terms of atomic energy and essential materials for previous forms of modern warfare. Where for example, would Russia have found herself in the face of the German aggression had it not been for American lend-lease?

A further conclusion: Believing that Communism is not the answer to the world's present predicament; and believing that Democracy, as we know it in America, can meet and supply that need, if once we get back to work and granted we have the needed leadership, I still believe that Democracy offers the only way up and out. I still say, however, that we must awake to the real situation, go to work, and quit wasting our energies in riotous living and divided loyalties.

A Minister in Moscow

By Ralph W. Sockman

THE LATE Judge Woolsey was wont to say that there is no pleasure greater than that of generalizing from a single instance unless it be the pleasure of generalizing from no instance at all. Discussions of Russia in these troubled times furnish fertile field for both these indulgences. A three weeks' stay in a land of 200,000,000 people does not qualify one to speak authoritatively of Russian attitudes. Hence, I have been trying to guard myself against those broad generalizations to which travelers are prone and from which the pulpit is by no means exempt. What I write, therefore, essays to be not an article on "religion in Russia," as requested by the editor, but merely the observations of one minister in Moscow.

I

Our sources of information were probably as ample as any visitor to Russia could now find available. We traveled some five thousand miles in the U.S.S.R., visiting such cities as Moscow, Leningrad, Minsk, Stalingrad and Tbilisi — a journey which took us through the worst devastated regions as well as through the leading cultural centers from the Gulf of Finland to the Black sea. We were privileged to meet such ecclesiastical leaders as Patriarch Alexii, supreme head of the Russian Orthodox Church, Archbishop Sergei of Odessa, Dr. Zhidkov, leader of the All-Union of Evangelicals and Baptists, and Pastor Orlov of the leading Baptist church of Moscow, as well as the local clergy in various communities. And most informative of all were our conferences with the government officials who have charge of the relations between the Soviet and the church groups — Mr. Karpov of the Russian Orthodox Church and Mr. Polyansky of "the cults." The latter classification includes all religious bodies other than the Russian Orthodox, such as Jews, Lutherans, Baptists, Moslems, Buddhists, Seventh-day Adventists and Roman Catholics (one can well imagine the irritation of the Vatican at being classified as a "cult").

Membership statistics have little significance in Russia. In fact, there is no religious census. Such official registering of believers with the government would be unconstitutional, for the law forbids asking any person about his religious affiliations — a fact to which the government points as a proof of religious freedom. Mr. Karpov merely said that there were "many million" adherents of the Russian Orthodox Church, although "fewer than in 1917." There are about 22,000 Orthodox churches in the U.S.S.R. and some of them have from 5,000 to 10,000 parishioners. He admitted that the rural districts are somewhat more devoted to the traditional faith than are the city dwellers.

The Baptists claim about 300,000 baptized members, and estimate their "adherents" at approximately 1,400,000. The Pentecostal group has been incorporated into the Union of Evangelicals and Baptists. As to the other religious bodies listed as "cults," we were given no numerical estimates.

On our first Sunday in Moscow our delegation of seven divided its attendance between the Russian Orthodox Cathedral and a Baptist church. At the former we arrived a little after ten o'clock to find long queues at every entrance. The cathedral was so packed with standing worshipers that ushers were engaged in helping some people to make their way to the exits so that others could enter. When we alighted from our autos, word went through the crowd that we were Americans and a way was made for us to reach a railed-off section near the altar. This consideration was typical of the courtesies we received from the people on every hand. We remained for over an hour, during which the service consisted entirely of ritual with much choral accompaniment. The singing was magnificent. The 4,000 or more worshipers were devout. When we left, the queues, though shorter, were still at the doors. Those waiting outside and the standing worshipers remain in my memory as I return to America where we ministers try to entice listeners to sit in our cushioned pews by advertising our services as brief, breezy and brotherly.

Those of our delegation who attended the Baptist service with Dr. Louie D. Newton, president of the Southern Baptist Convention, reported a crowded church with eager throngs seeking admittance. Worshipers wept with emotion as Dr. Newton conveyed the greetings of their American brethren, and the clergy presented him with the gold communion cup. In Leningrad and other cities we found filled churches.

II

From these few observations, however, I do not feel justified in asserting that Russia is experiencing a religious revival. The churches are by no means as numerous as in America. Church towers do not dominate the skylines of Russian cities, except perhaps in Leningrad. Only a minority of the people attend public worship on Sundays. But it does seem apparent that the fathers and mothers of Russia, who have lost 10,000,000 loved ones in the war, are seeking for comfort deeper than can be offered by economic formulas and five-year plans.

Youth is absent in the congregations. When this fact was called to the attention of Mr. Karpov, the government administrator, he explained that the Orthodox Church was losing its young people even before 1917. The reason he gave is that the Russian Orthodox tradition favors elderly clergy. The people do not have much respect for a priest until he is old enough to present a rather patriarchal appearance. They have no relish for young, active ministers, whom they suspect of being too worldly. This policy has militated against church programs which would prove attractive to the young. Thus the church has loosened its hold on its youth, who are now finding secular substitutes such as the official "Komsomol" movement.

Whatever the true explanation, the church today does not seem to be capturing the imagination or challenging the interest of young Russians. Those whom we interviewed almost invariably said that their parents had been "religious," but that they were not. Several said they were "atheists," although their conversation did not reveal that they used the word in its strict sense. When asked the reason for their alienation from the church, they made it clear that their antipathy was to what they believed was the anti-social attitude of the church rather than to the unscientific nature of religious teaching. It would perhaps be more accurate to describe the attitude of the young people whom we met as indifference to the church rather than as antipathy toward it.

III

In fact, we did not detect hostility to the church in any quarter which we explored. The two government administrators of church affairs, while presumably not members of any religious body, were extremely cordial to Dr. Newton and to me, the two ministerial members of our delegation. At one reception, Mr. Karpov made a brief speech in which he expressed his deep respect for the followers of the Christian faith and revealed his awareness of the large place which the church holds in American life.

These officials would have us believe that the Soviet regime has aided the religious groups by giving them freedom. Prior to the revolution, they pointed out, there was discrimination against those who were not members of the Russian Orthodox Church, a discrimination which at times affected the ability to find work. Marriages not registered in the church were not recognized by the tsarist government and the children of such marriages were held to be illegitimate. The Soviet rule has broken up the ecclesiastical monopoly of the Orthodox Church. That the Baptist clergy believe the present regime better than the old tsarist order was expressed to us again and again. If America needs any warning against the evils of a church-dominated state, Russia furnishes a lurid example.

But in breaking the shackles of a despotic church, how far has Russia swung toward a state-controlled church? Both government administrators and clergy stressed repeatedly that Russia now enjoys complete separation of church and state. The question may well be asked, Why then government administrators of church affairs? The basic answer is that the state owns the land and buildings occupied by the churches. For use of these, each church pays a threefold tax: a land tax, a building tax and an insurance tax. The total tax is comparatively small. The amount may be judged from the following examples: Pastor Orlov stated that the Baptist church of which he is minister pays a tax of 2,000 rubles per year while his collections frequently amount to 4,000 rubles per Sunday; and the Orthodox Cathedral in Moscow pays an annual tax of 20,000 rubles whereas its expenditure for electric lights is almost half that amount.

Apart from the tax, the churches handle all their finances without governmental interference. Each local church has its elected treasurer. The priests would seem to be the chief directors of distribution. The Orthodox Church's revenues are derived from the sale of candles (largest amount), from voluntary subscriptions, from marriage and baptismal fees. The expenditures are for salaries of priests and choir, building repairs, theological seminaries and the episcopal fund — a list of items resembling those in our American church budgets.

Some idea of the people's devotion to the church may be gained from the incomes of the priests. The following figures were given us by Mr. Karpov, the official responsible for Orthodox Church affairs, and should therefore be authentic. The average income of a village priest is from 3,000 to 6,000 rubles a month, while his colleague in a city parish averages from 10,000 to 12,000 rubles a month, and bishops rate as high as 25,000 to 40,000 rubles per month. With the official exchange rate of 12 rubles to the dollar, such salaries look pretty tempting even to prosperous Americans. (It might be well to show this salary scale to some of the capitalists on our pulpit committees.) What these figures mean in Russia may be gauged by comparison with the average earnings of unskilled workers, which in one factory were given as 480 rubles per month; of skilled workers, 900 to 1,100 rubles per month; of engineers, 1,500 to 2,000 rubles per month. In view of such compensation, it can hardly be said that the ministerial profession has completely lost standing in Russia.

Freedom for the churches to handle their own finances does not, of course, in itself mean full ecclesiastical liberty. Again and again we were told that the pulpits are free from governmental interference. But with that statement must be coupled the Russian conception of preaching. The sermon traditionally occupies a minor place in the Orthodox Church, and preachers, both Orthodox and Evangelical, do not deal with political and social questions. Russians are complete strangers to such programs as our American churches conduct under the name of social service, social action and the like. Denominations are allowed to hold conventions, to arrange their own agenda, to send delegates to denominational congresses outside the U.S.S.R., to conduct certain philanthropies such as hospitals and orphanages. But, we were told, "our preachers do not preach politics." What the people—or the government—would consider political preaching and what would happen to flaming social prophets must be left to conjecture.

IV

What of the future? It is perhaps as futile to predict as to generalize. The churches are growing. The Baptist clergy told us that many were awaiting baptism. Mr. Karpov stated that during the past three years the Orthodox Church had built 47 new buildings in addition to reopening many old sanctuaries. Five new seminaries have been opened this past year. When these are added to the six already in existence, it would seem that the supply of priests is being enlarged. The church apparently is gaining prestige with the mature population. While the church was not allowed to provide chaplains for the Soviet army, soldiers who asked for religious ministration were served by local civilian priests. And the churches contributed about 300,000,000 rubles to war purposes during the struggle — a fact which apparently did much to rehabilitate them in the public eye.

The crucial problem for the church in Russia, however, is the winning of the generation that has grown up since 1917. Born in a period of bitter reaction from a reactionary church, these young people, now coming into control of the arts, the sciences, the politics of Russia, have no knowledge of what vital Christianity is. It does not look as if they were going to get this knowledge from the patriarchal priests, good men as they no doubt are. The government leaves all religious education to the church and the home. What devout Russian parents may be doing in this regard we did not discover, and we saw no signs of Sunday schools or their equivalent.

No government in the world is giving more attention to the secular care of its youth than is Russia. Its officially sponsored programs of physical education are unsurpassed anywhere. During our stay we witnessed sports events which America has not equaled. Is Russia to rear a mighty crop of physically fit pagans? The danger of such a prospect cannot be ignored. The Russian churches must rouse themselves. Toward that end they need strengthened leadership from within and closer cooperation from without.

Ecclesiastical leaders revealed a certain interest in, and awareness of, church activities in America. Government officials expressed their willingness to have Russian religious leaders participate in assemblies outside the U.S.S.R. But Kremlin policy clearly is to prevent any extensive interchange of nationals until the Russian standard of living is raised to a level comparable with that of other countries. This goal is a part of the fourth five-year plan now starting. Perhaps the message and spirit of Christ can find a way of penetrating the iron curtain of pride, and perhaps the World Council of Churches will be able to cross thresholds which diplomacy is now finding so forbidding.

How Protestant Localism Grows

By T. T. Brumbaugh

PROTESTANT UNITY is slowly growing on the national level. Through mergers between denominations, through interchurch councils and federations and in other forms of cooperation the churches are gradually assuming the responsibility that rests upon them to shape the character of American life and institutions in accordance with their Christian mission. But this development is taking place in a sort of ecumenical cloudland. It is not manifest at the grass roots. Instead, competition is on the increase in many if not in most communities. This trend must be reversed if the whole ecumenical movement, which holds so much promise for the future, is not to be brought into disrepute.

Pressure from Above

The crucial factor is found in the pressure which denominational overhead organizations bring to bear on local churches and pastors. So vigorously are district, diocesan, presbyterial and synodical programs being pressed on ministers and congregations that competition is inevitable. These intermediate programs in turn reflect the force of decisions reached by the national bodies of the denominations. They are made in the tradition of a self-sufficiency which the churches deny in other actions. They often contradict in their practical effect the commitments which the denominations make to each other in other connections. Their net effect is to bring confusion and loss of power into the church's moral and spiritual impact on the local community.

Take, for example, the concern of the average denomination for church extension and relocation of churches in areas of shifting populations. To deal equitably with such problems is the province of the comity committee of local church councils and federations. Denominational representatives of course realize that, without some interdenominational agency to locate churches in such a manner as will avoid overlapping in some communities and underchurching in others, the modern Babel of Protestantism would be even worse confounded. Yet, though fully recognizing this menace to the common gospel, the comity committee of any church federation or council tends to become that body's war department, with real or threatened internal conflict engaging energies which should be employed against the common foe.

To be more explicit, let us look at the situation obtaining in Detroit. Throughout the war, during which the population of metropolitan Detroit increased by approximately a half-million souls, thus creating many new and unchurched residential communities, the denominations cooperated beautifully in discovering and allocating to each other desirable sites for new Sunday schools and churches. With the end of this phenomenal development, however, and with the approach of saturation in the location of churches on the basis of a common Protestant heritage, the denominations began to revert to prewar patterns of sectarianism.

Desire for Extension

With Methodist people moving into every residential district, the Methodists demand the right to follow them with a church of that order, though it is clear that to do so will put another evangelical church in a community where, the church federation's comity committee has declared on the basis of research, but one can make real progress. Again, Presbyterian and other churches in the older areas of the city are finding it necessary to move

New Orleans States -46

17 Commies Are Found Guilty

11-15-46

Recorder's Court Judge Harold Moore found 17 alleged Communists guilty of disturbing the peace at a Communist party meeting November 7 and sentenced them to pay fines of $20 each or serve 10 days in jail.

After a lengthy trial yesterday in which the defense summoned a score of witnesses to the stand, Judge Moore said they had given no evidence to show that the Communist meeting was a lawful assembly. He also pointed out that such meetings should be authorized in writing by the city.

An appeal of the case to criminal district court was announced by James McCain, counsel for the defense.

The disturbance was provoked by a remark made by James E. Jackson, Negro leader of the Communist party in Louisiana, and those members of the party who engaged in the melee are subsequently guilty of disturbing the peace, Moore declared.

The Negro was said to have remarked that Russia is a better country than the United States.

An attempt was made by the defense to prove that the 17 defendants were merely spectators and if any of them participated in the disturbance it was only to defend themselves. Several of the defendants were with their wives at the meeting and at the time of the fracas and left the meeting immediately, the defense pointed out.

Louis Flesicher, associate counsel for the Civil Rights Congress, New York, and Herman Midlo, representative of the Louisiana League for the Preservation of Constitutional Rights, together with McCain argued at length that the meeting was legal. The chief objection, McCain declared, was against Jackson, who admitted he was a Communist.

Police Lieutenant Charles E. Hartman, who supervised the raid, was kept on the stand for more than an hour as the defense sought to prove that he could not possibly have seen all the men fighting and that he simply conducted a mass arrest of everyone in the meeting hall. McCain attempted to point out that Jackson was only trying to protect himself with a chair and was not using it aggressively.

A notice of the meeting was given in a notice to the press, in pamphlets and through the mails, Emanuel Levin, Communist organizer for the South, testified. Levin was one of the defendants.

Ford Stilson, chairman and also a defendant, charged in testimony that "the newspapers distorted the facts about Jackson's remarks."

The others found guilty were Ike Jones, Gillis Doman, August Harris, Arthur Ester, Charles Jones, W. L. Jones, Robert M. Slayton, Walter Green, Lucius Taylor, Mehmit Modians, Alvin Jones, Morris Samuelson, T. R. Means and Cy Rotbart. Each defendant denied he had struck any blows during the disturbance.

Atl. Journal
11-26-46

House Un-American Probers Aim to Expose Red Influences

New Chairman Raps Columbians, Will Work With Truman 'Purge'

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—(AP)—An exposure of Communist influences in the government, in unions and in Hollywood was ticketed Tuesday as the chief business for the House Committee on Un-American Activities in the new Congress.

Representative J. Parnell Thomas (Republican, New Jersey), who will head the group, made clear in a statement of his plans that President Truman's move to "purge" the federal pay rolls of Communists and "subversive" persons will not deter the committee from pressing its own inquiry in that field.

Mr. Truman, by executive order, created an inter agency commission Monday to work out standards and procedures for locating and dismissing disloyal persons who have gained federal employment.

The commission also is to make recommendations on whether present regulations give the government adequate protection against employment of disloyal and subversive persons. It is to report to Mr. Truman by February 1.

Vanech Chairman

The commission is to be made up of one representative each from the Justice, State, Treasury, War and Navy departments and the Civil Service Commission. Atty. General Clark appointed A. Devitt Vanech as the Justice department representative, who is to be chairman.

Representative Rankin (Democrat, Mississippi), who will be top Democrat on the un-American activities committee, said the group would welcome co-operation from the President's commission. He called creation of the commission "a step in the right direction."

The Columbians, an organization whose critics say it is anti-Jewish and anti-Negro, came in for attack from Thomas along with the Communists.

"There is no place in America for the Columbians or the Communists," he said in his statement. "We must be just as alert for those forces which would seek to destroy us from the totalitarian right as those from the totalitarian left."

Aims Outlined

In listing committee aims, Thomas said it intends:

"To spotlight the sorry spectacle of having outright Communists controlling and dominating some of the most vital unions in American labor, unions (that) are now being used as Moscow pawns for ambitious and unscrupulous Communist leaders."

Institute "a counter-educational program against the subversive propaganda which has been hurled at the American people."

To give attention to groups and movements "trying to dissipate our atomic bomb 'know-how' for the benefit of a foreign power," and,

To move against "the Communist element in our educational system."

Thomas promised that the "rights of the individual" will be "fully respected."

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

VACCINE FOUND EFFECTIVE IN MUMPS FIGHT

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26. (By Science Service)—The United States Public Health Service disclosed Tuesday the production of a vaccine against mumps. The immunizing agent has been used successfully in monkeys and now is being tested for the prevention of mumps in man. Physicians of the health service said such vaccine not only would be a useful weapon against the disease in children but in addition has military importance. They said mumps "stands at the top of the list of diseases that incapacitates soldiers."

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Roofs—Any Type EXPERTLY REPAIRED
TIP-TOP ROOFERS
"When You Hear Drip, Drop, Call Tip-Top"
JA. 3039 221 MARIETTA

"Make Yours A Modern Home"
HEAT and MOISTURE-PROOF
Custom Made Table Pads

ATL CONST 4-2-53

FBI Here Asks for Copies Of Communist Newspaper

Tabloid Mailed to Atlantans Says Rich People Rule South

The FBI Wednesday asked for copies of a self-avowed Communist party tabloid which was being circulated around Atlanta Wednesday.

Reports from citizens scattered across the city revealed that an undetermined number of copies of a four-page newspaper called The Worker were received in the mails here Tuesday and Wednesday.

At least two copies were postmarked at College Park. The papers were enclosed in white business envelopes addressed and stamped by hand.

"COMMON PROGRAM"

Big black headlines across the front page advertise what the paper calls "the Southern people's common program for democracy, progress, peace."

On the third page is an order blank offering subscriptions to the tabloid and The Daily Worker, recognized organ for the Communist Party in the United States, at bargain prices.

One recipient said the paper is "a stewpot of the same old Communist baloney" with special appeals made to Negroes and sincere Southern liberals who favor such reforms as revision of Georgia's county unit system, reapportioning congressional districts and abolishing the fee system for paying judges and court officials.

The paper says the South must "take up the struggle for democracy against native reactionaries . . . and Wall Street monopolists."

"RULE BY RICH"

"During the Reconstruction Period of our history," the paper continues, "the people of our region ran our government. Since 1876 when the Reconstruction governments were overthrown, it is the rich people who rule the South."

A postal inspector here said the inspection service had so far received no complaints about the paper. He explained that the service has no legal power to take action against Communist propaganda unless it is slanderous or obscene.

An FBI spokesman said he could not say whether the FBI was investigating the paper, but asked that copies and envelopes be sent to the FBI office here.

Atlanta Police Chief Herbert Jenkins said he would put detectives to work on the case.

Sun-Reporter
4/11/53

Columbia U. Dismisses Dr. Weltfish Co-Author "Races of Mankind"

NEW YORK—Dr. Gene Weltfish, 51-year-old co-author of the "Races of Mankind," last week was ruled "ineligible for reappointment for the next academic year" by Columbia University here. The highly controversial volume was published in 1943 and was attacked from several quarters because it attempted to destroy the myth of "race."

She refused in September, 1952, to tell senate investigators whether she was or had been a communist, however, university officials denied that there was any political implications in her dismissal.

Dr. Weltfish refused to answer under provisions of the Fifth Amendment of the U. S. Constitution which provides protection against self-incrimination.

The noted lecturer in anthropology has been a favorite speaker at Negro educational meetings.

Soviet Police Came South To Murder?

Decided To Expel, Not Kill Squealer

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20—(AP)—Senate investigators disclosed testimony today that Russian secret police once went to the Alabama-Georgia area prepared to murder a purported Communist worker who had given party information in a newspaper article.

It was finally decided, however, only to expel the worker from the party, the Senate committee was told.

The testimony was given a three-man task force of the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee by Paul Crouch of Washington, D C.., an acknowledged former Communist.

Crouch related in detail what he said were his activities with the Communist Party in the South.

SENT TO BIRMINGHAM

He said he was sent to Birmingham in eary 1938 as chairman of the Control and Security Commission of the party. This included the underground apparatus "operating directly under J. Peters, who was my immediate supervisor in that capacity," he stated.

In addition, Crouch said he was the full-time editor of the monthly magazine, New South, which he said was the official organ of the party for the south.

Crouch said one of his activities was that of keeping constant vigilance against undercover agents within the Communist Party and from the Federal Bureau of Investigation or any other organization opposed to communism.

When such cases arose, he said, the work was done with the National Control Commission and in exceptional cases, with the Soviet secret police, "formerly the GPU, but now the MVD."

DETAILS OF INCIDENT

He said an important incident arose while he was in Birmingham, and explained:

"In the early summer of 1938, a series of articles appeared in the Atlanta Georgian written by a member of the Communist Party in the Alabama-Georgia-Mississippi district, telling the people what the party was like.

"They were unsigned articles saying that the author was at that time a member of the Communist Party opposed to communism who was in the Communist Party to find out what it was like and what it was doing. The article was unquestionably authentic and the author of the articles also appeared on a radio program from Atlanta.

"Immediately I reported this to the national control commission, then headed by Charles Dirba, a native of Latvia, formerly a part of Russia and re-sion of the situation as to what to be done.

"The first question they raised was: Should he be liquidated? In other words, should the Soviet secret police do a murder job on him. I strongly protested and told them that this would bring the government down on the party, would result in adverse publicity, and under no conditions should be considered.

"They said then: Suppose that he be invited to the Soviet Union to go to school and that they take care of him over there? Well, I had no logical argument to that and made little comment.

MEMBER OF COLUMBIANS

"Further investigation at Columbus disclosed that this man, a moving-picture operator in one of the theaters, was in the Communist Party as a representative of a private organization known as the Columbians. When this information was made known, the representatives came down again and after a conference it was agreed that the best solution in this case was to expel him from the Communist Party and issue leaflets attacking him and the GPU, but now the [illegible]

DETAILS OF INCIDENT

He said an important incident arose while he was in Birmingham, and explained:

"In the early summer of 1938, a series of articles appeared in the Atlanta Georgian written by a member of the Communist Party in the Alabama-Georgia-Mississippi district, telling the people what the party was like.

"They were unsigned articles saying that the author was at that time a member of the Communist Party opposed to communism who was in the Communist Party to find out what it was like and what it was doing. The article was unquestionably authentic and the author of the articles also appeared on a radio program from Atlanta.

"Immediately I reported this to the national control commission, then headed by Charles Dirba, a native of Latvia, formerly a part of Russia, and reported to be in Los Angeles at the present time.

"He directed me to make a thorough investigation. As a result of this investigation, the identity of the individual was learned. By a study of the articles, the area was broken down to the Columbus section. The articles had carried a photostat of his membership card in the Communist Party with his name covered over, but showing the rubber stamp signature of Rob F. Hall, district organizer, and the rubber stamp seal of the district.

CAME TO HIS HOME

"Then I was advised by Rob F. Hall, district organizer, that he had received word from Dirba that two representatives of the apparatus, as we called the GPU, the Soviet secret police, were coming down for a conference with me. They came out to my home at Birmingham after reporting to Rob F. Hall, who phoned me they were coming, and immediately began a discussion secret police do a murder job on him. I strongly protested and told them that this would bring the government down on the party, would result in adverse publicity, and under no conditions should be considered.

"They said then: Suppose that he be invited to the Soviet Union to go to school and that they take care of him over there? Well, I had no logical argument to that and made little comment.

MEMBER OF COLUMBIANS

"Further investigation at Columbus disclosed that this man, a moving-picture operator in one of the theaters, was in the Communist Party as a representative of a private organization known as the Columbians. When this information was made known the representatives came down again and after a conference it was agreed that the best solution in this case was to expel him from the Communist Party and issue leaflets attacking him and the Columbians in the Georgia area."

Sen. Welker (R. Idaho), a subcommittee member, asked Crouch why Hall was not sent to the Lenin school in Russia.

Crouch replied: "The Communist Party felt that the Columbians was an organization very closely affiliated or very close to the Ku Klux Klan and that the Communist Party by leaflets could make political capital out of it, that they could use this as part of their propaganda against the Ku Klux Klan and against the Columbians and try to describe the opposition to the Communist Party as being of a Fascist character, linking the Ku Klux Klan with Fascism."

Grandmother at 32

IMOLA, Italy, Sept. 20—(AP)—Iolanda Giovannini today became a grandmother at 32. She married when she was 15. Her eldest daughter, Vincenza, 16, gave birth to a daughter.

3-26-54

Reprinted from SOCIAL FORCES
Vol. 33, No. 1, October, 1954
Printed in U.S.A.

A SOCIOLOGIST LOOKS AT RACIAL DESEGREGATION IN THE SOUTH*

GUY B. JOHNSON
University of North Carolina

I. PRELUDE TO CRISIS

IN THE barber shop the other day a countryman in the chair opposite me said, "Professor, I see where the Supreme Court is going to pass a new law sayin' that the white and the colored will have to go to school together. It makes me sort of uneasy."

There are indeed a lot of uneasy people in the South today, because the institution of compulsory racial segregation is under attack and may soon be dealt a knock-out blow. In 1952 five test cases, sponsored by the N.A.A.C.P. on behalf of the parents of Negro children in public schools, went up to the United States Supreme Court on appeal. The cases, which came from South Carolina, Virginia, Delaware, District of Columbia, and Kansas, were consolidated for the purpose of the hearing by the Court. The N.A.A.C.P. believed that the time was ripe to demand that the Court decide the cases on the issue of segregation itself. It argued that even if the Negro schools were equal to the white schools in all measurable respects they would still impose an inevitable social and psychological stigma upon the Negro child, and it asked the Court to declare compulsory segregation on grounds of race an act of discrimination and therefore contrary to the Constitution of the United States. The defense argued, of course, that there is nothing inherently discriminatory in segregation, that school facilities can be and are being equalized, and it asked the Court to reaffirm its traditional philosophy, namely, that segregation is lawful if facilities are equal.

In December 1952, the Supreme Court held hearings on these cases, and the South waited with much trepidation a decision during the spring of 1953. But there was no decision. Instead, last fall the Court announced a rehearing on a series of searching questions which it laid before the legal counsel on both sides. This hearing took place last December, and again we wait for a decision. If the South is on the spot, so is the Supreme Court! It must decide whether its previous decisions on segregation are all right, which it would probably be ashamed to do, or whether its previous decisions were all wrong, which it is probably afraid of doing. The former would be like setting off a harmless firecracker, the latter like dropping a legal atom bomb on the South. Of course, there are certain intermediate positions possible, but in a matter like segregation there is an all-or-none quality which makes any middle ground hard to find. For reasons which I cannot undertake to explain here, I continue to believe, as I did a year ago, that the Supreme Court will hold against compulsory segregation. At least we would do well here in the South to think in terms of that possibility and to be prepared to meet intelligently whatever crisis might be precipitated by the decision of the Court.

There is a very special relationship between the Constitution, the Supreme Court, the South, and the status of the Negro. This has been true especially since the emancipation of the slaves. After the Civil War three important constitutional amendments were submitted to the states. With the help of the southern states, most of which were then under the control of Republican "carpetbag" governments, these amendments were ratified. The Thirteenth Amendment simply forbade slavery. The Fourteenth, among other things, conferred citizenship upon the Negro and forbade the states to abridge the rights of citizens. The Fifteenth attempted specifically to prevent abridgement of the right to vote "on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

* Presidential address delivered at the seventeenth annual meeting of the Southern Sociological Society, Atlanta, Georgia, March 26, 1954.

The Fourteenth Amendment has probably been the subject of more constitutional litigation than any other provision in the Constitution. Not all of it, by the way, has been concerned with the rights of the Negro, but this amendment is his main weapon in his struggle for complete equality of citizenship. The crucial part of the Amendment, Section 1, reads as follows:

> All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

The Amendment ends with a section which states: "The Congress shall have the power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article."

The Congress wanted to do a thorough job of bestowing equality upon the Negro, to say nothing of winning his affection for the Republican Party. It passed a series of Force Acts and Civil Rights Acts which sought to guarantee to Negroes the equal enjoyment of all sorts of accommodations and facilities and provided severe punishments for private persons as well as officials who violated these laws. The Supreme Court held that these laws went beyond the powers bestowed upon Congress by the Constitution. They dealt with "privileges or immunities" which were matters of "state citizenship" rather than "Federal citizenship," and they attempted to penalize the acts of private persons along with the official discriminatory acts of states. The upshot of twenty years of litigation was that virtually every clause of the Federal Civil Rights laws was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. How the South loved the Court in those days!

The South was on the rise again, and the North was losing its interest in the fate of the new colored citizens. With southern white democrats back in control of their state governments, and with Negroes eliminated from politics through fraud and intimidation, the southern states proceeded to fortify the social norms of white supremacy with the legal sanctions of segregation. Into their revised constitutions and laws went provisions for the mandatory separation of the races in the public schools, in public carriers, and in places of public accommodation and amusement. It is this same legal structure which has now put the South on the spot before the Supreme Court, because it is these laws which the N.A.A.C.P. is asking the Court to declare discriminatory per se.

The Supreme Court, however, had actually encouraged the South in such legislation. In 1896 the Court put its blessing on segregation, so to speak, in the famous case of Plessy v. Ferguson. In that case the Court declared that a state law requiring a public carrier to provide separate accommodations for Negroes and whites was valid if the state law also directed the carrier to make the accommodations equal. This was the beginning of the "separate-but-equal" doctrine, and the Plessy case set a precedent which has governed nearly all of the subsequent decisions on segregation. For several decades, then, the Supreme Court was somewhat indifferent to the contentions of Negroes that segregation was discrimination. The Plessy doctrine was of some use, of course, and the N.A.A.C.P. employed it to gain equalization of teachers' salaries and school facilities to some extent, but it was slow and expensive because the litigation had to be repeated in district after district.

Lay it to the New Deal, Mr. Roosevelt's "stacked Court," the trends of the times, or what you will, but times have changed. In the 1930's the Supreme Court seemed to have found a new point of view on civil rights and discrimination. Its decisions began to show a new liberal trend, and World War II no doubt further stimulated the trend. The N.A.A.C.P. was quick to take advantage of the "new look" in the Federal judiciary. It planned a strategy which would eventually push for a show-down on the issue of segregation per se, and it won a series of notable decisions.

We see the results of these decisions all around us. For example, it is commonplace to see Negroes in railway coaches, Pullmans, and dining cars without segregation. The white primary is a thing of the past (on this one, incidentally, the Court in 1944 completely reversed an opinion which it had made nine years earlier upholding the white primary), and it is estimated that a million Negroes voted in the South in the 1952 elections.

We see modern school buildings for Negroes replacing the old shabby ones, and in many areas we hear of teachers' salaries, school terms, etc., being well on the way to equalization. But the most significant change is one which is perhaps not very well known, namely, that 25 publicly supported universities and colleges in the South have admitted Negro students on the graduate and professional levels. All of the state universities except five—South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, and Mississippi—now have some Negro students on their campuses. Later I shall have more to say on this subject.

There have, of course, been other sources of social change in the South. The World War, urbanization, the expansion of industry, better incomes, better education, better health—all of these have brought changes in both races and in their interactions. Then, too, there has been considerable erosion of the bitterness and of the hysterical fears which grew out of the Reconstruction period. Both whites and Negroes are gradually maturing in mutual respect for one another as persons rather than as members of stereotyped groups. When the N.A.A.C.P. can hold its annual convention in Atlanta, when Ralph Bunche can address unsegregated audiences in public auditoriums in various southern cities, and when a Negro can get himself elected by popular vote to the Atlanta School Board, in spite of the ruthless efforts of certain politicians to smear his good name—well, surely things are changing in the South.

Still it is the Supreme Court which has forced the most drastic changes in the status of Negroes, and it is the Supreme Court which can in a few words drop a legal atom bomb. It is ironical that while our Constitution has changed but little since Reconstruction, and while Congress has not passed a single major substantive measure on civil rights since that time, the Supreme Court has wrought great changes. Its manifest function is to determine constitutional questions of law and equity, but through its power to say "No" to legislative acts and its power to change its own mind as to what is constitutional and what is not, it actually has something equivalent to a legislative function. If and when it reverses itself on the Plessy doctrine of "separate but equal" and decides that compulsory segregation is in itself an act of discrimination by the state, its decision will have precisely the same effect as if all the laws compelling segregation were repealed tomorrow morning. And so the man in the barber shop was not really wrong when he spoke of the Supreme Court as "passing a law."

Seventeen states—all of the southern states plus the border states of Missouri, West Virginia, and Delaware—have compulsory segregation in their public schools. This is a region which, while it may have great diversities in many respects, tends to be uniform in its basic structuring of Negro and white relations. It has a quasi-caste system, it has an ideology of white supremacy and white superiority, and it has legal sanctions for the public and institutional separation of the races.

Many Supreme Court decisions have applied to great corporations or to sizeable groups of persons, but a decision "repealing" the segregation laws of seventeen states containing 47,000,000 persons is a thing of real magnitude. Thus there is a very special relationship between the Supreme Court, the South, and the status of the Negro.

II. CRISIS AND ACCOMMODATION

I have indicated that the South has already experienced some measure of desegregation, and I have expressed the belief that the South may soon find that all of its segregation laws have been invalidated. The next question, then, is: What is the shape of things to come? Specifically, what is likely to happen during the period of transition? What new accommodations in the relations of white and Negro can we expect? What will the situation be like when it has settled down?

Well, what can a sociologist say that is sound and reasonable about these problems? If he is honest, he will readily admit that while sociology has made great strides in its methodology it is not yet equipped to speak with assurance on a problem as complex as this. However, he should not overdo the modest stance, because if he has profited from his training and from his study of human society, then he of all people is entitled to speak. I would like to think that what I have to say on this subject is shared by practically all other sociologists similarly situated, but that remains to be seen; so I must warn you that I am speaking for one sociologist, that my analysis is probably a compound of thirty years of impressions, a pinch of science, and a dash of common sense, garnished somewhat generously with value judgments. Let me add that for reasons of time I shall confine my remarks almost entirely to the public school situation.

There are at least two important things the sociologist can do in order to make an intelligent projection of the course of social change in any given situation. First, he can try to identify the most significant factors in the situation which he is observing and assess their relative weights and their variations. Second, he can find out what has happened in previous instances which are parallel or similar in the hope of gaining better insight into the dynamics of the present situation. Let me discuss these in order. I shall have to be brief and no doubt I may appear to be quite dogmatic.

I submit that first and foremost among the determinants of the future situation in the South is the system of norms and values concerned with white social dominance, social exclusiveness, and the preservation of what is sometimes called the "integrity" of white society and white "racial" types. This value system is not merely southern. It approaches universality in American white society. Its strength varies, of course. It is strongest in the Deep South, it is weaker in areas where there are few Negroes and in the great cosmopolitan centers of the North and West; but it probably represents the overwhelming majority of white people in all sections of the country. The main difference between the South and the rest of the states is that the South has added legal sanctions to its social norms. Being bitter and insecure because of the Emancipation and the Reconstruction, the South wanted to "fix things good." It operated on the principle that 100 percent dominance is a lot better than 95 percent dominance, and that if you gave one little bit of equality to the Negro, the next thing you knew you would be face to face with the problem: Would you want your daughter to marry a Negro?

The second great determinant, which is merely the structural aspect of the first, is the fact of dualism in white and Negro social institutions. Whether it be in the towns and cities where spatial separation accompanies social dualism, or in the rural areas where spatial or ecological separation is not usually definitely patterned, there are two communities, one white and one Negro. In the Negro communities are churches, businesses, private schools, and an amazing range of other voluntary associations and agencies, and throughout the South there are the legally segregated public schools for Negroes. This institutional machinery is the social world of the Negro. It furnishes jobs, status positions, prestige —in short, the satisfaction of most of the basic and derived needs of the Negro.

Now, the southern white people have a serious social, economic, and psychological stake in the structure of white dominance, and they would like to keep it intact. They dread any tampering with the system, and they fear that the removal of one wheel or bolt from the machinery might cause the whole thing to get out of control. Their attitude may be characterized as follows: "We would rather not concede any changes, but if the Supreme Court says we must, then we must. But we will make the changes mean as little as possible in our basic attitudes and values. If the outer wall is weakened, we will strengthen the inner wall around our intimate social relations. Segregation laws may be dead, but long live segregation!"

The Negro also has a stake in the present dual system, and while he resents the imputation of inferiority involved in the compulsory aspect of segregation, this does not mean that he wants, in the foreseeable future, a grand merger with the white community. His attitude may be characterized as follows: "By all means, take away the segregation laws, those accursed symbols of inferiority. I will feel a lot better, but I will know that the millennium has not arrived, so just let me feel my way cautiously in these new contacts with white people."

At the risk of oversimplification, I suggest that these two—the value system of white dominance and the dualistic nature of our social structure—are the basic determining factors in the new adjustments arising from desegregation. There are, however, a number of other factors which are certain to have some weight. Let me cite them briefly.

Class Status. Intra-race class differences are obviously less important than inter-race differences, but they will have some influence, and they may become of increasing importance. In urban areas the upper class whites will as a rule have fewer inter-race contacts in the public schools than will the middle and lower class whites, because of the typical ecological patterns in the cities. Insofar as the norms of white race dominance are weakened, race relations will tend to become class relations, and the lower class whites will have a more intense concern with class status.

Population Ratios. By and large there is some association between ratio of Negroes to whites and the amount of threat felt by the whites in the removal of legal sanctions, but there are important local variations. In fact, the variations in attitudes, informal controls, and interaction patterns are so great that I would expect some of the "best" and some of the "worst" transition situations to develop in areas where the ratio of Negroes to whites is very high.

Rural-Urban Differences. Since the pattern of spatial segregation is relatively weak in rural areas, there would logically be more occasions for having mixed school units than in the cities. But resistance to such changes is likely to be very high in the rural areas, and thus we may expect a high incidence of conflicts, evasive actions, and pressures for compromise arrangements.

General Economic Outlook. The South is on the up industrially and agriculturally, and this is fortunate. It lessens the danger of tensions based on economic insecurity, and it provides a base for the greatly increased expenditures which will have to be made for the public schools. A depression in the next few years would no doubt aggravate the inter-racial situation generally and make the new adjustments all the more difficult.

In addition I want to mention two factors which I surmise will have considerable weight during the fluid initial stage of readjustment, if and when the Supreme Court invalidates legal segregation. The first is the general state of mind of the southern people. It appears to be surprisingly calm, on the whole, in the face of the impending decision of the Court. The very fact that the Court has delayed the process of decision has taken some of the edge off the feeling of crisis and has given the southern people time to become accustomed to the thought of desegregation. Governors, congressmen, editors, and others have counselled calmness and moderation, and the public officials who have threatened to abolish the public schools or to take other drastic measures are very much in the minority. The second factor is the attitudes of persons in positions of leadership and authority who will have to make decisions upon policies and their implementation. I think that there is a real likelihood that there will be a great deal of confusion and variation in the decisions. The public will be wondering what the authorities think, what they are going to do, how firm they will be, etc., while the authorities are likely to be more cautious and vacillating than they need be because they will be hypersensitive to all sorts of pressure groups which claim to represent the prevailing public opinion.

A few moments ago I stated that another thing which the sociologist can do is to try to find out what has happened in situations similar to the one which he is studying. Of course, there are no situations precisely comparable to ours, but we can cite several which might throw some light on what happens in the transition from segregation to desegregation.

Of interest here is the experience of certain northern and western communities which have decided in the past ten years to "integrate" their schools. Recent studies of several such communities show that when the city officials and the school board adopted a definite policy, put it into effect without delay, and then stood firm, there was very little disturbance during the transition. But when the official policy was uncertain and there was delay in its execution, the opposition had time to crystallize. Pressures were put on the school board, and white students, taking the cue from their parents, caused considerable disorder. In Gary, Indiana, for example, where the integration plan was poorly prepared and timidly proposed, there was a strike led by some of the white high school students as a protest against the admission of Negroes. The tension became so high that the school board was afraid to crack down on the strikers and proceed with its plan. Rioting seemed imminent on several occasions. The strike leader, a boy in his teens, gained much notoriety and became a power to be reckoned with. After two years of intermittent strikes and community turmoil, the school board mobilized enough support and courage to enable it to call the strikers truants and proceed with a firm policy. Relations between the white and Negro students have been considered "good" for the past several years. Negro students participate in most of the school activities, but in the area of social affairs the color line is very much in evidence. This latter statement, incidentally, applies almost universally to the mixed-school situations in the North and West.

At Fort Bragg, North Carolina, and several other military bases in the South there has been some experience with the new Federal policy of nonsegregated schools for the children of military personnel. Observers report that the mixed schools have been accepted as a matter of course, that there are some play contacts between the white and Negro children, but that equal-status social contacts between adults across the color line are quite rare. Admittedly a military base is hardly a "free" situation—the personnel are in what might be called "involuntary servitude"—but the situation does illustrate the importance of authority and uniformity. When one's reference groups are all subject to the same authority and are all expected to observe the same norms, it seems not only futile but somewhat ridiculous to deviate overtly from the expected patterns.

More to the point perhaps is the experience of the southern public institutions of higher learning which have recently admitted Negro students for the first time. Last summer I made a survey of these institutions, and I should like to report on it briefly.

Maryland had admitted Negroes to its university law school about twenty years ago, but little further had happened on the higher education level until a series of test cases in the late 1940's and early 1950's brought decisions favorable to Negro plaintiffs in Oklahoma, Texas, Kentucky, North Carolina, and Virginia. The result was the admission of Negroes, on the graduate and professional levels only in most instances, to at least twenty institutions in a period of five years, 1948–1952. Accurate enrollment figures were hard to get, incidentally, because the registrars took pride in saying, "We do not keep our records by race." The following list, arranged in a rough geographic sequence, shows the approximate Negro enrollments for the academic year 1952–53 in the schools which we studied: University of Texas, 30; Louisiana State University, 15; University of Arkansas, 12; University of Oklahoma, 50; Oklahoma A. & M., 25; University of Missouri, 12; University of Kansas City, 25; University of Louisville, 175; University of Kentucky, 20; University of Tennessee, 10; University of North Carolina, 2; University of Virginia, 3; William and Mary, 1; Richmond Professional Institute, 36; Medical College of Virginia, 3; University of West Virginia, 5; University of Maryland, 3; University of Maryland Professional Schools, 6; University of Delaware, 15.

The enrollments totalled about 450. Summer school enrollment of Negro students was twice as high as in the regular session. We estimated that 1,000 to 2,000 Negro students had been in contact with white students in the regular sessions alone in the past five years. (Since our study was made last summer, several other schools have admitted one or more Negroes—e.g., North Carolina State College and Virginia Polytechnic Institute. Also more than thirty private and denominational colleges have voluntarily opened their doors to Negroes.)

Despite numerous predictions of violence, this transition to racial coeducation in southern universities has been accomplished without a single serious incident of friction. There were some rather wild rumors in a few schools at first, but they were soon dispelled. There was also an effort by the administration in several schools to define the privileges of the first Negro students in terms of the state laws and the old social norms; that is, the Negro students were segregated and restricted in various ways. However, this effort was soon abandoned—first, because white students themselves condemned it as unfair, and second, because the Supreme Court made a ruling against such treatment. Today there is very little official discrimination against the Negro students. In fact, one can say that there has already emerged a norm in which administration takes pride: namely, that there is equality of campus citizenship.

We found almost universal agreement that the Negro students were handicapped by their inferior educational background, and there was some evidence of a tendency on the part of teachers to "go easy" on grading them, but on the whole they were serious and industrious students who were standing up quite well in the academic race.

White students have expressed relatively little overt rudeness or antagonism toward these Negro students. Most of them are simply indifferent, but there is a minority who interact with Negro students in a cordial and friendly way. In fact there were several instances of white students taking the initiative in behalf of equal privileges for the Negro student. In the official social affairs of academic organizations—e.g., a law students' dinner or picnic—Negro students have taken part, but in the strictly "social" realm there is almost no Negro participation. All parties seem to understand that new and delicate adjustments are involved, and they have behaved with appropriate restraint. Perhaps the best way to summarize what has happened so far is to say that white and Negro students have already learned new patterns of working, eating, and living in close proximity without serious disturbance to their sense of social privacy.

The differences between this university situation and the public school situation, in terms of numbers, age, sophistication, maturity, etc., are obvious. However, there are probably trends and patterns here which will help in our projections on the public school level.

III. REASONABLE PROJECTIONS AND EXPECTATIONS

Now that I have finally reached the point of stating some reasonable projections and expectations in the process of racial desegregation in the schools, I am aware that my previous discussion has anticipated much of what I shall say.

The fluid initial stage in the transition will be of special importance, and I want to state two propositions with regard to it.

1. It will be a period of tension, of evasive actions and experiments. At first there is the possibility that practically nothing happens. The Supreme Court's decision may apply directly only to the instant cases. A few additional communities may begin to fall in line of their own accord, but the normal expectation is that most school district officials will sit tight and wait for legal tests to be directed against them. Prolonged litigation, then, is a distinct possibility, and its total effect will be to make the transition to desegregation a gradual one.

Think of all the evasive measures you can, and you have an idea of the evasions and negations which will be proposed or actually tried out. Among the more obvious petty devices are the gerrymandering of school district lines, complicated transfer regulations, and delay in processing the applications of Negroes who wish to enter a "superior" school. No doubt there will be a heavy increase in enrollment of white students in private schools, because this is one way in which the well-to-do white people can "protect" their children from inter-race contacts. There will be talk of separating high school students along sex lines but I doubt whether such a scheme will win many backers.

But the most startling proposals are the South Carolina plan for turning the schools over completely to private agencies and the Georgia plan for handing out cash subsidies to parents who will then use the money to provide schooling for their children. The theory behind them is that if the state supports no public schools, it is not discriminating against anybody, therefore it is beyond the reach of the Federal Constitution. South Carolina has already had a popular vote on an amendment which, when ratified by the legislature, will erase completely the state's obligation to support a system of public schools. The proponents of this idea imagine that the schools would be taken over, financed, and operated by all sorts of private educational agencies. Some would be white agencies, some would be Negro; thus the state would hope to do by private action what it could no longer do by official action. How the legal act of giving the schools to such agencies can be accomplished I do not know, but assuming that it is done, then what? Simply that the wealthy have good schools, the poor have shabby schools, and a great cry arises for state subsidies. Then, if the state is honest about wanting to see its children get fair opportunities, it grants subsidies to the private agencies. And the minute it does this it is vulnerable under the Federal Constitution. Both the Georgia and the South Carolina plans are unrealistic, but we should not be too surprised if they are given a try. One is reminded of the attempts to evade the Supreme Court's white primary decision of 1944. South Carolina repealed all laws referring to primary elections and allowed the Democratic Party to run its primaries as it saw fit, but the Federal courts lost no time in invalidating this device.

What I am saying here is that the natural reaction of the majority of white people will be to try to define the new situation in terms of the existing norms. At the same time there will be efforts by the liberal or equalitarian minority in the white group to accept the new situation and to modify the social norms to fit, but these will remain minority efforts.

2. The initial period is likely to see an increase in race rumors, an increase of aggression against Negroes, and occasional violence. Every sensible person would like to believe that the transition can be made without violence. I believe that for the most part it will, but considering the reality of the extreme emotional involvement of certain white groups in the symbols of white dominance, and considering the thousand and one ways in which incidents and rumors, provocations and fears might be combined, it would be a miracle indeed if there were no violence of any sort. In several of our cities there are areas where the Negro population is expanding into formerly white territory, and in some of these there is already a pattern of violence. These are precisely the areas where mixed schools will make sense ecologically, and a certain amount of violence is likely to occur. Minor personal clashes are, of course, likely to happen sporadically almost anywhere.

Perhaps most of us forget that there are still many people who embrace the racial dogmas which we associate with the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. Also most of us are not aware that there is today a rather active sub-literature of hate—anti-Negro, anti-Jewish, anti-Catholic, and of course all cleverly tied in with anti-communist—which circulates among large segments of the population. In this connection let me quote from something which came to my attention last week:

> . . . there has never been a democracy worthy of the name except among people of the Caucasian Race. . . . The Semitic peoples . . . have never produced a workable democracy, and never can. . . . The Hamitic peoples have never produced a democracy. . . . The Latins have never produced a democracy. . . . The yellow people, the brown people and the blacks are mentally unfit for directors in our form of government. . . . They do not reason in the same way. Their mental ideas are just as different as their different tongues. . . . The claim we constantly hear, that the framers of the Constitution intended to say that all men were created equal, is simply a desperate bid of inferior minds to bolster their own inferiority by perverting the original meaning of the Founding Fathers.

That deathless prose is almost "egghead" compared to the really vicious variety. The interesting thing about this example is that it is taken from an official state bulletin, the Georgia Farmers' Market Bulletin, paid for by the taxpayers and circulated free of charge to thousands of farmers in one of our southern states. Considering that so many people have fed on this fare and on others five times as bad, there is a real prospect that a series of reactionary social movements might crop out in various places in the South.

When the most foolish evasive devices are done with, when the initial shock has subsided and the South has settled down to the realization that it is bound to have a certain amount of racial coeducation, what will the situation look like? I suggest some further projections.

3. There will be no mass mingling of the races in the urban public schools. The mass mingling of the races in the schools is simply not in the cards. Bear in mind that nearly half of the South's ten million Negroes live in urban areas and that almost a fourth live in smaller towns and villages or rural-nonfarm homes. Probably more than three-fourths of these seven million live in Negro residence areas which are spatially separate. In short, they live in distinctly Negro communities. They have no consuming desire to go to school with white pupils just for the sake of associating with them. For the majority of them, the institutions in their community are convenient, accessible, and psychologically comfortable. Their interest will be not to abolish them but to improve them, and they will have little difficulty from here on in getting a share of the public funds which will make their schools as good as any. In the mixed or marginal areas in the cities there may be an occasional mixed school, and there will be a number of the more promising and ambitious Negro scholars who will request and obtain admission to certain "white" schools because certain special courses are available there but not in the Negro schools. But I venture the prediction that not more than ten percent of the total of Negro and white pupils will be attending school together in the cities of the South for a long time to come.

4. In rural farming areas the proportion of mixed school units will be somewhat higher. In rural areas there will be delay and resistance at first. Negro leadership will be cautious and willing, if not anxious, to preserve separate schools if they are well financed. As time goes on and the financial burden of trying to buy separation by equalizing every aspect of the school systems becomes quite apparent, the acceptance of mixed schools will become more general. I would estimate that within twenty to twenty-five years as many as half of the rural school units may be composed of student bodies of both races.

5. The only areas to have complete racial integration in the schools will be those areas which have very low Negro population ratios. In large parts of the states of West Virginia, Kentucky, Missouri, Oklahoma, and Texas, and in most of the upper piedmont and mountain counties of the South, the ratio of Negroes to whites is very low. Negro education has suffered, because county officials have been loathe to support adequate schools for a few Negro families scattered here and there. Many officials have come to regard compulsory school segregation as a nuisance and a threatened financial drain, and they will not be displeased when the Supreme Court makes it possible for them to absorb their sparse Negro school population.

6. Official norms of "equal treatment" of all students will soon develop. The idea of democracy in the classroom is strong in American education, and I believe that white students will on the whole be willing to include their Negro fellow-students in their concept of the "official" equality of school citizenship as such. Thus Negro students will probably participate strongly in athletics, orchestras, bands, recitals, etc., where competence is important, but less so or not at all in those phases of school life which verge on the "social," such as dramatics, hobby clubs, and social clubs and cliques. Even athletics may present some difficulties at first, because it involves travelling together, but the desire to win, plus the availability of a splendid Negro fullback or pitcher, will soon take care of this situation.

7. Equal-status social contacts will be very rare. In those activities which the white group defines as private, intimate, social, the norms of white dominance and out-group exclusion will operate in full force. Violation will bring swift censure and ostracism from one's reference groups. In this realm of the social, there are the makings of many tensions and emotional disturbances.

However, there is a mitigating factor. The Southerner, white and Negro, retains a good deal of the traditional folk pattern of friendliness. He likes to feel that he knows the people with whom he associates. He likes to "personalize" even casual and formal contacts as much as possible. Therefore, we can expect the day-to-day student contacts of white and Negro to partake of this "friendly" and "personal" pattern. I surmise that the routine contacts in the southern schools will have on the whole a warmer quality than they have in non-southern schools.

8. Negro teachers will probably suffer some loss of jobs, at least temporarily. Insofar as desegregation permits the actual abandonment of certain schools, it is sure to affect Negro schools and Negro teachers more than white. However, this loss of jobs should not be very extensive, and it should be only temporary. The school population and the numbers in average daily attendance are steadily increasing, and there will be a steady demand for teachers. Negro teachers, who, by the way, have higher indexes of training and experience than white teachers in many southern areas, should gradually find positions in the mixed schools and regain whatever ground they had lost earlier.

9. The financial cost of the public schools in the South will increase quite heavily. Anyone who pretends that desegregation will save untold millions of tax dollars is guilty of loose thinking. If the dual school system were composed of two high-quality and absolutely equal parts, then the elimination of unnecessary duplications would effect substantial savings. But we are dealing with a situation in which the Negro school system has until recently been half-starved financially, and equalization of any sort—whether it be in a separate system or in an integrated system—will mean not lower expenditures but higher expenditures. The South is committed to better education, and it is gradually closing the gap between itself and the other regions. It has been spending around one and a half billion dollars a year on its public schools. In order to do a good job of removing the inequalities between white and Negro and between rural and urban schools, and in order to keep up with the expected increase of population, it will have to be spending more than two billion dollars a year by 1960. However, if the favorable income trend continues, it can do this easily enough; in fact it can do it on a smaller percentage of its total income than it is using now.

IV. CONCLUSION

You have noticed that in much of my discussion there has been the implication that the change which we face is going to have a gradualistic rather than a revolutionary quality. I realize that there are those who have tried to make "gradualism" a naughty word, but I shall continue to use it. To me it does not suggest a theory or a policy which one must be for or against, but merely a useful and accurate description of the way in which many social changes actually do occur.

I believe that whether the Supreme Court takes a flat stand against legal segregation or reaffirms the separate-but-equal doctrine, the net effect is going to be about the same. The former decision would mean a greater immediate shock, the latter would take a little more time, but both involve consequences which will materialize in a gradual manner.

The net consequences of the abandonment of compulsory segregation may be short of what many people feared they would be, but they may also be short of what many people hoped they would be. I suggest that the greatest positive consequence may be that the South will be rid of the stigma of unfair legal compulsion against the Negro and that the Negro will be rid of a hated symbol of second-class citizenship. And maybe we should be thankful if the Supreme Court does this for us. This sort of thing is hard to abandon voluntarily, and the South might not do it of its own accord for another fifty years.

A. H.

To be published in SOCIAL FORCES, October 1954. This copy for limited circulation.

Materials - Desegregation
BCU - Make folder if we don't have one -)

A SOCIOLOGIST LOOKS AT RACIAL DESEGREGATION IN THE SOUTH

By
Guy B. Johnson
University of North Carolina

(Presidential address delivered at the annual meeting of the Southern Sociological Society, Atlanta, March 26, 1954.)

I. Prelude to Crisis

In the barber shop the other day a countryman in the chair opposite me said, "Professor, I see where the Supreme Court is going to pass a new law sayin' that the white and the colored will have to go to school together. It makes me sort of uneasy."

There are indeed a lot of uneasy people in the South today, because the institution of compulsory racial segregation is under attack and may soon be dealt a knock-out blow. In 1952 five test cases, sponsored by the N.A.A.C.P. on behalf of the parents of Negro children in public schools, went up to the United States Supreme Court on appeal. The cases, which came from South Carolina, Virginia, Delaware, District of Columbia, and Kansas, were consolidated for the purpose of the hearing by the Court. The N.A.A.C.P. believed that the time was ripe to demand that the Court decide the cases on the issue of segregation itself. It argued that even if the Negro schools were equal to the white schools in all measurable respects they would still impose an inevitable social and psychological stigma upon the Negro child, and it asked the Court to declare compulsory segregation on grounds of race an act of discrimination and therefore contrary to the Constitution of the United States. The defense argued, of course, that there is nothing inherently discriminatory in segregation, that school facilities can be and are being equalized, and it asked the Court to reaffirm its traditional

Mat - Desegregation 4/11/54

RECEIVED 1954 SOCIOLOGICAL COUNCIL

SOCIAL CHANGE, SOCIAL STATUS AND THE LAW: A SOCIOLOGICAL VIEW

Rupert B. Vance
University of North Carolina

If carried through to completion, the abolition of public school segregation will mark America's greatest change in social status since the emancipation of the slaves. This may seem a weighty sentence but as any sociologist can say, its most important word is If! The present article proposes to examine this trend toward equalization against doctrines of social status and social change now prevalent in sociological theory. It will be seen that some of these concepts are common to both sociology and law.

SOCIAL STATUS AND THE LAW

Basically as the sociologist sees it the Negro has a serious problem of social status -- the most drastic facing any group in American life. In a society which thinks of itself as predominantly middle class with avenues open to mobility for individuals able to achieve, the Negro seems caught in permanent lower class status. The remedy is sought in an appeal to the Negro's legal status -- an appeal calculated to force social change on the basis of the American ideology of equality and opportunity. The social mechanism by which the Negro is deprived of opportunity is seen as segregation -- a segregation in which the public sphere violates his rights as a citizen. Unaccounted for in this scheme are large areas falling within the private sphere of life. Here also is a crucial battleground of social change and social status. It is the purpose of this paper to examine these areas in relation to the role of law in social change.

Any attempt to determine the chance of obtaining these social goals by legal action enters the realm of prediction and must be regarded as estimation. Finally, in order to avoid the heat of argument in an area pervaded by emotion, the analysis will be written without apparent ethical commitment. The treatment, however, will take account of legal and sociological categories representing accepted norms and values. When known, these can be accepted as data. The fact that they vary from one part of the country to another is recognized as setting the problem within a Federal-State system of legality.

We may begin by saying that the problem and paradox of equality of individuals and groups in our democratic society can be quite simply stated. There is a history of change in legal status and a history of change in social status and they are not the same. In law the great transition has been from the law of many statuses to the one status state, where all members hold the legal status of citizen with equal rights before the law. In terms that carry understanding to both lawyers and sociologists, Sir Henry Sumner Maine has phrased this great change as an evolution from the law of status to the law of contract.

Rights, privileges and punishments were decreed in Greece, Rome, and the antebellum United States on the basis of the individual's status as either freeman, slave, or freedman. After slavery was abolished the Roman Empire finally created the one status state when it gave freedmen the status of citizens. After the French Revolution liquidated the survivals of Feudalism there remained one status before the French law -- that of citizen. In Brazil this transition was made with remarkable facility after the emancipation of the slaves in 1888. Negroes, it is true, remained in mass members of the lowest class, but they gained citizens' rights and exceptional ones rose to high social status.

Democracies have shown no comparable trend toward uniformity of position in the social hierarchy of wealth, power, and prestige. Differential ranking based on family background and achievement is a fundamental phenomena of our social system. Certainly great differences in influence and in style of life have continued and increased. It is presumed that these issues are to be settled within the context of class and social stratification since democracies promote an ideology of "open clases." Here the great goal of most people is not to be one of the few elite of society; rather it is to be "respectable" middle class instead of lower class. Every opinion poll brings out the fact that approximately 80 percent to 90 percent of our people think of themselves as "middle class."

Sociologists recognize that the pressure toward equality in our social system largely represents the drive toard mobility -- the desire to climb the economic and social ladder. The spirit behind the transition from Jeffersonian to Jacksonian democracy is epitomized in the frontier feeling: "I am just as good as the next man, if not a damn sight better." Equality is obviously equality of opportunity; the pyramidal structure of social prestige and influence is accepted, and no dead level of stratification is expected or demanded in the society.

The pressure to achieve and to hold middle class status is characterized by stress and strain so that ambition itself can be seen as a certain mild form of persistent "anxiety." Here of course is found the impact of the new education and of the improved economic outlook on major groups in the South. Equality of opportunity now means the chance to advance in the content and sumbols of a respectable lower middle class style of life. Avoidance of contact with less respectable lower class "style of life" is definitely a part of this "anxiety." To the South the Negro is definitely a lower class symbol.

In the beginning the Negro -- fixed on the bottom rung -- was a spectator rather than a participant in this development of the masses and the classes. In the United States the first American Revolution did nothing to alter his slave status. The Second American Revolution made him a freed man. It could not give him social status; no law can do that for any group or individual, but the 14th and 15th amendments were passed to give him the legal status of citizen. It is unnecessary to remark on the freed man's position at the base of social stratification -- unskilled, unpropertied, lacking in prestige -- a veritable proletariat.

Inevitably the hopes of the Negro elite and of the masses turned to education. The principle of universal education, as Reinhold Niebuhr says, was already present as "a product of the democratic movement cultivated by middle class idealists." Schools were accepted as social elevators in a stratified social order. The way to influence and prestige led through the schools and colleges and to be a college graduate marked one as middle class. In Warner and Havinghurst's realistic discussion of Who Shall Be Educated our educational system is seen as a sorting and selecting agency -- a conveyor belt where the child is inspected not only for brains and learning ability but for skin color, pronunciation, cut of clothes, table manners, and parental bank account.

For the Negro masses these hopes led to disappointment and frustration; for the elite, they led to achievement but fell short of prestige and status. The greatest gains from education undoubtedly came in assimilation in language, manners, and style of living -- the same process through which the immigrant began his introduction to American life.

The American Negro is now fully convinced that he is confined in lower class position; he feels this is due to the device of segregation and that enforcement of legal status will bring the desired changes in his social status. It was not the process of education that failed. It was segregated education that failed.

The reader may well feel that the foregoing discussion represents circular reasoning. The argument does represent a turning upon itself and the reader is correct in the sense that we have here a sociological vicious circle. It can be stated thus:

1. If the Negro held high social status in our system, his legal rights as a citizen would be enforceable without difficulty.

2. Conversely, the argument runs, if we enforce the legal rights due the Negro as a citizen, Negroes will attain the higher social status desired.

Both these statements may well be valid but they illustrate the difficulty of selecting an initial factor in the chain of circumstance which, once grasped, is assumed to unroll the sequence of cause and effect.

The danger is that we here overlook important factors hidden in this sequence. The above statements are highly rational and represent a logical approach to social change. Concealed here may be an irrational factor, highly emotional, and one whose operation may be unconscious. It can be stated thus:

3. The Negro's distinctive physical traits, his racial uniform, have symbolic value, imputing subordination and low social status. Our various immigrant stocks and their children facing a similar situation have climbed in the social strata pretty much in direct ratio to the length of time they have been in this country and their nearness of their culture to the predominant type, that of the American middle classes. They escape, it is felt, the main handicap which in spite of his assimilation and long residence now places the Negro at the foot of the hierarchy. This as we have said is the symbolic impact of racial traits implying low status. The continuance of the Negro in the lower class re-enforces these stereotypes and thus completes the vicious circle. His origin placed him there; stereotypes help keep him there.

How are these things affected by law? Present laws sanction segregation in many areas. What can law do to change that status? What the lawyers for the NAACP ask of the Court is directed change in the Negro's status in conformity with his rights as a citizen. What are the chances that this will come about? This leads to a consideration of the doctrine of social change.

SOCIAL CHANGE AND THE LAW

The trend and sequence of change are imperfectly understood by even the best qualified students of society but there is general agreement that social change involves a whole context of relations and best occurs "all along the line." The classic study, Social Change by W. F. Ogburn made professional sociologists aware of the existence of cultural lag -- a phenomenon usually found when change, forced in one institutional sector, moves ahead leaving other sectors unchanged. In Ogburn's view change moves ahead more rapidly in the technical and economic spheres of life, leaving gaps between innovations here and our customary attitudes and behaviors. President Franklin Roosevelt gave popular currency to this view when he spoke of "horse and buggy morals in an automobile age."

In this analysis, law can be seen as the mechanism for closing up the gaps left by unequal rates of change. The passage of Workmen's Compensation laws can be seen as a case in point. Thus the introduction of heavy, high speed machinery to replace simple hand tools was a major social change. It left the burden of industrial accidents to be borne by the workers while society reaped the benefits of low cost production. This lag was closed when after the passage of workmen's compensation legislation the principle of insured risks replaced the employers' liability limited by the doctrines of assumed risk, contributory negligence and fellow servant. That this offers an example of social change which carried through all along the line is shown by (1) the declining rate of accidents and (2) the collapse of resistance in the various states against the legislation.

National prohibition offers an example of a change in law which did not carry through to change in the collective behavior and attitudes of society. In spite of our respect for the Constitution, resistance increased and law enforcement was insufficient to bring about social change. This resistance assumed the form of violations as well as evasions of the law. Under this situation it can be said the 18th Amendment was repealed in order to preserve respect for the law. This in spite of the fact that the change was supported by public opinion as represented in the (1) affirmative votes of state legislatures, and was implemented both by (2) Federal legislation as in the Volstead Act, and (3) supporting legislation in many states. For students of social change the contrast with a decision of the Supreme Court is impressive.

Thus while students of law realize that social change can be and has been implemented by legal enactment and judicial decision, it is also realized that resistance to social change is of many types. Here we can say that jurisprudence as a social science has shared in the responsibility of determining the extent to which any desired social change is enforceable by law. Laws may be violated, and they may be evaded. Evasion carries the implication of driving a course through gaps in the law, if not actually breaking it. Important to the courts, to public order, and to the profession is the whole field of conflict of laws.

Oftentimes the change ordered by legal enactment and judicial decision is so limited in scope that no actual evasion is drawn upon to block social change. Sometimes modes of adjustment may exist within the choice of individuals and groups — alternatives sanctioned in legal codes. It is in this borderline between public and private spheres of life that the doctrine of social change is of most importance to students of jurisprudence. It must be remembered that issues may be decided not on the basis of an assumed code of ethics but on the basis of what is enforceable within the system of legality.

EVASION AND SOCIAL ALTERNATIVES: PUBLIC AND PRIVATE SPHERES

No one can play fair on the issue of school segregation and minimize the role of resistance to change. Evasion has been present throughout this issue or else the accepted legal doctrine of "separate but equal facilities" would have been implemented in the public schools. The much publicized plans of Georgia and South Carolina to operate their public schools as private institutions also represent forms of evasion whose legality the courts may be forced to adjudicate.

The public schools as an institution are a weak vehicle on which to place the burden of the drive toward equality. There are several reasons for making this statement: (1) In the early grades and in the high school, the schools function for young children and for adolescents as a primary group, next in intimacy to the family and the playground. It is generally agreed that impersonal and more formal areas of social interaction will be won to racil equality before these more personal areas. (2) The schools are under criticism for their failure to achieve excellence -- a criticism that ranges from the schools' lack of influence on juvenile behavior to their failure to achieve excellence in intellectual training. (3) Schools and the school district are peculiarly local institutions in their control and administration, having strict jurisdictional lines. (4) Public school attendance is not strictly compulsory; individuals have free choice of attending private schools.

The abandonment of public schools by an official body is a direct evasion of law; the abandonment of public schools for private schools by individuals is lanctioned in all our legal codes. In terms of legal alternatives there is no reason to assume that the courts will allow the use of state funds to support segregated schools conducted under private auspices. On the other hand there is no conceivable way whereby states and school districts can be forced to support public schools at their present levels if enrollments decline. Nor can it be seen at the moment how local school districts can be enjoined from selling or renting school property in districts where pupils no longer attend.

In terms of this situation the transfer of students from public to private schools should come as no surprise. The pattern is already well fixed for certain classes and areas in the nation. In the immigrant areas of the Northwest we have the devotion of the rising middle classes to the private school as a means of holding or achieving higher social status for their children. In addition, association with children of different ethnic backgrounds on the part of the majority is further reduced by the system of parochial schools, leaving the public schools to a group in-between. The private school as preparation for high status once was a part of the South's tradition as it is of New England's today. The South's present devotion to universal education in the public schools represents many things. It is an adjustment to the poverty of many of its people; it also represents a real triumph of the democratic movement in the South.

A movement to parochial schools, now evident among Protestant groups such as the Lutherans and Presbyterians, is largely motivated by demand for a better quality of education as well as the desire for religious training. Religious leaders in the South, however, have shown no inclination to allow private schools to be used as public schools in this situation. A flight of students to bonafide private schools as an individual choice will depend more on economic dircumstances of the aspiring middle classes than on anything else. It would not represent a violation of the law even though it left an almost barren public school system to the Negroes and the lower classes.

A second alternative - a flight of teachers from the public schools -- is equally sanctioned in law and equally resistant to change. This is already a national problem. In terms of the low income, the low prestige, and the heavy responsibility attached to the occupation of teaching, this condition is to be expected. When young girls, callow youths, and tired functionaries find the nation's race and status problems with all their community reverberations dumped in their laps, the flight of teachers from the public schools will be limited only by the extent of alternative opportunities--including marriage. In proportion, the flight of teachers may well exceed that of their pupils. To military service and employment in a prosperous period may be added an increased demand for teachers among the developing private schools.

Unless the new public schools employ the existing corps of Negro teachers for their mixed classes, the loss of teachers will be even greater. Lawyers have the problem of determining whether any form of legal action can be used to enforce the employment of Negro teachers upon the boards of the local school districts. The fact that this can hardly be accomplished in the absence of supporting legislation simply underscores the difficulty of the change. A Supreme Court decision strikes down contrary statues; it does not guarantee the passage of supporting legislation by either Congress or the states. Would Negro teachers whose schools are absorbed have legal recourse in absence of state or federal FEPC laws?

What of those important officers of administration, the members of local school bpards? What alternatives have they? Obviously their alternatives are limited: they cannot resign when they are sued, enjoined or jailed for the community's non-compliance with the law. But as citizens they can refuse service on school boards. Since there is political capital to be gained in these areas such refusal to serve may well be selective--exercising negative selection on the more moderate business men and administrators and bringing forward those types who realize the political rewards to be reaped from the revival of the "Negro baiting" tactics of the recent past.

What tactics will such school boards use? Here it may be said that these tactics are already fairly well developed in the political arena. Here resistance to change may involve either evasion or defiance of the law; this last could lead to litigation of an especially troublesome kind. A persistant evasion used in politics already exists--the well-known practice of gerrymandering electoral districts. This practice, along with the failure of state legislatures to reapportion in conformity with constitutional requirements, has rarely proved amenable to legal action. Once the redistricting of school jurisdictions is undertaken, the reorganization of segregated neighborhoods is likely to proceed very rapidly indeed. This also involves alternatives in the field of voluntary action and thus encounters no applicable legal sanctions. The easement of hardships in permitting whites and Negroes to attend segregated schools outside their districts would represent evasion. The handling of such cases could be most harassing. What legal actions can be taken? Who would sue? And on what grounds? Not those who have been permitted to cross jurisdictional lines, for they are the recipients of special privileges. Not those left behind, for they would thus be asking to violate regulations. The answer, of course, is obvious. In the absence of supporting legislation from the states, the Federal Judiciary, in the words of Counsel John W. Davis before the Court, will be acting as a glorified Board of Education for the State of South Carolina.

To those who wish to push quickly on to social change the above discussion may read like a horrifying recital of all the outrages of which the traditional South once proved capable. It should not. Actually it is written in a new context--that of a newly developing "middle-class South" rather than that of the "lower-class South" devoted to violence in race relations. It represents not violations of the law but alternatives to compliance that are sanctioned in law.

Actually the recourse to private schools represents the behavior of an aspiring middle class in the avoidance of neighbors who live across the tracks. Teachers who leave the public schools are simply exercising their right to a choice of occupations. School boards which refuse to hire Negro teachers are exercising their right to choice of employees. Gerrymandering and the reapportionment of school jurisdictions are not here seen as acts of lower class violence and reprisal. These things, it may be predicted, will be accepted not as white collar criminality, but as decent, respectable behavior--several cuts indeed, above the patronizing of bootleggers during the prohibition era. Only the control of these responses by legal action is likely to bring to the community any conviction of wrongdoing.

No doubt there are conditions under which racial violence might flare anew in the South. The abandonment of the public schools in rural areas or in urban slum areas to two groups--the lower classes and the Negro--could be dangerous. Under conditions of compulsory education, it is easy to see how conflict and violence could dollow their enforced mingling. Such sequestration of the public schools could raise gerrymandering of school districts to a high level of public policy. This, in the writer's opinion, could well involve conflict with the Federal Courts.

CONCLUSION

To keep open the avenues to social status for those who have achieved and for those who are aspiring is an important component of the American Dream. To different groups this ideology means different things. To the Negro it means the chance of equalizing his social status with his legal status in the American system. To the striving lower middle classes it has meant a chance to increase their social distance from "lower class" groups who might hinder their children's chances to rise. Here enter the mingled public and private aspects of association in neighborhood, community, and the public schools. The equality which in the American ideology means the opportunity to rise in social scale is seen as relative to groups higher in the hierarchy of status. It thus means different things to different men. As the Negro seeks integration with the common institutions and facilities of American life, the groups with whom he would like to identify himself push on to identify themselves with groups still higher in status.

Decisions in law can not enforce the major change desired--a higher social status for the nations' "man lower down." Law can be used to enforce citizens' rights only in the use of public facilities. That this is not equivalent to "breaking down segregation" is due to the large area left to the private sphere of social life--areas in which the voluntary action of individuals is legally sanctioned. The problems of social status we have with us always. Change in the "blanket status" of the man lower down is social change all along the line. To say that this involves change in the mores is to utter a truism--true because the mores, rather than law, govern in the private sphere of social relations.

It seems to me there are several assumptions we must make in this connection:

1. We must not reduce the proportions being educated during this transition.

2. This requirement demands that we retain all our present Negro teaching staff.

3. We must not allow our schools to reduce the quality of education and permit a decline below its present low level. Otherwise the trend to low-rate schools will be irresistable.

4. This is to say education must continue to educate--here it can make its contribution to solution of the problem of social status--which is the essential problem.

5. To perform these tasks---tasks which the schools are in no wise competent, all legal requirement for refusing of races in schools should be repealed.

The unwelcome realism and cold-blooded idealism of this analysis has disturbed some people who are not prepared for the way sociologists sometimes look at things thru their "objective" glasses.

I have also been asked: Given this point of view, what action do you propose?

I shall be glad to answer this question with the understanding that the time at my disposal does not allow me to fill out details.

1. I propose first that all state laws decreasing separation of races in public schools be repealed.

2. I would like for the equalization of all school facilities and salaries as quickly as this can be done.

3. I would retain all Negro teachers and staff at their present schools.

4. This would be followed by announcement by school boards that all pupils were free to change their registration to the school of their choice, within the jurisdiction of the legal established school district.

5. This abolishes all legal discrimination. The rest in social change where the Negroes and the white people are far advanced it will come fast. Where they are backward, it will come slow. What else does anybody expect? Where groups are well advanced, they can take advantage of it. Where they are backward, presumably they would suffer from the change.

Materials - Desegregation

THE REAL TRAGEDIES OF DESEGREGATION

Text of an address delivered by Carl T. Rowan, newspaperman and author of "The Pitiful and the Proud," before the 83rd Annual Forum of The National Conference of Social Work, St. Louis, Missouri, May 23, 1956.

Mr. Chairman, first let me express to you and to these many who sit before me my deep-felt appreciation for the invitation to meet with you and to discuss with you some of the problems that prod deeply inside the hearts and minds of sensitive mankind everywhere.

I am especially pleased to speak on your general theme, "The Challenge of Change," because I do not have to guess what it means. In this audience are many of my friends and acquaintances, and some of them, I know, have walked through the slums of the North side of Minneapolis, or the South side of Chicago or Fourth street in Nashville, or those festering eyesores of other American communities. They have cringed at the filth, the crime, the disease, the abject human misery of these places and they have paused to ask themselves, "WHY MUST THIS BE?"

Others sit in this audience who, like myself, perhaps, grew up under the shadow of Jim Crow in little towns where they could not get a drink of water in a drugstore unless the fountain clerk could find a paper cup. Facing these lingering acid-stings of humiliation, they too have said so many times, "WHY MUST THIS BE?"

And oh so many more of you have known, first-hand or with the second-hand intimacy of a sweetheart, wife or mother, the terrible agony of war. So even as you suppress memories of those days when we read about the beaches of Tarawa and Heartbreak Ridge in Korea, however, much we try to forget these bestial manifestations of man's inhumanity to himself and his fellowman, we must stop to ask, "WHY MUST THIS BE?"

Still, so many of us--and I mean us in this very room--cringe timidly and close our eyes to the turmoil about us although we know deep in our hearts that mankind will be plagued by filth, crime, disease, hatred, wars and rumours of wars until you and I show the individual courage to meet this challenge of change.

Today, the status quo has pleasant meaning only to the fearful and to those frightful merchants of arrogance who live under illusions that the world will stand still at their bidding.

The forces of change beset us from every side, but nowhere is this challenge greater or more meaningful than in those areas where we seek to ensure for all Americans those basic rights and liberties supposedly bestowed upon us by our God and our Constitution.

The United States Supreme Court took a meaningful step in this direction on May 17, 1954, when it declared unanimously that racial segregation in the public schools of this nation is illegal under our Constitution. That was a monumental decision destined to have severe impact upon the future of Western democracy. No other single incident in the history of this nation was ever seized upon so voraciously by this nation's propaganda experts who used millions of words and pictures to tell Asians and Africans that Americans had found a cure for the nation's Achilles' heel.

HOW happy I should be were I able to stand here today and tell you that vast millions in the nation's Southland have responded nobly, if reluctantly, to this challenge to forge a new social order reflecting credit upon democratic institutions. As a reporter, I cannot do that. There are too many things that distress me. Now, I do not want to be accused of adopting that old newspaperman's slogan, GOOD NEWS IS NO NEWS, so let me say briefly that on the whole the Negro is a freer citizen who finds the pursuit of happiness something closer to an even race as a result of that May 17 decision.

Even with the heavy penalty it is paying for the discriminations of the past, Washington, D. C., is a vastly different city from the citadel of bigotry that I wrote about in SOUTH OF FREEDOM. This city we meet in is considerably different from the bastion of Jim Crow that I knew during several World War II visits. In West Virginia, Kentucky, Oklahoma, Texas and several other states human beings have reached inside themselves to stifle the fears and frustrations of old, and they are giving us indications of the capacity of democracy for change.

But I should be doing you and my country a disservice were I to spend these precious minutes reading off a scorecard of the communities that have decided, for one reason or another, to obey the highest court in the land to one degree or another. I feel it a compelling duty to share with you my grave alarm that while we sit back rejoicing over the "good things", while we salve our guilty consciences by telling ourselves that we are making progress, those very cherished freedoms so vital to ALL Americans will be damaged or destroyed in an unrelenting, unscrupulous assault by peddlers of hatred.

I see so much danger that while you, the thinking Americans, the supposed sentinels of liberty, are being swallowed up in a cult whose creed is gutlessness in the name of moderation, the forces of bigotry and reaction, will strike some very damaging blows at the heart of this republic.

Now, I beg you to understand that I do not speak to you this morning as a Negro. Perhaps I could have done that in the years before I went to Asia and Africa and gazed into the agonized faces of mankind in upheaval. Today I speak not of my rights, but OUR rights and liberties.

Preying upon the fears and emotions of much of the white south, and far too substantial a portion of the white north, those elements in this country which always have opposed social and economic change now have set out to discredit and destroy the United States Supreme Court.

Almost a year ago today — May 26, 1955 — James Oliver Easterly, a Mississippi senator, stood in the senate and declared that the Supreme Court was "indoctrinated and brainwashed by left-wing pressure groups." He charged that the justices are "attempting to graft into the organic law of the land the teaching, preachments, and social doctrines which can be traced to Karl Marx."

The Jackson (Miss.) Daily News, which calls itself Mississippi's greatest newspaper, said in a front-page editorial that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, "is dedicated to widening this wedge, which was handed them by a subversive Supreme Court."

U. S. News and World Report, whose editors are a trifle more clever if no more enlightened than those of the Jackson newspaper, published in its May 18 issue a long cover article by James F. Byrnes titled, "The Supreme Court Must Be CURBED."" This is a burdensomely long rehashing of Eastland's charges that the Court is Communist influenced, that it is forcing mongrelization upon the American people and that the trend in the court "brings joy to Communists and fellow travelers."

Let us assume for the moment that none of us here is severely disturbed about the status of the Negro, that we are indifferent at best when it comes to working for compliance with the court's decision. We then can look at these attacks on the court in the broader perspective of what they mean to all Americans. I say that you and I had better understand that if the segregationists succeed in this campaign to discredit the court, they will do far more than doom Negroes to more decades of second-class citizenship. They will make this a country in which life is scarcely worth living for either a white man or black man nurtured on long traditions of freedom of expression and belief.

When they discredit the Supreme Court they discredit the body which interprets our Constitution, the well-spring of all political freedoms. When they destroy the Court they destroy the body that decided what the Bill of Rights means to all of us. They seek to destroy the group of men who for the last few years have symbolized the bulwark of individual liberty, standing boldly between bewildered Americans and witch-hunters and scalawags who posed as saviours of the republic.

Do you think I overstate the case? Well, do you remember a senator named McCarthy? Joe's his name. Joe Doaks caught up to him, just as he does for all demagogues if time lasts, and discovered that he was just a clever hack preying upon the insecurity and ignorance of Americans. So Joe McCarthy faded into obscurity and, frankly, I thought he had died. But apparently Senator Eastland whispers to him about this Bridey Murphy business, and now Joe McCarthy is trying to reincarnate himself as Jim Crow. On May 11 Eastland held a session in Washington in which he constituted himself as a Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, and his star witness was none other than Joe McCarthy. Their objective was to rap Eastland's favorite target—the Supreme Court. The two issued a joint statement charging that the members of the court are "politicians instead of lawyers."

"It's not that they are knowingly helping the Communist cause. It's just that they don't understand what they are doing," said the two great patriots, referring to the nine justices.

I don't think anyone in this audience is so naive as to think that any nine justices would have escaped the wrath of the unyielding segregationists. Yet, more is necessary than the absence of naviete if we are to meet the challenge of change.

I checked my files just before leaving Minneapolis, and I counted twenty-six white ministers who have been forced from their pastorates, some with fanfare, some quietly; some by the mob-like clamor of churchgoers, others by the quiet, dignified pressure of people like the governor of the state—all because they dared suggest that the Supreme Court's edict be obeyed.

In Elloree, S. C., last week it was learned that 21 Negro teachers have refused to sign statements swearing that they are not members of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

About the same time, in Jackson, Miss., the state's "Sovereignty Commission," or its "watchdog" over states' rights, voted to hire secret agents to serve as "eyes and ears" in the fight to keep segregation. This commission, headed by the governor, J. P. Coleman, also agreed to spend state tax monies to "buy information" about activities in the integration camp. This commission decided to act in secrecy because "it's possible we may want to hire a Negro" to spy on Negroes in Mississippi.

The most significant comments of the day, though, were these sentences the governor used to caution Mississippians against panic:

"I see no reason for alarm, frustration or futility. We have the ball and it's up to the opposition to take the initiative. After all, integration came about because the people gave up. We will not give up."

So it is up to "the opposition" to take the initiative. The opposition would be the Supreme Court, the Justice Department and all the Americans who honestly believe that our Constitution is color blind. But what are these Americans doing? For the most part, they are mouthing platitudes and cliches. Oh, you've heard them all: "These are Times for cool heads to prevail." "If only we could get rid of the extremists on both sides." "We must have patience." "We cannot solve this problem over night." "We've made a lot of progress in the last century--a little more time will help." "I believe in evolution, not revolution." "We mustn't go too fast or we'll set progress back 100 years."

Those are all nice, sweet little syllables, but what do they add up to? You know and I know: cowardice.

How much time and patience will it take to make Coleman voluntarily yield the the initiative, as he puts it? Whose head is cool enough to feed those Negro teachers who would rather not work if it means yielding their last vestiges of Constitutional freedom?

How many of you remember President Eisenhower's State of the Union address in which he asked Congress to set up a bipartisan commission to investigate charges that in parts of the country Negroes were being deprived of their basic rights through economic reprisals, and so forth? This provoked the Jackson Daily News to run another front-page editorial. This one said:

"Those who suspected we had that kind of President in the White House when he named the ignorant, fat-headed Fred (sic) Warren as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court to write the ignoble 'black Monday' decision on segregation have had their suspicions verified.

"Dwight Eisenhower, in his race for president in 1952, received a very large vote in Mississippi. Today he couldn't command the following of a corporal's guard in a race for constable in any county in the commonwealth.

"The President has earned, and justly deserves, the contempt of all good people throughout the South....

"Any commission named by him would be about as 'bi-partisan' as a hog gobbling rotten guts in a swill trough."

These words, from the Jackson (Miss.) Daily News are intemperate and ugly with the mark of man's fear, and I should prefer not to have to utter them from a lecture platform. But, ladies and gentlemen, these are not times to be squeamish. We must face the ugly truth, and we must ask ourselves if we have cliches that apply with equal merit to people striving as best they can to solve these tense social problems and people of unlimited arrogance and gall, such as the writer of that editorial. Tell me, what sense of justice permits an editorial writer to place the writer of that editorial in the same so-called "extremists" camp with an NAACP official whose strongest demand is that the people abide by the nation's highest court's demand that there be "a prompt and reasonable start" to end segregation.

Too many supposedly decent and enlightened people go about today in confusion, victimized by deliberate falsehood and, more often, the meaningless cliches of spineless men who seek safety as middle-of-the-readers. Well, even some of our politicians are going to learn that the worst accidents happen in the middle of the road.

If I sound angry or dogmatic, I ask your forgiveness. I feel these things intensely nowadays, for I have spent most of the last two years in the two worlds of revolution--Asia and Africa. There I saw first-hand that millions of human beings have risen up and that they cry out in voices of unmistakable clarity saying, "We intend to be free. We intend to be masters of our own fates. We intend to make the decisions affecting our own lives."

I need not impress upon you the fact that those decisions will affect far more than the lives of Asians and Africans, but yours and mine and our children's and our children's children's. I do want to impress upon you the fact that the most explosive ingredients in this Asian revolution are anti-colonialism and anti-racism. To the Asian and African, these two things are interrelated, for both are viewed as manifestations of the white man's organized arrogance.

In far shrewder ways than we possibly can imagine, the Communists know how to use these two ingredients to convince these millions, groping for a place under the sun, that you and your fellow Americans are phonies when you tell them that a position of equality awaits them under the banner of Western democracy.

Many will tell you that these millions cry out for rice, for houses, for education. Indeed, they do--but the deeper, more meaningful cries are for dignity. The Asian and the African are begging for boldness; they must have evidence that our system stands for more than the status quo, that ours is not the voice of "freedom for you sometime in the sweet by and by," if traditions of individual liberty are to be preserved in these two crucial continents.

So when the next cliche peddler tells you that you must "understand the south," agree with him to the extent that he acknowledges that we all must understand our Constitution, our concept of justice, our role in a world where the destiny of mankind is wrapped in doubt and strife.

How tragic it will be for us all if we cannot, or do not, take steps that enable the Negro to keep faith in the processes of democracy. If the Negro cannot achieve justice through the courts; if a band of politicians and Main Street Klansmen can reduce to an impotent shambles the constitutional machinery that the Negro has kept faith in for four decades, they who can look toward Asia and Africa and say with conviction, "Have faith. The capacity for change, for progress toward full justice are inherent in democracy."?

Let me close by saying that mine is not the voice of despair. I am not one of the wilting hearts who trembles at the roar of the demagogues who now muster their citizens councils in cotton patches and beneath weeping willows and cries, "Ooooh, I wouldn't have wanted that Supreme Court decision if I had known that it would start all this trouble."

Let no one tell you that we have moved backwards because of the Supreme Court decision. Missiouri will tell you better. So will Kansas. In the deep South the decision merely has brought to the surface the turmoil that always has rumbled quietly in the shadow of Jim Crow. It is absolutely that this turmoil arise and that it be met and dealt with before any really significant strides toward real democracy coulc be made. No really significant social change ever occurred anywhere at any time without accompanying upheaval.

So all the ugliness, the angry words, the frightening schemes, can be but strange and laughable history for those who attend your Forum not too many years from now--but only if we have the courage to meet the challenge. If we meet the challenge--yes, wisely always, but never compromising on principle; never assuming that time alone is a cure for anything. Only if those in this audience sense personal involvement and then take personal action can we have any hope that the liberties our forefathers secured for us are resecured for future years and generations.

If you sit there today with the honest knowledge that you have the courage to strip away the cliches and the little platitudes of gutlessness, and step forward boldly to meet our generation's greatest challenge of change, our fears are small, whether we think of home or those troubled areas abroad. Boldness and courage in the town you live in is fuel for the torches of freedom in the many dark corners of the world.

But is you sit there rationalizing your way into some imaginary middle-of-the-road security because you know that deep inside you, too, are a slave to the status quo, then you have many, many reasons to worry. Whether we speak of Minnesota, Georgia or Jakarta, liberty always has been the jeopardy for the timid--and for the arrogant.

Resay 12-56 MM

The Legal Profession and Segregation

A most formidable challenge to the intellectual vigor, moral courage and genuine patriotism of the legal profession

WILLIAM J. KENEALY, S.J.

The philosophy of American Democracy is expressed in two immortal documents: the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States. The two are inseparable. For, although the Declaration of Independence is not part of the organic law of the land, it is in truth the vital spirit and thought of which the Constitution is the operative body and letter. Now the vital spirit and thought of our living philosophy of government and law is epitomized in the familiar words of the Declaration:

> We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

According to this philosophy, government is not an end in itself, but a means to an end. And the end of government is not merely the establishment of order; for order itself is a means and its end is justice. But justice also is a means and its end is liberty. Finally, liberty is simply the condition of social life necessary to enable all members of society to cooperate in peace and prosperity, to attain their happiness, to achieve their perfection and thereby to fulfill their human destiny.

Thus, the real end of government is adequately defined as a just and ordered liberty. But the essence of liberty is the free exercise by every human being of the rights proper to human personality and destiny. Wherefore, the prime purpose of government is the protection of the individual in the exercise of his personal rights. Therefore, the crucial test of the value of a government is the measure of its success in protecting the personal rights of its citizens and subjects.

Now the characteristic feature of democratic government, as distinguished from other forms of government, is that it is rule by the majority.

Sermon preached in the cathedral of New Orleans to the members of the Louisiana bench and bar on the occasion of the Red Mass, traditionally offered for the sanctification of the new court year.

But contrary to a popular modern fallacy, true democracy is not a mere matter of form. It is much more than majority rule. Majority rule could be mob rule. Remember a distressed Italian people, flooding the piazzas of Rome, crying "Duce! Duce! Duce!" They cried for a leader and got a demagogue. Remember a bewildered German people, crowding the squares of Berlin, shouting "Heil Hitler!" and voting for Adolph Schicklgruber. They shouted for a fuehrer and elected a tyrant. Who ever received greater majorities than Joseph Stalin? No, there is no magic in mere forms. And mere majority rule is capable of establishing a tyranny as atrocious as that of any Oriental despot. Hence, democracy, as mere majority rule, would be a faceless and spineless philosophy of government and of law.

Minority Rights Essential

On the contrary, because the essence of liberty is the freedom to exercise individual and equal personal rights and because voting majorities are able and quick to vindicate their own rights, true and effective democracy must consist in minority rights under majority rule. But never in history has there been, and never in the future can there be, minority rights under majority rule unless the majority repudiates the blasphemy that numbers make truth and that might makes right; unless the majority has the intelligence and good-will to subordinate will to reason and to subjugate prejudice to judgment; unless the majority faces and accepts the fact that there is an objective moral order, within the range of human intelligence and within the capacity of human virtue, to which civil societies and voting majorities are bound in conscience to conform—and upon which the liberty, the peace and happiness of personal, national and international life depend.

The mandatory aspect of the objective moral order is called by philosophers the natural law. In virtue of the natural law, essentially equal human beings are endowed by their Creator with natural rights and obligations, which are inalienable precisely because they are God-given. They are antecedent, therefore, both in logic and in nature to the formation of civil societies and the casting of majority ballots. They are not bestowed by the beneficence of any state, democratic or otherwise; wherefore the tyranny of any state, democratic or otherwise, cannot destroy them. Rather it is the high moral obligation of all civil societies and all voting majorities to acknowledge their existence, to protect their exercise and to facilitate their enjoyment by the construction and maintenance of a civil code of laws which embraces, complements and applies the principles of the natural law to civic life.

In its essence, granted the existence of Almighty God, the natural law is a simple thing. It is man's participation in the eternal law of God. It implies that we know, independently of Lafayette Square, or Baton Rouge, or Washington, or London, or Moscow—or of the Vatican, for that matter—that all human beings, without exception, are the children of God, endowed with immortal souls, destined for eternal life, bound in conscience to pursue that destiny, and possessed of equal and inalienable rights to enable us to do so. It implies that we know from our God-created nature that some things help in attaining our destiny and some make it more difficult; that some actions and some institutions are right and some wrong, regardless of material consequences. It implies that human governments and laws are instituted and administered by us to safeguard the personal rights of every single member of the brotherhood of men, so that each and all of us may attain in human dignity the divine destiny decreed by the One Good God Who is the loving Father of us all.

Basis for Rights

Thus, the philosophy of the natural law provides a rational and spiritual basis for our civil rights and liberties. It gives an adequate reason for the essential equality of all men. It supplies a sufficient measure for the essential dignity of human personality. It tells us why the Chinese coolie is the equal of the Roman cardinal; the Australian bushman, the equal of the European diplomat; the African tribesman, the equal of the American financier; because they and all of us, white and black and red and brown and yellow, have been created by the One God for intimate association with Him in perfect happiness for all eternity.

Such is the glorious destiny which measures the essential dignity of every man. Such is the common destiny which explains the essential equality of every man; an essential equality which makes rather ridiculous the pride and prejudice based on our accidental and temporary differences, be they physical, intellectual, economic, social or racial. Such is the awesome destiny which gives intelligibility to our constitutional principle of freedom and equality; and which demands, not merely decent human freedom and equality, but reverential respect and genuine brotherly love for every single person on the face of God's earth, regardless of race or creed or color or national origin.

This is the philosophy of the natural law. It is not sanctimonious sentimentality. It is not the insubstantial mist of wishful theory. It is the only solid soil of human freedom and equality. It is the philosophy upon which this nation was founded and to which this nation by its most solemn covenants and usages is dedicated. It is the philosophy upon which the people of the United States ordained and established a Federal Constitution. Despite the cynics and secularists in some academic halls, the glory of the American Constitution is that, for the first time in history, a great people formally and expressly made human rights the cornerstone of its political structure—and did so in a solemn profession of politico-religious faith. What a man is before God, that he is before the Constitution of this country.

But ideals must be put to work. General principles alone do not decide particular cases. Neither a philosophy nor a constitution is self-executing. A constitution needs legislative implementation, executive enforcement and judicial interpretation. Moreover, from time to time, it may need substantial change. To provide for substantial change, we did ordain and establish Article V of the Constitution, defining the only lawful process of constitutional amendment. To provide for judicial interpretation, we did ordain and establish Article III of the Constitution, creating one Supreme Court, conferring upon it alone final judicial power to decide all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution and the Amendments. Wherefore, subject only to the lawful process of constitutional amendment, the prevailing decisions of the Supreme Court are the authoritative interpretations of the supreme law of the land. As such, they command our loyal obedience and bind all private citizens and public agencies. For American liberty is not lawless license but it is the responsible liberty of free men living under God and the law.

I have said the "prevailing" decisions of the Supreme Court because, with all proper deference to the principle of stare decisis, the very nature of the judicial process postulates the reversal of a prior judicial precedent whenever, in the best judgment of the Court, such a reversal is necessary to correct previous error, or to interpret more accurately the meaning and to apply more effectively the purpose of constitutional provisions. Reversal of a judicial precedent may be necessitated extrinsically by the impact of changing political, economic, technological or social conditions in a complex and dynamic society; or intrinsically, by the evolution of a clearer understanding and deeper appreciation of the moral and social values already implicit in the constitutional provisions themselves.

This will always be true, at least until such time as society ceases to grow, knowledge ceases to advance and the Supreme Court becomes infallible—quod Deus avertat!

The reversal of the 1896 "separate but equal" doctrine of Plessy v. Ferguson, by the 1954 decisions in Brown v. The Board of Education and Bolling v. Sharpe, was principally owing, it seems, to the evolution of a clearer understanding and a deeper appreciation of the moral and social values which were always implicit in the equal protection clause of the 14th and the due process clause of the 5th Amendments. But whatever be the explanation, this much is certain: in the Brown and Bolling decisions the Supreme Court we established, exercising the powers we conferred, interpreting the Constitution we ordained, enunciated its authoritative interpretation of constitutional freedom and equality and applied the same to the difficult problem of racial segregation. The segregation decisions are binding, therefore, on all private persons and public agencies; but, a fortiori, they command the loyal obedience of those who are honored and privileged as members of the bench and bar, to be the officers and the agents of the courts in administering justice and preserving liberty under the supreme law of the land. Ours is not merely the obligations of citizenship; ours is also a sacred responsibility of leadership. To defend the majesty of the law is our professional honor. To this exalted task lawyers are solemnly sworn and dedicated.

I do not wish to imply, of course, that our obligation of loyal obedience to the Supreme Court precludes adverse criticism of its decisions. For freedom of speech is a constitutional liberty. The Supreme Court itself is its vigorous champion. Justices of the Court frequently have been the Court's severest critics. Many men of good will, however, are greatly perplexed by the merits of the segregation problem and profoundly disturbed by the violence of the controversy it has aroused. Without question, there is an alarming danger in the current controversy. That danger, however, does not arise from freedom of speech, but rather from a grave threat to its exercise. That threat, as it becomes daily more evident, consists in the ominous climate of fear produced by intemperate partisanship and unrestrained passions, penetrating into the home, the office, the shop, the school, the store, the club, the playground and even the church.

I mean the fear in the hearts of many citizens, and not a few of the legal profession, who have honest and reasoned opinions about segregation, but who are afraid or hesitant to express them, lest they or their families suffer unjust political, economic, professional or social reprisals. I sympathize sincerely with their fear; but I admire all the more those who have had the fortitude to speak and the courage to stand up and be counted. The success of the democratic process is predicated upon intelligent conviction courageously expressed.

The obligation of loyal obedience to the Supreme Court does not preclude, of course, honest and reasonable efforts to reverse its decisions by the lawful process of constitutional amendment defined in Article V of the Constitution. But it does preclude the employment of tactics of evasion and defiance, based on obsolete and unconstitutional theories of interposition and nullification.

Where, for instance, is the loyal obedience of the lawyer who would counsel, encourage, persuade or incite his fellow citizens to violate the supreme law of the land? Where is the loyal obedience of the lawyer who would lend the skill of his draftsmanship and advocacy to the enactment of a statute which he knows to be unconstitutional and which provides criminal penalties against citizens who desire to respect the supreme law of the land? Where is the loyal obedience, or even the elemental sense of self-respect, in the lawyer-legislator who would knowingly lobby and vote for such a statute, and then cynically explain to one of his minority constituents, "Oh, well, it's unconstitutional anyway!"? When such things happen, and they do happen, why should we be surprised at the evidently growing disrespect and distrust, not merely for the legal profession but for the law itself? The law is a majestic structure of principles. The legal profession is their sworn guardian. Neither the law nor the profession nor the public is well served by the lawyer who stands by, alerted to pressure, ready, able and willing to jettison principle for selfish and cowardly expediency.

Subject always to the obligations of loyal obedience to the Supreme Court, to the requirements of constitutional procedure and to the fairness and courtesy of civilized debate, let us exercise without fear or favor the constitutional right of free and open speech on this controversial issue of compulsory segregation. It would be a substantial public service if the legal profession in appreciable numbers would assume its traditional role of leadership in public affairs by demonstrating the way of calm and dispassionate, and therefore fruitful, controversy.

Calm Discussion Needed

It would clear the air of public fear and create a healthy climate of discussion, if members of the bar could dissuade the misguided and discourage the malicious from the reckless use of insulting epithets and the irresponsible imputation of improper motives — which run the gamut, apparently, from trivia to treason. A really free, truly fair and calmly intellectual discussion on the merits of the issue is demanded by the grave importance of the fundamental principles involved and by the enormous impact of compulsory segregation on the daily lives of millions of our fellow American citizens. I believe that such a discussion would lead to agreement on the basis and meaning of the fundamental principles involved; and that such agreement on principles would eventually lead the majority of the legal profession, at least, to concur with the United States Supreme Court that compulsory segregation is completely incompatible with the fundamental constitutional principles which support our proud American way of life. Surely, the realization and perfection of that way of life is our common purpose.

The fundamental principles of the natural law as here outlined are obviously incompatible with compulsory segregation unless the Negro is not a man; or, if he is a man, then an essentially inferior man; or, if he is not an essentially inferior man, then an accidentally inferior man, whose accidental inferiorities unfit him, as a Negro, for free association with the allegedly superior white man.

Human knowledge has advanced to the point where the burden of proving the alleged inferiorities of the Negro is upon those who assert them. That the Negro is a man, essentially equal to the white man, is a clear and certain truth, objectively demonstrated by philosophical argumentation, experimentally verified by scientific investigation and universally accepted by the common consent of mature and civilized society. That the Negro is not an accidentally inferior man whose accidental inferiorities unfit him, as a Negro, for free association with the allegedly superior white man is also an objective certainty, established by philosophical considerations of his nature and destiny; corroborated by the overwhelming evidence of the anthropological, biological, psychological and sociological sciences; and conceded by the vast majority of thoughtful men the world over.

It has been argued to the contrary, however, that the Negro is inferior to the white man in his standards of health, intelligence, culture and morality; and, therefore, the compulsory segregation of the Negro is a reasonable exercise of the police power of the state.

The first answer to this argument, of course, is that compulsory segregation is not based on any standards of health, intelligence, culture or morality, but simply and solely on race. The Negro of robust health, refined intelligence, gentle culture and heroic virtue must still sit in the back of the bus, while the most diseased, stupid, uncouth and immoral white man must ride in front. The second answer to this argument is that the statistics offered in its support do not prove what they purport to prove. They show, in point of fact, that many Negroes are in fact less healthy, less intelligent and less law-abiding than many white men. But the statistics do not prove that the Negro, as a Negro, has a lower potential for health, a lower aptitude for education or a smaller capacity for virtue than the white man who lives in a similar environment.

Cruel and Cynical Logic

The statistics do show that many Negroes are in fact handicapped severely in reducing their potential to actuality, their aptitude to achievement, their capacity to fulfillment by the substandard physical, economic, educational and social environment in which they are compelled to live. Compulsory segregation is the most extreme method employed by racial discrimination to force the Negro to live in the substandard environment which it has created. Ironically, the statistics offered in support of segregation constitute powerful evidence against it. Surely, it is a cruel and cynical logic which argues for segregation from the very evils it has produced.

By their fruits you shall know them. Compulsory segregation is the bitterest fruit of so-called "racial supremacy," an obsolete and exploded doctrine false in theory and vicious in practice. It is not without significance that two of the most prominent antagonists of the Supreme Court, both governors of sovereign states, in arguing recently for segregation, one in a national magazine and the other on a national television program, made use of the expression "mongrelization of the race." How could such an expression, with its degrading canine implication, escape the lips of anyone who sincerely believes that human beings, as human beings, are possessed of personal dignity, entitled to reverential respect and deserving of brotherly love?

There are some who disavow the racial supremacy nonsense but argue, nevertheless, that compulsory segregation is not "per se" unjust or uncharitable; and, therefore, the old "separate but equal" doctrine is still a reasonable exercise of the police powers of the state. The first answer to this argument, of course, is that the "separate but equal" facilities of Plessy v. Ferguson never were, are not now and—in view of the tragic experience of the years—never in the future will be even remotely "equal." The "per se" argument is an abstraction contemplating itself in a vacuum. It prescinds from the facts of life. It ignores the real problem in its real moral and social context. The facts of life are that compulsory segregation is the product of the mentality of "racial supremacy," a mentality which is still deep and widespread and which, in a vicious psychological circle, draws strength and "respectability" from the legal blessing it received in the "separate but equal" doctrine of Plessy v. Ferguson. Separate facilities are "inherently unequal," because the matrix and context of separation is belief in the inequality of the separated.

The second answer to the "per se" argument is that, even supposing the contrary-to-fact hypothesis of equal facilities, compulsory segregation would still be objectively wrong; because it would still be contrary to the natural unity which impels human beings to associate in organized society for their common good; because it would still violate the political and social unity of organized society which is demanded, in both justice and charity, by the essential equality and natural dignity of human personality.

Peripheral to the main issue but of serious civic importance is the question of the spiritual damage segregation has done and is still doing to those who force it upon their fellow citizens, both Negro and white. For injustice has a subtle way of reversing its impact, spiritually, from the oppressed to the oppressor. Peripheral also, but of momentous international importance, is the question of the diplomatic damage segregation has done and is still doing to our American aspirations to the moral leadership of the free world. We must practice what we preach. A busy and effective section of Soviet Russia's propaganda machine will collapse if and when we decide sincerely and efficaciously to obey the supreme law of the land as enunciated by the United States Supreme Court.

The segregation issue constitutes, in my opinion, a most formidable challenge to the intellectual vigor, the moral courage and the genuine patriotism of the legal profession.

The position of the Catholic Church has been clearly and courageously stated by His Excellency, the Archbishop of New Orleans. The philosophy of the natural law has always been embraced and elevated by the theology of the Church Universal. Popes, archbishops, bishops, dogmatic and moral theologians, the unanimous judgment of the teaching Church is that compulsory segregation is objectively and morally wrong. It is a cancer in the body politic. It is a desecration of Christian civilization.

We like to think that God is on the side of our American way of life; but it is true only to the extent that our American way of life is on the side of Him Who said, "I am the way, the truth and the life." In the eyes of God there is neither white nor black nor red nor yellow nor brown; neither Jew nor Gentile nor barbarian nor Scythian; but all are brothers in Christ Jesus. "By this will all men know that you are my disciples, if you have love one for another."

(Reprinted from SOCIAL ORDER, 3908 Westminster Place, St. Louis 8, Mo.)

Distributed by

THE FUND FOR THE REPUBLIC

60 East 42nd St., New York 17, N. Y.

ADDITIONAL COPIES AVAILABLE ON REQUEST

Materials - Desegregation

RECEIVED JUN 14 1957

THE WINNER NAMES THE AGE

(Commencement address given by Lillian Smith at Atlanta University, June 3, 1957.)

Well: it is over now, isn't it? The easy part: the research, the thesis, the long hours in the library, the field work. In a sense, it was so safe and secure, hard but pleasant; this learning process; this easy, cloistered way of life where one makes a friend or two, grows a bit in mind and heart and imagination, and picks up so many useful and useless facts.

All this you have done in the front rooms of your mind.

But in the back room, somewhere inside you, in a secret corner, you have been painting a picture: A picture you began when you were a child, long before you knew words. You have not named that picture, as yet; perhaps you never will; we usually don't. Although most of us call it names -- and I'm sure you, too, in your nasty moods, have plastered it with insults. But you have not decided, yet, what to name it.

For it is a picture of you; of your dreams and feelings, your sudden visions, your awareness, your hopes and despairs: a picture of all that this fabulous human experience has meant to you up to now -- or failed to mean.

When you came to the University, you did not leave that picture at home: you brought it with you and have continued to paint it.

What your style is, I don't know. That is your secret. All I know is, that style is patterned on you: on your unique way of looking at your world. It may be gay and bold and strong in its brushwork, compassionate in its feeling, or it may be as full of terror and angry protest as Picasso's Guernica. You may have painted an abstraction; or it may be non-objective; it may be blobs and dots, dribbles and improvisations, with, maybe, the bright colors, the startling accidents of a Pollock; or you may be slowly finding its form, and even now, it may be taking on a little of the strength and equilibrium of -- shall we agree on a Cezanne? Or if you dare not look beneath the surface of life, or above it, it is probably as literal as an amateur photograph.

But: whatever it is, it is your picture of the human experience and you have painted it: And when you leave the campus, that picture will go with you, along with the facts and the theories, the methods, and all the rest of it you have learned here.

And you will keep on painting it. You may lay aside one canvas and start another but you'll keep at it: Searching for a quality of truth that eludes you. Searching for the underside of meaning; searching for its poetry, its music, and its pain. Or maybe you won't. As the years go by, you may decide its colors are too harsh, its lines too broken, too jagged, and you may do that cruel thing: touch it up a little. You may finally say, I cannot bear the truth, even the small image of it I have made: I'll make it softer, prettier -- and less true. I'll paint life as a paperdoll, or a marshmallow. A lot of us do that, too, you know.

Whatever you do to it, that image of your universe, of you and your experience of life, is yours. I could not change it if I wanted to. And I shall not try.

What I want to show you is something else.

Not my picture of my experience of life: if you want to see a smidge of that, you can read my books. What I want us to look at together, now, is a kind of rough, crude blueprint of this age of ours: of the common ordeals -- full of danger and opportunities which we, regardless of private views or personal interests, must face together:

It is an age that has no name. Nor will it soon have one. It has often been called "the Age of Anxiety," but it will not, I think, be known in history as that. For the winners would not call it so: and the winners do the naming.

Sometimes we forget this. We forget that always an age is named for its triumphs: always for the big ideas that add stature to the human being. A brief glance at any great age, but let's make it the 18th century, will remind us how true this is: We call that century the Age of Reason, of Enlightenment, of the Rights of Man. And that is the way we think, today, of those troubled, terrible times: For the ideas of that century, the symbols that stirred the Western mind so deep, the daring acts, were the winners who named the baby.

And yet, actually, the Age of Enlightenment was an age when most Western men could not read or write. The Age of the Rights of Man was a time when a new slavery was sending deep roots into American soil, and a new colonialism was beginning to lay its greedy paws on Asia and Africa.

Let me remind you of a few other things that were happening in this great Age of Reason: It was a time when educated Europeans were deeply concerned about ghosts. The Oxford University magazines were full of discussions of ghosts. Samuel Johnson took part, as you might know he would have, in this controversy — widespread in England. Witches, too, were still a hot topic. This Age of Reason was an age when the blind and crippled were persecuted and half starved; when the mentally ill were chained and some were whipped to death; when epileptics were hidden away; when men looked on tuberculosis and cancer as punishments from God.

This great intellectual era that gave us Rousseau's and Locke's writings, Voltaire's bold, sharp, ironic questions, Thomas Paine's books, and Jefferson's words on liberty and human freedom, gave us also a curious best-seller which swept Europe like wildfire. It was translated into English, French, German and was read by the intelligentsia. Parents were deeply impressed by it and shaped their methods of child guidance on it; clergymen preached on the morality it implied; doctors based their therapies on it and continued to do so, some of them, until the 20th century. You may not, perhaps, have heard that book's name: It was called L'Onanisme and was written by a physician named Tissot. And it was concerned with the secret sins that children commit. According to this expert those sins caused most of the diseases known to man: from fits to diarrhea, from insanity to blindness, deafness, muteness, cerebral palsy, rheumatism, anaemia, liver upsets, etc.

This, all this, came out of the great Age of Reason.

Even so: even though the 18th century was chockfull of hysteria and superstition and irrationality we are right to call it the Age of Enlightenment. For the germinal ideas it brought to life, the vision of man's possibilities which it communicated to the future in impassioned words and symbolic acts will never die. They are, today, a part of the human heritage. And will remain so as long as men live on this earth.

There is always a dark underside to every age: a festering ill-smelling slum where man's enemies and errors breed. But an age is remembered not for its enemies and errors but for those qualities it dramatized which enlarge horizons and give a fine ambience to man, himself. Malraux was so right when he said, "Always, however brutal an age may actually have been, its style transmits its music only."

You and I can paint our picture but we cannot name our age; the winner will do that. What we can do is pick the winner.

And because we can, I would like for us to take a look at the conditions, the ordeals out of which the winning ideas, the triumphant attitudes and technics will come:

We are faced with three which men have never had to deal with before. Each holds high potentials for good and evil, for life and death. Each affects the others. All three are concerned with new forms of power. And all will shape the earth's future.

You are as familiar with them as I am. But let us tie them a bit more tightly together; weigh their dangers in a lump and see what we can make of it:

A. The first can be described quite simply: It is the new power of world opinion. Walls are down.

Distance has been obliterated. Communication lines, economic and political lines are strung everywhere. Each crisscrossing the others.

With the result, that there is no longer a place for secrets. We cannot, as nations, gossip about each other without being heard. We cannot trick each other without being found out. We cannot hold, for ourselves, alone, either new things made or new knowledge gained. We can try but world opinion is powerful and will have its say about it.

This is a totally new thing: this publicity, this tied-togetherness, and this capacity for quick reaction. Suddenly the earth is stripped of its old insulated silence, its slow come-back, and is transformed into a sensitive instrument which responds with electronic speed to whatever is said and done: A few tactless words spoken by an official of one country can upset the government or economy of another. One stupid act, today, can bring on a world crisis, tomorrow. Even the blunders and crimes of individuals can make foreign offices tremble. A GI shoots a trespassing Japanese woman and half the earth shivers. Another GI shoots an alleged peeping tom in Formosa and a riot takes place in which the American Embassy is left a shambles. And suddenly, everybody everywhere is either glad or sorry. A Southern Congressman fights the civil rights bill and in doing so makes a remark insulting to the dignity of the human being. What happens? Not only are many Americans offended but millions of people across the world grow resentful.

It is obvious that we have not yet developed an earth-size courtesy and tact; nor have we yet found the new concern and new morality, and new objectivity, to match the new publicity and the new intimacy. Until we do, this new power of world opinion will oscillate between good and evil, life and death. It will be on somebody's side, yes; but not necessarily on the right side.

B. Our second ordeal is in everybody's mind: Atomic energy and how to control it. We know that nuclear power has fabulous possibilities for good; we know it can become a great creative force in the future, but what troubles people everywhere is its danger to us right now:

We are anxious and concerned: not only because the bombs can bring quick and total destruction in war, but because peacetime testing of bombs has already brought unknown damage to the human race. We are concerned that radioactive fall-out causes an increase in cancer in children. We are concerned that the fall-out has already affected the genes of a percentage of our young people everywhere. What percentage? We are not sure. How many of their children will be defective and malformed? We do not yet know. But we want to know.

A few scientists have spoken clearly. We want more of them to speak, and in more detail. And we do not want the politicians to brush off their words. For the scientists are the only men on earth who know what they are talking about when they state the facts about radiation and its effect on the human race. We are afraid of politicians and atomic committees who try to keep secret the scientists' warnings. We are afraid of those stubborn men who continue the testing, in spite of the advice of the world's greatest authorities.

This is where world opinion can play its first great role in history. It, alone, can compel governments to use nuclear energy in the right way. If it wants to, it can measure its strength against the atom, and it can win. But will it? That is our decision.

C. Our third ordeal: is living in a world with two and a half billion free people. This is a new thing: it can be a wonderful thing, a fabulous time of greatness can come out of it, but it is also dangerous: because free people have power -- more power than a half dozen H-bombs.

They are not likely to blow up the earth with their power but in their ignorance and inexperience, they may blow up civilization. They can destroy art and music and poetry and books and criticism; they can tear up laboratories and libraries; they can jail scientists and intellectuals and artists; they already decide what can be shown on TV and in the movies; they already dictate to the mass magazines; they can even dynamite churches (as we in the South well know). They can, when out of control do all these terrifying things because freedom gives them strength. A free man with the vote, and with wages that give him purchasing power, is armed with some hefty weapons.

This problem of free people and their new and amazing power does not disturb communist countries -- not as long as they have a strong secret police. Dictators keep the people under control: by taking away their freedom, by working them hard, starving them half to death, terrorizing them if they protest, and killing them when necessary.

No: it is the democracies who feel this power. Democracies -- and remember, we are trying to turn the whole world into democracies -- cannot have uncontrolled free people around. They cannot have this much power on the loose. Controls are necessary. But controls must be democratic, they must function without taking away the essential civil liberties of all men. What are the controls that are valid and will work?

A powerful control is Constitutional law. A democracy can't do without it. But it will work only if the people believe in law and respect its processes.

But the two strongest and best controls come from within a free man's own mind: his conscience and his reason. Both of which -- to stay healthy -- must be nourished on civilization's great and germinal ideas. May I name a few? Just to hear the music of them? For they sing to the civilized mind:

> the idea that every child has a right to grow;
> the idea that every one in the community has a right to be protected from violence;
> the idea that all people can speak out and say what they think;
> the idea that a man has a right to be different in looks, beliefs, interests and talents if he does not injure others;
> the idea that truth is a search that must never stop, that both reason and imagination are necessary to that search, that the scientific method is necessary, too, and cannot be interfered with except when human life is jeapodized or profound human values cheapened;

the idea that the way a thing is done, the means used, are as important as the end sought;
the basic idea: that God is the Ultimate Concern beyond all men, that He is the supreme symbol: not the white race, not the communist party, not capitalism, not any authoritarian group; and that his laws of love and brotherhood and mercy, and compassion must be obeyed.

When men stop believing in these great ideas, when they silence their conscience and trample their reason, when they make their own image their god -- or their economic or political beliefs their god -- then we are in for trouble. For then, they hold even Constitutional law cheap. They sneer at the high courts of their government; indeed, they say they obey only the laws they want to.

When this happens, the free people with their limitless potentials for growth and for good, will metamorphose into the mob.

Because it is happening in our country, especially down here in the deep South where we live, I want to talk about the mob in more detail:

There are three kinds of mobs: all alike in that they worship an idol, alike in that they have set aside both reason and conscience, alike in that they hold other men's civil rights cheap, alike in that they value security more than survival, alike in that they disregard our laws, alike in that they want to hurt somebody. But they behave differently.

Let's begin with the least dangerous: Mob # 1. This is the mob on the street, usually dressed in ordinary clothes. It may be in pillowcase and sheet. This is the mob that dynamites a church or a home; that burns the Cross; that drives by in a car, fires a shot at someone, and drives on; that writes anonymous letters, makes anonymous phone calls, threatens and sometimes kills. This mob is made up of the delinquents and criminals of a community who are too cowardly to do this kind of thing until the community gives them a green light.

But mob # 2 is, in my opinion, far more dangerous. Because it holds more power and prestige. We might call it the mob in the gray flannel suit. Certainly many of its members are chairmen of boards of big business; others are trustees of school, church, hospital; some are directors of banks or presidents of insurance companies: others are professional men. In the South, members of mob # 2 often belong to the White Citizens Council.

Do these men go out on the street and blow up a church with dynamite? No. They have a better way: they destroy the church from the inside with their cynicism, their hate, their panic and their pressures. Do they shoot a man down? No, they destroy his reputation, instead. This mob's strength lies in the fact that it hires people and sells goods. And its members use this strength to hurt those who deviate from their beliefs. They are the ones who fire the teacher who speaks up; who fire the young minister who bows to God instead of to White Supremacy; they are the ones who refuse the bank loan to the Negro who works for his civil rights and refuse the loan to the white man who tries to help the Negro secure his civil rights. They are the men who refuse to sell to those whose opinions they don't like; who refuse to insure some of those they don't like. They put the pressure on.

Mob # 2 also gives its protection to mob # 1. Without that protection mob # 1 would be in jail and would be kept there.

It is obvious that mob # 2 has enormous power. But this power is given it by mob # 3.

Let us look at mob # 3: It is difficult to do so because it is invisible. This mob lives inside men's minds. It behaves rather like the mob on the street but you may not hear a sound. Mob # 3 burns a cross before a man's conscience, dynamites his reason, threatens his sense of security, sends anonymous phone calls to old memories, old fears that are sleeping in peace. This kind of thing leaves a man anxious, and hating, and sometimes wanting to hurt something -- he doesn't know what or why. We can't, here, go into the deep reasons for mob thinking. But it comes to a region when an idol is worshipped instead of God -- and when men give up civilization's germinal beliefs.

It is this mob-thinking that pushes mob # 1 out on the streets. It is this mob-thinking that condones mob # 2's vicious boycott and pressures and leaves its members still thinking of themselves as good men. For every violent act committed, every threat and effort at boycott and intimidation, every hate word said, there are thousands of minds thinking mob thoughts. Enough to paralyze the police force, the courts, the judges, the juries, and all law-enforcement machinery. Enough, also, to completely paralyze public opinion -- and sometimes enough, even to paralyze the Christian church.

Here is the crux of the matter: In a democracy, enlightened, civilized public opinion must prevail; not mob opinion, but the opinion of millions of individuals who have held on to their reason and conscience, and their belief in the free, growing human being.

The only way this public opinion can prevail is for people to stand up and speak out. Those who believe violence is wrong must say so. Those who believe a man has a right to be different must say so; those who believe a clergyman should preach according to his religious conscience should say so; those who believe school teachers must not be asked to take a loyalty oath defending segregation or the "southern way of life" or capitalism or any other form of idolatry, must say so; those who believe that our artists and writers must be left free to create their dreams and ideas into paintings and books must say so. Those who believe survival is more important than security must say this, too. For otherwise democracy cannot survive, nor, I think, can civilization survive. For the mob's power can destroy our freedom as completely as can any communist dictator.

What a price we have paid for silence! So many decent, warmhearted, intelligent people are silent, today -- not only in our South but all over our country: Surrendering their opinion because they are torn between the teachings of their childhood and what they, today, know in their minds is right. Or silent because they are afraid to make the hard and necessary choice.

In their efforts to be moderate or neutral, they either do nothing or something totally irrelevant to the situation. And in a crisis that is a dangerous kind of behavior.

(Dr. Harold G. Wolff in the Saturday Review told an interesting story of a study made of sea gulls. Sometimes a sea gull is torn between fighting its enemy or taking flight. Not able to decide which to do, it becomes panicky, and ends up just plucking grass. Well, we have a lot of grass pluckers in our South today.)

The power of free people has to be controlled, channeled, disciplined by values and knowledge, and law -- or it can be more dangerous to us than hysterical world opinion (which it is close to) or than nuclear energy, out of control.

Because this is true, I consider the demagogue the greatest enemy a democracy has. Not the dictator: that is communism's problem. Our problem is the demagogue: the man who deliberately betrays the people; the man who scares them, calling fire fire when there is no fire; who tells the people they are free to break the law, free to trample other people's rights, free to slough off their conscience and their reason and behave like mad men when they want to. This is the # 1 subversive man in our culture; this man is the people's real enemy. For he deliberately breaks down the controls of the Church, of conscience, of civilization, of the courts to get the people under his control.

What can we do about it? Ah, how everyone whispers this to himself, his family, his close friends!

The answer lies first in leadership; second, in the determined efforts of each individual to take his stand, to speak up, and try to create a climate of courage and hope and faith. Without the second, we cannot have the first. We need leaders, not martyrs. But we cannot have leaders unless the best people stand by these leaders, unless we give support when support is needed.

For fifty years, the South has had no great leader from the white race. Demagogues by the bushel but not one great leader. This, too, is part of the price we have paid for our silence and for our walling ourselves away from the great ideas of our age.

We could have had great leaders: there were men in our South with the intelligence, the integrity, the vision to become great leaders but we, the people, did not give them our support. We gave that support, every time, to the cheap, foul-mouthed demagogue who appealed not to our reason and conscience but to our anxiety; who begged us to return with him to the past, a past that never actually existed, instead of going on with the rest of mankind into the future. We let down our leaders by not building them up. A leader cannot be built up unless the people, the best people of a region, build him.

But it is not too late. We can still do it. The Negro group is searching for and finding its good leaders and is beginning to give these leaders their support. What men some of them are! If the white group could only find a young leader to match the brains and heart, the integrity and vision, the courage, the energy and imagination of young Martin Luther King. For young Dr. King knows what every leader of stature must learn: that the way is as important as the goal we seek. And he has chosen the good way of nonviolence, of intelligence, and compassion, and good will. A young white leader working shoulder to shoulder with Martin Luther King could do much to transform our South; to turn the mob spirit into the civilized Christian spirit that we should have, down here.

Now: back to you and me. We must go on painting our pictures, yes; for only by searching for the meaning life has for each one of us can we, ourselves, become human beings fit for a great age. Each of us must keep on searching for our personal view of this, our only experience of life. But we must also combine our efforts to see to it that the great ideas of our age have a chance to be acted out, to become strong enough to win over the irrational evil enemies and errors of our age. Remember we won't do the naming but we will pick the winner. Let's get to work and do it. Shall we? Let's find the new faith, the new compassion, the new understanding, and yes, the new existential doubt, too, that will send us on and give us the strength and the courage to do what needs to be done. Let's commit ourselves, deeply and completely, not to neurotic security but to the survival of man on this earth.

Pupils at a desegregated elementary school in Baltimore rehearse their May Day Dance. The school board here was unanimous and firm, and integration is now a fact.

Sat. Even. Post 7-13-57

V - Martin Series

THE DEEP SOUTH SAYS NEVER

CONCLUSION

The Border States Relent

Outside the inflexible areas, some Southern cities have integrated their schools. Here's what has been accomplished—sometimes quietly, sometimes over dying protests.

By John Bartlow Martin

Sturgis, Ky.: Guardsmen protect Negroes who tried to enter the town's white high school last fall.

On May 25, 1954, only eight days after the United States Supreme Court outlawed school segregation, the District of Columbia announced it would comply when school opened that fall. Nine days later Baltimore said the same. Louisville said it would comply later. St. Louis scheduled high-school desegregation for January.

Twenty-five West Virginia counties desegregated—and when a group of mothers thereupon picketed a school, a judge said if they didn't desist "I'll fill the jail until their feet are sticking out of the windows."

For three years now, while the Deep South fought to frustrate the Supreme Court, the Border States have moved to comply with its momentous decision. How have they done it? How far have they actually gone? What have been the results? Thus far in these articles we have studied four Deep South states which have defied the Supreme Court—South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi. Let us now visit three Border States—Maryland, Kentucky and Missouri—which have obeyed it. And finally let us cast up the national account on school desegregation.

A Negro teacher at Baltimore's Southern High School instructs a mixed typing class. Today 28.7 per cent of the city's Negroes attend integrated schools.

School superintendent Omer Carmichael of Louisville: "I think I've always felt the Negro is a human being like the rest of us."

Western Junior High School in Louisville, Ky.: The races are mixed in classes, but after school the youngsters walk home almost entirely in segregated clusters. About 225 of the 1077 pupils are Negroes.

CHANGING PATTERNS

In the first four articles of this series, John Bartlow Martin reported on the Deep South's intransigent resistance to integration. In this, the fifth and last article, he reviews the integration picture in other states which formerly had segregated schools. Here's how Maryland, Kentucky and Missouri have altered their racial patterns since the historic Supreme Court decision of 1954.

THE EDITORS

About 30 per cent of Baltimore's people are Negroes. As they spread out from the center of town, block by block, white people move out. Segregation is still widespread in hotels, restaurants and theaters. Negroes hold few but menial jobs in private industry. Since the war, Negroes have gone to work as bus drivers, policemen, firemen; public swimming pools and public housing have been desegregated. But it is likely that if the question "Do you favor racial segregation?" were put to a referendum, Baltimoreans would answer, "Yes."

The Baltimore School Board appears to have long favored desegregation. After the Supreme Court decision, it moved swiftly. The school superintendent, John H. Fischer, recalls, "The board asked how long it would take to work it up and I said, 'Give us a week.'" The plan he submitted on June tenth was three paragraphs long. "I could have said it in a sentence, but I didn't want it to look too blunt." He simply proposed that any child attend any school in the city. Baltimore never has had rigid school districts.

Fischer, a well-dressed, pipe-smoking man with a firm manner and a precise mind, made no preparation, except to call all teachers together and explain that children would not be forced into integration, most pupils would continue to attend (Continued on Page 55)

ENGINEERS:

Something new here!

The automatic test machine you see opposite in color is a good example of creative engineering at Western Electric. To provide telephone equipment for the Bell System — as we do — there's a constant need for new processes, new ideas, new concepts and all kinds of engineering skills.

Take, for example, underwater repeaters we made for the new transatlantic telephone cable. It took a whole team of engineers — specialists in practically every field — to translate the superlative Bell Laboratories' designs for these repeaters into the superlative products which would operate for 20 and more years on the ocean floor. It called for process refinements and controls beyond industrial experience . . . even to creating a special factory for the job!

Western Electric engineers have been in the vanguard of the electronic age. They engineered for the first full-scale production of transistors, and today they're looking toward the manufacture of the revolutionary "talking path" tube and other pioneering devices for the electronic telephone switching centers of tomorrow.

In the field of automation, as well, W. E. men have shown leadership. Automated production lines are now turning out many important telephone products — for example, electroformed wire, precision relays, dry reed switches.

In short, our work offers exciting challenges in all branches of engineering. Nor are the challenges confined to our telephone job. Over the years the government has asked us to take over such important defense projects as the DEW Line; the Nike guided missile system; Sage, the continental air defense system; and many others.

Add to challenging work and a bona-fide chance to grow, the security of Western Electric's excellent benefit and retirement program and you have one of the truly outstanding career opportunities for engineers today!

FOR MORE INFORMATION

Send for your copy of "Your Opportunity at Western Electric." Write: W.E. Medford, Engineering Personnel, Room 1038, Western Electric Company, 195 Broadway, New York 7, New York.

Western Electric

MANUFACTURING AND SUPPLY UNIT OF THE BELL SYSTEM

Major manufacturing plants located at Chicago, Ill., Kearny, N. J., Baltimore, Md., Indianapolis, Ind., Allentown, Pa., Winston-Salem, N. C., Buffalo, N. Y., North Andover, Mass., Omaha, Neb. Also Teletype Corporation, Chicago 14, Illinois.

The Deep South Says "Never!"

(Continued from Page 33)

schools near their homes and no teachers would be fired. He said, "From our earliest days as a nation, we have set down from time to time in historic documents the high principles by which we mean to govern ourselves. . . . It is when we become aware that our daily conduct is inconsistent with these statements of purpose that we begin to rise above our past. It is on these occasions that the American dream comes more nearly true for more Americans. . . . All that we do is founded upon faith and hope and love. The love of truth, the love of learning, the love of children—these are great forces with which to work. There is no doubt that the world could be transformed if only their power could be fully unleashed. More than most men and women, we are in a position to use that power."

Fischer read a letter which a white principal had written to his teachers:

"For my part, I shall receive every teacher and every pupil on terms of perfect equality. . . .

"I shall remember that the same God made both of us. . . .

"My stepson found the Negro boys who fought in Korea beside him to be first-class fighting men who neither asked for nor received special favors. He learned that the colored skin received enemy bullets with the same bravery that the white skin received them.

"The tax collector accepts money from the colored hand as from the white.

"Segregation in the schools has ended. Let us make the transition in this school a smooth transition. Let us be proud of ourselves next June."

When Baltimore school doors opened that September, only about 1700 Negro pupils—3 per cent of all Negro pupils—entered formerly all-white schools. Most Negroes chose to stay in their own schools because residential segregation made it convenient or because they wanted to continue where they had begun. A few Negroes transferred to distant white schools just to be in white schools. Desegregation proceeded smoothly for a month. But after segregationists led by Bryant Bowles, of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, closed a desegregated school and forced the school board to resign in nearby Delaware, Baltimore got into trouble. On September thirtieth, in a neighborhood inhabited largely by semi-skilled workingmen who own their small homes, women picketed an elementary school containing about a dozen Negroes and 700 whites. Other parents, apprehensive, took their children out of school.

Next day the trouble spread to the nearest high school, Southern—students demonstrating, adults picketing—and that afternoon when the Negro pupils came out, "something uncomfortably close to a riot in the streets" took place, as Fischer has put it. Fist fights occurred. Picketing had begun at a half dozen other schools. The police prepared for the worst on Monday.

But over the weekend, civic leaders rallied to defend desegregation. Leaders of Jewish agencies, the P.T.A., the Urban League, labor unions, women's clubs and the Council of Churches called on Fischer to offer their help. They issued statements themselves. They asked all Protestant ministers to preach on brotherhood on Sunday. They visited the police commissioner, the state's attorney and the attorney general. The mayor pleaded for calm. The school board stood firm.

But on Monday carloads of teen-agers paraded from school to school, gathering recruits, then marched on city hall and went on to Southern High. There picketing was in progress, and 1200 out of 1700 students were absent. More fist fights; nine other schools were picketed. Rumors spread through the city that a white girl had been stabbed to death.

The schools and police adopted a tougher policy. School officials warned parents that it was against the law to keep their children out of school. The police commissioner on television declared that anybody who disturbed the schools or induced a student to be truant would be arrested. On Tuesday morning when schools opened police chased the pickets home. That afternoon Fischer issued a statement saying it was all over. It was. By Thursday attendance was back to normal.

Today 28.7 per cent of Baltimore's Negro pupils are attending mixed schools. That more are not is because of residential segregation. In Baltimore, as one man has said, "There aren't many people really cheering, but there aren't many trying to halt or delay it either." Fischer says desegregation succeeded because the school board was unanimous and unwavering, and because it was backed up by government and community leaders.

It is all over, too, in St. Louis. The St. Louis Board of Education, on June 22, 1954, a month after the Supreme Court decision, announced a three-step desegregation program—special schools in September, 1954; most high schools in January, 1955; elementary schools in September, 1955. Though the Missouri constitution required school segregation, St. Louis seems a busy Midwestern industrial city, not a Southern town, and legal school segregation a historical accident. Streetcars, buses, public libraries and parks have been traditionally non-segregated. And since World War II, swimming pools, some hotels, the baseball park, the legitimate theater, and Catholic schools have been desegregated.

The school-board decision was unanimous. Thus segregationists had no rallying point. The board immediately received strong community backing. Newspapers applauded. The League of Women Voters published a booklet on desegregation. Clergymen prayed and worked for its success. The National Conference of Christians and Jews began training teen-age leaders. The Mayor's Commission on Human Relations ran a workshop. P.T.A.'s co-operated. "Whatever success we've had," says school superintendent Philip J. Hickey, "is due to the fact that the community tackled the problem." Superintendent Hickey is a solidly built, forthright man. A school official has said, "He would call in teachers who wanted to change schools to avoid Negroes, and he would bang his fist down and say, 'No teacher is going to run away from this; you're all frozen. Desegregation is going to succeed—period.'"

Unlike Baltimore, St. Louis always had had rigid school-district boundaries. Hickey ordered all boundaries redrawn and put a Negro in charge of the job. Using electronic machines, he assigned all pupils to schools in their districts. No districts were gerrymandered to segregate or mix pupils by race. Pupils were allowed to stay in their old schools until they graduated. They were not allowed to transfer to avoid desegregation.

The first step of the St. Louis plan went smoothly. When the second step began John Hamilton, a segregationist and editor of the anti-Semitic White Sentinel, distributed handbills calling on parents to picket, but nothing happened. A few weeks later when a white high-school boy squirted a Negro girl with a water pistol, her friends beat up the white boy, and the trouble threatened to spread, but Hickey dealt quickly and firmly with it, and since then St. Louis has had no trouble. Today about half the Negro pupils are still in all-Negro schools because of residential segregation. Hickey says, "We think we're through it. It's working even better than we expected."

Baltimore is Eastern, St. Louis Midwestern, but Louisville is Southern. When, on the very day of the Supreme Court decision in 1954, the governor of Kentucky and the Louisville superintendent of schools announced that they would comply, Deep South segregationists shuddered. If Kentucky, once a slave state, with its bluegrass and upcountry, its manor houses and bourbon, its cotton and tobacco and horse farms, should fall, where was segregation safe?

Kentucky went slower than Maryland and Missouri. She waited a year for the Supreme Court's implementation decree. Then in July, 1955, rural Wayne County became the first in Kentucky to desegregate. It admitted six Negro pupils to an elementary school. The big year was 1956: That September 109 school districts of 177 having Negro children commenced desegregation or announced plans.

Desegregation has been a patchwork in Kentucky. Many desegregated districts have only a handful of Negroes. Several "cotton counties" where Negro pupils outnumber whites have done nothing. High schools have moved faster than elementary schools. Some schools have moved slowly because of overcrowding;

"Why on earth did you request Melancholy Baby?"

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

some have used overcrowding as an excuse. Some superintendents would like to move faster, but fear to get ahead of community opinion and wish the N.A.A.C.P. would file suits to force them. It has filed seven suits. The Federal District Courts have set firm and soon deadlines. One judge rejected a school board's plan to spend twelve years desegregating a grade at a time.

Most districts have adopted a "voluntary" plan—they have not pushed desegregation, but have simply said that any Negroes who care to may attend previously white schools. In Lexington, a Southern town with 2750 Negro pupils, only 34 chose to do so. Indeed, although 29,017 of Kentucky's 38,358 Negro pupils are in officially desegregated school districts, only 8017 are actually in mixed schools, and 5600 of these are in Louisville. Some Negroes stay in all-Negro schools because of residential segregation. In some Negro schools teachers have discouraged their pupils from leaving—as long as a Negro teacher has a student body, she has a job, and she fears she will not be allowed to teach white students. So far, few have been allowed to, and probably 100 Negro emergency teachers have lost their jobs. Some districts have little more than token desegregation: the school board adopted an official policy of desegregation, but did not even announce it publicly. It is said that some white teachers have discouraged Negroes from coming to white schools, saying, "I'll teach anybody that comes here, but you'll be better off in your own school."

At least one superintendent felt that "it was touch and go," and in three places serious trouble broke out. On September 4, 1956, nine Negro students tried to enter the white high school in Sturgis, a coal-mining town in Western Kentucky, but a mob blocked the way. The governor sent the National Guard. White children boycotted the school. Townsfolk organized a Citizens' Council. The same thing happened in a nearby town, Clay, where the mayor, school board and community leaders opposed desegregation. Faced with such strong opposition, the state attorney general issued a ruling that resegregated the Negroes on a technicality. It was a clear-cut victory for segregation. But subsequently, a Federal Court has ordered the schools desegregated next September. And the local Citizens' Council has responded by announcing plans to open a private school for whites.

The trouble at Clay and Sturgis spilled over into Henderson, thirty-five miles away. Henderson is an old conservative tobacco town across the Ohio River from Evansville, Indiana. "When you cross the river you've come two hundred miles," says one Henderson man. The county school superintendent, C. B. West, told his principals that if any Negroes asked admission to white schools in September of 1956, they should be admitted; he made no public announcement. When school opened, only five Negro children entered Weaverton School along with 861 white children. "We got along very nicely there for three weeks," West recalls, "until this thing started in Clay and Sturgis and slopped over."

On September twentieth, the man who had led the segregationists in Clay and Sturgis, Jerry Waller, announced he was coming to Henderson to organize a Citizens' Council on Saturday night. A Presbyterian pastor, the Reverend C. Sumpter Logan, a good-looking, erect man of fifty-five who, though born in Alabama, believes in desegregation and has worked for it, determined to oppose. He called a meeting of the Henderson Ministerial Association. He discovered, he says, that only one other minister believed in desegregation on principle. Nevertheless they agreed to oppose the Citizens' Council move as a threat to law and order.

On Saturday night they gathered at the Reverend Mr. Logan's church for prayer; then walked across the park to the courthouse, where the Citizens' Council meeting was to be held, and sat down together. A crowd of 1400 overflowed to the grounds outside. From a raised dais, Waller, the segregationist, spoke for about an hour, attacking desegregation, urging the crowd to form a local Citizens' Council, and advocating a school boycott. The Reverend Mr. Logan arose and stepped to the microphone. He said that Waller had dealt with the crowd as rabble to be aroused, but that the ministers felt otherwise. "We consider you as children of God and we'd like to have a word with you."

> Too many people forget that the best place to work to beat hell is in church.
>
> DAN BENNETT

He began to read a statement, saying that while many disagreed with the Supreme Court decision, all should unite to preserve order, obey the law and "help strengthen democracy right here where we live." Before he had got halfway through, the crowd was booing and hissing and cursing and calling, "Throw the louse out!" He tried to continue, but the noise drowned his words. Finally he finished, and the meeting broke up noisily.

On Monday morning the boycott began. Only about half the pupils came to school. A crowd gathered. The Reverend Mr. Logan, on the radio, criticized the boycott and defended desegregation. He bought radio spots and newspaper space, emptying the Ministerial Association Treasury. It contained only $105. The Citizens' Council advertised too. Next day attendance dropped to 206. The Citizens' Council held another mass meeting; the ministers served coffee and cookies at a "fellowship hour" to parents who were keeping their kids in school. Superintendent West said, "As long as there's a student there'll be a teacher—that's the law."

Slowly, school attendance began to climb. Council leaders were wavering. On Friday they made an all-out effort to empty the school. It failed. The acting state commissioner of public safety told council leaders that he knew they intended to commit no violence, but that if any occurred he would hold them responsible. They called off the boycott.

Henderson has had no more trouble. But desegregation has not progressed. Most well-informed people think community sentiment favors segregation. The Citizens' Council probably lost because of the quality of its leadership and the firmness of authorities. The newspaper stayed neutral. So did elected officials, prominent businessmen and civic leaders; not one rallied to support the ministers openly. The Reverend Mr. Logan was almost alone. Prominent members of his church have since criticized him, and he thinks he may leave town before long.

Like Baltimore's, Louisville's citizens probably favor segregation; like Baltimore's and St. Louis', its leaders in recent years have eroded segregation. Superintendent Omer Carmichael, a tall, bald, spare Presbyterian elder of sixty-four, was born in Alabama and his grandfather had owned slaves, yet he said recently, "I think I've always felt that the Negro is a human being just as the rest of us. I'd like to see the Deep South unfrozen. I'm no crusader. I'm no professional do-gooder. If I were given the job of desegregating the schools in Birmingham, I'd plead very earnestly for three, four, five—I don't know how many years. I claim no credit for what's happened in Louisville, other than helping prepare to do what had to be done. This is a whole community problem, not just a school problem."

The Supreme Court, as we have seen, delayed a year before issuing its implementation decree. Carmichael made good use of the year. In the fall of 1954 he asked principals to hold faculty meetings and teachers to prepare their pupils. One first-grade teacher told her white pupils about Africa and about famous American Negroes, and taught them the "moral and spiritual values and the idea of brotherhood." In two ninth grades, a white teacher and a Negro teacher surveyed their pupils' attitudes with a questionnaire; then led classroom discussions. Some of the questions:

	White		Negro
	YES	NO	YES	NO
Do you want to go to school with Negro (white) students?	14	46	53	7
If your school had Negro (white) students and they attended a school dance, would you dance with them? .	5	55	52	8
Would you mind using the same bath and shower room with Negro (white) students? . .	43	17	30	30

With orientation of faculty and students begun, Carmichael turned to the community. He and other speakers addressed P.T.A.'s, civic clubs, churches, women's clubs, Rotary and Kiwanis. Various civic organizations rallied to help. At every step he tried to make the community feel that it was helping plan desegregation. His plan was to desegregate all grades, from kindergarten to twelfth grade, at a single stroke in September, 1956. He would redistrict the city without regard to race; he would assign each pupil to the school in the district where he lived. But any pupil who wished could apply for a transfer to a different school. Louisville had always permitted transfers liberally. In all, 4315 parents requested transfers—11 per cent of all parents. Nearly all were granted.

A Citizens' Council made plans to picket and boycott the schools. And only a few days before the schools opened, trouble broke out in Clay and Sturgis. But at Louisville nothing happened, except that a few people briefly picketed the Board of Education and City Hall and a few apprehensive parents went to school to see how things were going. And since then there has been no trouble.

But what has been happening since in the schools? What are the problems of desegregation? How have they been handled?

Carmichael has said, "We expected desegregation to work, but it's worked beyond our fondest hope. Of course"—smiling—"there are scores of teachers who could sneer and say, 'Little does he know what I've been through.' The people who bear the brunt of this are the classroom teachers."

On an ordinary morning out at Western Junior High, a huge old brick-and-stone school in a neighborhood of factories and busy streets and workingmen's houses, when the bell rings to change classes, the kids come banging out into the tiled corridors, and down the hall come a Negro boy and a white boy, both neat in striped blazers, talking animatedly. When the boys' gym class lines up for basketball practice, they mingle indiscriminately. But after school, as the kids walk homeward, they walk almost entirely in segregated clusters.

Western, formerly all white, contains 1077 pupils, about 225 of whom are Negroes. In general, the Negroes come from a relatively higher social level than the whites. Many of their fathers are professional men; most white parents are workingmen. "We've been very careful," Principal Foster J. Sanders says. "No problem that comes up is too small to go into fully." Shortly after the Supreme Court decision, many parents said, "I'm not going to send my children to school with niggers," but by now most parents accept it. Once a white mother telephoned to complain that a "big Negro" had hit her little girl: "I don't like niggers; I don't want them to touch my child." Sanders invited her and her husband to come to school. He called in both children. Soon it was clear that they simply had had a childish argument. The Negro boy was smaller than the white girl. The white father, who had taken the day off from work, said to his wife, "Is this all I'm here for? If it is, let's go on home." Sanders has said, "We haven't had an incident in this school this year that you wouldn't have between whites and whites. It's over now. I got my gray hairs in September."

California School, a formerly all-white elementary school, now contains more Negroes than whites, 178 to 125. Its neighborhood is filled with factories and small frame houses and beer joints. In an ordinary week the school loses perhaps five white students whose parents are fleeing to the suburbs, and gains three new Negro pupils whose parents have just moved in. At noon on the asphalt playground a teacher, Charles E. Aebersold, a young-looking man, blows a whistle and his pupils run to the tiny lunchroom and eat amid subdued uproar, two Negro boys shushing the others. They are sixth-grade children, seventeen Negro and seventeen white, and they mingle more freely than older children—and after school they walk together, homeward-bound, Negro and white. Eating with them, Aebersold says, "The problems this year are the old ones—discipline, tardiness, aggressiveness, kids wet their pants or get sick at their stomach. I get more resistance from three Negro boys than from all the rest of the class together. But, on the other hand, some of the very best co-operation is from Negroes. There are bright and slow Negro kids. Lack of achievement is due to environment here. That boy"—nodding toward a Negro at the end of the table—"is the youngest of nine kids who live in an alley in two rooms without a bath. With an environment like that, what can you expect?"

Negro achievement is one of the big problems of desegregation everywhere. Negroes were integrated grade for grade and many could not keep up. Most schools insist they have not held back quicker white kids in order to let slower Negroes catch up. They have sequestered the slow, average and quick students of both races and let each group progress at its own pace. It has usually fallen out that the slow groups contain a disproportionate (Continued on Page 58)

(Continued from Page 56) number of Negroes. Carmichael says that by the sixth grade, Negroes are about a year and a half behind white children in achievement. Fischer, of Baltimore, agrees. Why is it so? Social, economic and cultural background, say most educators, plus inferior teaching in the old all-Negro schools. And one adds, "I'm very sure some Negroes don't do well because they say, 'What's the sense of studying hard in high school when the only job you can get later on is as a bus boy anyway?'" Segregationists blame inherent Negro inferiority. Fischer, of Baltimore, says, "As to racial differences, we don't know and we will never know whether they exist until some Negro youngster somewhere can live under the same conditions as a white boy. If you can ever equalize conditions that bear in on a child, then you can match them on race alone."

Desegregation created other problems. Louisville junior high schools eliminated interschool athletic competition. Some St. Louis high schools curtailed their social programs. But everywhere that both Negroes and whites attend high-school dances, the races dance separately. There have been no complaints anywhere about mixed dating. Many teachers feel that tardiness is more prevalent among Negroes than among whites, "a clock just doesn't mean anything to them." Some say there has been more stealing in the schools since Negroes entered. Most teachers add quickly, "Of course, they're left alone at home so much of the time; their mother works; they don't even know who their father is; it's just a difference in the way they're raised." One teacher has said, "It's harder to teach this year—harder to get them to listen, to obey, to buy books, to start to work, to put their books away."

There is a widespread impression that white teachers are less strict than Negro and have leaned over backward to be nice to Negroes; maladjusted Negro children have abused their new freedom. Some teachers feel the Negro children are hostile to them. A Louisville teacher has said, "For the first six months it was a novelty. Everybody was on their best behavior. Lately that's been wearing off. I've noticed open defiance of the teachers. The Negro student now is getting the idea he's a guest in the white man's school. Integration of faculties could eliminate that." Carmichael has said he intends to desegregate faculties, as St. Louis and Baltimore have, but he won't say when. It is a sore point.

Desegregation has saved some school boards money—one school system is cheaper than two. In St. Louis it has relieved overcrowding in Negro schools. Talking with principals, teachers and children, one gets the impression that everybody has worked very hard to make desegregation work. Many teachers have noticed that Negro pupils seem more "polite" than white pupils. All agree that Negro parents have been extremely cooperative. A Louisville principal recalls a troublesome motherless Negro boy whose aunt and uncle came all the way from Chicago to see if they could help out. "I've known white parents that live four blocks from the school and I couldn't get them over here. The Negro parents want their children to get ahead."

The kids get along fine together. A guidance director says, "I haven't heard one child say one word against desegregation." White children do not seem to resent Negro crossing guards. At the start of the year, white children helped Negroes find their rooms and lockers. A Negro girl who is a good reader helps the slower white children. In one sixth-grade class a Negro girl asked why she couldn't get a job as an airline hostess when she grew up. A white girl said matter-of-factly, "If you were white you probably could." The Negro replied, "That's because people in Louisville are still prejudiced in some ways." Desegregation really is a community, not merely a school, problem. A Negro who had traveled to Europe described his trip to his classmates, less advantaged. Another brought a projector to school and showed films to the other children. "They are marvelous at sharing." A Negro girl's ability to play the piano enabled her class to sing accompanied. A Negro boy trained in his church choir distinguished himself at Christmastime. "He could have these children standing and singing on a signal from him as beautifully as any choir director I've ever seen," his teacher says. At a Louisville junior high the cast of the Christmas play included Negro angels and a Negro wise man. After desegregation in Frankfort, Kentucky, as one resident has said, "Whatever resentment there might have been at the white high school disappeared the night of the first football game when a Negro halfback scored two touchdowns." One day a first-grade teacher was reading to her pupils when she noticed that a small Negro girl seated beside her desk kept rubbing her hand up and down the teacher's arm. She persisted, and the teacher finally asked her what the trouble was. The child said, "I just wanted to see if your skin felt like mine. And it does."

> Research indicates that the Joneses are now having trouble keeping up with themselves.
>
> ELLIS C. GALT

Today across the nation there are 2,731,750 Negro school children in the seventeen states which before the Supreme Court decision required segregation. Of these, 256,475 are "in integrated situations"—enrolled in school districts where an official policy of desegregation has been declared or where one or more schools or grades are desegregated. But of these, no more than 115,000 Negroes are actually in mixed schools—4 per cent. (This estimate is liberal.) In the District of Columbia most of the 73,723 Negroes are in mixed schools—nearly as many as in all the Border States together—bringing the total to no more than 189,000 out of 2,805,473 enrolled in the seventeen states and the District—6.7 per cent.

In the Deep South—Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi and South Carolina—no Negroes have been desegregated.

In the Mid-South, two states, North Carolina and Virginia, have done nothing. Five Arkansas school districts containing 941 Negroes—out of 102,000 in the state—have desegregated, and so has one district in Tennessee containing 344 Negroes—out of 128,164—and including Clinton.

In the Western states 104 districts out of 1800 in Texas have desegregated, putting 3400 Negroes—out of 248,531—in mixed schools; 197 of 261 districts in Oklahoma have officially desegregated, putting 24,500 Negroes—of 37,367—into integrated situations.

The Border States have done the most. West Virginia desegregated quickly and completely. Delaware has put about 3000—of 11,411—Negroes into mixed schools; Northern Delaware is fully desegregated, though Southern Delaware remains a segregated island. Adjoining Southern Delaware is another island—the Eastern Shore of Maryland. In Maryland, desegregation began in Baltimore; the second year it spread through eight counties in Northern and Western Maryland; now it covers fourteen counties of twenty-four, so far as official policy is concerned. Of Maryland's 109,720 Negro pupils, 20,936 are actually in mixed schools, and of these nearly all—19,209—live in Baltimore. The situation is similar in Kentucky. About 45,000 of Missouri's 69,000 Negro pupils live in St. Louis and Kansas City, both desegregated; most other Negroes are concentrated in "Little Dixie" in Central Missouri, where desegregation has progressed gradually, and in "the Bootheel" along the Mississippi Delta, a cotton-growing region with a heavy Negro population where progress has been slow.

Everybody agrees that in the Border States the big changes have already come. Henceforward desegregation is likely to spread district by district or school by school. The great bulk of desegregation has taken place in the cities—Washington, Baltimore, Louisville, St. Louis, Kansas City. Even the cities are a patchwork. In Louisville, nine schools, including the Negro high school, are still all-Negro and eleven all-white—out of seventy-five schools; many contain only a handful of one race or the other. In Baltimore and St. Louis about half the schools are still all-white or all-Negro. Why? Residential segregation. As Negroes spread outward from the centers of the cities, they ultimately will enter all schools. At the same time whites are fleeing to the suburbs, so more and more schools may become all-Negro. It is possible that school desegregation has accelerated the white flight to the suburbs. The same thing is happening in Northern cities. In New York, 29½ per cent of Negro pupils are attending schools that are predominantly Negro. In Chicago, Negro leaders have estimated that 90 per cent of Negro elementary pupils are in all-Negro schools. Chicago does not keep statistics by race, but school authorities consider this estimate much too high. In New York the school board has adopted a policy of promoting desegregation by rezoning school districts in transition neighborhoods and selecting new school sites to serve a desegregated population. The Chicago board has declined to promote desegregation deliberately. It feels that Negro mobility is causing desegregation. Both New York and Chicago favor the concept of the "neighborhood school"; as the complexion of a neighborhood changes, so does the complexion of its school. Chicago has held district lines firm and refused to permit white children to attend schools outside their districts in order to flee a Negro influx. New York has not, as has been reported, transported Negro children long distances to white schools, or vice versa. Both New York and Chicago are making great efforts to improve the schools in Negro neighborhoods.

As Negroes flee the Deep South and come to the Border and Northern cities they place an increasing burden on education. Already the greatest problem in the St. Louis schools is caused by Mississippi immigrants. A week after Emmett Till was killed in Mississippi, 1000 Negro children from Mississippi knocked on the doors of the St. Louis schools. School desegregation is not just a Southern problem or a Border State problem; it is a truly national problem, perhaps the most pressing domestic problem the nation faces today.

A few general conclusions can be drawn about desegregation. It is easiest where there is something to build on—a previous association of the races in parks, swimming pools, Red Cross drives and other community activities. It is most difficult where the races are kept strictly apart, as in the Deep South. The farther south one goes the harder it gets. But this is not ironclad: witness Texas and Arkansas. Numbers do not necessarily control. St. Louis desegregated successfully with half its elementary pupils Negro, but putting five Negro children into a school at Henderson tore the town apart. Nor does tradition necessarily control. True, Henderson was in the section of Kentucky that went with the South in the Civil War, but Clinton, Tennessee, is in the loyalist section of Tennessee; today both are segregationist. Desegregation seems to work best in cities, perhaps because it has been tried most wholeheartedly there, perhaps because the numerous schools of a city permit flexibility—as the single school of a small town does not—perhaps because urban human relations are somewhat depersonalized.

In the cities there have been remarkably few "incidents." The kids get along fine. The parents object only a little more. Most complaints come from the teachers. Children in mixed schools, especially older children, show some tendency to resegregate themselves automatically outside the classroom. Low Negro achievement has probably caused some lowering of academic standards, but not so much as might be expected. Whether desegregation should be ironclad or lax depends upon the place. Citizens of Baltimore and Louisville, though probably secretly in favor of segregation, reluctantly did what their leaders convinced them they must. Citizens' Councils have made little headway in the Border States. Here members are few, and you almost never find the town banker, lawyer, doctor, merchant or sheriff leading the council, as in the Deep South. But the councils may make trouble in Louisville next fall. The fondest dream of Deep South segregationists is to resegregate Kentucky, and John Kasper has announced he will try. In areas that could go either way, everything depends on the quality and firmness of leadership on both sides. Finally, it is perfectly clear that in places where desegregation has been tried in full good faith, it has succeeded.

Awhile back, Dr. G. D. Wilson, a thin, elderly, white-haired Negro who heads the Department of Education at Kentucky State College, said, "People have learned a lot from this. I visited a school one day and saw a little Negro girl come out and struggle with her coat. I stopped on the steps to watch. She ran on; then I saw two white mothers standing there with their white children, and I realized the Negro girl was running toward them, and one of the women leaned down and helped her with her coat; then they all went on together." He smiled, a gentle, brown-skinned man with a soft smile. "This thing is full of little human stories. A principal told me about a little white girl who had been a polio victim, she had to use a wheel chair, and after desegregation—this superintendent had been against it, thought it wouldn't work, had said so—one day after desegregation he was coming down the hall and saw two boys, one white and one Negro, one in front of the wheel chair and one behind it, wheeling the little girl along, and when they came to the stairs, they carried her up the steps together. The girl didn't care whether it was a white boy or a Negro carrying her, she had to get up the steps. Neither boy cared who was in front; they wanted to help her. The principal said, 'That's democracy in action. It's working pretty good.'"

Editors' Note: This is the last of five articles by John Bartlow Martin.

Harold
As I mentioned
Frank

RECEIVED AUG 5 1957

LENOIR CHAMBERS

THE SOUTH AND SEGREGATION: THE FIRST THREE YEARS*

Desegr?
Other half in file

LENOIR CHAMBERS has been a Norfolk, Virginia, newspaperman since 1929—editor of the Virginian-Pilot since 1950. He is among the leaders of Southern thought—being a practical idealist, both liberal and objective.

It is fifteen days before the third anniversary of the Supreme Court's decision that "in the field of public education the doctrine of 'separate but equal' has no place." In twenty-nine days it will be the second anniversary of the Supreme Court's decision on May 31, 1955, that "the courts will require that the defendants make a prompt and reasonable start toward full compliance with our May 17, 1954, ruling."

The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, which has jurisdiction in Maryland, the two Virginias, and the two Carolinas, looked at these two decisions and made certain interpretations. In the Clarendon County, South Carolina, case it said:

> . . . It is important that we point out exactly what the Supreme Court has decided and what it has not decided . . . The Constitution . . . does not require integration. It merely forbids discrimination. It does not forbid such segregation as occurs as the result of voluntary action.

The depth and scope of the Supreme Court's decision three years ago made it instantly an issue of profound national importance. Not only that; it was of such a nature and of such gravity as to have world meaning, for it presented an outline of contemporary American constitutionality.

Yet it is within the District of Columbia and the seventeen states which required segregation in public schools before May 17, 1954, that the immediate impact was heaviest and the practical problems are most vividly on parade. These, in varying degrees, are the Negro states, and the issues are the relations of the white and Negro people who live side by side, long and inextricably intermingled in many respects and long held apart in other respects.

Negro population has drained out of the South since the first World War and in greater degree since the second World War, but the South is still the home of nearly ten million of the sixteen million American Negroes. In one of these states, Mississippi, the Negro population is 45 per cent of the whole and is much more than a majority in some counties, towns, and villages.

The South is the region where slavery was a practical fact for 246 years, leaving a mark on the relations of the races which would be expected to linger a long time wherever such conditions existed. The South is still the region where more Negroes have had less economic and educational opportunity than anywhere else in the nation. Some remarkable Negro men and women have broken out of these conditions, but a large degree of poverty and ignorance has been the inevitable consequence of the restrictions as well as the basic conditions. It is easy for many people in the South to think of the Negro race in terms of the poverty and ignorance they see around them rather than in terms of the competence and capacity, and the distinguished achievements of many Negroes, which are not often on view in their neighborhoods.

*An address, somewhat condensed, given before the thirty-third convention of Torch International on May 2, 1957.

In this region what has happened in these three years? I turn first to the college and university record. As long ago as 1938 the Supreme Court declared in the Gaines case from Missouri that a Negro resident did not have to be sent out of the state to study law. Since Missouri had no law school for Negroes, he was entitled to attend the law school operated by the state for white students.

In 1950 the court declared in the Texas case of Sweatt v. Painter that a state law school set up for Negroes could not be "equal" to that provided for whites because of intangible factors, including the number of future judges whom students were likely to encounter among their classmates.

In the North Carolina law school case the court declared, in effect, that it was impossible to attain equality in legal education at a separate school, no matter how competent its faculty, how large its library, or how white its teachers. This was a clear forerunner of the 1954 decision about all public education.

These and many other Supreme Court decisions had cleared the way before May 17, 1954, for qualified Negro students to attend state graduate and professional schools. In undergraduate education, as in public primary and secondary schools, the "separate but equal" doctrine still controlled. But there was a tide in motion. Let us see how far it has carried.

Integration in Colleges

Today in these 18 jurisdictions some 2,000 Negroes attend colleges and universities which formerly barred them because of their color. About 110 out of 208 state colleges and universities admit Negroes in principle or in practice, and about 110 have Negro students enrolled now. These colleges and universities are in 13 of the 18 jurisdictions.

Five states of the Deep South—South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, and Mississippi—do not admit Negro students to any kind of college or university work in state institutions traditionally reserved for white students. In all these five states there have been only six applications by Negroes to enter state colleges and universities reserved for white students—two in South Carolina, two in Alabama, one in Georgia, one in Florida, and in Mississippi none.

On the other hand, in seven states and the District of Columbia desegregation policies are in effect on all levels at all state-supported institutions. These seven are Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia, Kentucky, Missouri, Oklahoma, and Arkansas. All are border states or states which, with the exception of Arkansas, are more Northern than Southern in the old traditional connotation of the terms.

In a third group—Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Louisiana, and Texas—desegregation is part-way. Some institutions have accepted Negro students, but the states have not proclaimed any general desegregation policy. Many of their institutions have not received applications from students of colored races.

In Virginia four out of ten state institutions formerly reserved for white students have, by the latest figures I have been able to obtain, 38 Negro students: 18 at the University of Virginia, 11 at the Medical College of Virginia, 5 at the Richmond Professional Institute, and 4 at the Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

In North Carolina there are only 19: 7 in graduate or professional schools and 4 undergraduates at the University of North Carolina, 5 at the State College, and 2 at the Woman's College of the state university. In 7 state colleges the student bodies are exclusively white.

There are many Souths, not one. There is clearly a Deep South that is sternly resistant to change; a border area where, legally and technically, desegregation in colleges is a fact; and a middle region. The spread of acceptance of Negro students in institutions of higher learning is substantial—13 out of 18 jurisdictions and more than half of the state institutions in these 13. Many of the institutions in these

MATERIALS - DESEGREGATION

RECEIVED OCT 23 1957

Desegregation: One View from the Deep South

BY FLORENCE SYTZ

Reprinted from Social Work, July, 1957
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF SOCIAL WORKERS
95 Madison Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

BY FLORENCE SYTZ

Desegregation: One View from the Deep South

DESEGREGATION CAN BE viewed as a legal, social, economic, psychological, moral, political, historical issue,[1] or its subject matter can be conceived of as today's chapter in man's eternal striving toward that city to which each of us must travel on foot not losing sight of, > the hard core, which is, do this, do that, love your friends and like your neighbors, be just, be extravagantly generous, be honest, be tolerant, have courage, have compassion, use your wits and your imagination, understand the world you live in and be on terms with it, don't dramatize and dream and escape.[2]

Each of us will need to find his own way toward that city in which individuals are accepted for what they are rather than for who they happen to be by reason of their skin color, sex, money, place of birth, parents, and similar irrelevancies. Desegregation is but one of the villages we will eventually pass through on our way.

FLORENCE SYTZ, M.S.S., is professor of social casework at the Tulane University School of Social Work in New Orleans. She has lived and worked in the South for many years.

However, we who live and work in one of the eight states[3] in the South that as of May 1956 not only had not desegregated any of its public elementary or secondary schools but had passed legislation designed to retain segregation may find our view of [1] For illustrations, see the publications of the Southern Regional Council, Atlanta, Georgia, particularly What the Supreme Court Said and Three Views of the Segregation Decisions; Harry S. Ashmore, The Negro and the Schools (Chapel Hill: The University of North Carolina Press, 1954); Gordon W. Allport, The Nature of Prejudice (Cambridge: Addison-Wesley Publishing Company, 1954); Eli Ginzberg and associates, The Negro Potential (New York: Columbia University Press, 1956); Committee on Social Issues, Psychiatric Aspects of School Desegregation (New York: Group for the Advancement of Psychiatry, 1957); Robert Penn Warren, Segregation, the Inner Conflict in the South (New York: Random House, 1956); Frederick B. Routh and Paul Anthony, "Southern Resistance Forces," Phylon (First Quarter 1957); C. Vann Woodward, The Strange Career of Jim Crow (New York: Oxford University Press, 1955).

[2] Rose Macaulay, The Towers of Trebizond (New York: Farrar, Straus and Cudahy, 1957), pp. 274–275. See also, Lillian Smith, The Journey (Cleveland and New York: The World Publishing Company, 1954).

[3] Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Virginia, and North and South Carolina.

the situation becoming skewed. Social work can be threatened from within as well as from without. The clue to wisdom in understanding the present is to be found not only in the past but in our determination not to use outer happenings to turn the mirror away from ourselves. It is so easy for all of us to blame the Supreme Court, the "meddling Yankees," the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Citizens' Councils, the members of the legislature, for our own apathy and fear. It is easy to say that if the Supreme Court of the United States had but followed its own separate but equal doctrine which it enunciated in 1896 in the case of Plessy v. Ferguson, the progress in race relations noted in 1947 by Charles Johnson and his associates[4] would have continued smoothly and without disruption; or to repeat the thinking of the last century voiced by William Graham Sumner ("Stateways cannot change folkways") when we say "You cannot legislate against prejudice." However, when we say these things, we forget that the progress documented by Johnson was made through compromising our democratic and religious principles as well as through often violating in practice (by both whites and Negroes) the custom of segregation while at the same time helping to maintain the "ritual of public homage to segregation."

Prior to the Supreme Court's 1954 decision, gains were made in the South within the framework of segregation largely through not disturbing the "ritual of public homage to segregation," since white southerners were not disturbed by violations of the principle if these were not given wide publicity and if the people requesting the violations were so-called "respectable citizens." For example, permission in the past to use the Municipal Auditorium in New Orleans for an unsegregated meeting might be obtained by one group of citizens, but similar permission might not be granted to another group of citizens in the community.

However, these special privileges and unnoticed violations of traditional southern custom did have the effect of eroding the pattern of segregation to the extent that it became common throughout the South to find patterns of segregation rather than one hard immovable over-all pattern. The gains resulting from this erosion were to be found then, as they still are today, in the extension of opportunities for all the people living in our region. Through the efforts of some of the people in southern communities, Negroes as well as whites gained, for example, better job and health opportunities as well as chances to be better fed, housed, and educated. Many of us were slowly, through hard trying, engaged in making our separate facilities at times less separate and always a bit more equal.

No doubt there were people in our communities and in our profession who contributed their share of hard trying to extend opportunities with little, if any, disturbance of conscience as long as the Supreme Court sanctioned the compulsory separation of the races. Others, such as I, worked within the segregation framework even though we did not agree with it. We were heartened by the gains we helped to bring about. For example, by 1950, of the professional associations in the South, Negro "lawyers were admitted in six states, doctors in one, nurses in eight, librarians in six and social workers in all."[5] Academic associations and social welfare organizations both admitted Negro members and made efforts to accommodate them at their meetings. On the other hand, we were often disheartened by the fact that, time and again, we saw how the gains made within the framework of segregation were only exceptions, not gains that established any principle or precedent in behalf of desegregation. That principle in the legal sense has now been stated by the United States Supreme Court. This, from my point of view, is real progress.

[4] Into the Main Stream, A Survey of Best Practices in Race Relations in the South (Chapel Hill: The University of North Carolina Press, 1947).

[5] Woodward, op. cit., pp. 143–144.

When the Supreme Court in 1896 upheld the Louisiana statute providing for separate accommodations for the white and colored races, Justice John Marshall Harlan, a Kentucky unionist, dissented. In his dissenting opinion, he stated "Our Constitution is color-blind" and fifty-eight years later, on May 17, 1954, the Supreme Court may be said to have agreed with him and with Justice Holmes who, in 1905, in one of his dissenting opinions, stated, "The Fourteenth Amendment does not enact Mr. Herbert Spencer's Social Statics." The Supreme Court's willingness to reverse in 1954 its 1896 decision is, among other things, recognition of the extent of social change that has occurred during these years. Since it is easier for us to change our methods of transportation from the horse and buggy to the automobile and jet plane than to change our ideas and feelings, it should not surprise anyone today to find resistance in the deep South to the Supreme Court's decision.

It should also not be too surprising to hear the re-echo of the thinking of the last century to the effect that "You cannot legislate against prejudice." Those who say this have forgotten that it was the Jim Crow laws in the South that in large measure created southern folkways and that recent Fair Employment Practices legislation in certain states has created new folkways in factories and in department stores. Furthermore, as Allport points out, legislation does not aim at controlling prejudice but at controlling only its open expression. But when the open expression of prejudice is controlled, changes are more likely to occur in the thoughts and feelings of individuals.

Those southerners who were not surprised by the 1954 decision of the Supreme Court had noted in 1935 the decision in the case of Donald Murray as well as the decisions in the Gaines case in 1938, the Sipuel case in 1946, and the Supreme Court decision in the case of Sweatt v. Painter in 1950. They were aware of the regional program the southern states had set up for higher education by agreeing to co-operate in the establishment of centers of graduate and professional education that would enroll students of both races from the participating states. The plan makes sense in a poor section of the country because it seeks to avoid the establishment of costly graduate and professional programs in universities in each southern state. Opponents of the plan maintained that it was only a device to retain segregation at the university level until the Southern Regional Education Board intervened, in a case involving the University of Maryland, in order to say, "It is not the Board's purpose that the regional program shall serve any state as legal defense for avoiding responsibilities under the existing state and federal laws and court decisions." By 1953, only five state university doors remained closed to Negroes—those in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, and South Carolina.

In the postwar school cases brought before the courts it became increasingly evident that if the biracial school system were to survive, "equality" would have to be a fact rather than a token. The southern states appropriated additional funds for equalization purposes but these funds continued insufficient to meet the needs of the increasing numbers of children of school age. The activity was all too little and too late. By 1950, Louisiana, for example, was spending 112.8 million dollars on its schools or 4 percent of its income, while New York was spending 610.7 million on its educational program or 2.2 percent of its income. During 1940–1950, the average daily attendance in southern schools increased by 218,000 while there was virtually no net gain in the rest of the country.

DILEMMA OF THE SOCIAL WORKER

Today, the social worker in the South as well as the teacher of social work in any southern university is sharply faced with the conflict between his personal-professional principles and the purposes of the communities which are often reflected in some social agency board members and university trustees. Many of these board members and trustees are also in conflict since they, as well as we, are law-abiding citizens respecting all duly established legislative, executive, and judicial authority whether at local, state, or federal levels of government. Obedience to this authority when it violates no moral, religious, or professional principle is commonplace enough and causes us no personal conflict. However, with respect to desegregation, many of us are in conflict because our state legislatures have enacted laws designed to retain the traditional custom of segregation and the Citizens' Councils are selecting as special targets for their social and economic pressure teachers, social workers, ministers, and "liberals" whom they often try to link with communism or so-called "front organizations." The present cloud over the "liberal" white citizen in the South is one produced by conflict and fear.

Finding himself in this situation, what is a person to do? In what way can he best fulfill his various obligations? These are the same questions Iredell Jenkins asks in his article, "Segregation and the Professor," [6] and the alternatives he presents are open to us, too, namely:

1. Any one of us can resign from any social work or teaching position we now have—"resign either with quiet dignity or with a ringing public declaration"—without much, if any, personal risk as there are many positions open and available in other parts of the United States.

2. Any one of us can make his views known: to state his ideas in public, to stand up and be counted on this issue. The inner demand that we do this is not so much a demand that we exercise an abstract right but a demand in behalf of our own self-respect and what is conceived to be our professional obligation.

3. Any one of us can ignore the problem through cultivating his own garden, overlooking those portions of it labeled "community organization" and "social action."

4. Any one of us can seek and find, as we often have done in the past, some middle course between resignation and acquiescence.

Those who suggest that we resign or who tell others not to seek positions in the South at this time are forgetting that

> The place to fight for a principle is where it is a living issue, not where it is an accomplished fact, and still less where it has become a mere object of sanctimonious self-congratulation. An individual who resigns inevitably weakens both the cause and the institution to which he is committed.[7]

Our knowledge of the slow progress of desegregation in many parts of the North, despite a tradition and "public policy" as old although different from that of the South, gives us little reason to believe that the deep South, after it accepts the legal principle, will not search for and find ways of softening this acceptance. How long the present transition period will last can only be stated by those who possess a crystal ball. We do know, however, that both the length of the transition period as well as the time it will take to achieve de facto desegregation are dependent upon the human efforts of both whites and Negroes. And many of us want to be in the South in order to contribute our share of the human effort to bring about de facto desegregation.

Those who suggest that we stand up and be counted on this issue have their own interpretation of and ways of "standing up." Some would not bother to choose the time, the place, the group with which to stand or any concrete specific aspect of the issue; others would be concerned about all these things plus such factors as preparation, planning, and strategy. The former often appear to be more concerned with having everyone know that they are on the side of right and justice rather than in helping toward constructive, less personally spectacular, achievements.

[6] Bulletin of the American Association of University Professors (Spring 1957), pp. 10–18.

[7] Ibid., p. 12.

Those among us who would apparently ignore the issue by advocating the cultivation of our own limited social work or teaching garden maintain that the desegregation issue will be settled by the courts, and quote Georgia's Attorney General, Eugene Cook, who said, in reference to the segregation laws passed by the 1956 Georgia General Assembly, "We might as well be candid. Most of these laws will be stricken down by the courts in due course." [8] This is not the time, they say, for us to intrude and to risk martyrdom since, if we do, we will direct the attention of the Citizens' Councils not only to us but to our social work organizations or educational institutions. We know that whatever we say or do may bring the impact from those who are vehemently opposed upon our profession, our social agencies, our universities—not merely upon ourselves. This is the hard core of the present dilemma of the social worker or teacher of social work in the deep South.

THE MIDDLE COURSE

As I conceive of the middle course, it is a way of proceeding that lies between resignation, martyrdom, and acquiescence. Those taking the middle course will not fail to stand up and be counted but they will choose the time, the place, and the group with which to stand, and they will also be concerned about the preparation, planning, and strategy appropriate to any given concrete aspect of the desegregation issue. They will be aware that there are many different roads to any given goal and that they may choose the wrong one and suffer the consequences.

During a transition period in which social work values are threatened even more severely than they have been in the past, the maintenance of these values demands that we re-examine their significance for social work education, administration, and practice; that we re-examine also the means we can use, not only to achieve them in certain of our professional and educational activities but to retain or to recapture them. Only those who choose the middle course will be stimulated to do this.

Those of us who have lived and worked in the South prior to the Supreme Court's 1954 decision know that there exists in our region a column of decency of which our northern colleagues may not be fully aware because of the noise created by the Citizens' Councils. This column of decency is represented by those who are participating in the work of organizations and institutions such as the local chapters of the National Association of Social Workers, the Urban League, the Southern Regional Council and its state-affiliated organizations, the Commission on Human Rights of the Catholic Committee of the South, the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and the Jewish, Catholic, and Protestant churches.[9] The position taken by the Catholic Archbishop of the Archdiocese of New Orleans and the ensuing controversy have been widely commented on in northern and southern newspapers. Less widely noted was the conference held recently in which representatives of the National Council of Churches and the profession of social work reached agreement upon a policy statement which calls on the Protestant churches to "encourage [8] Florence B. Irving, "Segregation Legislation in the South," New South (February 1957), p. 8.

[9] For amplification, see John Hope II, "Trends in Patterns of Race Relations in the South Since May 17, 1954," Phylon (Second Quarter 1956), pp. 103–118.

their members to work for better schools and better housing; to help overcome racial discrimination and to take social and political action to influence community decisions." [10]

In the 1956 session of the Louisiana legislature, the proponents of segregation obtained the adoption (without a dissenting vote) of thirteen measures designed to maintain the compulsory separation of the races in a variety of contexts. Interestingly enough, Act 579 which prohibits mixed participation in "any dancing, social functions, entertainments, athletic training, games and sports" exempts religious gatherings, services, and functions. Social workers along with many other men and women of intelligence and good will can work together on some aspect of the desegregation issue if they choose to do so. Increasingly, organizations like those mentioned will need any expertness social workers and social scientists can provide for use in concrete situations.

CONCLUSION

Although it is evident that I prefer the middle course and would find it difficult to sympathize with those who would either seek martyrdom or would run away by resigning or ignoring the problem, I know that, given the conflict, it is inevitable that social workers and teachers of social work will resolve it in different ways. I can only hope that this brief and incomplete statement of the desegregation issue will stimulate others to explore it further and to share with the rest of us their ideas as to ways we can take to resolve our dilemma. I would, however, along with Iredell Jenkins remind them, "That while it is quite easy to say what is right under hypothetical conditions, it is extremely difficult to decide what is best in actual circumstances." [11]

[10] The New York Times (May 9, 1957), p. 23.

[11] Jenkins, op. cit., p. 18.

Materials - Desegregation

INTEGRATION AND PUBLIC ETHICS

Address delivered November 18, 1957, before the Georgia Council on Human Relations at Macon, Georgia, by Marion A. Wright, of Linville, Falls, North Carolina

---

It is probably well for me to state at the outset that no person here present or connected with the Georgia Council on Human Relations, or with the Southern Regional Council, or any other organization, confederated or conspired or connived with me in any way in the preparation of these remarks. I do so for the reason that, if anything I might say should be distasteful to any person in authority, such person in all fairness should absolve you from guilt. It is not unfamiliar practice in recent years in some areas to note who were present and what was said at meetings such as this and draw the inference that somehow the speaker was mouthpiece for the group. (I wish I could feel my words had such solid support.)

The practice, I must say, does not apply to all public meetings. Take churches, for example. I have not heard the claim made that one, by the mere act of listening, must be considered as endorsing all that was said in the sermon. Or that one's presence at a political meeting implied his assent to the doctrines there expounded.

But meetings dealing with the touchy issue of race seem in a class apart. Perhaps because some men feel so deeply and think so shallowly on that subject, they do not apply normal standards in judging such meetings. They seem to feel that it is somehow immoral or disloyal even to assume that there are two sides to the question; that both should be heard before judgment is rendered, and that it is somehow subversive or un-American to dissent from the prevailing orthodoxy. I could give you names and places, but I have reason to believe that any member of the Georgia Council will know from experience that what I say is true.

We must live in a crazy, mixed-up world. Definitions must be completely twisted from their original meanings. For example, I had always thought that the country had waxed great upon dissent and non-conformity. The Puritans and the Pilgrims fled to these shores because they were non-conformists. The nation received its birth in Revolution, which is nothing but dissent carried to the ultimate. The fundamental law of the nation and of all the states encouraged expression of opinion by guaranteeing freedom of thought, speech and the press. So one would have assumed that he was engaged in the practice of purest Americanism when he thought and spoke and wrote his real convictions upon any issue of public moment; in fact, that he was thereby discharging a solemn civic duty.

Now, however, we are told by the highest state authority, that, on the issue of civil rights - guaranteed, incidentally, by those same constitutions - if he expresses his honest convictions and if those convictions do not agree with the views of that authority, then he is subversive.

Let's examine that for just a moment. I have done a little research upon the point. I find that good old Webster defines subversion as "the overthrow of the foundation, as the subversion of a government or state." The overthrow of the foundation.

Now, if our government may be said to have any foundation at all, that foundation is its Constitution. Is one who exercises rights of free speech guaranteed by that Constitution and who exerts himself to the end that other rights of other people guaranteed by the same Constitution shall be respected trying to overthrow that Constitution? Is he seeking the overthrow of the foundation of his government?

After all, who are the real subversives? Is it we who seek by constitutional means to uphold the constitutional rights? Or is it those who seek by unconstitutional means to deny those rights? Who is destroying the Constitution - we who recognize it as the supreme law of the land or they who openly flout that law?

I wish I knew much more about psychology than I do. But some things ought to be evident to the merest dabbler in that field. All of us are aware that one who carries a burden of guilt, or a guilt complex, is apt to seek release from that burden by accusation of others. He accomplishes two results:, first, his own guilt does not appear so obnoxious if he can make it appear that others share it with him; and, second, he diverts attention from himself by directing it to others. Louder than anyone else, then the fleeing pickpocket shouts "stop, thief!"

So we may perhaps understand, if we cannot condone, the unmitigated gall of men dressed in a little brief authority who thus malign their adversaries.

We may understand them also for reasons far less subtle. In fact, these gentlemen are quite transparent. When they engage in character assassination, they are playing their last card.

How bravely they talked a few short years ago! They used all of their cunning to devise legal ways and means of circumventing the school decisions and assured their people these stratagems could not fail. Well, you know that happened. One by one these devices have been branded by the courts for the frauds they are. One by one their authors have had their stupidity and duplicity exposed.

Not merely have they lost before the courts. There was a time when they claimed the endorsement and support of organized religion - surely the very limit of audacity. Here again they have been repudiated - the last blow being the recent profound and scholarly statement by the ministers of Atlanta. They appealed to pseudo-science to support their claims of racial superiority - and have been overwhelmed by the conclusions of biologists, geneticists, anthropologists and students of human behaviour.

So it has been in every forum where prejudice was not a factor and there were established ground rules. Under such circumstances an honorable opponent would admit himself vanquished and congratulate the victor. But not so with the leaders of the nullificationists. They turn to the only fields of comfort left to them - the Gestapo-like tapping of telephones and raw slander. In those arenas there are no ground rules, no penalties for fouls, no disqualification for gouging or hitting below the belt.

Whom do they - of all people - accuse of being Communists or "left-wingers"? The National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A.; most non-Southern magazines and newspapers; the radio and television networks; the organized trade union movement; the organized student movement; the Attorney General of the United States; the Supreme Court, and even the President of the United States! Rather distinguished company you and I keep. I don't know how you feel about it, but I would be a little ashamed not to be included.

I know of nothing more ironic than that such a change should emanate from such a source. If there is any group in this country which has given aid and comfort to the Communist cause, it is the segregationists. Their activities have been grist for the Communist mill. Pravda, the Tass news agency, and every other Communist periodical and radio have blazoned their words and deeds from the Siberian steppes to East Berlin and from the banks of the Ganges to the headwaters of the Nile. The words of segregationist leaders, whether suave and oily, as some of them are, or harsh and raucous, as others are, are known and quoted in all that vast domain.

Why? Because those words belie everything America has always claimed for itself. Equality of all men before the law, equality of opportunity, freedom from burdens or penalties because of race, the seal of the law to protect rights of the humblest citizen, freedom of speech and all the other freedoms - these we have proclaimed from our pinnacles as being of the genius of America. And these are contradicted and negated by words and deeds of the leaders of resistance to law. And yet they - the greatest allies of the Communist cause - have the unspeakable effrontery to accuse those who dare disagree with them of being subversive!

The front page space given by the Communist press to the poisonous words of the leaders is shared by the space given to the deeds of their underlings and satellites - perhaps I should say their Sputniks. It would be an exercise in morbidity to chronicle those deeds. They are as well known to you as to me - the cross burnings, the bombings, the assaults, the murders, all the ghastly reprisals wrought upon those whose only offense is that they seek to exercise rights declared by Thomas Jefferson to be inalienable.

Now, our political leaders without exception deplore violence such as this. They have no truck with the Ku Klux Klan. But my contention is that they set in motion forces which bred the Klan and the very violence they now condemn. What they advocate, in essence, is disrespect for law. They choose to limit such advocacy to one law - that relating to the public schools. But when you enter the area of disrespect there is no such thing as a limited infection. It spreads. What right have they to tell me what laws I shall observe? My right of choice is fully as good as theirs. They choose to flout school law. I may with as much right choose to flout the law which protects life and property of the man who disagrees with me. They seek to get results by chicanery. Men less subtle and sophisticated may perforce get their results by violence. There may be more than a thread of connection between what governors and senators say and what men in Mississippi did to Emmit Till.

Certain governors, following the Supreme Court decisions, announce that a segregated school system must be preserved. How? They employ all of their cunning to develop methods - private schools with state subsidy, tuition grants, pupil assignment acts, local control, complicated legal steps to be taken by aggrieved parties, re-districting and all the rest of a list of odorous maneuvers. One by one these devices come before the court and are branded for what they are - transparent frauds.

All legal tactics are exhausted. No trump cards are left. What then? When cunning and what passes for intelligence have failed, what is an untutored citizen to do? Well, he has his fists, doesn't he? He has dynamite. He has bombs. He has torches. There rings in his ears the voice of authority telling him segregation must be preserved. So he uses the only tools he knows.

Then how crocodile are the tears of the governor who weeps at violence!

I am sure that these politicians could not have foreseen that their advocacy should have led to a state of public mind which would in certain parts of the South result in substantial curtailment of the right of free speech and opinion. Teachers' oaths, requirement that they list their organizations, the proscribing of the NAACP, boycott of advocates of law observance, withdrawal of advertising from certain newspapers - all flow directly from the germinal idea of evading the law of the land.

There is no more alarming phenomenon of this age than this mass effort to control what men shall publicly say or print. Opinion is the life blood of democracy. Upon its free expression democracy thrives and grows. You will not have sound opinion unless men may freely express and exchange views - test them in the market place. Thought itself is actually inhibited where it cannot be freely expressed. For, where all seem to be thinking alike no one is acutally thinking at all.

But to return for a moment to the Communist idea. It is, I submit, too generous to some of our political leaders to attempt a distinction between their words and the deeds of the rank and file. The very deeds of such leaders themselves, no less than their words, follow patterns devised in Moscow and used to bolster dictatorships everywhere.

What is rule No. 1 of Communism, or Naziism or Fascism? It is give your people something to fear and then rescue them from the peril you have created. In Russia it was first the Czarist element and then the large landowners, or Kulaks. In Germany it was a handful of Jews. In Italy it was the Capitalist class. In the South it is the Negro. Plant fear of the Negro in people's minds and they turn to you as their saviour.

Another rule is strangle or throttle the opposition so that it cannot be heard. Never give it the chance to present its views in fair and open debate. In your campaigns never discuss issues but smear the opposition. Hitler called them Jew-lovers. You know what our boys call them.

Another rule is harass and persecute the opposition. In Germany the Jews had to wear the Star of David; they had to register and carry passports. Their leaders were arrested and thrown into jail. Secret police spied upon them. Their phones were tapped. Their synagogues and homes were bombed while the authorities looked the other way. Does this sound to you a little like Georgia and the NAACP? Have I pushed the parallel an inch further than the facts justify?

If I have not - and I leave it to you to say - then certainly some of the resistance leaders are following the Moscow line. The tactics of such leaders do not seem to be repudiated by others more unctuous who wear an aura of respectability. And these are the fellows who say the Supreme Court of the United States is Communist inspired!

They say they detest Communism. But they imitate it. And, of course, you know what is the sincerest flattery.

So, we observe the already achieved results of the official policy of evading the law - results which I am sure were not in contemplation of those who fashioned the policy. Legal chicanery and subterfuge have sired economic boycott, suppression of thought and raw violence.

I ask you, as reasonable men and women, if other results are not in prospect unless the policy is reversed. Thus far, the legal subterfuges relate only to integration in our schools; boycott, suppression of thought and violence are directed only against advocates of compliance with school law. Will they stop there? If the rights of one minority group may thus be assailed, what about the rights of others? The Jews, the Catholics, the labor unions - any group that doesn't have the power of government in its hands. The rights of none of us are safe unless the rights of all are safe. When we sow the wind we shall inevitably reap the whirlwind.

There are many tests of the good citizen. None is more acid that his insistence that the other man's rights shall be respected as fully as his own.

So, in this struggle none of us can be above the battle. Whether we like it or not, every one of us is intimately involved. The forces now directed against others, unless arrested, shall surely turn against us. The Negro's right to education under precisely the same conditions as the white child may only be denied by a process of deception as stupefying intellectually and as stultifying morally to the whites as would be the entire lack of schools.

What some of our leaders advocate is, of course, sheer madness, which plays into the Communist hands. They would destroy our national unity, our mutual respect and our faith in the fairness and purity of our institutions. They would separate men into hostile groups.

Practically all of us have come to agree, I think, that the shabbiest and sorriest figure of our times is the man who would drive lines of cleavage among men. We need not walls to separate men from each other but bridges to connect, not sundering but unifying influences. The greatest public servant of our day is the one who breaks down artificial barriers with which men have sought to create the illusion of their superiority to other men. Ghandi, warring upon untouchability and the caste system in India, and Schweitzer, giving his great talents to the black men of Africa, in the minds of all of us, loom as the great figures of this age.

No one of us may be a Ghandi or a Schweitzer. We lack their mental and spiritual endowments. But every one of us, to the limits of such endowments as he has, may, on this continent, in Georgia, partake of the spirit of these men, spend his life to the same noble purposes.

The policy of division of men into groups, orders and sub-orders, could hardly commend itself to intelligent minds at any time. It seems particularly primitive in November, 1957. Man-made satellites hourly traverse the reaches of space above this continent. They send back their little beeps which men in laboratories record for the ~~passed~~ books. We may translate those beeps or we may not. It hardly seems important.

But these satellites say one thing in a language all may understand. Unite or perish. Not unite as Negro or white. But unite as human beings, bound together as equals by bonds of mutual respect. We must so unite or

The cloud-capp'd towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherit shall dissolve;
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind.

Anthony Edwards

2500 —

1700 —

5-67600 —

5 Pages —

2000 Copies —

5-6 Hours Extra

$150

Desegregation clips 1958
MM

Arthur J. Levin and Harold Fleming

Oscar Cohen

August 21, 1958

"The Story Nobody Tells You" by William Peters, MCCALL'S, 8.28.58

Enclosed are tearsheets of an article to be included in a forthcoming issue of McCall's which will appear on the newstands next week. I would very much appreciate your reactions.

Immediately on getting these tearsheets, I had them photostated for you. I have not read them yet, but I wondered what you thought about reprinting and promotion.

OC:ms
enc.
AIRMAIL
SPECIAL

~~p. 122 [illegible]~~ note next-to-last
¶ – no SRC or state councils!

By WILLIAM PETERS

The story nobody tells you...

ADVANCE COPY
FOR RELEASE AUG 28 1958

The world hears about prejudice and violence in the South, but another story has been kept a secret. Here is what McCall's reporter learned after traveling 9,000 miles and talking to hundreds of people who never before had a chance to make their feelings known

I [illegible] conveying a [illegible] progress of the [illegible] Building fund. Then from the back of the room came a single tapping on a fragile-looking, silver-haired woman called the meeting to order. There [illegible] of chairs, a matter of decorum, as attendance was [illegible] the chairman of the women's study group.

"As you know, ladies," the chairman began, "our national headquarters has selected a new book for us, Lillian Pope's The Kingdom Beyond Caste, as our current study project. I don't have to tell you that it's about Christianity and race relations. Because of that, as you heard at our last meeting, Reverend Martin has asked us to study the book together, so he could then address the church on controversy.

"You have asked your executive committee to resolve this problem," she continued after a deep breath, "and we have met twice. Out of deference to Reverend Martin's strong feelings in the matter, we have decided not to study the book." A murmur of voices [illegible]

"I was as anti-Negro as the next Texan before I got acquainted with integration a few years back. But I can truthfully say I'm sold on it now." Texas lieutenant colonel

"I feel sorry for the colored children being so outnumbered. They look so lonely when there are many of them." North Carolina [illegible]

"We know you can't be progressive and hate, and we're determined to find solutions to our problems without resort to violence." Georgia mayor

"Of course," she said, with good [illegible] not to study any book [illegible] discussion talk.

"Meanwhile," she continued, "an informal group of us, who happen to be composed of the same ladies who make up your executive committee, has decided to read and discuss Dr. Pope's book outside the regular study group. Any of you who care to join us are cordially invited to meet with us next Thursday afternoon in the home of Mrs. [illegible]. Within ten minutes all the women in the room had joined the group which planned to read the book together and hold a discussion."

At about the same time, in another city, Dean Sarah [illegible], the editor of a [illegible] women's magazine, [illegible] a woman reporter to cover an unusual meeting. The organization sponsoring the meeting had been latently [illegible] in the magazine's editorial columns, and at the meeting the main speaker was to be a Negro prominent in the fight for [illegible] and segregation. The editor assigned a male photographer to accompany the woman reporter. Photographs would not be permitted, he [illegible] the reporter, [illegible] "We have some problems."

(continued on page [illegible])

Integration presents no problems to second graders at the F. T. Salisbury Elementary School in Louisville, Kentucky

"I wondered what would happen when my daughter brought a little colored classmate home from school. You know, I didn't go along with this integration business. Well, she was the sweetest thing, and they got along beautifully." Nashville, Tennessee, mother grades were desegregated last year, a white mother says, "I wondered what would happen when my daughter brought a little colored classmate home from school. You know, I didn't go along with this integration business. Well, she was the sweetest thing and they got along beautifully. When I drove her home, I met her mother, a fine, well-educated woman. Now my daughter goes over there to play some times." And there is the segregationist leader elected to the school board of a newly desegregated school district on his promise that he would fight to resegregate the schools. After several months of struggling with problems presented mostly by the people who had elected them, he suddenly became defending his desegregationist colleagues on the school board against the accusations of his former supporters.

There are also indications throughout the still-segregated parts of the South that many of those who continue to talk in favor of segregation—particularly women—are at the same time quietly preparing for the inevitable time when desegregation will be a fact. A white woman from the North who has lived nearly forty years in the Deep South tells of one of many such clues. "Everyone here knows how I felt about the race question from the moment I arrived," she said over tea and fruit cake with a visitor recently. "I took a job teaching at a Negro college. Still I was accepted, after a while, by my neighbors and the local women's clubs. For more than thirty years, though, most of the southern women I've known have carefully avoided raising the race question with me. It was obvious that they thought this was necessary to preserve our friendship.

"However, since the Supreme Court decision, and particularly since the President sent Federal troops to Little Rock, these same women have been coming to me, singly and in small groups, to ask carefully why I feel as I do. And you know, she said, leaning forward, you can see in the way they ask that they are looking for the answers which they themselves will use to defend the views they have held so long."

This is the battleground—the minds and hearts of white southerners; it is here, rather than in the angry surge of a "mob" in Little Rock, that the outcome finally will be decided. And it is precisely here that the activity of thousands upon thousands of white southern women, engaged in local churches or in national religious groups, is having its effect. In June, 1954, just a month after the Supreme Court's original decision, representatives of the Christian Social Relations Department of an organization known as United Church Women met in Atlanta, Georgia. These women, representing fifteen southern states, adopted a statement on segregation. "Because of our high calling of God in Jesus Christ," it began, "we reaffirm our belief in human brotherhood and the redemptiveness of Christian fellowship. Therefore, we feel we are impelled to promote a Christian society in which segregation is no longer a burden upon the human spirit. We accept with humility the Supreme Court decision as supporting the broad Christian principles of the dignity and worth of human personality and affording the opportunity of translating into reality Christian and democratic ideals. . . ."

To anyone who knows the history of southern church women this statement is no surprise. It was a similar group in 1930 that played a major role in reducing the number of lynchings in the South to a fraction of what they had previously been. These women, also meeting in Atlanta, Georgia, were only a fraction of them, but they all were influential civic and church leaders. Their object was to learn the facts about lynching in the eight preceding years. Of the 211 persons in this country lynched in the years 1922 to 1929, they learned, all but seven had met death at the hands of southern whites. Fewer than twenty-nine per cent of the 211 were charged with crimes against white women, despite the traditional idea that lynching is mostly a means of protecting white women from Negro men.

The women were shocked and moved to a resolution that traditional excuses for lynching and racism of them because the nucleus around which a newly formed Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching grew to an estimated more than 40,000 members scattered over 1,043 counties of the South. Their methods—to study and expose the facts about lynching, to investigate and condemn publicly each new lynching, regardless of the crime alleged against the victim, to demand vigorous investigation by state and municipal officials, to bring pressure on the courts, to enlist the support of other groups, and to secure the support of civic leaders, women, officials, preachers, teachers and church men and women in each community. When a lynching was threatened, they called on sheriffs, deputies, mayors and other officials to demand action against the incipient mob. The statistics on lynching tell the story of their effectiveness: in eight years from 1930 to 1938, 29 lynchings were recorded, as against the 211 in the eight years before the association's birth.

Like these courageous women twenty-eight years ago, women today are playing a profound, if quiet, influence on the South in general and on ministers and churches in particular.

Until a year or so ago, for example, the Reverend Harrison McAdams, president of the Atlanta Christian Council, the church and the ministers in Atlanta were on the defensive on the question of segregation. The politicians had put us there. Today we are on the offensive, and it is literally true that many individual ministers have taken the offensive and made their first public statements on the subject primarily because of the [illegible] of their own congregations.

With [illegible] performance [illegible] impressive. It is [illegible] markably effective. [illegible] Bishop Randolph R. Talbot, Jr., of the Episcopal Diocese of Atlanta.

My first public performance in this situation, he says, was one I would gladly have avoided. It happened during 1955, when the state Board of Education made a statement of policy about terminating the employment of any teacher who even considered the action of the Supreme Court. I waited a day or so for some statement to be made opposing this preposterous position, but somebody who had been prominent in Atlanta and was better known in our city than I had been resident for only two years. But none appeared and I felt compelled to say something about it.

Bishop Claiborne said, among other things, that if newspaper reports of the proposed action are true, then the state Board of Education seems to be taking its place in line with those adversaries

(Continued on page 122)

Circa '60

New meanings of contemporary in a quietly elegant paraphrase of fabrics that wear beautifully in any mood, with most any dress. The pattern shown, with a glowing mineral or neutral shell finish.

Lord & Taylor, exclusively yours in the large cities. For collection of distinctive dresses by many famous sources, write Dept. 3, Henredon, Box 1, Morganton, North Carolina.

Henredon

QUALITY AT A PRACTICAL PRICE

(Continued from page 121)

organizations that seek to change our government by force." Within weeks the board had rescinded its action.

In South Carolina, five Protestant ministers persuaded twelve citizens of twelve different communities to contribute chapters to a paperbound book called South Carolinians Speak: A Moderate Approach to Race Relations. Ideas from the twelve citizens ranged from a Columbia lawyer's proposal to desegregate beaches and schools to the suggestion of the wife of a Greenwood physician that gradual school desegregation begin with the first grade.

With 15,000 copies of the book in print, the Reverend John B. Cobb, one of the ministers, reports that letters are running ten to one in favor of the book, with newspaper editorials in the state favorable by more than two to one. In November 1957, however, less than a month after the book's release, the home of Mrs. Claudia Thomas Sanders, the Gaffney doctor's wife, was blasted by a dynamite bomb—the only known retaliation against any of the authors. Condemnation of the act was swift and all but universal, and five Gaffney members of the Ku Klux Klan were soon arrested and charged with the bombing.

Not all the ministers who have supported the segregationists, however stoutly, have been able to remain at their posts. One church official reports knowing of at least a dozen who have been removed from their pastorates. The Reverend John S. Estes, one of the five ministers who sponsored South Carolinians Speak, was eased out of his Presbyterian church in Marion because of his connection with the book. Like virtually all the other "displaced parsons," he has found another church in the South.

The list of southern white ministers who have publicly identified themselves with the segregationists or have protested segregationist activities without losing their pulpits is far longer than that of the displaced ones. It includes the Reverend Robert S. Crosby, Jr., of Trinity Lutheran Church, Montgomery, Alabama, the white pastor of an all-Negro congregation whose home has twice been bombed because of his participation in the Montgomery Improvement Association, the group which directed the successful boycott of Montgomery's buses. And it includes the Reverend William H. Abbot of the Oakdale Presbyterian Church in Norfolk, Virginia, who preaches that "Christ's Church is color-blind" and who is still at his post despite a recent storm following the public endorsement of a Negro candidate for Virginia's House of Delegates.

"I learned that some members were circulating a petition asking for my dismissal," Abbot recalls. "But at least two-thirds of the membership refused to sign it. There were some resignations of elders and deacons, some of which were accepted. Attendance and offerings have not changed, and not more than a dozen members have left the church. Some have lost not a penny of their support."

For himself, Abbot admits that every move he has made toward what he calls "the basic Christian doctrine as it applies to race relations" has been made with fear and trembling. "I grew up like most southerners," he said, "and I've arrived at my present convictions slowly. It isn't easy sometimes to live by your principles, though it gets easier with practice. In the long run, it's a lot harder to live with a guilty conscience than to face the opposition."

Just as Protestant ministers in the South have assumed leadership roles in the struggle against segregation, so have Roman Catholic priests. In some parishes, Catholic colleges, and some seminaries as well as parochial schools, they have moved steadily toward integration.

In Louisiana, where three Catholic colleges accept Negro students and where the only Negro Catholic college in the country takes white students, the Most Reverend Joseph F. Rummel, Archbishop of New Orleans, took the first step toward parochial-school desegregation with a pastoral letter on "The Morality of Racial Segregation" in February 1956. This letter, strongly emphasizing the fact that racial segregation is morally wrong, was followed in October with the announcement that New Orleans Catholic schools would be desegregated beginning with the first grade. The formation of the Association for a Catholic Laymen's Council by Emile A. Wagner, then an organizer of New Orleans' White Citizens' Council.

The association, composed of Roman Catholic men and women "of the Caucasian race" and with avowed purpose "to seek out, make known and denounce Communist infiltration of any sort to be in the integration movement," came under immediate attack by the archbishop as "unnecessary, ill-advised and capable of causing much scandal, confusion and dissension among our Catholic people." After a month's exchange of letters and meetings between association officials and the archbishop and other archdiocesan authorities, Archbishop Rummel decreed that the organization "should be entirely discontinued under pain of possible excommunication." Wagner promptly informed the archbishop of his intention to prosecute an appeal to the Holy See.

It was not until August 8, 1957, however, that Wagner acted on this intention. On that date he made public a letter asking Pope Pius XII to stop racial integration in the church, in request Archbishop Rummel "to take no further steps" toward integration of white and Negro Catholics, and to decree that segregation was not morally wrong and sinful.

Two days later The New York Times quoted a high Vatican source as saying that the Catholic laymen had committed a gross error. "They personally think it reprehensible," the source said, but the Holy See could declare itself against integration. The source added, however, it was pointed out, because the Church is concerned with souls and all souls are equally precious to her. "If for instance, in Africa [illegible] the Church [illegible] his approval to all forms of discrimination—in New Orleans as much as in the Union of South Africa."

Since this statement from the Vatican, active antagonism to the proposed desegregation of parochial schools in New Orleans has largely subsided.

Protestant ministers and white church women are unquestionably leading in the struggle for southern desegregation, but they are far from alone. In many more places than most southern readers realize, southern newspapers also are raising their voices for racial justice. In Georgia, there is Sylvan Meyer, the young Texas-born editor of the Times. I recently asked Mr. Meyer, who is an avowed editor who sets a set of standards for guidance on this issue, "You must be able to reduce your position in every case to some fundamental beliefs on which most people will agree."

Under his own set of standards Meyer has opposed all the race segregation legislation proposed in Georgia. When Dr. Guy Wells, President Emeritus of Georgia State College for Women, was dismissed by his little girl successor with loss of his pension by Georgia's Board of Regents after he stated that white and Negro leaders, in closed meetings and common mutual problems, were a reading editorial [illegible] the press as a travesty on American freedom, Small and [illegible] wrote a self-seeking [illegible] him both honor and livelihood [illegible] he has spoken his mind as a [illegible] an Adult citizen. In this [illegible] our frenzy over the colored man [illegible] to destroy everything we hold dear [illegible] concern with nothing of value [illegible]

[illegible] other newspapers [illegible] other editors have taken a similar stand. In Greenville, Mississippi, where [illegible] conducted a running battle with the White Citizens Council, which [illegible] "uptown Klan," the [illegible] has been to preserve segregation at the college and university level, to describe the Supreme Court's decision as helpful to the country's relations with the colored people throughout the world, and in keeping with the democratic and Christian ethic.

In February 1957, Buford Boone, publisher of The Tuscaloosa News, in discussing a proposal to close the school of music of the University of Alabama rather than permit integration, underscored the fact that the Supreme Court decision was not "socially or morally right." Nothing in it is inconsistent with the conception of democracy, even though a background of southern living, southern customs and southern tradition tells me it will be strange to see colored students at the University of Alabama. But I believe we should prepare ourselves to accept this development, since it has been ordered as rightful and just by the courts.

Like Harry Ashmore, executive editor of Little Rock's [illegible] Boone has his editorial writing on desegregation.

Newspapers of anti-segregationist persuasion of the South can be complete, however, without a look at two small journals which have never received any national awards or recognition but which in their own odd ways have had a surprising impact. One, the Carolina Leftwing, is published in Chapel Hill, North Carolina, by Harry Golden, a short, stout, gray-haired man who strolls, sleeps, and talks with an unhurried New York accent. The Carolina Leftwing, a monthly, has a circulation since its 15,000, which includes Harry Truman, William Randolph Hearst, Jr., Carl Sandburg, Thomas E. Dewey, Adlai Stevenson, Chief Justice Earl Warren and [illegible]. Golden puts it "just about everybody of any importance." Jammed with small advertisements from the Carolinas, the paper is devoted exclusively to what its editor happens to think. Segregation, Golden happens to think, is immoral and he says so regularly, though often in a very unusual way.

Born in New York, a graduate of City College, Golden worked for two New York newspapers before taking a promotion job with The Charlotte News in the late thirties. He began his own newspaper some three years ago, feeling, as he still does, that the South contained "the most exciting story of our generation." When North Carolina's Pearsall Plan which embodied bills to abolish public schools and aid students to attend segregated private schools was before the state legislature, two individuals spoke against it in the hearings. Harry Golden was one of them, and it was here that he outlined what he called the "Golden Vertical Negro Plan."

It's handy to make a food angel cake

Aluminum pan for food angel cake has slide-on cover for transporting, carrying and storage. Legs facilitate cooling; cover doubles as a serving plate. This oblong shape is easy to cut, too and serve with toppings. By West Bend, about $4

INTER-OFFICE

TO Harold Fleming

FROM Oscar Cohen

REMARKS:

Sorry; I forgot this page of the McCall article.

mom prepared lunch...

WHAT FOOD!

In an Aladdin school lunch kit...

WHAT FUN!

(Continued from page 123)

and total anarchy." As for myself, "I have no scruples when I do anything to help add to the dignity of man. What does the expense in money," he says, adding thoughtfully, "—if I have the money."

Humor, an effective weapon with many people, is not successful unfortunately, with fanatics. For these are the people whose attitudes spring from conflicts so deep that they themselves are unaware of them. What the average southerner measures facility, the fanatic defends with a violence that often seems close to insanity. Many attempts have been made to understand the origins of violent racial feelings. One of the most eloquent explanations came from a southerner herself. In her book, Killers of the Dream, Lillian Smith leans heavily on the theory that sexual exploitation of the Negro woman by the white man explains much of the southern white man's fear of the Negro.

What is strange only from the white race made for itself! Because these slaveholders were Christian, they felt compelled to justify the holding of slaves by humans. These slaves, a real and dangerous threat to the big man family. Because they were good, they succeeded in [illegible] a reality in their white women that prevented the possibility of mutual understanding. Lonely and lacking [illegible] by the sight of strange men [illegible] and [illegible] could not resist the vigor and [illegible] and beauty of these slaves. And something happened when they met with these [illegible] women. [illegible] Antebellum [illegible] were without [illegible]

[illegible] Smith [illegible] "The man-woman relationship, [illegible] environment, created feelings of guilt. And to that was added the guilt of being [illegible] of having that the white man was [illegible] the Negro woman. And so [illegible] from slaves [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and

Telling about it has, unfortunately, not included the dramatization of Project Clear. Here, however, are some of the contents of that significant study. The conclusions reached by the social scientists who conducted Project Clear were based on thousands of interviews and questionnaires, covering a field of inquiry ranging from combat units in Korea to training units in all sections of the United States. Officers and enlisted men, white and Negro, from both segregated and integrated units, were questioned. In summary, the conclusions were that a large majority of both officers and enlisted men with experience in integrated units considered them just about equal to all-white units. Eleven to fifteen per cent of the officers and non-rated enlisted men superior in morale to white units.

The researchers found that soldiers in all-white units, however, strongly opposed to desegregation, indicated they would show no hostility toward Negro replacements. The attitude of these whites became more favorable toward serving with Negroes as a result of the actual experience. Further, integration of military units led to satisfactory off-duty relationships; many soldiers were found to spend time with soldiers of the other race.

In the United States, seventy-three per cent of 1,158 northern whites and sixty-six per cent of 378 southern whites in integrated units reported new friends among the Negro soldiers in their units. In Korea, a sizable majority of white soldiers favored sharing post exchanges with Negro troops and a smaller majority favored sharing rest areas. Of 1,730 white trainees in the United States in integrated units, nine-ty per cent reported spending off-duty time with Negro trainees off as well as on the post. Fifty-nine per cent of the [illegible]

Completely new...
in style and usefulness

[illegible] of southern officers [illegible] with a more [illegible] view of the breakdown of prejudices. A second lieutenant from North Carolina remarking that he wouldn't care to go to social functions with Negroes added that this did not apply to one [illegible] soldier. "I did dance with a Negro sergeant. Maybe if I got to know more Negroes I'd like them more," he said. A sergeant from Virginia said he was one of many who hadn't liked it when Negroes were integrated into his unit. "In about two weeks it was fine," he said. "See the fellow at that table?" he asked, pointing to a Negro. "I think as much of him as of any man in the outfit. . . . I slept with a Negro beside me in boot camp, resented it at first, but it's all in your mind. Some whites are worse than any colored."

A captain reported: "I had all the reason in the world to be against the program, and my being from Texas didn't help me. But now I'm listening to a man who had a complete change of mind." A first-lieutenant colonel said: "I'm a Texan and I suppose I was as anti-Negro as the next Texan before I got acquainted with integration a few years back. But I can truthfully say I'm sold on it now."

When a Negro and a white trainee were questioned together at one southern Army post, they were asked what happened when they went to town together. The white soldier answered, "We ride together in the bus until the gate. Then he moves back." The Negro added: "When we get to town, we're buddies again." Asked what happened on town, the white replied: "We do all the things together that they let us. We don't eat together or go to the USO, but we buy things, window shop, maybe get a bottle and drink in the park—you know." The Negro added: "They don't care if you walk together."

The white soldier, being from Georgia, was asked to explain the friendship. "I don't go for that Jim Crow stuff," he said. "Course I don't think they should marry one another, but that's all."

Summarizing part of their findings, the researchers reported a "consistent pattern" in their interviews with senior officers in integrated units in the United States. Those who believed integration would work reaffirmed their judgment on the basis of experience. Those who did not believe in the feasibility of integration before the introduction, now report a change of judgment on the basis of their experience. These judgments, they added, were as common among southern as northern officers.

Obviously, the southern attitude toward race relations [illegible] even if they were [illegible] out the brave [illegible] press, the educated [illegible] younger generation, there [illegible] fact which cannot [illegible] painful cost of maintaining segregation [illegible]

Already many southern business [illegible] are painfully aware of the economic importance of the Negro as a consumer. In Rock Hill, South Carolina, for example, last December the Star Furniture Company [illegible] month [illegible] segregated seating. In Fayetteville, [illegible] beginning in [illegible] protest has resulted in [illegible] reputation of the service and [illegible] quently heavy loss of income [illegible]

(Continued on page [illegible])

Wherever you are—take Minty Phillips' Tablets—

FEEL FINE AGAIN FAST!

No matter where you happen to be, when indigestion, heartburn, gas, or other symptoms of acid stomach distress can come along and make you feel miserable. When this happens, just chew a few Phillips' Tablets—like candy mints! There's no glass, no water to bother with. You'll get off-the-spot relief by using Phillips' Tablets anytime or any place you need them. They taste good, too—leave your mouth feeling clean and refreshed. So always carry Phillips' Tablets with you wherever you go.

PHILLIPS' TABLETS

Special Report of the Associate Secretary for Intergroup Relations to the National Council Annual Meeting February 21-23, 1961, Seabury House, Greenwich, Connecticut

---

Scarcely a year ago, the first sit-ins by southern young people began in Greensboro, N.C. Almost immediately many such occurrences swept through the South. Expected by many Southerners to disappear like the collegiate "panty raids" with the coming of examinations, summer vacations, and especially after a few jail sentences, just the opposite took place. During the school year 1960-61 they have increased in incredible proportions, not only sit-ins but kneel-ins, jail-ins, walk-ins, wade-ins, and almost every other conceivable form of non-violent demonstration has become almost pandemic in the South.

At the same time school desegration has entered a third phase. First there was rapid desegregation in the border states while the Deep South watched and said, "never." Second, there was the phase of massive resistance and the proliferation of many state laws aimed at evading and avoiding desegregation. There were Little Rock and Prince Edward County. There were private white schools held in churches and other available places, while the public schools were closed and Negroes stayed home.

The third phase of school desegregation sees the unconstitutionality of most of the hastily passed legislation already established.

Applications to enter white schools have been made in dozens of places, and in a great many, at least, token desegregation has already taken place. Large cities of the Deep South, like Houston, New Orleans, and Atlanta, are in the initial stages of school desegregation.

A fourth front in the civil rights struggle only occasionally erupts in overt incidents. But the Tent City in Southern Tennessee is one dramatic evidence that the Negro is moving determinedly toward the polls.

Perhaps the oldest of all the attacks on segregation, applications for admission to white colleges by Negroes has been going on quietly and successfully. The University of Texas has a comparatively large number of Negro students; the University of Virginia, Va. Polytechnic Institute, North Carolina State, Memphis State, and probably a good many others have a few Negro students. Now at this semester's beginning the University of Georgia, citadel of segregated white education, fell before the successful efforts of the two young Negroes. With it massive resistance died in Georgia. Word is out that five applicants are seeking admission to Georgia Tech, two to Clemson College, several to Winthrop. The Wake Forest faculty has made it public that it favors the admission of Negroes to that Baptist institution.

Desegr. 1961 c1125

Developments in Atlanta, Georgia, make it almost certain that the next big showdown will take place there. Sit-ins, jail-ins, kneel-ins, a nearly 100 per cent effective Negro boycott of Rich's department store, the successful school desegregation of the nearby University of Georgia, and the largely successful attempts of the city government to free itself from the domination of the rural counties, have all played significant parts in setting the stage for a really important and probably decisive step in the fall. As of late fall of last year, human relations observers in Atlanta felt that a better prepared citizenry, and a better organized, more decisive city government, would forestall much of the tragedy that was apparent in New Orleans. But it was not hard to find Atlantans who were of the opinion that what was coming in Atlanta would make New Orleans a tea-party by comparison. The most recent word from Harold Fleming, director of the Southern Regional Council, whose office is in Atlanta, appeared in the Sunday New York Times. He said, "As school desegregation nears in Atlanta, the forces of organized bigotry in the South are clearly concentrating their efforts here. The Apostles of anti-Negro, anti-Semitism, and anti-Catholic prejudice are gathering for what they evidently see as a major test of their extremist doctrine."

As expressions of civil rights protest and demand become too numerous to be fully covered by the newspapers, they confront almost every southern community and challenge every individual. Instead of producing peace and quiet, accelerated desegregation inevitably produces new crises and new conflict.

In Lynchburg, Virginia, six students are serving jail sentences for violation of local trespass laws in a sit-in. Among them are the son of the Christian Social Relations head of the Disciples of Christ Church, and a young Randolph Macon student who is a national officer of the Methodist Student Association. At that trial, one of our own priests was forcibly ejected from the courthouse. The priest, a white man who serves a largely Negro congregation, had asked to be seated with his own parishioners. These occurrences have received national notice. Hundreds of letters are being received by these people. They have heard from as far away as Australia.

In Rock Hill, S.C. those arrested and jailed for sit-in demonstrations have been put in solitary confinement on bread and water, because they have protested that they had been singled out for especially heavy duty on the chain gang.

In a few months time the climate of the South has undergone a most significant change. Where once a taut silence surrounded the race issue on nearly every local level, it is now discussed everywhere. Especially among college students it is the main topic of conversation. And according to a very recent Gallup poll, 76 per cent of Southerners now feel that desegregation is inevitable. Barriers to desegregation are coming down everywhere one looks.

But in few cases does this seem to be accomplished without at least some crisis and conflict. It would not seem too extravagant to say that the whole South is aflame with both portent and action.

The Church faces a dilemma. At least as far as on the scene witness is concerned, only a few clergy and college students appear personally involved at the scenes of conflict. Only Lloyd Foreman, a Methodist parson, was found among those in New Orleans, who took his place on the firing line, seeking to do what he might in the interest of truth and justice.

On the other hand, the tide has rolled on and made almost irrelevant, efforts at education, discussion groups, reflective considerations, and all the usual paraphernalia of peaceful and prudential preparation. The time once available for such strategy has apparently been squandered in silence when to face issues, even verbally, was daring and unpopular. Now the cutting edge of the civil rights movement has moved way out in the direction of overt witness and decisive action - an area into which little of the Church appears ready or able to go.

Nevertheless, as this trend moves toward a vast regional climax, more and more of the Church's members, lay and clerical, can be expected to be drawn into its vortex. Some will emerge as heroes and others will become casualties of one kind or another.

Numbers of clergy have found themselves relieved of their charges. A good many have been and are in serious tension situations. There have been cases of financial hardship, mental suffering, and even breakdowns. There is no question that this number is going to increase sharply.

Among the college sit-in demonstrations Canterburians have already been jailed. There is little likelihood that the number of such casualties is going to decrease, and it would seem that the Church would want to offer support and assistance.

The Department of Christian Social Relations expects me to do my best to keep abreast of these developments and to do whatever present resources might permit. Informed in this manner, and from other sources, the Department expects to keep you informed. Specific measures such as emergency assistance for the various growing casualties, and other concentrated action are urgently needed.

Cornelius C. Tarplee

Associate Secretary
Division of Christian Citizenship

Desseg.

Circulate —

SOUTHWEST REGIONAL COUNCIL

THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE

523 Fidelity Bldg. • Dallas 2, Texas • RIverside 7-2830

July 5, 1961

LWD
CHP
JM
MB

Anyone else in research who should see this—

ML

Return to MM

Mr. Paul M. Rilling
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Mr. Rilling:

Gus Falk is out of the city on vacation and I am therefore replying to your letter of July 3 in his stead. He will be back in the office on August 7th and will be available at that time to discuss with you the prospects for orderly desegregation in Dallas and elsewhere.

In the meantime, the attached excerpts from his Quarterly Report will give you some confidential information on current developments. I have also included a copy of an article on desegregation of eating facilities which appeared in the Dallas Star Post, an important Negro newspaper.

If I can be of further help, please let me know.

Cordially,

Pillie Stern

Mrs. Edward C. Stern
Administrative Assistant

OFFICERS

JACK GOREN, Dallas
President

SYLVAN LANG, San Antonio
Chairman of Board

IRVING L. GOLDBERG, Dallas
MAX NATHAN, Houston
Honorary Chairmen

REUBEN W. ASKANASE, Houston
NORMAN HIRSCHFIELD, Oklahoma City
RALPH RUBIN, Memphis
HENRY E. SPITZBERG, Little Rock
Vice-Chairmen

MRS. FRANK H. FREED, Houston
Secretary

IRVING A. MATHEWS, San Antonio
Treasurer

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE
(Includes the officers and following members)

SOL BRACHMAN, Fort Worth
CARROLL D. JACOB, Houston
DR. JEROME S. LEVY, Little Rock
DAVID NATHAN, Galveston
HENRY MACK, Fort Worth

RAYMOND D. NASHER, Dallas
DR. WILLIAM N. RODDY, Waco
JAY SILVERBERG, Corsicana

GUSTAVE F. FALK
Southwest Regional Director

MRS. EDWARD C. STERN
Administrative Assistant

NATIONAL OFFICERS

HERBERT B. EHRMANN, President
FREDERICK F. GREENMAN, Chm., Executive Board
PEARSON E. NEAMAN, Chm., Administrative Board
WILLIAM ROSENWALD, Chm., Nat'l. Advisory Council
MAURICE GLINERT, Treasurer
ARTHUR D. LEIDESDORF, Associate Treasurer
JULIUS S. LOEWENTHAL, Secretary
JOHN SLAWSON, Executive Vice-President

JACOB BLAUSTEIN, Honorary President
IRVING M. ENGEL, Honorary President
JOSEPH M. PROSKAUER, Honorary President
HERBERT H. LEHMAN, Honorary Vice-President
SAMUEL D. LEIDESDORF, Honorary Vice-President
RALPH E. SAMUEL, Honorary Vice-President
HORACE STERN, Honorary Vice-President
FRED LAZARUS, JR., Hon. Chm., Nat'l. Advis. Council

MARTIN L. BUTZEL, Detroit, Vice-President
LOUIS CAPLAN, Pittsburgh, Vice-President
JULIUS H. COHN, Newark, Vice-President
WILLIAM P. ENGEL, Birmingham, Vice-President
MARTIN GANG, Los Angeles, Vice-President
JACK A. GOLDFARB, New York, Vice-President
ANDREW GOODMAN, New York, Vice-President
J. M. KAPLAN, New York, Vice-President
JAMES MARSHALL, New York, Vice-President
IRVING SALOMON, San Diego, Vice-President
A. M. SONNABEND, Boston, Vice-President

COMMUNITY AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT

PICHARD MAASS, Chairman A. HAROLD MURRAY, Director DR. S. ANDHIL FINEBERG, Community Relations Consultant

NATIONAL OFFICE

Institute of Human Relations • 165 East 56 Street, New York 22, N. Y.

a. Desegregation Developments

The absence of overt conflict during the period of this quarterly report lends credence to the hope that the Southwest is gradually though grudgingly accepting desegregation de facto though, in no way, has the issue been completely resolved. One incident or situation may spark the latent forces into aggressive demonstrations, reminiscent of Little Rock & New Orleans.

The degree of acceptance or depth of the trace will again be tested when Dallas and Galveston begin the desegregation process in September. Houston has experienced a peaceful year, and Little Rock is now facing up to an accelerated pace. Developments in Dallas, Houston and Little Rock will be covered more fully in their respective sections of this quarterly report.

The following is a "pro's and con's scoreboard" on desegregation and its related activities (sit-in's, stand-in's and step-in's) elsewhere in the region, for the past four months, with more results on the positive rather than on the negative side.

1. School Desegregation: Looking to Judson, both in Texas, voted to abolish segregation in September, while the Northeast Houston Independent School District voted to retain its dual system...The Galveston-Houston and Fort Worth Dioceses will desegregate their parochial schools this fall...Baptist and Presbyterian denominational conference meetings favored racial equality and pledged support of the desegregation policy...further integration of non-academic activities proceeded at the University of Texas which has desegregated on the graduate and non-graduate levels...the acceptance of Negroes for intercollegiate activities were advocated by the UT Student Assembly and challenged at the University of Houston when Negro athletes from northern colleges withdrew from "The Meet of Champions" because of segregation practices in Houston...a scheduled federal district court hearing on desegregation of Fort Worth Public Schools was postponed indefinitely because of the illness of the superintendent who suffered a heart attack...these are some of the highlights exclusive of the specific Chapters elaborated upon in subsequent sections of this report.

2. Sit-in's & Stand-in's - the general faculty of the University of Texas adopted a resolution calling for desegregation of all campus facilities and activities with all deliberate speed. There are two biracial men's dormitories, but none for women...Houston, Oklahoma City, Austin, etc., experienced sporadic picketing. These are treated in their respective sections...The Texas House of Representatives approved a bill aimed at penalizing sit-in and stand-in demonstrations, but the measure failed to receive final action before the legislature adjourned on May 29, 1961....75 government students from St. Mary's University in San Antonio were asked to leave a well known restaurant in Austin upon the complaint of lunching legislators... sporadic stand-in demonstrations were staged in Austin.

CONFIDENTIAL

3. Boycott...Negroes continued their boycott of stores maintaining segregated facilities in Memphis, Dallas and Oklahoma...from authentic sources, the boycott was the determining factor in integrating the stores in Houston... Dallas accelarated its boycott movement. Refer to the Dallas section of this report for details.

4. Political Step-In's - the poll tax campaign continued in the Negro community with effective results. Refer to SW Tri-Monthly Report, December 1, 1960 to March 1, 1961, for details... The victory of John Tower over William A. Blakley to the senate seat vacated by Vice president Lyndon Johnson was due in no small measure to Negro support. Blakley's defeat was attributed by the Negro politicoes to his attack on the appointment of Dr. Robert C. Weaver as federal housing administrator...the Fort Worth City Counsil broke traditional color barriers in municipal affairs by appointing the first Negro to the Park and Library Boards...Galveston voters elected a Negro as councilman by a margin of three votes.

The regional director and AJC Chapter and Southwest Counsil Board members continued their consultative role with the Negro and white leaders, as reported in previous reports, making available AJC resources and services in handling and resolving conflictive situations and problems. ~~Refer to the Dallas, Houston and Little Rock sections of this report for elaboration and specific references to this type of activity.~~

g. AJC Annual Meeting

Chapter leaders from Houston, Little Rock and Dallas participated actively in the proceedings of the AJC National Annual Meetings in New York on April 27-30, 1961. Considerable effort without substantial success was made to stimulate attendance and to involve Chapter members in submitting their views on the items on the agenda prior to the meeting. Specific participation will be covered in the respective communities listed above.

B. DALLAS CHAPTER

1. The Community

a. Desegregation Developments

1. School Desegregation

The validity of an extensive community preparatory program for desegregation will be tested once more when the Dallas Public School system initiates the Stair-step plan of integration in September. The decision of the Board to comply with the court order without further legal recourse terminated a 5-1/2 year legal battle to maintain or, at least, retain some control over those schools desegregated. Since the U. S. Supreme Court handed down its renowned Brown case that ruled school segregation unconstitutional, the Dallas School Board employed every legal means to circumvent the ruling, but when the court denied an appeal motion on January 6, 1961 and the School Board failed to seek a writ certiorari from the Supreme Court within its 90 day limitation, the die was cast and desegregation, its beginning at least was assured, making Dallas the last largest city in the Southwest and one of the largest segregated communities to make the change. (Refer to the Southwest Tri-Monthly Report, December 1, 1960 to March 1, 1961 for background information on the Stair-step Plan, etc.).

To the credit of the Dallas leadership, attention has now turned to assuring a peaceful transition period. The school administration, the law enforcement agencies, the press, radio, television and civic groups are now engaged in preparing a climate of opinion and acceptance which will avoid violence and demonstrations characteristic of the Little Rock and New Orleans episodes. At the influential Citizens Council meeting on June 9, the editors of the two leading newspapers spoke of the approach and attitude essential for all groups to meet the issue - calm toward and respect for white and Negro leadership in maintaining order, and a refusal to be victimized by extremist thinking and action. Mixed teacher meetings have taken place, ministerial and civic groups are discussing the problem - - all adding to the civic chant that Dallas will not have nor will tolerate disorder.

While the Dallas Chapter is taking no official or identifiable part in this issue, its involvement is unmistakably present and felt in the role of its workers and the regional director throughout the community effort.

The Chapter held several meetings on desegregation for the past several years and discussed the subject long before the current campaign. The regional director worked individually with the Negro leadership and together with Chapter officials served as a catalyst between the white and Negro community which helped to prevent precipitous action by the Negro community. The Chapter also cooperated in an effective advisory role with the Community Relations Committee of the Dallas Jewish Welfare Federation, developing a constructive discussion and action program for the Jewish community, the last one of which took place on June 22. ~~(Refer to my memorandum to Harry Fleischman, June 15, 1961. Subject: Desegregation Developments-Dallas).~~

2. Negro Community Developments

The Negro community continued to exercise patience and a spirit of cooperation, due perhaps to the fact that the Committee of 14 is still functioning and several breakthroughs in the discrimination practices are taking place. The regional director served a useful purpose in continuing his role as unofficial liaison between the Negro and white leadership. Another example of the effectiveness of this role was the offsetting of a recent attempt by a militant element in the Negro community to repudiate the moderate leadership and to organize sit-in demonstrations in the five largest downtown department stores which have refused to integrate their lunch counter facilities until school desegregation takes place in September. As reported in the previous resume, the moderates won and prevented this occurrence. The Interested Women of Dallas, a group of white and Negro women, initiated a boycott crusade against the downtown stores in the effort to open lunch counter facilities, restrooms, etc. A small committee of this group conferred with Sam Bloom, the representative of these establishments, and began a newspaper attack upon Mr. Bloom, denouncing him as the "paid coordinator." While the right of this group was never questioned, the tactics employed had many dangerous implications for the progress being made. The regional director was able to harmonize the situation and succeeded in establishing lines of communication between the white leadership and the militant element of the Negro group which also developed a closer working relationship within the Negro community, avoiding for the present an internecine struggle.

On June 9, a testimonial dinner was given to Henry Lemoir, Executive Secretary of the Negro Dallas Moorland YMCA Branch, who resigned to accept a similar position in St. Louis. 350 persons attended the affair, one third of whom were composed of white community leaders. The regional director served on the Planning and Arrangement Committee.

3. Texas State Fair Park

The Texas State Fair Park, located in Dallas, opened on a desegregated policy. The annual October Texas State Fair is held in the park and attracts about two million visitors from the southwest. The desegregation of this Fair should have a profound effect upon visitors participating from the small, rural communities which generally support desegregation.

4. Dallas Opera Association

The Metropolitan Opera advised the Dallas Grand Opera Association of its policy not to perform to segregated audiences. Replied the Dallas group: "Our performances have always been open to all races." Leaders of the local association are active in the AFO Chapter.

5. Southern Regional Council

Dr. James McBride Dabbs, President of the Southern Regional Council addressed a meeting of the Dallas Citizens Committee, a Negro organization coordinating Council, on March 8 on Desegregation in the South. The meeting was arranged by the regional director who briefed Mr. Dabbs on local conditions during his visit to Dallas.

6. Housing Discrimination

The Supreme Court of Texas refused to reverse a decision permitting the sale of a house in a previously all-white area to Negroes in the Cedar Crest Country Club Estates.

The area director has been in consultation with ministers in this interracially changing neighborhood.

b. Local Elections & Implications

Two elections took place during this quarter:

1. School Board Elections

Dallas voters turned out in unprecedented numbers for a school election on April 1, to defeat Dr. Dudley W. Powell, a Negro obstretician, in his bid for a place on the school board. Dr. Powell, however, polled 9,916 votes, the largest number ever received by a Negro in Dallas County, but lost overwhelmingly to the 21,095 votes cast for his opponent, Robert B. Gilmore, an engineer. Dr. Powell reflected his disappointment in an unwise election-night statement, charging that some of the winners were "bigots and hypocritos who carried on a campaign of hate." John Flathe Green, attorney, and Mrs. Vernon D. Ingram, housewife, also backed by the Committee for Good Schools, were the other two winners.

Dr. Powell was a poor choice by the Negro group and his defeat in no way could be attributed to specific racial factors. Jamaica born and educated at Syracuse University, Dr. Powell was qualified and a respected citizen. He was naturalized about five years ago and came to Dallas several years later. At a campaign planning committee meeting, the regional director aware of the political atmosphere in the community tried unsuccessfully to point out that the factors of Dr. Powell's being foreign born and educated in the north would be injected to his disadvantage in the campaign, with the hope that some strategy could be evolved to counteract these contentious forces. The campaign director turned a deaf ear to these possibilities and was unprepared to neutralize those unfair though politically potent charges made by the opposition. The regional director is now engaged in exploring strategies with other interested persons in laying plans for the next election - selection of an acceptable Negro candidate, assuring support and campaign strategies with the hope that it will result in the election of a Negro to the Dallas School Board.

2. Mayoralty Race

The Mayor's election (April 4) with its second primary runoff in May, elected Mayor, Earle Cabell, - the first time in 30 years that an independent candidate was this office. He defeated Jack Geary, the Citizens' Charter candidate. The only Negro candidate (Rev. C. B. Nelson), for Place 3 on the Council lost for much the same reasons as those of the school board Negro candidate - not particularly qualified and lack of campaign planning. The Negro leadership supported Geary with the exception of Rev. R. H. James, a leader in the militant Negro group, who endorsed Cabell. Both parties announced the need of a Municipal Committee on "race relations with the primary objective of finding ways and means of achieving racial peace with justice." The election outcome presages the demographical change in the city and the emergence of a new leadership type and alignment. The regional director has developed a friendly rapport with Rev. James which has already proved effective in solidifying the Negro moderate and aggressive leadership - designed to strengthen lines of communication between the two races. ~~Refer to the Southwest Tri-Monthly Report, December 1, 1960 to March 1, 1961, pages 10-11 for background continuity. Also refer to memorandum on Developments in Negro Community, April 17, 1961, and to Mary Fleischman, June 15, 1961: Desegregation Developments - Dallas.~~ [illegible] through membership recruitment, educational programs, community involvement and appointment of functional committees and specific and general projects.

C. HOUSTON CHAPTER

1. The Community

a. School Desegregation

In a series of five feature articles entitled Lessons - "Integration In Houston Peaceful" in the Dallas Times Herald, its staff writer, Al Hester examined the outcome of Houston in its first season of school desegregation which was without violence and demonstrations, with the hope that Dallas would profit from its sister city's experience since Houston and Dallas integration situations are similar. "Both districts exhausted all legal means in exploring desegregation. Both are using the stair-step, grade-a-year integration plan, beginning in the first grade; and both school systems have educators who determined that integration will not interfere with the education of children - the duty of the schools." The writer then proceeded to report an interview with Negro and white parents whose children were attending the mixed schools, reported opinions of school administrators and board members and described the methods used to prevent violence and ways which made the transition without incident or law breakdown. Conclusions: limited and token integration with gradual acceleration of process; alert and positive police vigilance; sympathetic and calm press treatment; patience and forbearance practices by both races, and cooperation between teachers, children and parents involved. Refer to previous Area Reports for background information and continuity.

On June 2nd, the Houston Council on Human Relations invited the Negro mothers of twelve Negro pupils attending desegregated schools to report on their children's experiences in the first grade. Six attended and recounted favorable experiences. They expressed the hope that this excellent outcome would encourage school authorities to expand desegregation next year to speed up the process. The mothers were accepted in the PTA groups, participated actively in the program and several elected to the respective Boards. Teachers and school authorities and white parents "were more than helpful."

In a conference with the chairman and secretary of the Houston Council on Human Relations on general programming and cooperation with the Houston AJC Chapter, the regional director suggested that the Council should undertake the task of publicizing these facts to the community through the press, radio, television and meetings. Several AJC Chapter members are actively involved in the Council and hold official positions.

b. Renewed Contract of Superintendent

Superintendent of Schools, John McFarland, was given another three year contract and a $2500.00 raise, though McFarland refused to accept the wage boost until classroom teachers were also given one. With the new contract came a Board resolution of commendation to McFarland opposed by Bob Eckels and also by Mrs. Charles E. White, who is a lone liberal on the seven-member board and the only Negro, on the grounds that the superintendent failed to provide courageous and imaginative leadership and accused him of supporting the ultra conservative groups which had substituted indoctrination for education.

c. Non-Communism Oath

The school board adopted a procedure which would require the signing of a non-communist oath by anybody or any organization applying to rent Houston public school building facilities for a meeting or course. In addition to these requirements, any speaker who addresses the school or public meeting must swear that he is not a subversive. It was the same oath that Texas law requires all Texas public school teachers to sign. The Board members also take the same oath. This new policy was the outgrowth of a disputed action of the Board which denied use of a school to the Houston Chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union. Al Abrams, president of the Houston Association for Better Schools, and Mrs. White, opposed the new policy. There is a possibility that the ACLU will test the School Board's denial in court. Community opinion was equally divided on the Board's action.

d. Sit-In Demonstrations

Sit-in and other demonstrations were kept during these four months to a minimum. Thirty-two Negroes staged a sit-in demonstration at the Union Railroad Station restaurant on June 3. The police arrested them, but only twenty-five were charged with unlawful assembly. A clash between 4 members of the Progressive Youth Association and four longshoremen took place in front of the International Longshoremen's Association on June 2 and were jailed and charged with disturbing the peace. The director of the Progressive Youth Association claimed that the meeting was called to thank union men for their support in the sit-in demonstrations. Refer to the HW-Tri-Monthly Report, December 1, 1960 to March 1, 1961, page 15, for background details.

e. Right Wing Extremist Groups & Anti-Communism

Characteristic in the Southwest, but even more so in Houston, right wing extremist groups with their emphasis on anti-communist activities were aggressively articulate during the period of this report. The John Birch Society, the Christian Anti-Communist Crusade, Freedom in Action, Freedom Forum groups, etc., attracted large audiences at public and private meetings - all concentrating on the threat of communism and, in most instances, adopted the theme for U. S.

F. LITTLE ROCK & ARKANSAS

1. Desegregation Developments

Unlike previous experiences, Little Rock is moving ahead in its desegregation process without dramatic or sensational publicity. On May 25, twenty-five Negro students were assigned to five white Junior High Schools for next September.

The Greater Little Rock Ministerial Association requested the school board and other community leaders to prepare the community for further desegregation and promised unqualified support to the School Board in its implementation of the court orders. Displeased with this liberal expression, a group of conservative ministers formed a new alliance - the Metropolitan Little Rock Association of Free Ministers. Claiming that segregation was not the prime factor in this new group, the ministers contended that the association would give them a voice in community affairs for the first time.

A dispute in the School Board arose regarding the ruling of the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals which ordered the School Board to speed up desegregation, and that the use of the pupil placement law were being used illegally and were depriving Negro students of their constitutional rights. Ted Lamb, School Board secretary, opposed the School Board policy of gradualism.

Federal District Judge Smith Henley approved, tentatively, the new version of of the Dollarway desegregation plan, which admits Negro pupils to the first grade of the formerly all-white Dollarway School, provided they score at least average on two specific tests and provided their assignments would not be clearly contrary to the criteria of the pupil assignment law.

2. Favorable Court Decisions for Negroes

The Negroes also gained new victories in other legal cases. Three laws enacted in 1958 to hamper the NAACP were ruled invalid by a state court, and an old suit against the NAACP designed to prohibit the practise of law by the NAACP organization was dismissed.

Municipal Judge Quinn Glover deferred judgment on April 3 in the case of six Negro college students who were arrested in a sit-in demonstration on November 30, 1960. He postponed their cases until September 1, 1961, because the Arkansas Supreme Court had not ruled on the validity of the law under which they were charged.

For the first time, the fact that a Negro had never been selected for jury duty was challenged in connection with a personal injury lawsuit filed last December by Mrs. Allie Mae Brunson.

3. Segregation Proposed Amendment

After opposition, the Arkansas legislature adopted Gov. Orval Faubus' new segregation proposal as one of the three constitutional amendments to be submitted to the voters in November 1962. The amendment would guarantee a segregated public school for any student who refused to attend a desegregated one. The governor dropped his other proposed amendment to amend the constitution in 33 days instead of the present twenty months.

G. OKLAHOMA

a. Desegregation Developments

1. Oklahoma Christian College opened its doors to Negro students for the first time, effective this fall. A check of institutions of higher education, state-supported and private, showed that at least 19 schools of the 33 were desegregated with 459 Negroes known to be enrolled. All state supported colleges and universities are desegregated in principle because of action taken by the Oklahoma Board of Regents for Higher Education in June 1955.

2. The NAACP plans to introduce bills to wipe remaining segregation features off the statute books. Among the targets of NAACP effort is the section of the constitution establishing the separate school system.

3. Langston University, a Negro institution struggling for existence, disclosed a white student had been enrolled all year.

4. Oklahoma City's superintendent of schools conceded faculty desegregation was proceeding slowly.

5. Fourteen persons, including a Catholic priest, were arrested by Oklahoma City police during a "squat-in" demonstration at a downtown cafeteria, following a series of "stand-ins" at the cafeteria on March 12, 1961.

6. On May 5, Charlton Heston, Academy award winning actor, joined two Oklahoma City psychiatrists (one a Negro) shouldered a sandwich board sign reading, "All Men Are Created Equal," and a mixed group of about 30 integrationists, in a two hour quiet march in protest to segregated lunch counters.

b. Jewish Community Council

Walter Bruno, Dallas Chapter Executive Board member, addressed the Oklahoma City Jewish Community Council Annual Meeting on June 15, 1961. Subject: Moral Implications of the Eichmann Trial." Attendance: 60. Refer to Section A-3-d of this report for further details.

c. Chapter Developments

In connection with his visit, Mr. Bruno conferred with several AJC National members on the reactivation of the AJC Chapter in this community with promising results. National AJC members received a special letter from the regional office, advising them of Mr. Bruno's visit and suggesting that plans be initiated to formalize the AJC in Oklahoma City.

The Courier-Journal

BARRY BINGHAM, Editor and Publisher

MARK ETHRIDGE, Chairman of the Board

LISLE BAKER, Executive Vice-President

Editorial Page Staff: RUSSELL BRINEY, Editorial Page Editor; ADELE BRANDEIS, MOLLY CLOWES, WELDON JAMES (on leave), JOHN ED PEARCE, WILLIAM PEEPLES, HUGH HAYNIE, Cartoonist

SUNDAY, JULY 16, 1961. FOUNDED 1868.

file
Desag. 7/16/61

EDITORIAL NOTEBOOK

Uncle Tom Is As Dead As The Minstrel Show

By William Peoples

FRANKFORT—The first statewide conference on human rights left me with mixed feelings. It demonstrated that there is a significant reservoir of good will in Kentucky that can be tapped in dealing with racial tensions. It also revealed how far we still have to go.

There was an encouraging response to the Governor's call for the conference. Lawyers, clergymen, housewives, businessmen, and public officials gathered here. They came from all corners of the state, and at least 22 cities and towns were represented.

Whites and Negroes met together and talked about developments in their respective communities. They tried to come to some conclusions about what the State Human Rights Commission can do under its present mandate. What it can do is precious little outside of acting as an informational clearing house and using gentle persuasion. It has no enforcement powers.

Impatient For More Progress

In the end, the delegates called for a state anti-discrimination law and legislation giving the commission the authority to enforce it. No doubt this will strike those sophisticated in the realities of Kentucky politics as so much shouting in the wind. It seems unlikely that the General Assembly will pass such legislation anytime soon. But the sense of the conference was symbolic of the impatience of the Negro leadership with our current rate of progress in desegregation, and the realization on the part of white integrationists that, to complete the job, legislation may be the ultimate answer. After all, 28 other states now have such a law on the books. None of them, however, is in the South; or so close to it in spirit as Kentucky (although at the session just ended Missouri's legislature created a Fair Employment Practices Commission with teeth).

The trouble with most conferences of this kind is that they consist of a lot of well-meaning people with a common outlook who merely sit around reinforcing each other's convictions. It is like a camp-meeting of the converted.

Yet much can depend on who is doing the talking. When the Governor speaks out forcefully against racial discrimination in any form it can make a difference.

Governor Combs left no doubt where he stands on the issue. "We support human rights because they are basic to our democracy, and not for political reasons," he declared. "We favor fair treatment because it is morally right, and not just because it is necessary in our country's contest with international Communism."

In other words, the weight of the State Government is on the side of desegregation and officially against segregation in any of its myriad forms. The 1960 General Assembly enunciated this policy when it passed legislation establishing the Commission on Human Rights.

The workshop sessions here were valuable, even though nothing of a concrete nature emerged from them. They brought Negro and white leaders together and specifically revealed the crazy-quilt pattern of segregation in Kentucky as it exists today.

Some communities have made steady, quiet progress towards desegregation; others have done nothing. Frankfort, for example, has faced up to the problem and acted. All of its public facilities are desegregated. One of its hotels is. Mayor Judd and his bi-racial committee are currently trying to persuade restaurants to desegregate. There have been significant but limited breakthroughs in Henderson and Lexington.

Danville, on the other hand, has simply not faced the problem, and has accomplished virtually nothing in the area of public accommodations outside the public school system, according to a Negro delegate from there. Resistance to further desegregation is notably strong in Richmond. A Negro delegate from Lynch felt that, without outside help, the situation in that community is hopeless.

Out of it all, an intangible struck me as more meaningful that all the reports and recommendations put together—the intangible of mood.

The Negro leadership may have its differences. The N.A.A.C.P. and C.O.R.E. do not always see eye to eye on timing or approaches.

The Tide Is Flowing

But make no mistake about it. The Negro leaders now coming to the fore, in Kentucky and the South, are tired of waiting for jubile. They are determined to quicken the tempo, and they have no patience with the gradualism of the past.

Uncle Tom is dead and his survivors are as vestigial as the minstrel show.

Again and again the Negroes at the conference emphasized that they want to pick their own representatives on bi-racial committees. They do not want them to be picked by the white community. Paternalism won't cut it anymore.

Their job, and that of their white allies, is to mobilize the apathetic, indifferent majority, and thus isolate the extreme segregationists. One way or another they mean to achieve total integration in our time.

In Kentucky, the wind is rising, and the tide is flowing, by fits and starts, but inexorably towards that goal.

COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS
COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY
CAPITOL ANNEX BUILDING
FRANKFORT, KENTUCKY

Desegregation

JM ✓
MW ✓
PPV ✓
PAV ✓

SUMMARY OF CCD MASS MEDIA COMMITTEE MEETING, OCTOBER 17, 1961 X-Ref Org. Media

The next meeting of the Mass Media Committee will be held on Wednesday, November 29, from 11:30 AM to 2 PM, at the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, 20 West 40th Street, New York City.

Since this will be a luncheon meeting, please call Mr. Fleischman at PL 1-4000 or write to him at 165 East 56th Street, New York 22, New York, to let him know whether or not you plan to attend.

1. It was reported that the Wall Street Journal is considering preparing an article dealing with the race-relations paradox of Birmingham (see item 4 in the September 22, 1961 MMCCD minutes).

2. The question was discussed whether or not the Mass Media Committee of the Consultative Conference on Desegregation should deal in the future with housing and job desegregation as well as schools, voting and public accommodations. It was agreed that the Committee will deal with all problems of discrimination, in housing and on the job, while keeping its main focus on the South.

3. Desegregation in Atlanta, Dallas and Memphis presents an interesting example of contrasting community approaches to the problem, which warrants continued observation and study. Atlanta proceeded primarily on the basis of community-citizen cooperation, saturating the community with education for a considerable time in advance of desegregation. In Dallas, preparation for desegregation was made by the power structure after considerable negotiations between the white and Negro top leadership, followed by a short but intensive educational drive, based on respect for law and order. Memphis veered towards the Dallas approach, but relied on school and law enforcement authorities to execute its program without reference to citizenship education or involvement of civic groups. Yet all three methods brought about successful desegregation with virtually no kickback by extremist groups.

It is interesting to note the increasing importance of the Negro vote in respect to this situation. In Atlanta, for example, Ivan Allen, Jr., former president of the Chamber of Commerce, was elected mayor against a die-hard segregationist by a two to one majority. Actually Allen failed to get a majority of the white vote, but the Negro vote plumped about 100%, thus insuring Allen's victory. (Business Week, September 30, 1961, carries an article "Business man mayor sign of new South - Atlanta's incoming mayor defeated die-hard segregationist with backing of businessmen who decided their interest lay in maintaining order and prosperity through moderation.") A similar pattern of Negro voting is developing in Memphis and has led to the appointment of Negroes to the Transit Authority and the District Attorney's office.

4. Two court cases in Prince Edward County are now pending. One before the Virginia Supreme Court, asking the court to order the immediate opening of public schools in Prince Edward County; and the other before the Federal District Count, which does not want to act until the Virginia Supreme Court has rendered its decision. An earlier Federal Court ruling forbade Virginia to subsidize the Prince Edward private schools, but a poll of whites in the county indicated that an overwhelming majority in this rural area are willing to keep the schools closed rather than permit desegregation.

5. The Southern Regional Council has put out a report on "The Hard Or the Easy Way?" pointing out that there are 129 counties in Virginia, North Carollina, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Arkansas that have a Negro population of 5% or less. Schools have been desegregated in only 13 of these 129 counties. Seven desegregated voluntarily, five by court order, and one under a pupil placement plan. The report then deals with the tremendous expense to Yancey County in fighting desegregation of its facilities, and quotes a Winston-Salem Journal editorial that "in its fight to keep eight Negroes out of two high-schools, with a combined enrollment of more than 1,000, Yancey County spent almost $70,000" and still lost. Concludes the Journal: "the Yancey County story indicates that the price tag is high, and buys only a little time." It was suggested that it would be very valuable to have the article sent to school superintendents and school board members in the 116 counties still maintaining a dual school system, as well as to organizations which have constituencies in those areas.

6. It was suggested that it might be useful to approach national educational and school administrator organizations, national publications and TV on the problem of token desegregation and what happens to the Negro students who remain in segregated schools.

7. It was suggested that the Federal Office of Education and/or other sections of the government might be induced to publish pamphlets relating to successful efforts for peaceful school desegregation. It was also suggested that the 1961 United States Commission on Civil Rights Reports might well be summarized in attractive, illustrated, dramatic pamphlets.

8. Governor S. Ernest Vandiver of Georgia has asked the Georgia legislature to review the law that would allow electrocution of Preston Cobb, 15 year old Negro youth. Cobb was charged with the slaying of a seventy-year old white farmer, and is being defended by the NAACP, which entered the case on the ground that Negroes are systematically excluded from jury duty in Jasper County; the court-appointed defense lawyer failed to raise pertinent constitutional issues; the strong probability that others were involved in the crime; and the boy's youth. Governor Vandiver has announced that he will grant a stay of execution, if necessary, to give the legislature time to consider the law which now permits execution of children as young as 14 years of age.

People in Holland have brought over nearly 2,000,000 signatures on a petition requesting reconsideration in this case.

9. The United Church Women's Assembly has launched a three-year crusade to enlist Protestants and orthodox churchwomen to fight racial discrimination. Project to be called "Assignment: Race, 1961-64." Series of annual workshops will be held in eight sections of the country to teach practical ways to eliminate racial bars in churches, housing, schools and employment.

10. Three railroads in the South have agreed to end racial desegregation in their station facilities. The railroads - the Illinois Central, the Southern, and the Louisville and Nashville - acted after investigation by the FBI disclosed that a number of stations operated by the three maintained policies of racial segregation. It was pointed out that the Interstate Commerce Commission has no machinery yet to process complaints. There is concern in civil rights circles as to how effective the ICC will be in preventing bus companies from ignoring the ICC's recent order for desegregation of bus terminals. Many terminals, segregationists insist, would be closed, leaving just stopovers over which the ICC has no jurisdiction.

It was reported that in some areas, segregation signs in bus terminals were just blacked out with no publicity and with no incidents. It was suggested that it might be much more effective in other areas to avoid publicity over the removal of signs rather than create opportunities for tensions.

11. In our last minutes, we reported that the Department of Commerce has sent out instructions through its Bureau of Public Roads for the removal of Ku Klux Klan signs from all highways constructed with the aid of Federal highway funds. If you find any such signs still up, will you please drop a line giving full details to Harry Fleischman, National Labor Service, 165 East 56th Street, New York 22.

12. Enclosed is a little pamphlet, "Prejudice and the Child, a selected annotated bibliography of research evaluations and general readings," published by the American Jewish Committee. Additional copies are available at $10.00 per hundred.

13. The National Conference of Christians and Jews has just issued its general Brotherhood Week folder for February 18-25, 1962, containing suggested programs for schools, churches, synagogues and community groups. It has also published a Brotherhood Under God series with program suggestions for Catholic organizations, Protestant organizations and Jewish organizations. Sample copies are available from the National Conference of Christians and Jews, 43 West 57th Street, New York 19.

Respectfully submitted,

Harry Fleischman

Harry Fleischman, Chairman
Mass Media Committee, CCD

HF/eak
MMCCD

Saturday Review
Nov 11 1961
Desegregation

Desegregation

WILL IT WORK?

YES:

By WILLIAM SLOANE COFFIN, JR., chaplain of Yale University and a recent Freedom Rider.

IN ANY discussion of racial discrimination it is well, I think, to distinguish between integration and desegregation. The former gets to the heart of the matter, the heart of every man, and thus refers to something personal and subjective. Desegregation, on the other hand, refers to something impersonal and objective, a state of affairs in which rights and opportunities are guaranteed to all citizens despite the objections of some.

From any religious or moral point of view integration is the only acceptable goal, for the brotherhood of man is a farce if it is not finally a matter of the heart. Moreover, in an explosive world, integration may well be an absolute necessity. But the fact that a thing is right and necessary still does not make it possible; ironically, the very insecurity of the world, increasing as it does individual insecurity, tends rather to enhance rather than diminish the possibilities for racial discrimination. For racial discrimination, or prejudice of any kind for that matter, is deeply rooted in a sense of individual insecurity —which is why it is at once so universal and so ineradicable.

A few weeks ago eleven of us were tried in a civil rights case in a Southern court. Here was a fine chance to observe again the emotional roots of prejudice, to realize anew that what is emotionally rooted is not intellectually soluble. The testimony of each state witness and the sentence of the judge clearly reflected opinions not acquired but innate, not dictated by logic but by passions, and by passions not aroused by the facts, but by passions that preceded and distorted the facts. What the proceedings illustrated dramatically was that prejudice is actually far more an internal than an external affair. For what the segregationist fears is finally less the Negro than himself—his own insecurity inevitably felt most acutely when change and strife render horribly insecure the world about him. Not to be forgotten also is the role conscience plays, a role summed up beautifully by the philosopher Schweighausen, who said in reference to anti-Semitism: "The anti-Semite hates the Jew not because he is the Christ killer but because he is the Christ bearer."

Those who believe that prejudice can be eradicated simply by education do not properly assess these emotional and moral dimensions of the problem, do not realize how inadequate a solution education is for people whose lives are motivated not by love but by hate and fear of the truth. Thus, while all individuals surely have a clear religious or moral obligation to overcome their prejudices, it seems only realistic to anticipate that far from all will succeed. "Human nature," as a shrewd observer of the human scene remarked," is very prevalent." As far as whole societies go, integration appears an unattainable goal.

BUT does this mean that little or nothing can be done? Quite the contrary. If full integration is unattainable, then desegregation becomes that much more necessary, and, in contrast to integration, desegregation for a whole society is, I believe, a thoroughly attainable goal.

Desegregation and integration are of course interrelated, for while it is true that morality cannot be legislated it is

(Continued on page 76)

NO:

By WILLIAM F. BUCKLEY, JR., editor of National Review, a weekly periodical.

WHAT, I am asked, is the conservatives' solution to the race problem in the South? I answer: there is no present solution to it. Such an answer appals. It brings to mind, to move from tragedy to flippancy, the cartoon of the farmer leaning on his pitchfork and replying to the motorist: "Come to think of it, Mister, I don't think you can get to Glens Falls from here." There are those who approach all problems as though they involved merely getting an automobile from here to there: there is always a road. There are others who know that some problems are insoluble. These last are for the most part conservatives; and I am here to defend them.

Let us begin by stressing that no matter how convinced a people may be of the wrongness of an existing situation, it does not follow that the people should be prepared to resort to whatever means may be necessary to attempt to make that situation right. That may sound obvious—the end does not justify any means; but when we examine some of the drastic proposals that are being put forward with the end of securing the rights of the Negro (e.g., a constitutional amendment depriving the individual states of their right to set up voting qualifications), the time has come to reiterate the obvious. We acknowledge, for instance, that it is wrong to drive at excessive speeds; but no state in the union seems prepared to impose a heavier penalty on the speeder than the automatic suspension of his license for thirty days. There would be less speeding, and hence less violent slaughter—the two figures, the experts inform us, are inextricably related—if speeders were packed off to jail for a week. Even so, notwithstanding the established correlation between fast driving and aborted lives, we shrink from so drastic a penalty; and the speeding, and the deaths, go on.

Let us take the word of the predominating school of social scientists and stipulate that segregation is the cause of personality disturbances. And—mark this—not only against the Negro, but also against the white. The argument is not new; it has often been used against corporal punishment. It is not only the victim who is damaged, psychiatrists report, but also the executioner, in whom sadistic impulses are dangerously encouraged. No one who has contemplated a man brandishing a fiery cross and preaching hatred needs help from social science to know that the race problem has debasing effects on black and white alike.

ASSUME all this to be true. Assume, also, that the legal and political power is wholly at the disposal of the society to effect its point of view in the South. Assume, in other words, that Brown vs. Board of Education and the supporting decisions of the Supreme Court deconstitutionalized segregated public schooling beyond the point of argument. Then assume that the raw power necessary to enforce that decision is available to the present Administration, and that the will of the nation is such as to insure that Congress will supply power where power is lacking. Should the Federal Government then proceed?

The list of sanctions available to the government is endless. The economic power of the Federal Government has in our time reached the point where it cannot be denied; cannot, in fact, be defied. If Congress can seriously entertain the question whether to spend money to aid public schooling in any state whose public schools are segregated, why can't Congress debate the question whether it is prepared to spend money for road-building in a segregated state? Or for unemployment? Or for farmers' subsidies? Already the Attorney General has hinted he is considering (for purely punitive reasons) recommending to his old friend the Commander-in-Chief the removal of our large military installations from segregated areas.

In a word, the Federal Government is in a position to visit intolerable economic sanctions against the defiant state. Not to mention the government's arsenal of legal weapons. Why cannot the Congress (assuming always a purposive mood on the subject of segregation) pass laws increasing the penalties for those held guilty of contempt of court in a certain category of cases? And why can't the courts rule—as Professor Auerbach of the University of Wisconsin has recommended—that any state which, having fought to the end of the legal road, sets out to close down its public schools rather than integrate them, be forbidden to do so on the grounds that such action, under such circumstances, becomes not the free exercise of the state's power, but an act of defiance of a federal court? By such reasoning the Federal Government could take over the operation of the schools.

THE crucial question arises: Will the government of the United States move in such a fashion? The answer is: probably not; for the reason that, along the way, the ideological stamina would very likely give out, as the public contemplated the consequences of an assault of such magnitude on a whole region. Another question is: should the government of the United States take that kind of action to end segregation? The answer to that is, in my judgment: no, most definitely not.

"You know, the world is hard enough and people is evil enough without all the time looking for it and stirring it up and making it worse," says Leona, in a novel by the eloquent, tormented Negro writer James Baldwin, who celebrates his bitterness against the white community mostly in journals of the far political left. What would be accomplished by turning the legislative, judicial, and executive resources of this country over to a crash program of integration? Let us suppose the program were so successful as to make South Carolina like New York City. This spring a distinguished New York Negro told the audience of the television program "Open End" that he did not know three white people in all of New York with whom he felt genuinely comfortable, such is the prevalence of prejudice even in this cosmopolitan center. Louis Lomax may be more sensitive, and hence more bitter, than the average New York Negro, and so unrepresentative of the state of Negro serenity in the North; but then, too, Dr. Martin Luther King is more sensitive, and so more bitter, than the average Southern Negro, and hence unqualified as a litmus of the Southern Negro's discontent. But only one of the other Negro guests on the program challenged as extreme that remarkable testament to race relations in the city under which the fires of the melting pot burn hottest.

THE deep disturbances isolated by the social scientists are not, I think, of the kind that are removed by integrating the waiting rooms and the schools. It has even been revealed (Villanova Law Review, Fall, 1960) that the very tests cited by the Supreme Court in Brown as evidence that Southern Negro children were suffering personality damage, when administered in the North yielded not merely similar results, but results that seemed to indicate a greater psychic disturbance in integrated Northern Negroes than in segregated Southern Negroes! I believe that the forms of segregation, which so much engross us at the moment and which alone are within the reach of the law to alter, are of tertiary importance, and of transitory nature; and under the circumstances the question arises even more urgently: Should we resort to convulsive measures that do violence to the traditions of our system in order to remove the forms of segregation in the South? If the results were predictably and unambiguously successful, the case might be made persuasively. If a clean stroke through the tissue of American mores could reach through to the cancer, forever to extirpate it, then one might say, in due gravity: let us operate. But when the results are thus ambiguous? Use the federal power to slash through the warp and woof of society in pursuit of a social ideal which was never realized even under the clement circumstances of a Chicago or a New York or a Philadelphia?

I say no. A conservative is seldom disposed to use the Federal Government as the sword of social justice, for the sword is generally two-edged ("The Government can only do something for the people in proportion as it can do something to the people," Jefferson said). If it is doubtful just what enduring benefits the Southern Negro would receive from the intervention of government on the scale needed to, say, integrate the schools in South Carolina, it is less doubtful what the consequences of interposition would be to the ideal of local government and the sense of community, ideals which I am not ready to abandon, not even to kill Jim Crow.

WHAT, meanwhile, are the Negroes actually losing that they would not lose if the government took over in the South? One thing alone, I think, and that is the institutional face of segregation. That is important; but it is in the last analysis only a form. What matters is the substance of segregation. The kind of familiarity that might lessen racial consciousness is outside the power of the government to effect. I would even argue that it is outside the power of the government to accelerate. J. Kenneth Galbraith tells us that the ultimate enemy of myth is circumstance, and I think he is correct. If it is true that the separation of the races on account of color is nonrational, then circumstance will in due course break down segregation. When it becomes self-evident that biological, intellectual, cultural, and psychic similarities among the races render social separation capricious and atavistic, then the myths will begin to fade, as they have done in respect of the Irish, the Italian, the Jew; then integration will come—the right kind of integration. But meanwhile there are differences between the races which surely will not be denied by an organization explicitly devoted to the advancement of colored people. The Negro community must advance, and is advancing. The Reverend William Sloane Coffin of Yale University, returning from his whirl with the Freedom Riders, rejected the request of Mr. Robert Kennedy that the Riders withdraw to let the situation cool off with the words: "The Negroes have been waiting for ninety years." Mr. Coffin spoke nonsense, and showed scant respect for the productive labors, material and spiritual, of three generations of Negroes. A sociologist at Brooklyn College only a few weeks before had observed that never in the history of nations has a racial minority advanced so fast as the Negroes have done in America. How far will they go on to advance? To the point where social separation will vanish?

I do not know, but I hope that circumstance will usher in that day, and that when the Negroes have finally realized their long dream of attaining to the status of the white man, the white man will still be free; and that depends, in part, on the moderation of those whose inclination it is to build a superstate that will give them Instant Integration.

the Negro incentive to study they quickly rise again. That the Negro is not inherently less intelligent than the white but only lacking his opportunities was proved rather conclusively by Army I.Q. scores in World War II in which Northern Negroes averaged higher than Southern whites.

Interracial marriage should be no problem to the religious person, for from the point of view of church or synagogue no such thing exists, all marriage being strictly interpersonal. Fears in this direction are unwarranted anyhow. As Dr. King himself has said, "We ask only to be the white man's brother, not his brother-in-law," and as the history of the North indicates, there will be little interracial marriage until such time as there are fewer objections to it. Both sides are too prejudiced today to fall in love very often. As to fears of what will happen outside of marriage, these are clearly projections of the white based on his own memory of what he has done to the Negro. But it can be easily demonstrated that far less of this sort of thing takes place where races live on a more equal footing.

WHILE in the South priority in the struggle for desegregation must be given the vote (the area in which the Negro has his greatest leverage with local authorities), in the North the greatest problems are in employment and housing. Whites can hardly appreciate the frustration and bitterness which racial barriers in these areas have produced in the minds and hearts of the Negroes, particularly the educated among them. Currently, for instance, there is at the Yale Law School a group of exceptionally gifted Negro students almost any of whom would be a credit to any law firm. Yet in the entire country no more than a handful of white firms would hire one with the idea of his ever becoming a junior partner. And if law firms are bad they are no worse than banks and business establishments, hospitals, and even many universities.

Equally shocking is the housing situation, bad for American Negroes all over, and so bad in New York for colored delegates to the U.N. that the Soviets in New York are actually seeking a new building in which to house them. In a world two-thirds colored, to practice segregation is really so treasonous that one wonders if the House Un-American Activities Committee should not investigate some of the self-styled patriots who practice it.

On the other hand, there is considerable ferment in the area of housing, resulting in promising legislation in several states. But while this legislation seems good, it is well to remember that h

u

Thelma age 5½ Mother stantly sionally eldest, dren. R
hold.
(5′ x piles.
disease
despai
Must h
care, e

You c of a nee and pho
the chil
Plan. Th touched pledge p ages, ed cash gra ceives fu
tribution
Plan sta country
sible w Parents'

Plan governm tion, reg
visory C
United S
tional Information Bureau in New York City.
on request because we are so proud of the h in France, Italy, Greece, South Korea, Viet Na

Foster Parent
352 PARK AVENUE SOUTH, NEW YOR
MRS. JOHN F. KENNEDY, Honorary Ch

PARTIAL LIST of SPONSORS and FOSTER PARENTS

Steve Allen
Bing Crosby
K. C. Gifford
Helen Hayes
Dr. John Haynes Holmes
Charles R. Hook
C. D. Jackson
Gov. & Mrs. Walter Kohler
Garry Moore
Edward R. Murrow
Mary Pickford
Dr. Howard A. Rusk
Mr. and Mrs.
Robert W. Sarnoff

FOSTER PARENTS'
352 PARK AVENU
In Canada: P.O. Bo

A. I wish to become or more. If poss
I will pay $15 a Payment will be yearly ( ).
I enclose herewith
B. I cannot "adopt" contributing $.....

Name .....
Address .....
City .....
Date .....

Desegregation Will Work

(Continued from page 21)

also true that one can legislate conditions more conducive to morality. This point is nicely illustrated in the story of the recent game between the Texas and Oklahoma football teams, just desegregated. After a particularly rough play the quarterback of the Oklahoma team jumped up: "Say, Ref, did you see what their nigger did to our colored fellow?"

BUT the goal of desegregation, the guarantee of equal rights to all citizens, is going to be attained only after certain myths are dispelled in the minds of many Americans. Some of these pertain to the South, others to both South and North. One of the most popular is that time will take care of everything. Time will actually take care of nothing, for time is neutral. What men do with time is what counts, and in the deep South at least the extremists since 1954 have done far more with time than have the moderates.

Another popular myth is that there is a compromise position between the NAACP and the White Citizens Council. But if the former are for and the latter against federal law, where is the middle ground?

A third myth held by people lacking somewhat in understanding and compassion is reflected in their own words, "Let the Southerners solve their own problems." To be an active antisegregationist white in Alabama is tantamount to committing political, economic, and social suicide. (Not to be active is of course to commit moral suicide, which is precisely the hell of living in Alabama today.) Non-Southerners do not seem to realize how desperately antisegregationists, Negroes and whites alike, need federal intervention, need the pressure of world-wide opinion, need all types of outside support. "The position of white antisegregationists here," wrote a lady in Montgomery explaining their silence, "is comparable to that of anti-Communists in the Soviet Union." And a distinguished federal judge, a Southerner too, said to one of our group last spring, "Thank you for realizing we needed outside help."

But is this help really from the "outside"? One hundred years after the Civil War and after distinguishing herself in two world wars, is not the deep South very much part of the USA? If so, then Governors Patterson and Barnett and their segregationist crowd are clearly guilty of violating a basic tenet of our or any democracy, namely that consent of the governed means consent to be governed. Furthermore, it is ridiculous to assert that the North is interfering with the South when in actuality it is the South that is interfering with the nation. Given the world political situation in which we Americans find ourselves, it is no longer up to the Negro—if it ever was—to adapt himself to the pace of the white, but up to the white to adapt himself to the world as it is in 1961.

"Negroes don't want civil rights" is less of a myth, although those who say this generally exaggerate the number who don't and minimize the role of white intimidation. It is true, however, that Negroes in large number are apathetic. But again, what conclusion do we draw from this? To me no greater charge could be brought against segregation as a system than this very desire that it produces in men to remain second-class citizens. Will anyone argue that it is a good thing that human beings do not want to be fully human? Was it a good thing, for instance, that countless Russian serfs in the 1860s rejected the freedom offered them by Alexander II, or is it a good thing today that other Russians are prepared to settle for the semihuman conditions that are imposed on them by Premier Khrushchev?

HERE I think we are getting to the core of the problem, the recognition of how much must be done to counter the dehumanizing effects of segregation. From a strategic point of view—moral aspects for the moment aside—sit-ins, kneel-ins, wade-ins, and Freedom Rides must primarily be viewed as encouragement to the apathetic to think of themselves as being just as human as other human beings. To be sure, these demonstrations serve also to relieve the pressure of intimidation by drawing upon the community adverse publicity and by making the point in as yet unaffected communities that it could happen there. But it is the encouragement to the Negro that is of primary importance, an encouragement that of course includes present Northern leadership. It would be hard to exaggerate the importance of supporting this leadership, dedicated as it is to affirming civil rights through nonviolent means. For if this leadership cannot "produce the goods" then it is only a matter of time before the violent men in the Negro fringe groups move to the center and take over. Anyone with eyes to see should realize that if there are Southern moderates today their names are Martin Luther King and Ralph Abernathy.

Two further misunderstandings need to be cleared up. Standards as a rule do drop when schools are desegregated, but wherever desegregation provides is shown by a most celebrated case, for the literary world in any event. It involved a New Yorker story about the child prodigy William Sidis, who had achieved fame in mathematics at the age of ten. An unexplained something happened to him as he reached late adolescence and he threw it all up, going to work as a streetcar ticket taker. The New Yorker sought him out and wrote the story. Sidis, who died not long after, sued, but the court, in a still disputed opinion, found there was nothing objectionable in revealing these facts; Sidis, it concluded, was not harmed by the revelation.

Not only must the victim be harmed by the exposure, but the facts exposed must be private and not public facts. Thus a newspaper is free to state that John Jones had six wives, since this is a matter of record. But were a jealous reporter to bribe a bank clerk and find out the contents of a businessman's bank box, revelation of this fact would be grounds for a lawsuit.

If the revelation of details of one's private life is protected by the law of privacy, how, then, do such magazines as Confidential or anv standard movie or fan sheet stay in business?

Perhaps because they enjoy the "inside story" as well as anyone else, judges have concluded that public figures, or "celebrities," are a group apart. Since they, after all, sought publicity in the first place, it seems hard to condemn those who facilitate them by means of the press and other media. Once a figure becomes, in the eyes of the law, a "celebrity," he is fair game for a wide area of publicity, although even here there are some limits. A movie star, for example, can justly sue for the reporting of purely private conversation, or descriptions of what he does at private places, such as a party at a friend's home, or the contents of private letters that an eager reporter may get hold of. The line between what is private and what is public is, of course, a vague one, and is often overstepped by many publications. The individual concerned frequently chooses not to enforce his rights to avoid even further distasteful publicity incident to the law suit.

Similarly, items that are news are broad exceptions to the law of privacy, even when details to the last degree are given about a rape, murder, or divorce. This news exception has been justly criticized, for it permits publicity about those who never sought it in the first place and who do indeed wish "to be let alone." Details of her life, loves, and unhappiness do not normally please a woman whose baby has just died in a bizarre accident, but such comments, extraneous to the event of the death itself, may well be permitted. The press is free to concern itself and its readers with nearly every aspect of an individual who, fortunately or unfortunately, is involved in what may justly be called a news event. And it is probably permissible for a newspaper or magazine, twenty years later when our woman may be involved in another news event, to recapitulate her earlier entry into the limelight. Some states, however, have recently passed laws to limit this news exception to the law of privacy by prohibiting any indication of the name or identity of a victim of a sex attack.

Because of the very broad scope given to the definitions of both "celebrity" and "news," few reporters or personal publicists are truly impeded by the law of privacy as it relates to the disclosure of private facts. Although the writer J. D. Salinger has insisted many times that he wishes "to be let alone," this did not prevent Time magazine from recently publishing a long and detailed story about his private life, for Salinger is a "celebrity" or public figure. It is my understanding, however, that the New Yorker, as a matter of good practice, will ordinarily not write a profile of anyone who does not wish to be publicized, no matter how celebrated a figure.

The law of privacy has its strongest application as it relates to the unauthorized use of a name, photo, or other identification, as well as any false attribution, for business purposes. Product publicists and advertising men are probably most active in this area, for their prime function is to get product notoriety and one chief technique long used is the endorsement. The courts have been uniformly strict in striking down any such unauthorized use for commercial purposes.

A wise maxim for anyone in the communications media would be: Never act without a signed waiver of all rights.

South Is 'Moderating'

Wash Post Peseg 12/10/61

First of a Series

By Robert E. Baker

Staff Reporter

THE SOUTH is changing faster than it thinks. Occasional violence and dramatic defiance obscure the fact that the extension of school desegregation and civil rights is progressing with surprising speed.

Even in those strongholds of defiance, Birmingham, Ala., and Jackson, Miss., there are signs that moderation and common sense will prevail.

I covered the race issue in the South for several years before leaving for an overseas assignment two years ago. I returned to take up the race issue assignment recently and have traveled twice in the South in recent weeks.

I have been amazed at the change in two years. The school desegregation issue is beginning to lose its emotional aspects in many areas. Community leaders are accepting it as inevitable and are willing to resign themselves to reality.

That is the first step leading to discussion of the issue. People find they can talk about school desegregation on the basis of saving the public schools and maintaining law and order.

Two Holdouts in 15

WHEN THE Supreme Court ruled against school segregation in 1954, the Southern and border states included 15 metropolitan areas of half a million or more population with segregated schools. Eight desegregated to some extent in the five Septembers following the Court's implementation decision in 1955. Five more have followed suit in the last two Septembers and now only two of the 15 school systems are still completely segregated—Forth Worth and Birmingham.

Until two years ago, it was the usual posture of Southern communities to fight school desegregation until they were forced into an inescapable corner by the Federal courts. Now there seems to be an increasing amount of casual school desegregation without a final court order. Memphis, Fort Lauderdale and Tampa-St. Petersburg are examples.

Last September marked the first time since the Supreme Court's decision that the opening of schools did not produce major violence somewhere in the South.

The collapse of "massive resistance" in Virginia in 1959 made a chink in the South's armor of defiance and started talk of inevitability, but the big symbols today are Atlanta and Memphis.

No one could question that Georgia is the South. Georgia had enacted as tough anti-integration laws as any state and Gov. Ernest Vandiver had flailed his arms against desegregation as much as anybody. But wisdom prevailed.

The State freed school districts to deal with the issue locally. Obeying a Federal court order, Atlanta made thorough public preparations for desegregation in September and the day passed quietly and with grace.

Perhaps Memphis was an even bigger symbol, desegregating without a final court order and in relative secret. Many people in the delta country of Mississippi and Arkansas who look upon Memphis as their city were surrised and thoughtful.

Emotion Spread Thin

PERHAPS THE emotional aspects of desegregation have lessened in the field of schools because the emotions of the defiant ones must now be spread over the entire field of civil rights, with Federal activity nearly everywhere.

Editor J. Oliver Emmerich of the Jackson (Miss.) State Times was slugged by a white man in McComb, Miss., after he wrote an editorial advocating a positive racial program for Mississippi, but reader reaction to his proposal was generally good.

The Federal Government has filed a dozen or so voting suits to open registration rolls to Negroes on an equal basis with whites. It has gone into court to thwart intimidation, boycotting or other reprisals against Negroes who have sought their rights.

Negroes have found that if they seek their rights and are turned back, the Federal Government is there to help. This has encouraged many Negroes to make an effort, and a more militant Negro is emerging in the South.

One member of Virginia's legislative racial investigation committee, formed to curtail the activities of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, recently lamented the passing of the "old conservative" NAACP leadership in the State into more militant hands.

Round-the-Clock Vigilance

TO MANY a Southern official engaged in efforts to maintain the segregated tradition, Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy has been a tiger on the hunt. These officials recount how "Bobby" Kennedy telephoned them, sometimes in the wee hours, and talked and cajoled and sometimes threatened.

Never has Federal activity in the field of civil rights been so vigilant or potent, and the feeling of inevitability already widespread in the school field is beginning to be expressed in other areas of racial equality.

In Mississippi, no one can maintain with honesty that the racial climate today is healthy. The frame of mind of many whites is illustrated by the announcement of a television news reporter recently that the Jackson White Citizens Council had called an emergency meeting to reveal "proof" of the Negro's real goal and that only adults would be admitted because of the sensitive nature of the information.

Editorial Wisdom

YET THERE is wisdom in Mississippi. Most of it now is privately expressed. A public expression, however, came recently from J. Oliver Emmerich, editor of the State Times in Jackson.

He wrote an editorial stating that "negation has plunged our state into misunderstanding and frustration." He advocated a positive program to help solve Mississippi's racial dilemma, including voter registration of Negro teachers, a program to improve job opportunities for both whites and Ne-

g' Faster Than It Thinks has filed a o open reg-on an equal gone into ion, boycotnst Negroes

ghts.
if they seek d back, the ere to help.
Negroes to ore militant outh.
's legislative ttee, formed the National ncement of amented the onservative"
State into ilance

official en-maintain the ney General en a tiger on recount how honed them, s, and talked
s threatened.
ivity in the o vigilant or inevitability school field sed in other can maintain acial climate'

e of mind of d by the anon news re-ackson White
ed an emer-
"proof" of d that only d because of information.

in Mississipprivately exion, however, liver Emmer-imes in Jack-stating that ur state into stration." He gram to help dilemma, inn of Negro prove job op-

tes and Ne-

Dallas was another big Southern city, besides Atlanta and Memphis, where desegregation began quietly last September. Six-year-old Bruce Alvin Roberts, one of 18 Negro first-graders who entered formerly all-white Dallas schools, is shown amid older students at Amelia Earhart School with his mother and little sister.

groes, improvement of the state courts to give justice to Negroes and appointment of unofficial biracial committees to work on racial problems at the local level.

Emmerich was slugged last week by a white man in McComb, Miss., where he owns the Enterprise-Journal. But he has received a generally good response from readers and many Mississippians privately express their support of his stand.

In Birmingham, a Federal judge recently ordered the city's parks and Municipal Auditorium desegregated. The initial reaction of many whites was to suggest that the facilities be closed and sold.

But 189 prominent businessmen, clergymen, professional men, industrialists and labor leaders signed a statement which was given prominent display and support in the Birmingham News. It spoke of the difficult problems created by desegregation decisions and counseled that the solution "requires intense study, understanding, tolerance and good will on the part of every element of the population."

It called for full support against lawlessness.

"We must do some hard thinking now on just how we can meet the necessities of court decisions and agency orders within the framework of law observance," it said.

It was the first public sign that businessmen and others in Birmingham were accepting the inevitable. More important, it showed that they now appeared willing to try to influence the course of events and prevent further damage to their city's reputation by violence and uproar.

"Hard Thinking Needed" was the title of the declaration.

Birmingham these days is beautifully decorated for Christmas, and chimes ring out carols. Christmas is indeed a season for hard thinking.

MONDAY: The Race Issue in Politics

Research

Desegregation
1961

FACT SHEET FOR OASIS DISCUSSION LEADERS

1. Must Atlanta desegregate its schools?

There is no legal way to maintain a segregated public school system in Atlanta. The reason is pointedly stated by the Sibley Committee's Majority Report: in 1954 the United States Supreme Court ruled that separate schools are inherently unequal, and therefore, unconstitutional. The decision exists; it is binding on the lower federal courts; it will be enforced. The U. S. District Court has enjoined racial discrimination in the Atlanta public schools. There are no delaying tactics which have not been attempted and overruled; there is no alternative.

2. What are the provisions of the Atlanta plan?

In 1961-62,pupil assignment in the 11th & 12th grades will be made without regard to race or color. In each successive year the plan will be expanded to the immediate lower grade, until all grades are included.

Current assignments will continue unless transfers are directed or approved by the City Superintendent of Schools or his representatives.

Certain criteria, known as the "Pupil Placement" program will determine transfers:

available room & teaching capacity transportation facilities effect of new pupils on academic programs effect of new pupils on academic standards effect of new pupils on academic progress of other students scholastic aptitude & relative intelligence of pupil adequacy of academic preparation of pupil psychological qualification of pupil psychological effect upon pupil ability of pupil to conform to new educational environment morals, conduct, health and personal standards of pupil suitability of curricula for pupil choice & interests of pupil home environment of pupil request or consent to transfer of parents, & reasons therefor maintenance or severance of established relationships of pupil with other pupils & teachers possibility or threat of friction or disorder possibility of breaches of peace or ill will

3. How is the Atlanta plan being applied?

Applications for transfer to be obtained from Superintendent's office by applicant, his parent or guardian; when completed, forms to be notarized and returned to student's principal, during period May 1 - 15.

Data to be submitted to Area Superintendent, who then schedules an interview with student and parents (this year, interviews were held with selected number of students after tests administered) and arranges for series of tests (standardized achievement tests, aptitude tests, and personality adjustment test). This information, along with a report of the characteristics of the school to which transfer is requested shall then be transmitted to the Deputy Superintendent.

A Student Transfer Reviewing Committee, including the Deputy Superintendent, one or more Area Superintendents, the AssistantSupt for Pupil Personnel Services (or Director of Psychological Services the Assistant Superintendent for Instructional Services (or Director of Instruction), and any other personnel that may be considered desirable, shall meet to study the completed folder of each student. Interviews with the student may be scheduled at the discretion of the Deputy Superintendent.

Recommendations of this Reviewing Committee will be submitted to the Superintendent.

Notice of action taken on transfers will be mailed to parents or guardians within thirty days or not later than June 15th, and will be final, unless the action is appealed.

4. What are the provisions for appeal of a denied transfer?

Appeals are to be made in writing within ten days of the mailing of the notice of action. The Board may conduct hearings if it desires. Every appeal shall be concluded by the Board before September 1st. Any person dissatisfied with the final decision of the Board may appeal to the State Board of Education.

5. What have been the developments in other cities that have adopted grade-a-year plans?

Nashville - In 1957, Nashville began desegregation with the first grade under a court-approved plan. Grades one through four are now desegregated, with 159 Negro children presently enrolled in 10 predominantly white schools. This number is only about one-third of the Negro children eligible by residence to attend white schools; the others requested and were granted transfers to all-Negro schools. Last year only 44 Negro pupils were registered in predominantly white schools; in 1958-59, there were 34, and in 1957-58, there were 19. Surrounding Davidson County desegregated its first four grades in 1960-61, and 41 Negro students are now in interracial classes there.

Knoxville & Houston - In 1960-61, non-discriminatory school assignment was begun in Knoxville and Houston. In Knoxville, 28 Negro students attend white schools; in Houston, there are 12 Negro students attending white schools.

6. How many Negro pupils are attending previously all-white schools?

Although it has been seven years since the Supreme Court decision, there are now only 4,313 Negro children in the previously all-white schools of Arkansas, Florida, North Carolina, Tennessee,

Texas and Virginia. This figure represents 169 school districts, desegregated between 1956-60. In North Carolina, for example, four years after desegregation, there are only 2 Negro children in school with white children in Charlotte, 9 in Winston-Salem, and 5 in Greensboro. Although efforts to limit the desegregation to a "token" number of Negroes may be responsible for this minimal total in some districts, "token" desegregation is not the procedure of the majority of these school boards. The following figures show that the total has increased by less than 1,000 in five years.

NEGROES IN DESEGREGATED SCHOOLS

State	1956-57	1957-58	1958-59	1959-60	1960-61
Arkansas	34	91	73	94	113
Florida	0	0	0	512 c	27
North Carolina	0	11	14	34	82
Tennessee	6 a	19 a	82	169	383
Texas	3,400	3,600	3,250	3,300	3,500
Virginia	0	0	30	103	208
Total	3,440 a	3,721 a	3,449	4,212	4,313

a - plus Oak Ridge
c - only a handful of whites stayed with 490 Negroes in the racially changing neighborhood of Orchard Villa school near Miami.

7. Will desegregation result in lowering of academic standards?

In March 1959, administrators of 17 desegregated school systems participated in a conference held at Nashville before the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights. Not one of the twelve administrators who dealt with the question reported that desegregation had harmed the academic progress of white students, or had lowered academic standards. Following are excerpts from some of their testimony:

Dr. Ward I. Miller, Supt. of Schools, Wilmington, Del.

.... (We have) over the last 4 years developed our grouping program to a point where we classify our youngsters according to performance and scholastic achievement, and those standards are set for each particular track on which the youngsters run. The accomplishment of the average white student is better than it was. The accomplishment of the above average and the advance placement and honor classes is truly remarkable...

Question: In other words, what you are saying is that there has been no diminution of quality resulting from this integration.

Dr. Miller: We feel it is better.

Mr. William Henry Oliver, Supt. of Schools, Nashville, Tenn.

...Our children are all in school, and are, we believe, achieving normal success in their studies...

... I haven't noticed any effect one way or another on the educational success of the children, either white or colored, where they are together.

Dr. John H. Fischer, then Supt. of Schools, Baltimore, Md.

... There is no doubt at all that Negro children are receiving better educational opportunities in Baltimore now than they did under segregation. The opportunities of white children have been in no way diminished. Indeed, they have been increased, not as a result of desegregation, but by our general effort to improve our offerings for all children over the past 5 years.

The Late Dr. Omer Carmichael, Supt. of Schools, Louisville, Ky.

... Now, you asked, if I got your question, in the desegregation, what, if any, changes, we have observed. It happens that one of our principals on sabbatical leave last year wrote a doctor's thesis on what happens to scholarship or to achievement of pupils in a school system in the process of desegregating. His findings can be summarized in about this statement, that there was definite improvement in the 2-year period in the achievement of both races. The achievement of the Negro children increased markedly more than did the achievement of the white children....there was certainly improvement, and it is statistically significant for the Negro at all levels, and the white did not suffer. The white slightly improved, but not as much as the Negro.

None of these communities employed pupil assignment criteria which might have selected for desegregation the Negro students with the highest academic standings. That is, desegregation affected all Negro students, both those of highest and lowest achievement, with transfers made solely on the basis of school districts.

In Washington, D. C. where city-wide pupil testing immediately after desegregation revealed that many Negro pupils lagged far behind white children in school achievement, findings on five years of public school desegregation (published as "Addendum: A Five Year Report" by District School Supt. Carl F. Hansen) reveal:

Integration has not retarded the advancement of high-quality students, Negro or white, and educational standards in the District public schools, when examined in relation to students' preparation and ability for learning, are high.

City-wide averages on standardized tests have climbed steadily since desegregation to approach -- and in some instances match or surpass -- national norms, Mr. Hansen reports.

8. Does desegregation create new disciplinary problems?

The Superintendent of the Washington, D. C. school district reports ("Addendum"), "serious incidents that seem to be primarily racial in origin are relatively infrequent. The records of the central school office reveal reports of few such cases."

Statistics show that "juvenile delinquency as reported in cases per thousand between 1954 and 1958 has decreased, although data for 1958-59, not yet available in cases per thousand, shows an increase over the year before....The District of Columbia Commissioners' 1959 report... reveals the following delinquency rates for children 5 to 17:

For non-white children a decline from 37.1 cases per thousand in 1954 to 21.2 cases in 1958.
For white children, 15.3 cases per thousand in 1954 to 15.2 cases in 1958."

Dr. Hansen concludes from these data: "The schools do not claim credit for this development. But one conclusion is clear: Desegregation has not resulted in an increase in the rate of juvenile delinquency."

How behavioral problems have been affected by desegregation in some localities is shown in the following excerpts from the report of the Commission on Civil Rights:

Dr. Omer Carmichael, the Louisville Superintendent, stated that in his desegregated schools there had been somewhat greater difficulty in matters of discipline, due more to the emotional reaction to desegregation than anything else, but that it had been substantially less than he had feared.

In the Baltimore schools, Dr. John H. Fischer...has found no problems attributable to race as such...: "...No Negro child has ever brought into any of our schools a problem that had not already been presented somewhere by a white child. Nor has any white child been able to claim much originality for his race in inventing new forms of misbehavior. We find that these are a function of the child's total life-situation and are always due to a number of factors. It is never possible to explain a child's behavior simply in terms of his race, or to classify children's problems on a racial basis."

9. Will desegregation result in increased health problems in the schools?

In a study conducted by Phi Delta Kappa, an honorary international education fraternity, teachers of mixed schools reported that:

Negroes coming from a low socio-economic group have health problems, but not in any greater proportion than whites of the same background. According to teachers, most Negro parents send their children to school so scrubbed they shine. Negro parents are evidently conscious of white people's stereotypes and try thus to change them.

St. Louis and Baltimore school superintendents reported that desegregation did not create any new or difficult health problems.

10. Will school desegregation lead to intermarriage?

Dr. Hansen's report on five years of desegregation in Washington states that "...considering the extent of desegregation here, and the limited number of intermarriages following school attendance together -- one confirmed, two rumored -- it is unlikely that proximity in school has contributed significantly to interracial marriages. This fear that proximity in school will induce intermarriage seems not to have been realized." The Washington experience supports the findings of psychiatrists and social scientists; after investigation it has been concluded that no evidence exists to prove that desegregation of the schools and the mixing of white and Negro children in and of themselves lead to intermarriage.

The Group for the Advancement of Psychiatry (GAP) has stated:

> The many factors that determine fluctuations in the rate of racial intermarriage are far from clear. In Boston, where legal school desegregation has been in effect for decades, there was a relatively high rate in the years immediately after 1900 and a marked decrease in the next decades despite a constant ratio of Negroes to the total population. In urban New York State, other than New York City, the ratio climbed between 1916 to 1924 and then dropped steadily for the next ten years. No satisfactory explanation for this shift has been established. The facts conclude that legal school desegregation per se does not influence the rate of intermarriage in ways that are yet predictable.

GAP, drawing on available evidence, observes that "The expectation voiced by many people that school desegregation will result in a great rise in the rate of intermarriage seems to be an expression of their bias and fear, rather than a reliable prediction."

The Committee on School Desegregation of the Society for the Psychological Study of Social Issues arrives at the same conclusion:

> One ungrounded fear is that intermarriage will result from desegregation. Statistics show that in parts of the United States where there has been no segregation, intermarriage is a rare thing indeed... Fear of something new and different makes many otherwise reasonable people believe such myths and discount contradicting facts....

11. Will there be disturbances in Atlanta this fall?

No one can predict with certainty what will happen; however, incidents of violence in connection with school desegregation have, in fact, been few indeed, both within schools and in the community. In only seven instances has the situation become so explosive that a real crisis threatened or major violence occurred; these incidents are spread over the seven years in which 778 school districts have desegregated -- proof that violence is not an inevitable effect of school desegregation. There is no example of sustained disturbances where public officials and law enforcement personnel have taken a firm and early position in support of law and order. In Atlanta, both the Mayor and the Chief of Police have promised the people of the city that no disturbance of the peace of the community will be tolerated.

12. Do white people move away from desegregated school districts?

This question is usually raised by citation of the majority report of the House sub-committee (the Davis Committee) which in 1956 investigated the Washington, D. C. schools. The majority report deplored the preponderance of Negro pupils in Washington schools, asserting that "just a few years ago" 59,582 white students and 33,498 Negroes were enrolled. It was later discovered from enrollment records that "just a few years ago" was November 1, 1935, and that the date marked an all-time high in white enrollment in the District schools. In fact, the change in racial composition in Washington began some 20 years before the Supreme Court's decision, a product of a national trend -- a movement to "suburbia" by whites, and an influx of rural non-whites into the downtown central city areas. There have been conspicuous growths, for example, in the Negro populations of Atlanta, Charleston and Nashville during the last two decades. Yet only one of these three cities has a desegregated school system. Richmond had a 42% Negro enrollment in 1953-54, but in 1959-60, Negroes comprised 54% of the total school enrollment; Richmond schools were not desegregated until September 1960.

13. Did not the Davis Report show that desegregation led to serious problems in Washington, D. C.?

The majority report of the Davis Committee presented so questionable a picture of the effects of desegregation in Washington that a recap of some of the facts is in order. The subcommittee of the House Committee on the District of Columbia, created by a vote of only 11 of the 25 members of the larger committee, was chaired by Rep. James C. Davis of Georgia; the majority report of its "findings" and "recommendations" was signed by only four of its six members, all Southerners. Two of its members submitted a minority statement which included the following: "In a close reading of the hearings we must come to the conclusion that the technical staff presented leading questions to a selected group of witnesses. Persons with views not in accord with those of the Counsel were not given full and fair opportunity to testify." Editorially, all three of Washington's daily newspapers discounted the objectivity and deplored the tactics of the investigation. The Washington Evening Star, for example, stated: "The Davis investigation of integration in Washington is of course designed to delay its acceptance elsewhere. The committee will supply ammunition in that respect in the form of testimony by responsible witnesses, under guidance of a skilled interrogator who knows precisely what sort of information he wants in the record."

When asked, during the course of the hearings, if integration had been carried out "smoothly and without incident," the then Asst. Supt. of District Schools, Dr. Carl Hansen, testified: "It would be fantastic to say 'without incident.' I think that the integration program in this city has been a miracle of social adjustment." Various subsequent investigations have confirmed Dr. Hansen's observation. The Richmond Times Dispatch, for example, sent staff reporter Larry Weekley to Washington to see how school integration was developing in 1959. "After four and a half years," Weekley wrote on Feb. 9, 1959, "the integrated public schools of the District of Columbia remain remarkably free of racial strife."

14. What is the cost of violence and tension to a community?

Intangible costs aside, this question can be answered by a look at cold cash losses in communities tolerating violence and tension. Because of its school crisis, Little Rock lost, at lowest estimates, five new industrial plants worth a million dollars and employing a total of 300 persons. Not one single commitment for location of a new factory in the city was signed from the day Gov. Faubus ordered National Guard troops to block the entry of Negroes to Central High until after stability was restored two years later. The Little Rock Chamber of Commerce, the Arkansas Industrial Development Commission, and other responsible sources attribute the halt in Little Rock's booming industrial growth to racial tensions and uncertainty in connection with public schools.

Department store sales in New Orleans, already running low, declined sharply as segregationist demonstrations and racial clashes hit the city in November 1960. New Orleans' largest department store, for example, reported a 20% to 30% drop in sales during the first week of near-riots -- a drop which necessitated a 50% slash in advertising outlays, and a halt in buying merchandise. Even loan companies were hurt: "Business has stopped cold," one reported, citing a 50-60% decrease in money loaned. Racial tension sparks a chain reaction of economic losses. Interruptions and stoppages of vital production are also probable -- as in the rubber manufacturing plants in and around Tuscaloosa, Ala. during riots protesting a desegregation attempt at the state university. When mobs gathered as Negro students marched to the state Capitol in 1960, Georgia taxpayers paid for "$75,000 in lost man and woman hours of state employes who left their jobs to watch the demonstration or to see that it did not come off," State Auditor Thrasher reported -- the latter reference to state troopers, who were stationed around Capitol grounds.

Business losses as a result of retaliatory boycotts and counter boycotts, losses from destruction of property, public monies spent to maintain national guard forces: when violence has been permitted, these have been items on the bill.

Materials - Desegregation

EDUCATIONAL DESEGREGATION AND INTEGRATION IN THE SOUTH

John H. Fenton and Forrest E. LaViolette

When old-time Calvinism disintegrated, Holmes described the event in terms of the sudden collapse of the wonderful one-hoss shay. Perhaps a poet of the future will be able to draw a similar analogy with reference to the falling to pieces of our segregated social system. As in the case of the wonderful one-hoss shay, the sudden and dramatic changes in our segregated institutional structure have been the product of long-term weathering agents.

In 1896, the United States Supreme Court rendered its decision giving judicial sanction to the "separate but equal" formula. The decision was based on sociological ~~in nature~~ data.[1] It represented a means of maintaining a way of

---

[1]The majority opinion declared, "A statute which implies merely a legal distinction between the white and colored races -- a distinction which is founded in the color of the two races, and which must always exist . . . has no tendency to destroy the legal equality of the two races, or re-establish a state of involuntary servitude." Continuing, the majority opinion observed, "We consider the underlying fallacy of the plaintiff's argument to consist in the assumption that the enforced separation of the two races stamps the colored race with a badge of inferiority. If this be so, it is not by reason of anything found in the act, but solely because the colored race chooses to put that construction upon it."

---

life, a way of life which was fixed by the serf-tenant status of the Negro. The underlying ecological facts of 1896 are well known. A system of class-caste control had been reestablished; the electrical phase of the industrial revolution was just emerging; Clerk Maxwell had only recently published his famous four equations; J. J. Thomson suspected that electrons might be particles; physical chemistry had just been born; the inventor of the Fordson tractor, which was to replace the Negro and the mule so extensively, was a young man. More than half (57%) of all (1890) Negroes, 10 years of age and over, were illiterate, more than 90 per cent resided in the South, and in excess of 80 per cent lived in rural areas.[2]

---

[2]Thus the Negro was separated or isolated from the greater community by his ignorance, by his geographical location, and by his typically serf-tenant socio-economic status. The 1896 Supreme Court decision quite simply represented legal recognition of the essential compatibility of segregation with the Negro's geographic, political and socio-economic place in the greater community.

In 1954, the U. S. Supreme Court rendered a second decision on racial segregation, a decision which, like that of 1896, was based upon certain sociological considerations. The Court, in an unanimous opinion, said:

> "We come then to the question presented: Does segregation of children in public schools solely on the basis of race, even though the physical facilities and other 'tangible' factors may be equal, deprive the children of the minority group of equal educational opportunities? We believe that it does."

The 1954 decision represented judicial recognition of the fact that Roy Ottley's New World A'Comin' had arrived. And, in truth, the world of 1954 was radically different from that of 1896. The 1896 system of class-caste control had been undermined by the great migration of the Negroes to the cities and to the north, and this great migration was the product of post-1896 social and economic development. By 1950, 32 per cent of all Negroes lived outside the South, 65 per cent lived in urban areas of the South and North, and illiteracy among Negroes was fast disappearing.[3] Many

---

[3]Thus the Negro in 1950 was becoming more fully integrated into the larger community by his literacy, by his geographical diffusion, and by his typically free labor socio-economic status. The 1954 decision quite simply recognized the essential incompatibility of institutionalizing education on a principle of segregation with the changed political and socio-economic status of the Negro.

---

students of constitutional law have commented on the contradictory nature of the 1896 and 1954 opinions. What is often overlooked is that the two decisions have reference to two different social and economic worlds. The two decisions are, in fact, worlds apart.[4]

---

[4]Attention is called to the fact that also characteristic of the two different Worlds is the manner in which data were gathered by the Court for the 1954 decision. In 1896 the Department of Sociology at the University of Chicago was only three years old. For the later decision Professor Redfield, with both a J.D. and a Ph.D., served in an advisory capacity to Thurgood Marshall as well as did 32 other social scientists, psychologists and psychiatrists. For a statement of the contents of their statement which was submitted with the briefs, see "The Effects of Segregation and the Consequences of Desegregation: A Social Science Statement," Minnesota Law Review, 1953, Vol. 37, No. 6, pp. 427-439. For a statement of how the consulting was done and the names of the signers of the statement, see Kenneth B. Clark (issue author), "Desegregation: An Appraisal of the Evidence," Journal of Social Issues, IX, No. 4, 1953.

The changes in the ecological reality of the worlds of 1896 and 1954, produced changes in the conditions of interaction between whites and Negroes. And it is these changes in the conditions of interaction which have caused changes in attitudes of whites toward Negroes. More precisely, the evidence available since 1942 indicates that there has been an increasing tendency for whites to accept the idea of school integration. Students, such as Hyman and Sheatsley, claim that the most important change in attitude which has occurred is that toward educability of the Negro.[5] Most Americans now seem to believe, according to Hyman and Sheatsley, that Negroes are as educable as whites. Where this attitude exists, public school integration is much easier to realize.

---

[5]Scientific American, "Attitudes Towards Desegregation," December, 1956, the lead article of the issue.

---

Since changes in attitudes seem, in large part, to be a function of changes in the conditions of interaction between the races, our first concern is to understand the process by which these changes occurred.

There are four major trends responsible for changed conditions of interaction: 1) the rural-urban and South-North shift of the Negro population, 2) the Great Depression, 3) the requirements of national defense for economic and organizational efficiency in an era of great wars, and 4) the political process.

1) The rural-urban shift

The rural-urban shift by which the Negro has changed from a rural serf tenant to a free wage worker in urban industries is undoubtedly the most general, the most pervasive, and the most important factor in making possible the changing of attitudes towards educability.[6] Without the Great

---

[6] Many books and articles have been written about this shift. Because of the emphasis upon emerging organizations we wish to call attention to Carleton Lafayette Lee, "Patterns of Leadership in Race Relations: A Study of Leadership Among Negro Americans," unpublished doctoral dissertation, University of Chicago, 1951.

For one of the most recent statements on population trends, a statement superior to the one in the Ashmore Report, see John M. Maclachlan, "Recent Population Trends in the Southeast," Social Forces, Vol. 35, No. 2, December, 1956, pp. 147-154. Several of the broad conclusions are: 1) "a slowing down of regional rates of growth," 2) "extension of net losses by migration from the region, especially the nonwhite population," and among others, 3) "rapid continuation of the urbanization of the region."

Some of the trends and problems based upon population changes and continued urbanization are discussed in: Peter F. Drucker, America's Next Twenty Years, New York: Harper & Bros., 1956.

Migration it is doubtful if such dramatic attitudinal changes could have taken place as to permit a program of racial integration in the public schools. The forces responsible for this dramatic population shift in the United States have been the freeing of the slaves, the mechanization of the farms, two world wars, the mushrooming growth of industry, and the national origins quota system restricting the immigration of cheap labor. It is a paradox that the Anglo-Saxon purists and trade unionists who advocated the quota system helped ring the death-knell of racial segregation in the South.

TABLE I

DISTRIBUTION OF NEGRO POPULATION BY REGION
AND URBAN-RURAL RESIDENCE, 1890-1950*

	1890	1900	1920	1940	1950
South	90	90	85	77	68
Rural	76	74	64	49	35
Urban	14	16	21	28	33
Other	10	10	15	23	32
Rural	4	3	2	2	2
Urban	6	7	13	21	30
U.S. Total	100	100	100	100	100
Rural	80	77	66	51	37
Urban	20	23	34	49	63

* Source: Eli Ginzberg et al, The Negro Potential, New York: Columbia University Press, 1956, p. 15

2) The Great Depression

Both the unemployed Negro urban worker and the impoverished Negro tenant farmer suffered acutely from the Great Depression. And it was out of this shared period of misery and despair that there emerged a new Negro self-awareness and a consequent change in the conditions of interaction between the white and Negro communities. In the relatively comfortable 1950's it is difficult for us to appreciate the magnitude of the crisis the Negro underwent in the Great Depression.[7] The unemployed free Negro [7]The extent of the decline of economic activity is stated briefly in Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr., The Age of Roosevelt: The Crisis of the Old Order, Boston: Houghton Mifflin Co., 1957, p. 248.

---

" . . . National income which had been $87.4 billion in 1929, fell with the value of the dollar to $41.7 billion in 1932. Unemployment rose: 4 million in 1930, 8 million in 1931, 12 million in 1932 -- nearly one out of every four workers in the nation seeking a job."

For some details as to how this decline effected Negroes and how Negro organization was transformed by the experiences of the Great Depression, see Charles R.Lawerence, "Negro Organization in Crisis: Depression, New Deal, World War II," unpublished doctoral dissertation, Columbia University, 1952; Robert A. Anglin, "A Sociological Analysis of a Pressure Group," unpublished dissertation, University of Indiana, 1949. The pressure group is the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

---

wage worker felt the oncoming depression by at least six months before the stock market crash in the Fall of 1929. By March, 1931, the Urban League had prepared a report on How Unemployment Affects Negroes. Lawrence has adapted a small table from that report showing clearly what now seems like an unbelievably high percentage of Negroes in the relief cases of certain cities.

In addition to the usual job marginality, Negroes faced intensified efforts on the part of the whites to displace them from customary Negro jobs. Campaigns for legislative discrimination, intimidation with violence, and appeals to white-race loyalty were techniques used in the displacement

TABLE II

PERCENTAGE OF NEGROES IN POPULATION AND PERCENTAGE OF NEGROES ON RELIEF IN SELECTED CITIES
March, 1931*

City	Per Cent Negroes in population	Per Cent Negroes In Total Relief Cases
Akron, Ohio	5.4	25.0
Baltimore, Maryland	17.0	34.0
Chicago, Illinois	4.0	25.0
Columbus, Ohio	10.0	43.0
Dayton, Ohio	10.0	50.0
Little Rock, Arkansas	20.0	65.0
New York, N. Y.	3.5	10.5
Philadelphia, Pa.	7.0	35-40
Pittsburgh, Pa.	8.0	44.0
St. Louis, Mo.	9.0	60.0

*Lawrence, op. cit., Table I, p. 129 activities.[8] The Hoover Phase of the Great Depression was apparently the

---

[8]Lawerence, op. cit., p. 123, supports his description and analysis of displacement activities with specific cases. There is no study of the extent of the campaign for displacement. But for the purposes of Negro leadership and organizations, the high percentage of Negroes on relief rolls and the low amounts available for relief were sufficient indicators of the vulnerable position of Negro workers in the economy.

---

worst part of the period. As a result Negroes deserted the Republican Party in great numbers and started looking toward themselves for their own protest leaders and organizations in an effort to cope with the economic forces at work. Although attention was given to it earlier, it is in this period that an "all-out" campaign for improvement in educational opportunities was initiated.[9]

---

[9]In addition to the campaign for improvement in educational opportunities, Lawerence, op. cit., p. 153, includes " . . . efforts to expand the economic opportunities for Negroes (a) in public works and (b) in retail outlets in Negro communities. An important fourth front was that involving the continuing assaults on the institution of segregation."

Thus it was not until the Great Depression that the rural-urban and South-North migration became socially significant. It was out of this miasma of despair and with it a developing sense of injustice that there emerged demands for unity among Negroes. As a consequence, such organizations as the NAACP became much more effective. As Lee states it, ". . . Slowly the Negro American community became a social psychological reality as well as an ecological fact."[10]

---

[10]This transformation is by no means described completely in any of the articles which we have consulted. In rural Mississippi one finds in Negro homes copies of the Louisiana Weekly, The Pittsburgh Courier, and of course radios and TVs. Various TV stations broadcast news programs which include interviews with Negro clergymen who have been arrested for purposely testing segregation laws. It has been these new means of communication, with increased access to them, which have made it possible for northern Negro leadership to become effective in the South.

For studies of community changes, see Hylan Lewis, Blackways of Kent, Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press, 1955. Also, Hyland Lewis and Mozeill Hill, "Desegregation, Integration, and the Negro Community," Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, Vol. 304 (March, 1956).

Changes are underway in the white communities of the South too. We may suspect that the story of "What Happened to the Emmett Till Killers?", Look, January 22, 1957, indicates a change regarding the sanctioning of violence.

---

3) The requirements of National Defense

The third change in conditions of interaction has arisen out of national defense needs. The trends in military technology and the increasing complexities facing civil and military officials have necessitated a search for increased efficiency in military organization. New ideas, new tests, and new studies of problems of morale in World War II pointed at the desirability of eliminating segregated units in terms of efficiency. But it was not until the Korean police action that complete integration in the armed forces was tried as policy and vindicated in action. The rationale for integration in the armed forces was based upon the demands for efficiency and the fact that modern expectations and complex operations will not support the several kinds of costs directly attributable to segregation. Finally, in this connection, it is to be noted that social science research was important in providing the evidence to support the policy of integration in the Armed Forces.[11]

---

[11]There is a considerable bibliography on this subject. Much of it will be found in David G. Mandelbaum, Soldier Groups and Negro Soldiers, Berkeley, University of California Press, 1952. This author claims that the military authorities started working on the question of segregation and efficiency as early as 1940. Furthermore, he states that segregated units were designed to decrease friction but they were no longer effective in that regard. A fuller statement on the Negro Soldier in World War II is in preparation by the Office of Military History, according to our colleague, Professor Charles Roland, Department of History, who assisted in the editing of a manuscript which is in preparation by Major Lee.

4) The political process

From minority group studies we have learned that it is within the conditions of profound crises and conflicts that the group defines for its members the consequences of educational achievement; the relation of educational achievement to economic opportunity, its symbolic value in community life, and its causal significance to group survival and identity. The Negro soon learned, however, that education is a part of public policy,[12] and that participation in the political process is an essential prerequisite to the realization of educational equality.

[12] One of the best statements available as to public policy is that of James M. Nabrit, Jr., "Race Relations Research in Public Policy," Inventory of Research and Cultural Relations, Vol. 5, Nos. 2-3, 1953, pp. 171-90.

One of the chief virtues of the election of governmental officials by popular vote is that it provides otherwise defenseless minority groups with a lever and a weapon. Sheriffs who must seek Negro votes on election day are rarely guilty of wanton brutality against them. Instead, they are likely to employ Negroes as Deputy Sheriffs. Since the latter part of the nineteenth century and until recently the Southern Negro has been without the ballot, and, therefore, the Southern politician, at best, has tended to ignore him.

However, the changes wrought in the geographic location and the socio-economic position of the Negro in American life have produced a revolutionary change in his political status. When the Negro moved into the Northern cities he found himself in a culture in which his vote was solicited. At first, that vote was purchased for a dollar or a drink. But with the concentration of Negroes in the cities and with the parallel development of an increasingly articulate and experienced independent leadership which could freely communicate with the Negro community, a consciousness of a community of interest developed.

The year 1936 marks the point in time at which this developing self-consciousness of the American Negro was first given electoral expression. In this election the ghost of Abraham Lincoln and the dollar bill lost its compelling influence over the Negro vote. In 1936, the Negro vote was secured by substantive policy promises. The Democratic vote cast by Negroes in 1936 was not a machine vote. The significant fact about the election is that the Negroes had sufficiently defined and organized a community of interests relative to political matters, that they were capable of voting in terms of their self-interests as a race as those self-interests were defined by their own leadership. The shift in the Negro vote made it a factor to be reckoned with by politicians. And the Negro community reaped immediate tangible benefits from the political interest now centered on them. More and better government jobs were offered them. Officials became increasingly concerned with such matters as equal employment and education rights for them.

Negro leadership, observing the fruit that flowed from the exercise of the franchise concentrated with renewed vigor on the problem of releasing the pent-up flood of Negro votes in the South.[13] The white primary blocked

---

[13] Articles regarding Negro leadership do indicate the trend towards increasing militancy. But the transformation is only recently being subject to study. Regarding the earlier characteristics of leadership, see T. G. Standing, "Nationalism in Negro Leadership," American Journal of Sociology, XL, No. 2, pp. 180-192; Guy B. Johnson, "Negro Racial Movements and Leadership in the United States," ibid., XLIII, No. 1, 57-71.

We note in passing that the conclusions of Ralph Bunche, as stated in "Tentative Analysis of Negro Leadership," the manuscript being a part of the Schomburg Collection, New York Public Library, dated 1941 are no longer as valid as at the time Dr. Bunche made his study. This is what we mean by transformation. The gap, based upon class differences between leaders and followers which existed at the time of Bunche's study is closing.

For a short study of community organization and Negro leadership see T. Ktsanes, F. E. LaViolette, and John Rohrer, "A Report of Research on Community Structure, Organizational Structure, and Citizen Participation in Community-Wide Activities: A Study of Civil Defense in Mobile, Alabama," New Orleans, Urban Life Research Institute, Tulane University. Chapter III deals with The Mobile Civil Defense Council for Negro Affairs and problems of leadership.

---

these efforts.[14] Thus the NAACP resorted once again to legal action which

---

[14]Attention is called to the fact that Negroes tried in 1927, in 1932, in 1935, and again in 1944 to break the white primary monopoly. Anglin reports that between 1910 and 1945, the NAACP was directly or indirectly involved in 42 court actions regarding suffrage rights of Negroes.

Professor Nabrit, op. cit., p. 172, states that "of major significance in improving race relations i[illegible] is the use of the ballot. The white primary in the South, registration difficulties, the poll tax, and the one party system rendered political action impotent for many years. U.S. v. Classic, decided in 1941, . . . paved the way for Smith v. Allwright, in 1944, which sounded the death knell of the white primary. The outlawing of the Boswell Amendment in Alabama, 1949, and the decision in Rice v. Elmore, 1948, in South Carolina ended effective denial of the Negroes participation in the electoral process in the South to all intents and purposes . . ."

---

resulted in the outlawing of the white primary by the Supreme Court in the case of Smith v. Allwright (1944).

As Table III indicates, the 1944 Supreme Court decision blew a rather sizeable hole in the dam of Southern resistance to Negro participation in political affairs. In 1940, the Negro was effectively disenfranchised in the South, but by 1956 over 1,200,000 Southern Negroes were registered to vote. Of course, the Supreme Court's decision, in and of itself, could not and did not provide the Negro with equal political rights. Where the Negro remains predominantly in a serf-tenant relationship to the white community his right to vote remains illusory (save where cultural factors are more important than the economic, such as in the Catholic-plantation parishes of Louisiana). However, where no plantation economy exists, as Table IV shows, the Negro tends to be permitted to register and vote in large numbers.

TABLE III

PROGRESS OF NEGRO REGISTRATION IN THE SOUTH*

	No. Registered				% of Potential Registered Negroes 21 years of age and over
	1940	1947	1952	1956	1940	1947	1952	1956
Total South	151,000	595,000	1,050,000	1,230,000	3	12	21	25
Ala.	2,000	6,000	50,000	50,000	-0-	1	10	10
Ark.	4,000	47,000	65,000	70,000	1	17	28	30
Fla.	18,000	49,000	125,000	150,000	6	15	34	41
Ga.	20,000	125,000	145,000	165,000	3	19	23	26
La.	2,000	10,000	100,000	160,000	0	3	21	33
Miss.	2,000	5,000	20,000	not known	0	1	4	-
N. C.	35,000	75,000	100,000	135,000	7	15	18	25
S. Car.	3,000	50,000	115,000	100,000	1	13	29	26
Tenn.	20,000	80,000	85,000	90,000	6	26	27	28
Texas	30,000	100,000	175,000	214,000	6	18	30	37
Virginia	15,000	48,000	70,000	85,000	4	13	16	20

*Complied from various publications and news releases issued by the Southern Regional Council, Atlanta, Ga.

Potential Vote is the 1950 Negro Potential Vote

18 and over for Georgia in 1952 and 1956

TABLE IV

RELATION BETWEEN PERCENTAGE TENANCY, PERCENTAGE NEGRO OF TOTAL POPULATION AND PERCENTAGE NEGRO REGISTRATION IN NORTHERN (NON-FRENCH-CATHOLIC) PARISHES OF LOUISIANA, 1956*

%Tenancy	No. of Parishes	Mean % Negro Pop.	Mean % Registration of Potential Negro Vote
50 and over	11	52	12
40-49	4	43	19
30-39	6	39	25
20-29	6	36	36
10-19	9	25	53
0-9	3	19	59

*From John H. Fenton and Kenneth Vines, "Negro Registration in Louisiana", American Political Science Review, June, 1957

With a change in geographic location, which placed many Negroes in cultural areas permissive of Negro registration, and with the change in the socio-economic status of the Negro vis a vis the white community has come a revolutionary change in his political status. The Negro today represents as a group, a particular point of view on policy issues.[15] With increased

---

[15] Lawrence, op. cit., pp. 116-17 states that

"The NAACP has taken the leadership in calling together Negro organizations of various types in connection with mapping out a broad non-partisan political strategy in election years. It would appear that this association might well take the lead in more ambitious effort. It might in consultation with other organizations concerned, find a staff person who, like President Roosevelt's assistants, has a 'passion for anonymity' and launch him on a continuing job of clearance and consultation among the various organizations. One thinks of the NAACP in this connection for at least three reasons. It is the largest and best known of the Negro organizations. It has had experience in this type of effort as noted above and in the initial financing of the Joint Committee on National Recovery [1933]. Most of all, it seems to the writer to have the best potentialities for development as a truly democratic organization.

---

organization and political sophistication has come political power. And with political power has come increased concern on the part of politicians of both North and South for the rights of the Negro.

Public School Integration in the South

Public school integration in the American South is national policy. It has become national policy because of the changed socio-economic status of the Negro, the changed political power position of the Negro, and changed attitudes toward the Negro on the part of the white population. The national problem is how best to impose this decision on a region. The process by which it is being imposed is most interesting and revealing.

In 1954, segregated school facilities were required in 17 states and the District of Columbia, and permitted in four states (Arizona, Kansas, New Mexico, and Wyoming). Table V shows that by the opening of the 1956-57 school term only eight states remained aloof from integration at the grade and high

TABLE V

PROGRESS OF INTEGRATION IN 17 SOUTHERN AND BORDER STATES, 1956*

Deep South	School Districts Desegregated, 1956	Colleges and Universities Desegregated
		State	All (state and private)
Alabama	0	0	1
Arkansas	2 small schools	6	6
Florida	0	0	1
Georgia	0	0	0
Louisiana	0	4	8
Mississippi	0	0	0
North Carolina	0	1	2
South Carolina	0	0	0
Tennessee	Clinton High School Oak Ridge Schools	3	6
Virginia	0	4	5
Border States
Delaware	14 of 63 school districts	1	1
Kentucky	105 of 120 counties	2	8
Maryland	85% of Negro pupils	1	6
Missouri	80% of Negro pupils	4	10
Oklahoma	161 school districts	(not available)
Texas	100 plus school districts	2	10
West Virginia	20 counties fully desegregated 21 counties partly desegregated 3 still segregated	7	10
Washington, D.C.	All	-	7

*Taken from Southern School News and "The Shattered Magnolia Barrier", by Milton Vigo, in Research in Action, September, 1956 (New Orleans: Louisiana Council on Human Relations.)

school levels, and only three of these escaped integration at the college level. In all, approximately 300,000 of 2,700,000 Negro pupils (or 11 per cent) in the 17 states and the District of Columbia were in integrated districts by September, 1956. Segregation has virtually been ended in the four states in which it was permitted, is fast breaking down in the seven Border States, and has been eliminated in the District of Columbia. As a generally accepted principle it still survives in only the 10 states of the Deep South, and remains absolutely inviolate in the public schools of only five of these states.

It is significant in terms of predicting the future course of integration to note the nature of the Border State communities where desegregation has occurred. There seem to be three categories of such communities: 1) urban areas, 2) areas with few Negroes and no history of a plantation economy, 3) areas with a culture which is permissive toward Negro participation in the political, social, and economic life of the community.

The great urban centers of the Border States integrated their schools with a minimum of difficulty. In Baltimore City (24 per cent Negro in 1950), Louisville (16 per cent), St Louis (18 per cent), Kansas City (12 per cent), and Washington D. C (35 per cent) integration is an accomplished fact. Seemingly, the socio-economic power structure and the cultural environment of these cities made them readily susceptible to integration. This is important because most Southern Negroes now live in the cities, and the socio-economic structure of cities tends to be similar in the United States.

In the rural areas of the Border States where there are few Negroes and no history of a plantation economy educational desegregation has often been successful. In West Virginia, for example, the only areas where there has been a great deal of protest against integration has been in the Greenbrier plateau section and the eastern part of the state where a plantation economy existed at the time of the Civil War. Interestingly enough few Negroes now live in these sections (most having moved to the coal centers or cities), but the old cultural attitudes remain long after their raison-d'etre has disappeared. In the Deep South, also, there are many sections with few Negroes. For example, less than 20 percent of the population is colored in 11 Louisiana parishes, and most of these parishes have never had a plantation economy. Attitudes in these parishes tend to be permissive toward such Negro activities as voting. In parishes of this category in Louisiana, approximately 70 percent of the eleigible Negroes are registered to vote, compared to 30 percent in the state.

Cultural attitudes are of crucial importance in determining the success or failure of integration efforts.[16] As has been noted, the sections of the

---

16 See John Gillin, "National and Regional Cultural Values in the United States", Social Forces, vol. 34 No. 2, December, 1955. It is useful to quote Gillin's statements describing a generalized southern culture. He finds "Protestant morality is especially strong. . . Family relations are strong and include extended kin group. Status and power tend to be based on kinship connections more than in any other region with the exception of Back Bay Boston. Hard work is necessary for most, but little valued as a good in itself. . . Mobility of the person is a necessary evil rather than a positive good. Change and optimism for their own sakes rate low. Freedom for the individual from the outside (non-Southern) interference is highest of the individualistic values. . ."

As "special values" he finds the "doctrine of white supremacy and resulting race castes. . .Violence as a solution of interpersonal and intergroup problems. Regional cultural chauvinism resulting in the attitude that the Southeast can solve its problems if outsiders will not interfere, that it is a special region with a culture uniquely fitted to it, and that the 'rest of the country is against us'".

Border States with a plantation history continue to resist integration, even though the Negro may have taken his leave. However, in areas where there has been a sizeable influx of a northern population or of German immigrants, such as the St. Louis area, integration has met with little resistance. There are areas in the Deep South, too, where the culture tends to be permissive of Negro integration. The French-Catholic section of Louisiana is such an area. In the 25 parishes of French-Catholic Louisiana, over half of the eligible Negroes are registered to vote, even though the proportion of Negroes to total population is approximately that of the State. In addition, no fewer than three state colleges and four private institutions of higher learning located in French-Catholic Louisiana have admitted Negroes. The only Louisiana state school outside the French-Catholic section to admit Negroes is Louisiana State University.

Our final concern is why the Deep South maintains an almost solid front of resistance to educational desegregation in spite of the apparent revolutionary changes which have occurred in its economic and social structure.[17]

---

[17] There is of course a voluminous literature about industrial development in the South. We cite just one item. E. William Noland, "Industry Comes of Age in the South," Social Forces, vol. 32, No. 1, Oct., 1953. Professor Noland shows that attitudes are changing toward Negro employment. One industrial relations manager ". . .insisted that he found no significant differences in on-the-job segregation policies in the three regions (Northeast, Middle West, South): in all three, supervisors were displaying increasing aggressiveness in fitting Negroes into work groups. "

The antique excuse of a large Negro population is no longer valid in much of the South. Many cities of the North have Negro populations which rival, and in some cases surpass, even proportionately, many Southern cities. For example, the 1950 Negro population of New York's Manhattan borough was 21 percent of the total; Chicago's 14 percent; Atlantic City 27 percent; Chester, Pennsylvania 21 percent; Cleveland, Ohio 16 percent; Gary, Indiana 29 percent. The 1950 Negro population in certain southern cities is not a preciably greater and sometimes smaller; e.g., compare Miami, Florida's 16 percent; Little Rock, Arkansas, 23 percent; Rome, Georgia 20 percent; Hattiesburg, Mississippi 34 percent; Roanoke, Virginia 16 percent. Admittedly, the choice of cities is selective and arbitrary. But, nevertheless, it successfully makes the point that the proportion of Negroes is not the sole determining factor, nor even the major factor, in determining attitudes toward integration in the public schools.

There are probably two primary factors responsible for the differential response of Northern and Southern peoples to integration. In the first place, the history of slavery and a plantation economy with its class control have had a profound conditioning effect on Southern attitudes. The associated cultural attitudes, described tentatively by Gillen, have been transmitted from generation to generation by fable and song. Idyllic stories of "The Tales of Uncle Remus" are the Southern counterpart of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." Children who cut their eyeteeth on happy stories of the old plantation have different attitudes from their Yankee cousins who are fed the much stronger medicine of Uncle Tom's Cabin.

In the second place, and most important, the South has had little experience in the business of integrating minority ethnic groups -- transient or continuing --into its population. The South is not a melting pot -- it is a pressure cooker.[18] In the North, on the other hand, the history of integrating various ethnic groups into the life of the community has produced basic attitudes and a political structure which expedites the process of integration. Through long practice the political system realizes more fully the ideals of the national image of a democratic system.

---

[18]In a seminar at Tulane University, March 28, 1957, Dr. E. Munger, of the American Universities Field Staff, compared the racial problem of South Africa to a pressure cooker, with the fire burning, and the safety valve blocked.

---

In the South, on the contrary, the political structure since the Civil War has been designed to achieve a directly contrary objective. The Southern political scene has been dominated by the "need" to maintain white supremacy and to exclude the Negroes from political power.[19] Nonetheless,

---

[19]The legislative actions and operations of anti-integration groups are reported well in Southern School News, issued monthly. See in addition: "Segregation Legislation in the South," by Florence B. Irving, New South, Feb., 1957; also, Paul Anthony, "Pro-Segregation Groups; History and Trends," New South, Jan., 1957; and Harold C. Fleming, "Resistance Movements and Racial Desegregation," The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, Vol. 304 (March, 1956), wherein Mr. Fleming identifies 20 different resistance groups.

For different types of reports, see Warren Breed: "Beaumont: College Desegregation without Popular Support," mimeographed by Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, Nov., 1956; The Reporter, March 8, 1956, "Alabama's Bus Strike," by Rev. Thomas R. Thrasher; pamphlet reprinted from Liberation, April, 1956, by Congress of Racial Equality, "Our Struggle," also a statement about the Alabama bus strike. For a foreigner's statement about Montgomery, see "French View of Montgomery," New York Times, March 17, 1957, in "Letters."

---

with progressing reenfranchisement of the Negro, the democratic political process is inexorably moving toward integration of the Negro into the body politic. The impact of Negro enfranchisement on the Louisiana political scene provides a case in point. In Louisiana the political process serves Negro ends in roughly the following manner:[20] [20]This statement was formulated by John Fenton and Kenneth Vines after having spent the summer of 1956 in doing field and statistical work for the Southern Regional Council. It appears in John H. Fenton, "Negro Voting in Louisiana," Research in Action, Vol. 1, No. 6, Oct., 1956; also in John H. Fenton and Kenneth N. Vines, "Negro Registration in Louisiana," American Political Science Review, June, 1957.

---

Fenton shows that in 1940 there were 803 Negroes registered in the state, 22,576 in 1948, 97,101 in 1952, and 161,410 in 1956. Interviews with leading Negro clergymen in New Orleans, March, 1957, indicate that the Negroes intend to press for civil rights legislation through increased political action.

---

1. For the political process to be operable as a force for integration, community attitudes must, first of all, be permissive with respect to Negro registration. If the white community is strongly and unalterably opposed to Negro registration and voting, the politicians will rarely seek the Negro vote. This is true, first, because the politician fears the reaction of his townspeople to such action on his part; and second, because he, too, will generally share the dominant attitudes. In Louisiana, resistance to registration is greatest in the plantation sections. In these areas the dominant anti-Negro attitudes are constantly reinforced by word of mouth (for example, a typical gathering of white folk will devote much time to a discussion of the less desirable qualities of their Negro brethren), by the objective fact of Negro ignorance and poverty, and by selective migration. In other sections of the state, the politician generally feels free to seek Negro votes.

2. Negro leaders must initiate a drive for registration and thus demonstrate the potential numerical strength of the Negro vote. Since the turn of the century the Negro in the South has not been in the habit of voting, and it has taken prodigious efforts on the part of Negro leaders to promote interest in voting among Negroes.

3. The sheriff is one of the most important elective officials in Louisiana parishes. The sheriff, by the very nature of his office, is subject to many temptations. One temptation to which many succumb is the classic "payoff" to permit gambling. When a sheriff permits gambling, he is invariably charged with "corruption of public office" by the solid, middle class people of his community. Therefore, he is compelled to turn to lower socio-economic groups for support.

4. The largest single potential source of votes of this variety available to the sheriff is the Negro vote. Therefore, he will tend to permit or surreptitiously encourage Negro registration, and will actively seek Negro support in election campaigns. He is seldom disappointed.

5. The reward of the Negro for his vote is a cessation of police brutality and promises made and sometimes kept with respect to such matters as employment of Negroes as Deputy Sheriffs, street improvements, and better school facilities. One can foresee the day when a promise made by serious candidates for political office will be an integrated public school system.

Thus we find that shifts in the geographic location and socio-economic place of the Negro in the social system placed him in an environment within which he could work toward a resolution of his grievances. In the North he could vote and elect representatives who were sympathetic to Negro views. These representatives, in turn, were able to raise the treatment of Negroes in the South from a narrow regional concern to a national issue. However, it was not until the Great Depression and the consequent differential suffering experienced by Negroes that a sufficient feeling of self-awareness developed to enable them to take advantage of the opportunities afforded by their changed geographic and socio-economic place in the greater community. In addition, the need to use the total population in total war and the demands of socio-economic efficiency helped expedite the fuller integration of the Negro into the life of the nation. The first major step toward fuller integration was the 1944 white primary decision, the second was the decision to integrate the armed forces,[21] and the third was the 1954 Public

---

[21] When the armed forces decided upon complete integration, Time Magazine, May 11, 1953, claimed that "the biggest single blow against segregation in the United States has been struck by the armed forces."

The New York Times, Feb. 14, 1954, refers to it as "one of the biggest stories of the twentieth century."

School Segregation decision; each reenforces the other.

The Faulkner point of view, shared by such spokesmen for the New South as Virginius Dabney, is well known -- the Negroes should pause; they should not go too fast. What Faulkner and Dabney cannot appraise is the momentum of the movement toward integration among Negroes. It is correct to say that they have a "desegregation psychosis," a set frame of mind in the Kenneth Burke and John Dewey sense. It is clear that the frustrations in occupation, in housing, in public transportation, and in educational restrictions provide the motivation for the "assault on segregation." Economic advancement and educational opportunity are the new symbols of emancipation. It is a major social movement, and one can not turn such movements on or off. It is a part of the process by which we achieve concensus, and history in this case is the chronology of the conflict in attempting to achieve it.

In the old 1896 world social peace was achieved through laws and class control compelling segregation. In the new post-1954 world social peace cannot be achieved until the structure of compulsory segregation by force of law is demolished. Educational desegregation is one way by which individual rights, new conceptions of social efficiency, and our institutional practices are being made more consistent with one another.

Tulane University

Clips - Ed. Ga.

SPECIMEN ONLY - NOT FOR USE. SPECIMEN ONLY - NOT FOR USE.

TO THE SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS:

ATLANTA BOARD OF EDUCATION

Application for Admission
Assignment or Transfer of Pupil

A separate application must be filled in completely and legibly in ink or typewriter and must be signed by both parents (if living), the parent to whom the child has been awarded by court proceedings, or the legal guardian of each pupil for whom assignment or transfer is requested. The application must be notarized at the time it is filed. It must be delivered to the school principal for transmittal to the Superintendent of Schools.

Application for enrollment at _____ School.

Date _____

Name of Child _____ Age _____ Sex _____

Date of Birth _____ Race _____

Present Grade _____

Home Address _____ Phone _____

Mother's Name _____
First Middle Last

Father's Name _____
First Middle Last

Name of Legal Guardian _____
First Middle Last

Child lives with: Mother _____ Father _____

Other _____
Explain

Occupation of Mother _____

Name of Employer _____ Address of Employer _____

Occupation of Father _____

Name of Employer _____ Address of Employer _____

Occupation of Legal Guardian _____

Name of Employer _____ Address of Employer _____

All Schools Attended (in order of attendance, give dates of attendance) _____

_____

_____

SPECIMEN ONLY - NOT FOR USE.

SPECIMEN ONLY - NOT FOR USE.

Date and Place Child First Entered School _____

Last School Attended _____ Last Grade Attended _____ Date _____

Names of Brothers and Sisters:

Name	Birthdate	School

Reason for Requesting Enrollment at _____ School:

_____

_____

_____

(If more space is needed, attach sheet or sheets)

Executed in its present form and attested to by

_____

this _____ day of _____, 19.....

_____
(Seal) Notary

_____
(Parent)

_____
(Parent)

_____
(Guardian)

Application will be determined by the Superintendent of Schools pursuant to the Resolution of the Atlanta Board of Education November 30, 1959, as amended, and upon consideration of the factors, and the effects or results thereof, as set forth by the Resolution. Further information, as well as personal interviews with the pupil and parents or guardian, may be necessary. Notice of the action taken on application shall be mailed to the parents or guardian within 30 days from the delivery of the application to the school principal, in no event later than June 15. Applicants dissatisfied with the Superintendent's decision may request in writing a hearing before the Board within 10 days of the Superintendent's decision.

Application accepted _____ Application rejected _____ Date _____

ASSIGNMENT AND TRANSFER OF PUPILS

Administrative Regulations

The Superintendent and his staff shall administer policies relating to the admission and school assignment of pupils, subject to review by and appeal to the Board.

1. Except as transfers are specifically authorized, pupils shall continue in schools to which previously assigned.

2. Parents who object to original assignment or transfer decisions may present a formal or informal appeal. A formal appeal shall be addressed to the Superintendent on the form prescribed by the Board and shall be in accordance with the resolution adopted by the Board on November 30, 1959, and amended January 4 and January 18, 1960. An informal appeal may be presented by telephone, letter or by otherwise communicating with Area Superintendents or other school administrators. The Board will hear and judge appeals only when presented on forms and under conditions prescribed by the Board.

3. Forms for application for transfer from a school or original assignment shall be made available at the Superintendent's office for issuance to the applicant or his parent or legal guardian.

4. Upon completion of the form, including notarization, the applicant, or the applicant's parents or guardian or both, shall deliver the application to the principal of the school of original assignment.

5. The principal shall transmit the application to the Area Superintendent in whose Area the applicant requests assignment. A completed data sheet of background information about the applicant shall be attached to the completed application form.

6. Upon receipt of the completed application form and a completed data sheet, the Area Superintendent shall schedule an interview with the student and his parents.

7. The Area Superintendent shall cause to be completed a report of the characteristics of the school to which transfer is requested.

8. After consultation with the Assistant Superintendent for Pupil Personnel Services, the Area Superintendent shall arrange the time and places of a series of tests to be administered by the office of the Assistant Superintendent for Pupil Personnel Services. The applicant for transfer is to be informed by telephone or letter or both of the scheduled tests.

9. The series of tests administered by the office of the Assistant Superintendent for Pupil Personnel Services shall include standardized achievement tests, standardized scholastic aptitude tests, and a personality adjustment test.

10. The Assistant Superintendent for Pupil Personnel Services shall record the results of the tests on an appropriate background sheet, along with a professional interpretation of the scores, and transmit to the Area Superintendent concerned.

11. The Area Superintendent shall assemble a file for each student requesting transfer and transmit to the Deputy Superintendent. The file shall contain (a) the original application for transfer, (b) the principal's report, (c) the report about the characteristics of the requested school, and (d) the report of the Assistant Superintendent for Pupil Personnel Services or a member of his division showing results of the tests.

13. A Student Transfer Reviewing Committee shall be convened by the Deputy Superintendent to study the completed folder of each student requesting transfer. The Reviewing Committee shall include the Deputy Superintendent, one or more Area Superintendents, the Assistant Superintendent for Pupil Personnel Services (or Director of Psychological Services), the Assistant Superintendent for Instructional Services (or Director of Instruction), and such other personnel as may be considered desirable. Interviews with the student may be scheduled at the discretion of the Deputy Superintendent.

14. Recommendations of the Student Transfer Reviewing Committee shall be submitted to the Superintendent upon completion of the reviewing session.

THE NEGRO SCHOOL CHILD IN ATLANTA

A REPORT IN PICTURES

A few Negro schools—Washington High, for example—look good from the outside, even though they lack such elementary facilities as adequate libraries, assembly rooms, cafeterias, and gymnasiums.

Behind the beautiful front there are classrooms like this. Is it shocking to find schools like this within the city limits of Atlanta?

There is not room enough in Negro schools, so it is necessary for children to "double up" and for teachers to teach two "shifts" of students. This is known as the "double session".

Negro elementary and junior high school pupils get only 3½ hours of schooling per day instead of the six hours given in white schools.

"Outdoor Assembly" because there is no indoor assembly room. Negro schools have no auditoriums, no gymnasiums, only a few ill-equipped shops.

Although there is a kindergarten in each elementary school for white children, there are only two kindergartens for approximately 1,600 Negro children of kindergarten age—both very recent additions.

Bush Mountain, one of our city's public schools, does not provide even the minimum sanitary necessities of running water and flush toilets.

An educational program which countenances this is, at best, mediocre. At worst, it breeds personal maladjustments, social disorganization and crime.

In spite of the "double session" Negro schools are overcrowded. Teachers in Negro elementary and junior high schools have an average of 52 pupils in each class, compared with 29 in white classes.

These boys are bringing in the school's drinking water from a nearby well. Decent school conditions and a full day in school should be provided for them in the interest of our entire city's welfare.

Many schools for Negro children, like this one, were begun twenty years ago, and have never been completed.

These young people need more and better school buildings; more and better school equipment; more and better instruction. Not until these needs are fully met can Atlanta Negro youth receive the basic chance to develop good and useful citizenship.

HOW OUR SCHOOLS ARE SHARED

OF THE 70,894 ATLANTA CHILDREN OF SCHOOL AGE

26,528 (37.4%) ARE NEGROES

44,456 (62.6%) ARE WHITES

YET... OF THE 65 PUBLIC SCHOOL BUILDINGS IN ATLANTA...

ONLY 13 (20%) ARE FOR NEGROES

WHILE 52 (80%) ARE FOR WHITES

OR IN TERMS OF INVESTMENT IN SCHOOL LAND AND BUILDINGS, AS OF DECEMBER, 1941, WE HAVE INVESTED...

$1.00

for Negro Children for every

$6.00

for White Children

More than one-third of Atlanta's school age children are Negroes, but Atlanta's present investment in land and buildings for Negro schools is only one-sixth of the total investment.

Our city's expenditure per Negro pupil is but little more than one-third of the amount spent for each white child. The correction of these conditions means adding to the strength and well being of the whole community. It means correction of conditions where social consequences have been too evident, too long.

CITIZENS COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC EDUCATION

239 Auburn Avenue, N. E. Room 400

ATLANTA, GEORGIA

Fellowship

Does the Deep South Really Say Never?

THERE IS ANOTHER SOUTH

COMMENTS BY EIGHT LEADING SOUTHERNERS ON THE SATURDAY EVENING POST ARTICLES

LILLIAN SMITH • HARRY GOLDEN
DAN WHITSETT • ROBERT GRAETZ
CARL LANDES • HAROLD WHITE
WILL CAMPBELL • L. H. PITTS

A FELLOWSHIP REPRINT

Love Will Find A Way

We live in a world of conflict, in which it is widely believed that disputes between nations, classes and races can be settled by force. The Fellowship of Reconciliation does not share this view. Violent solutions to conflict can, at best, only rechannel old animosities and substitute new problems for old. Because the FOR is founded on faith in the fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man, it seeks to answer injustice with love and nonviolence. Over the more than forty years of its existence, the FOR and its members have contributed in many ways to the solution of besetting social problems in this spirit.

The most recent example is the committee to Aid the Bombed Christians of the South, an FOR-administered group sponsored by ten leading Protestant clergymen. Perhaps you have already read about this Committee's work in helping to rebuild parsonages and homes wrecked by racist nightriders in Alabama, Georgia and Florida.

And you are no doubt aware of the FOR contribution to the founding of such organizations as the American Civil Liberties Union, the National Conference of Christians and Jews, the Workers Defense League, the Congress of Racial Equality and the Religion and Labor Foundation. Many of these groups now far exceed the FOR in membership, and the bulk of their members are not pacifists, but they fulfil important tasks in a way that the FOR itself could not.

Yet it is this role of mother and midwife to such organizations that illustrates our most precious trust and underscores the wide-ranging implications of Christian pacifism. If you are an FOR member, you can take pride in this trust. It is not a matter of laurels to rest on, but of a core of faith in which to find the answers to whatever challenge tomorrow may bring—of joining with all men of good will to reap the harvest of that faith.

If you are not yet a member, but feel that you share this faith, you are warmly invited to write for further information and a copy of That Men May Live, the FOR's Statement of Purpose.

THE FELLOWSHIP OF RECONCILIATION FOR Nyack · New York

THERE IS ANOTHER SOUTH

SOME COMMENTS ON THE SATURDAY EVENING POST'S SERIES, "THE DEEP SOUTH SAYS 'NEVER'"

BY

LILLIAN SMITH

HAROLD WHITE

WILL CAMPBELL

HARRY GOLDEN

ROBERT GRAETZ

DAN WHITSETT

CARL LANDES

L. H. PITTS

The POST Says—

In mid-June the Saturday Evening Post began publication of a series of five articles on the progress of racial integration under the title "The Deep South Says 'Never'."

Author of the articles was John Bartlow Martin, an Illinoisan previously noted for some excellent reportage on the subject of penology. His instructions, said the Post, "were simply, to report the truth—with special emphasis on the Deep South, where, we believe, the ultimate battle over integration may well be fought." Not uncharacteristically, the Post described the series as the "most exhaustive and penetrating look at the problems of integration yet published in an American periodical."

Author Martin left three major conclusions with his readers: (1) that there is virtually no white sentiment favorable to integration in the Deep South, (2) that the Klan and the White Citizens Councils are so strong as to control the situation, and (3) that in consequence of these and other facts there is no indication that integration will occur in the foreseeable future.

Fellowship asked a number of people who live and work in the South to comment on the Martin articles, and particularly on these points. We think it significant that these observations are not drawn from a relatively brief visit, but from the observations of those who live in the thick of the struggle.

THE PRICE OF SILENCE

BY LILLIAN SMITH

ONE of America's best-known writers, especially on matters of race, born in Georgia and a lifelong resident of that state, Lillian Smith has been studiously ignored by editors and reporters seeking news of the progress of integration in the South. Perhaps they do not want to hear a white Southerner say, as Miss Smith said in her letter agreeing to write for this issue: "The big fact is: segregation is loosening up and breaking up and disappearing every day. Tension is high; anxiety is widespread; but segregation is changing and people's minds are changing."

Lillian Smith, formerly the editor of South Today, has written Strange Fruit, Killers of the Dream, Now Is the Time, and other works.

WE ARE PAYING a high price indeed for the silence of the Southern people, for there is fear and there is too much silence. But we are paying a high price also for the silence in the North which is smothering the good things done and said every day by white southerners who oppose segregation.

What the reporter from the Saturday Evening Post did—and it reveals a shocking lapse of integrity and reportorial technique—was simply to omit the names of every white person in the Deep South who is working or speaking out or writing against segregation. (The two he mentioned as backsliders—Ralph McGill and William Faulkner—have never been opposed to segregation in the first place, so their backsliding was only a matter of inches.)

Now to omit the Southerners who are actively working, he had to shut his eyes tight and stuff his ears, for this omission covered hundreds of prominent ministers of almost every denomination; thousands of hardworking white church women, prominent in their communities; hundreds of college students; hundreds of college professors; thousands of social workers, health workers, and thousands working for Federal agencies; hundreds of prominent women active in the League of Women Voters; hundreds who are working quite openly against segregation in the YWCA; hundreds of librarians; many among the Junior Chamber of Commerce; quite a few prominent lawyers; quite a few politicians (cautious but ready to move in the right direction); a few mayors; a few leaders on boards of education; a large number, perhaps a million, of G.I.s who accepted integration in the armed forces and will accept it quietly when it comes to their home town; and thousands of school teachers who want integration or are willing to accept it when it comes.

Perhaps the reporter does not know my name, for he did not interview me. And yet, would it not seem reasonable to expect a first-class reporter to know the name of the Georgia author whose books on human relations have been translated into more languages and have sold more in this country and throughout the world than those of any other writer—here or elsewhere—on this subject? He should, somehow, know that I speak frequently in the South to university groups, church groups, YWCA groups, interracial groups; and that my recent little book, Now is the Time, has been and is being used by many groups in the South working on this critical problem.

He should know Mrs. Dorothy Tilly's name, too. She is a well-known Methodist leader who has worked indefatigably on this problem of segregation.

It was his business to find not only two of us, but the many intelligent, experienced white Southerners who are making creative efforts to build public opinion and work out harmonious ways of meeting our ordeal.

Some of our people have been forced to work under cover. Governors, legislatures, White Citizens Councils have made this necessary. But no one should underestimate their influence, their usefulness or their numbers. If he had really been an alert reporter he would have written about the underground movement of democratic, Christian leaders who have been forced to do their work this way. But he found what he wanted to.

I am worried about the Southern silence; but I am worried more about the silence of our mass magazines and TV networks (their news coverage is good; their forums have not yet been opened to a white Southerner opposed to segregation). Since the Supreme Court decision, the South has been full of reporters from Northern papers, only one of whom has interviewed me. Other Southern leaders have told me they have not been interviewed. It is a dangerous thing for this distorted picture of the South to be built up: discouraging to Negroes and to the whites who need to know that there are hundreds of thousands working as hard as they are. This knowledge would give hope and stiffen resolution.

A Loss to Every American

I've been trying to decide which was costing all Americans the most, the monetary or psychological loss as a result of discrimination. But then, how can anyone measure what happens to a person when so treated? But I believe someone is suffering an untold loss . . . and I think it's every last one of us who call ourselves Americans.

—P. D. East in The Petal Paper, Petal, Mississippi, April 4, 1957

NEVER IS A LONG, LONG TIME

BY HAROLD WHITE

PRESBYTERIAN minister Harold White, formerly of Americus, Georgia, and now of Belvidere, N. C., writes: "I never had occasion to cross the line of social segregation until I ate a meal with white and Negro Boy Scout officials in Americus, Georgia, in 1946. Because we had a common aim, it seemed natural for us to eat together. It seems ironic now that Koinonia Farm should be boycotted by Americus people for integration in a common aim to promote Christian fellowship."

FOR ANYONE who has lived in the Deep South, as I have, the first reaction to the Post series is not, "Has the Deep South been correctly quoted?" We know how emphatically correct that "Never" is in summing up the dominant attitude to integration. The real question raised by the article is this: "Will the South's bite always be as bad as its bark?" Mr. Martin leaves the impression that the answer to this is "Yes."

He may be right; I have no crystal ball saying he is wrong. But "never" is a long, long time, and it is quite possible that the loud bark of Southern politicians merely seeks to hide that toothless feeling resulting from the extraction of teeth in the segregation laws.

The South is often dubbed by her critics as "the Bible Belt" as well as an area of benighted prejudice, but the fact is that the traditional loyalty of the South to the Bible may be its only hope for facing and solving its greatest social crisis of this century. Since its loyalty to the Bible is often mixed up with unbiblical superstitions, the South can reach a solution only if it recovers the Biblical wheat from the un-biblical chaff.

White people who fancy that the Bible supports racial segregation are deceived, but they are not guilty of racial prejudice merely because they insist that their children must not become close playmates with unsanitary or vulgar children, either white or Negro. If there are more of such children among Negroes than among whites, one reason is the fact that Negro schools have long been unequal in equipment and training to white schools. To that the South must say, "Never again."

THE DEEP SOUTH SAYS "PRETTY SOON"

BY WILL D. CAMPBELL

FEW men have a better opportunity to assess the South than "Southern preacher" Will Campbell, whose more mouth-filling title is Associate Executive Secretary of the Department of Racial and Cultural Relations of the National Council of Churches. His office is in Nashville, Tennessee, but his parish is the whole South, "upper" and "Deep" alike. In this article, Mr. Campbell speaks, of course, for himself—not officially for the NCC.

IT IS INTERESTING and a bit amusing to hear people talk about the South. The Deep South says "Never!" according to John Bartlow Martin and the Saturday Evening Post. It is assumed that by South they mean the sweet Magnolia, mint-julep-sippin', veranda-sittin' dream South that still exists in the minds of some of us but is about as stable and predictable as a dream of any other variety.

This same element talks about the churches in the South. Dead! No witness here—silent. One can hear rumblings from the East of, "Shame, shame, the churches ought to do something!"

One thing needs to be understood. The never-saying South and the don't-rock-the-boat churches are not so relevant at this juncture as they are generally assumed to be. In any revolution there are those revolting and those being revolted against. Nobody ever blamed the Archbishop of Canterbury for not being chaplain to George Washington's troops. But the difference didn't lie with the Archbishop. Washington had his own chaplain and the Archbishop was as relevant to the situation as a cat in calculus.

The same thing might be said of the White Citizens Councils and the Klans. While certainly not totally irrelevant, these institutions now have as their role not action so much as reaction or at best interaction. They have not chosen this role, but it has been assigned. They have been assigned it by another South and other churches.

The other South? Forty-five thousand people walking down the streets in Montgomery, Alabama. A mass meeting in New Orleans. A boycott in Orangeburg, South Carolina. A college walk-out at Alcorn, Mississippi. Voting clinics springing up all over. The Southern Leaders Conference. "A statement to the South and Nation." Messages (not manifestoes) to nationally elected officials—all these are the South, too. And this South doesn't say never. It says now—or at least pretty soon!

And the "dead" churches in this South? They sing hymns, gather in church meeting-houses, pray for those who exploit them and deny them their rights, turn the other cheek, don't strike back. Is this familiar? If it isn't, the Bible Belt had better buckle on the New Testament. The churches, far from being dead in the South, are alive as never before. For God doesn't live in a plantation house, and Jesus Christ didn't say "On this white rock I'll build my church." Part of the body may be sick but another part is strong and healthy.

It has been assumed for many generations that rights would be granted to the Negro minority of the South when the mind of the white man was educated to it and when his heart was conditioned properly by preaching and exhortation. But if the back-seat bus riders had waited for this process they would have died of old age at the bus stop.

This South didn't wait, and those who say "Never" had nothing to do with it. Although they are trying hard now to have something to do with the outcome, the success they are having isn't too impressive, and more of their South than is generally known is saying, "Who cares? Let them ride."

In another city the churches of the never-saying South, worshipping at the shrine of harmony, preferred for the most part not to discuss "that ole race thing." It was messy and people got upset and it would surely split churches and preachers would get fired and some of the best members would quit giving and just all sorts of things unbecoming to a church with a Standard of Excellence banner hanging on the wall for the most daily Bible readers.

But on a given week the word got around town that there would be Negroes attempting to worship in white church houses next Sunday. As a result dozens of churches discussed the issue frankly and honestly. Without this most of them would not have done so for another generation. Some decided to seat them as anyone else. Others voted to direct them to the nearest Negro church. But the point is that while they didn't act on their own they had no choice but to react to a situation which would not have occurred under the assumption that hearts and minds have to be changed before a beginning can be made.

The South says "never"? Well, yes. But the South also says "pretty soon." And this South has some rather important factors on its side. Among other things it has a method for this revolution which the South being revolted against can't understand very well. Because to most people it is an unfamiliar weapon, nonviolent resistance is usually ruled out. (Besides it's so confusing after all the accumulated stories about "you can't buy a gun or a switchblade knife any more—they're all stacked up in the quarters.")

As figures of speech there might have been a time when the South could be divided into the veranda-sitters and the cotton-pickers. If so, whoever said, "The cottonpickin' South will rise again," was right. The veranda is rotten and the mint is wilting along the garden walk. The cottonpickin' South has risen indeed.

THE BIGOTS ARE MAKING THE NOISE

BY HARRY L. GOLDEN

AMERICAN newspapers, by and large, are distinguished in these days neither for their independence nor for their literateness. Their front pages represent a search for the sensational; their editorial pages could be—and sometimes are—poured from the molds of the NAM. One of the rare oases in this desert of mediocrity is Harry Golden's paper, THE CAROLINA ISRAELITE, published in Charlotte, North Carolina. Equally at home in reflections on the classics, recollections of a childhood home, or strictures on the racist antics of his neighbors, Golden's essays are collector's items.

THERE IS TRUTH in all of Mr. Martin's observations, but I am sure he would be the first to agree that you cannot "wrap up" this desegregation story in five weeks and in five articles. In a previous decade a similar story of "the South" was told (by Southern boys, by the way) in terms of a Tobacco Road in Georgia, and a bit of incest in Mississippi. But just as there was no particularly unique southern way of life then, there is no southern viewpoint today, not even in the matter of racial segregation.

The South is many things: a cotton patch and a hydrogen-bomb plant, which tells part of our story. The South is Senator Sam Ervin (N. C.), who fights against "civil rights" legislation, and Tom Lassiter, editor of the Smithfield, (N. C.) Herald, who writes weekly editorials urging compliance with the Supreme Court decisions. The South is Governor Hodges (N. C.), who urges the Negroes to accept "voluntary" segregation, and playwright Paul Green (The Lost Colony), who publicly broke with the Governor for "lacking the imagination to go forward and end racial segregation." The South is Senator Eastland, the champion of the "White Citizens Councils," and the city of Charlotte, North Carolina (160,000), where the directors of the "white supremacy" group spent two days vainly trying to get a civic leader or public official to introduce Senator Eastland at their scheduled meeting.

The South is many voices, some strident, some calm. At present the bigots are making the most noise. But there are thousands of Southerners who know that racial segregation can no longer be tolerated on any religious, moral, and legal basis. And on an economic basis, segregation is impossible to maintain. I know a fellow in South Carolina who is head of his local White Citizens Council, and who has also performed an outstanding job in bringing new industry to his state in recent years. He does not yet realize that at lunchtime, when he negotiates for this new industry, he is doing more to end racial segregation than all the NAACPs put together. His efforts at night to maintain segregation are part of the South's last shudder to hang on to a dream of the old plantation in a world full of cogwheels, a day-to-day industrialization without parallel in the history of our country. The dream is of a pleasant time when the house stood up on the hill and the smoke came out of the chimney at twilight. But today the diesel truck goes up that hill and it doesn't care who drives it.

As to Mr. Martin's prediction that desegregation is unthinkable in any foreseeable future, I prefer to get out on my own limb: (a) that the three largest cities of North Carolina will desegregate the schools this year*; (b) that all other Southern cities of 40,000 and over will desegregate the schools within five years; and (c) that the rest of the South will follow during this generation, after it will have seen that nothing happened—nothing happened except greater pride, greater wealth, and greater human dignity. And I base my opinion on a conviction that thousands of Southerners in every walk of life agree with Burke that, "All that is required for evil to triumph is that good men do nothing."

* Since Mr. Golden wrote this, Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Greensboro announced the beginning of desegregation of their schools.

The Voice of God and the Verdict of History

. . . The Christian is obligated to accept and follow the teachings of Christ with respect to the dignity and worth of every individual, irrespective of his race or position in human society. Any movement, system or law that denies this truth by statement, implication or social practice is not in accord with the teachings of Jesus nor the principles of our Christian faith.

In accordance with these teachings, this Commission protests the violence in all its forms that is used against Negro people in the current segregation issue or at any other time. In recognition of the Negro's rights as a citizen, the law enforcement agencies of local, state and national governments should protect him, irrespective of his position or culture, from lawless attacks on his person or property.

We are witnessing today the betrayal of [our] freedoms by vocal minorities in some communities and churches who are able to arouse sufficient opposition to force the resignation of pastors and to incite retaliation against peaceful citizens who speak or act according to their convictions on racial justice and interracial goodwill. The people of our nation should be reminded that both the voice of God and the verdict of history warn us that those who deny these freedoms to others do not long retain them for themselves.

—from the report of the Christian Life Commission, Southern Baptist Convention

THE SOUTH'S OTHER ARMY

BY ROBERT GRAETZ

PASTOR of Trinity Lutheran Church (Negro) in Montgomery, Alabama, the Rev. Robert Graetz (white) played a vital role in the widely publicized nonviolent struggle against segregated buses in that city. Twice bombed, Mr. Graetz planted a tree in the bomb crater on his front lawn and reminded those who came to its dedication that "while in the midst of life there is death, so in the midst of death there is life."

JOHN BARTLOW MARTIN'S analysis of resistance in the Deep South is startling, and appears to be correct—as far as he has gone. For after all, the very title of his articles, "The Deep South Says 'Never,'" indicates that this is essentially a description of the Segregation Army.

Neglected were both the Integration Army and that group of unknown size that fights on neither side, whose battle-cry is "Silence is golden." An analysis of either of these latter groups would be a Herculean task. The segregation forces have impressed on the Deep South a rigid system of fascist thought-control, so much so that men have lost their jobs because of chance remarks made to personal "friends."

As we look beyond the massive bulwarks erected by the Citizens Councils and the Klans, however, we can see several factors operating from within which will bring about the eventual defeat of segregation. Martin could scarcely have learned about these from his conversations with segregationist leaders; these factors are mostly beyond their understanding. I can see six forces at work. There may be many more.

(1) The high cost of maintaining segregation. Talk is cheap, but when the bus company in Montgomery, Alabama, was losing thousands of dollars during the boycott, the trickle of cash gifts from sympathizers was unimpressive. My home state of West Virginia was quick to announce to its taxpayers that they had saved a substantial sum of money by integrating the public schools. Many Citizens Council members in Alabama have set out to save themselves some money too, simply by not renewing their memberships.

(2) Defeatism on the part of many segregation leaders. Naturally no Council leader in his right mind would tell a reporter all his troubles. But a man with troubles has to tell someone. Once in a while these men will confide, un-knowingly, in some of our leaders in the integration movement. Many such conversations have been reported, indicating that local Council leaders are losing much of the grass-roots support which they had during the times of great crisis. They admit that they are fighting a losing battle, that the so-called "Solid South" is fast shrinking. In our state they are even more frightened by the ominous clouds gathering on the horizon, of Negroes preparing to register and vote. Politicians who have been riding the back of the race issue know there is stormy weather ahead.

(3) The disturbed conscience of the Southern white liberal. A man has to live with himself and his God, even if he can't get along with his neighbors. Scarcely a day goes by that I do not meet or hear of another white liberal. And every one of them tells me the same thing: "You don't realize how many people there are who feel just like I do."

Why have we not heard from them? Because they have been intimidated; their jobs have been threatened, or their lives. But they cannot maintain both their principles and their silence forever. Christian ministers are beginning to realize this. You can expect to hear more and more men of the cloth raising their voices in defense of freedom and justice. Some of them may lose their jobs, but that is a cheap enough price to pay for an unshackled conscience.

(4) Unadvertised integrationist groups. The Councils on Human Relations, FOR groups, and others like them are generally small and weak, but they are growing in size and influence. This is the leaven that is working quietly but effectively throughout the South. These are the construction battalions building bridges, establishing lines of communication, preparing the way for those who are to follow.

(5) The power of Christian love and nonviolence. The buses of Montgomery, Alabama, are integrated now. The Negroes of that city carried on their campaign with dignity and in the spirit of Christ. They learned to love those who hated them, to pray for those who cursed them. They learned that it is the weak man who uses hatred and violence; it is the strong man who remains at peace and relies on spiritual force alone. It is this philosophy which characterizes the movement for freedom among Negroes throughout the South. There is no defense against Christian love. It cannot be defeated.

(6) The will of the Almighty God. The Lord said to the Pharaoh of Egypt, "Let my people go," and He led them forth to the promised land. It is my conviction that God speaks the same to our modern Pharaohs, and that He is about to lead the Negroes out of their bondage. If this is indeed God's will, no man can stand in His way.

Brotherhood or Bigotry

It is commonly understood . . . that all men are created in the image of God and intended to be brothers. If you consider this an impracticable doctrine, then you may very well have to surrender your Christian faith. The Church has little else to offer.

—The Rev. Hugh McKee, Rector
St. Martin's Episcopal Church
New Orleans, Louisiana

THE KLAN HAS SPENT ITSELF

BY DAN WHITSETT

FOR member and minister of the First Methodist Church of Sylacauga, Alabama, the Rev. Dan Whitsett writes of the Klan from first-hand contact. Shortly before Easter the night-riders burned a cross on the Whitsett lawn, and anonymous callers threatened the lives of his associate minister's family. That Sunday Dan Whitsett talked to his congregation, and as a result lighted crosses blazed all during Holy Week, on almost thirty Sylacauga lawns, placed there to remind passers-by that the Cross speaks not for hatred and violence, but for love and forgiveness.

THE KU KLUX KLAN has spent itself in Alabama. There is nothing worse it can do without being driven from the state. Alabamans generally do not believe in integration, but they will no longer tolerate violence, intimidation, and usurpation of the law by this hooded mob.

In our state the Klan gained some respectability by having a so-called minister head the organization. "Preachers" would tell how God's Holy Word forbade the mixing of races; "women's auxiliaries" took baskets to the sick; the Klan "assisted" an aged Negro; Klansmen marched down the aisle of a few rural churches and left a few dollars offering. The silence of the public was interpreted as sanction of its motives and methods.

But then members of the Klan burned crosses and organized telephone committees to harass anyone who spoke against them. From their meetings, individuals went out to bomb Negro homes or churches and to commit other acts of violence which the group meetings would inspire but disclaim as an organization.

Mobile was the first city to take action against the lawlessness of the Klan with an ordinance forbidding the burning of crosses and rewards for the apprehension of anyone violating the ordinance or dynamiting houses. The violence ceased immediately.

The Reverend Alvin Horn, grand dragon of the U.S. Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, Inc., who ran off with a fifteen-year old girl, appeared on June 8 at a State Rally held in Sylacauga. Members paraded illegally and burned crosses at the First Methodist and First Baptist churches. An anonymous death threat was made that night to the wife of my associate minister.

Public reaction was immediate. The interdenominational Ministerial Association, the City Council, and most of the newspapers in the state called for the apprehension and prosecution of the perpetrators of these vicious acts. Alvin Horn resigned as State head of the Klan.

The local Klan offered public apologies to both churches and the City Council. It disavowed any authorization of either the cross-burnings or the threatening calls. It urged enforcement of the city's new ordinance against burning of crosses.

The Klan should be assured the right of peaceable assembly and free speech, but not license to violate the rights of other citizens and the laws of our State. When it sees that clergymen will not be intimidated or cowed, that right-thinking people will not tolerate violence, join in mob action or be guided by ignorant and prejudiced leaders—then the Klan will cease to exist except as an ineffectual organization for a few fanatics to meet and rant and rave. A few scattered incidents of the night-riders still will take place, but I do not believe the Klan as an organization will ever again be accepted in our State.

Problems in human relations remain to be solved. A small but ever-increasing number of respected citizens realize that we are going to live under our Constitution and eventually by the high Christian and ethical standards of our Christian churches. Slowly but resolutely groups are meeting biracially to pray and plan, not only for coexistence but also for unanimity of purpose, equal opportunities, and joint responsibilities in a Christian society.

An Experience in Worship

Within the bounds of our own Assembly there exists a flagrant violation of the right to worship. Members of the Koinonia community near Americus, Georgia, state that their communal life is not primarily a social or agricultural experiment but an experience in worship. They have professed their allegiance to this nation, they have denied affiliation in any subversive party, they have violated no laws, they have been model citizens, and have made a significant contribution to farming techniques in this area. Yet because their experiment knows no barrier of color they are treated as enemies of society. Their property has been strafed, dynamited, and burned; their children maligned, their lives jeopardized. Even worse, many respectable citizens of the community have joined in an economic boycott designed to destroy their financial stability and drive them to ruin.

The General Assembly would call the attention of Protestants in America to the danger of trying to destroy those who dare to live by their convictions, even though they may differ from them in their opinions. If these persecutors persist, then let them now appoint their children who shall some day build the sepulchers to the prophets they have stoned.

—from Freedom—the Christian Concept,
Christian Relations Report of the 97th General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, U.S. (Southern) April 1957, Birmingham, Alabama

CHANGE IS THE ORDER OF THE DAY

BY CARL LANDES

CARL LANDES, Southern born and bred, was once an FOR staff member, doing rural work. Today he teaches in an Alabama College.

WHEN "CHANGE" is the order of the day, and "revolution" is met by "counter-revolution," one is apt to wonder frequently with Benjamin Franklin whether the sun is "rising" or "setting." Current magazine and newspaper stories seem to indicate that the sun of brotherhood is setting, at least in the "Deep South," and that positive forces working for justice and brotherhood of the races have been driven to cover.

There is enough truth in such statements to make many of us who were born and raised in the South feel humble and penitent. Yet there ought not be a monopoly on penitence in Dixie. A New York Negro leader speaking in Nashville recently said, "This is not a Southern problem, this is a national and world problem. The North may be a bit more subtle, but—," and he gave a long list of evidence to substantiate his case.

As I see it, most whites in the "Deep South" fall into four main groups:

(1) There are the "one hundred percenters": segregationists to the last ditch, White Citizens Council members, KKK, etc. The Constitution and the Bible are their "foundation stones." There are many educated (?) in this group, but as one attends their rallies, one gets the impression that the bulk of the membership is drawn from low-income, uneducated groups.

At the moment, this group has the limelight because it does things that make two- and three-inch headline news stories. It will use any type of violence it deems necessary to gain its ends, including dynamite and murder. I could be mistaken, but I believe it is riding its crest, since the vast majority of the population is opposed to its violence, especially business forces who are trying to lure industry south, but also many of the rank-and-file citizens.

(2) There is a larger group who would like to see segregation continued, but (in the recent words of a banker) "don't want anything to do with the White Citizens Councils." They have had the pattern of segregation drilled into them from birth, as have many Negroes.

This group has never before seriously thought about the ethics of segregation or its relationship to the Christian faith. But when you are put in the position where you must defend an injustice inherited from your parents and the past, you have to think. When you think, God has a chance to get in a few thoughts you hadn't intended: "Suppose the tables were turned, and whites were the objects of discrimination?" Like Saul of Tarsus, many suddenly discover that they can no longer "kick against the pricks." Saul didn't plan it that way either, but it happened. Some are actually beginning to realize that we live in a "colored" world, and that the "colored" people are rapidly rising to power, and so they flounder on the threshold of the back door to brotherhood: self-preservation of the white race.

(3) A third group—growing, I think—is well characterized by a minister: "I know integration is coming. It probably should have come a long time ago, but this is a new idea to many of us. Give us time." (I know he has had a century, but no one has seriously tried to give him any idea besides segregation before.)

Or, like the woman whose daughter I tried to get to our college: "Does your college believe in integration?" And, on being told that it was the policy of the trustees, the denomination and the administration, "Then my daughter will go elsewhere. I know integration is coming, but I feel too deeply about this to help it along."

The violence of the White Citizens Councils, and the marvelous spirit of love and nonviolence of the vast majority of our Negro brethren, will move this group closer to the position of justice, integration and brotherhood. It won't happen overnight, but as one moves around down here, one senses it rather frequently.

(4) There is a sizable minority who know that integration and equality are right, ought to come, must come—and they are working at it. This group is probably overloaded with ministers, educators, and students, but there are increasing numbers of lay people, inside the church and out, who are coming to this position.

It is impossible to know the number, because they work under considerable pressure. Many of their activities must be without publicity, or they would lose their jobs, or find a bomb "in the right place."

Is the sun "rising" or "setting" on Dixie? I believe it is rising, but we may not yet have passed that "darkest moment before dawn," Things may get worse before they get better, but right now I'd rather be in the heart of Dixie than anywhere in the world. We are moving; and the Great Engineer can always switch a moving engine.

Sign of the Times. On one of the main routes through the South, this unexpected invitation by a Virginia motel startles hundreds of drivers daily. Owner Ralph Grimes, a former Philadelphian, explains breezily: "Somebody has to set these Virginians straight." Trouble? None. Business? Fine—two new buildings are under construction. Photo by Alfred Hassler.

DEEP IN THE HEART OF DIXIE

BY L. H. PITTS

THE Rev. L. H. Pitts is executive secretary of the Georgia Teachers and Education Association (Negro), with offices in Atlanta, Georgia.

MR. MARTIN'S APPRAISALS of the strength of the Citizens Council and the Klan are both fairly accurate. Who could have believed that intelligent men would find themselves taking pride in sounding like men from the Dark Ages? The men who lead the Citizens Councils and the Klan are no longer the unintelligent, rabble-rousing, traditional Southerners, but are almost statesmanlike in appearance and expression. This alone has got them a wider forum and is gaining sympathy for the cause they espouse.

Nevertheless, I think Mr. Martin is wrong when he suggests that they seem likely to control the situation indefinitely, with or without violence. From extensive travel and many contacts in Georgia and throughout the South, I am convinced that there is a growing resistance to the kind of intolerance and injustice represented by the utterances of these groups. Statements by Southern church groups and educators suggest that the spirit of fair play and good will is having a rebirth in the South. To say that "There is virtually no white opposition to segregation and if any exists it has been silenced," is a gross overstatement. There are white people in Georgia who are working day and night in opposition to what segregation intends, people who believe in the right of all men to human dignity. Without fanfare of publicity they have strung up a veritable network of lines of communication between people and groups breaking over denominational, racial and cultural lines.

There are many groups in the South meeting regularly and working openly for desegregation. They do not get the publicity that the Councils and the Klan do, partly because they recognize that the process is an educational one. But if the Councils and the Klan knew of the spiritual and social revolution going on right in their own communities, and in some cases in their own homes, they would be shaken to the core.

Within ten minutes of my home is an institution with a desegregated student body. My own alma mater, Paine College, in Augusta, Georgia, recently passed a resolution to desegregate its student body. White Georgia teachers and administrators voted for a resolution supporting desegregation, at the recent meeting of the National Education Association.

The South must have some spiritual and social engineers who will come up with new and daring techniques, compelling enough, sincere enough, calm enough, and with love enough that it cannot be lightly passed over. When such leadership is developed the sensitive conscience of the South will be so alerted that the response will be astounding, and "deep in the heart of Dixie" will blossom the kind of community in which a man can walk erect and look his brother man in the eye.

THE STRUGGLE FOR

RACIAL EQUALITY

BY MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR.
AND LILLIAN SMITH

ANOTHER FELLOWSHIP REPRINT

SIXTEEN PAGES • ONLY 10C

FELLOWSHIP PUBLICATIONS
Box 271 • Nyack, N. Y.

FOR Field Secretaries

Midwest: (temporarily vacant); Pacific Coast: Wilson Riles, 1205 W. Jefferson Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif.; Middle Atlantic: Charles C. Walker, Cheyney, Penna.; New England: Robert Gussner, 10 Kirkland Rd., Cambridge, Mass.; Great Lakes: Ellamae Calvert, 1555 Elbur, Cleveland 7, Ohio; National Field Secretary: Glenn E. Smiley, FOR, Nyack, N. Y.

Representatives of FOR Denominational Affiliates

BAPTIST PEACE FELLOWSHIP: Rev. William M. Hammond Jr., Room 1615, 303 Fifth Ave., New York City; CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN PACIFIST FELLOWSHIP: Joseph Howell, 110 East 29 St., New York City; DISCIPLES PEACE FELLOWSHIP: Barton Hunter, 222 So. Downey Ave., Indianapolis, Ind.; EPISCOPAL PACIFIST FELLOWSHIP: Joseph Rohrer, 183 Cedar Ave., Hackensack, N. J.; EVANGELICAL & REFORMED PACIFIST FELLOWSHIP: Richard Denzler, 2139 Wharton Rd., Glenside, Pa.; LIBERAL RELIGIOUS PEACE FELLOWSHIP: Robert Lawson, Unitarian Church, Walliston, Mass.; LUTHERAN PEACE FELLOWSHIP: Rev. Albert E. Myers, Box 147, Jeromesville, Ohio; FELLOWSHIP OF METHODIST PACIFISTS: Miss Molly O'Steen, Box 871, Nashville, Tenn.; NEW CHURCH PACIFIST FELLOWSHIP: George F. Bischof, 274 Hamilton St., Rockville Centre, N. Y.; PEACE FELLOWSHIP OF PRESBYTERIANS: Mrs. B. W. Hamilton, 52 E. 66 St., New York City; SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN PEACE FELLOWSHIP: Rev. Henry Lofquist, No. Highlands Presbyterian Church, Bessemer, Ala.

We Teach The Fourth "R"

RECONCILIATION—that's quite a mouthful. There are other words that indicate our subject—love, good will, peace pacifism—but perhaps only Reconciliation is large enough, in more ways than one, to span them all.

It's no mere ivory tower subject. If it doesn't touch the living pulse of human concerns, it's not the real thing. And the purpose of the Fellowship of Reconciliation is not merely to observe and speculate about life, but to affirm its most precious values from a distinctively pacifist viewpoint.

Part of the teaching of the fourth "R" is carried on in the pages of FELLOWSHIP, the monthly magazine of American pacifism, which features informed articles on world events by on-the-spot reporters, analysis and commentary on vital issues, plus book reviews and news you don't find elsewhere. Race relations, nuclear weapons, civil defense, disarmament, conscription, events in the churches, civil liberties, children, totalitarianism—these are some of the areas of major concern.

If you are not already a subscriber, your education can still be put on an even keel—for the next year, at least—by sending your name and address with $3 to:

FELLOWSHIP • Box 271, Nyack, New York

P.S. If you are really athirst for knowledge, send a postcard to the same address, asking for the latest catalog of FELLOWSHIP PUBLICATIONS, a listing of books, pamphlets and free folders about pacifism and its related concerns.

"An Indispensable Item . . ."

"Here in the South," wrote FOR Mid-South Regional Secretary Robert L. Cannon, "I have had difficulty keeping up with the engagements. . . . For me this film has become an indispensable item in my traveling bag." Walk to Freedom is a year old. If it were now obsolete, it would have served its purpose well. To date, more than thirty prints of Walk to Freedom have been sold—six of them to a large labor union, two to the British FOR and the Peace Pledge Union. The film, however, is by no means obsolete. At this writing, two more purchasers are in the offing, nine rental copies continue to circulate briskly and a printing of twenty thousand copies of the accompanying film folder shown above has been exhausted, necessitating a new printing.

If you have not yet seen it, you don't know how much you have missed. If you have seen Walk to Freedom, you know what an "indispensable item" it is. Have you told your minister about it?

RENTAL: one showing, $5; full week, $15. PURCHASE: $100.

And by the way, have you seen the Right Now films? They are kinescopes of the CBS-TV programs on East-West relations and Civil Defense, with Alfred Hassler. Each 30 minutes.

RIGHT NOW 1 (East-West) and RIGHT NOW 2 (Civil Defense)

RENTAL: one showing, each $5; full week, each $15. Not for sale.

Another film that will be timely as long as nuclear weapons are in the news is the prize-winning Japanese feature, Children of the A-Bomb. Have you seen this 93-minute masterpiece?

RENTAL: one showing, $25; full week, $100. Not for sale.

For free descriptive catalog of these and other Fellowship Films, Write:

FELLOWSHIP
Films for Peace

Pam. Educ. Gen.
#13 #33A

2nd. Copy

COUNT-DOWN FOR SCHOOLS

7 Months Until the Atlanta Plan
Goes into Operation

3 Months Until the Legislature Meets

Will you let your Representatives know

We Want Public Schools

Or will you let our Public School System

Fizzle

By inaction of the Georgia Legislature?

League of Women Voters of Georgia
7 17th Street, N.E.
Atlanta 9, Georgia

25c

MODEL BILL ON TENURE

5/12/40

PREPARED BY THE MODEL BILL BUREAU

NATIONAL LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF TEACHERS

The following "model" bill is intended to serve as a guide to A.F.T. locals (and other teacher organizations) throughout the country in the drafting of tenure bills for their respective states. It is not presumed that the bill in its present form is ready to be introduced in any state legislature. It will first need to be amended in accordance with the distinctive conditions existing in the state concerned.

In the preparation of this bill the entire field of tenure legislation has been re-examined. It is believed that the present bill embodies virtually all the desirable features of each of the existing tenure laws, together with a large number of other desirable features which are more or less distinctive.

Attached to the bill are some brief "explanatory" notes.

February 10, 1939

(Reprinted without change May 10, 1940)

COMMITTEE ON TENURE

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF TEACHERS

28 E. Jackson Blvd.,
Chicago, Illinois

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF TEACHERS'

Model Bill on Tenure

Section 1. Definitions:

(a) As used in this act,

(1) "educational employee" means person who on or after the effective date of this act, holds, or is qualified to hold, a valid certificate to serve as a regular employee in a public school of this state;

(2) "educational board" means board of education, board of directors, or other instrumentality which, on or after the effective date of this act, has the authority to engage an educational employee to serve in a public school of this state;

(3) "gross inefficiency" means the unintentional or intentional performance of one's legitimate duties in a manner which establishes one's incompetence with respect to (a) one's present position and (b) any vacant position at the disposal of the board concerned which one is properly qualified, and willing to accept;

(4) "inefficiency" means the unintentional or intentional performance of one's legitimate duties in a manner which establishes one's incompetence with respect to (a) one's present position and (b) any vacant position at the disposal of the board concerned, of as high a rank and carrying as high a salary, which one is properly qualified, and willing to accept;

(5) "legitimate duties" means reasonable duties imposed without discrimination because of race, creed, religion, marital status, organizational affiliation or activity, or the exercise of any civil or other right which may be exercized lawfully by citizens generally;

(6) "properly qualified" means qualified by reason of certification;

(7) "immorality" means the commission of any act which involves moral turpitude and which, if committed by any citizen generally, would be punishable by law;

(8) "demote" means transfer to a position carrying a lower salary or compensation, or/and lower the rank of, whether by transfer or otherwise;

(9) "reduce the salary of" means reduce the compensation of except where such reduction is incident (a) to a leave of absence (b) to demotion, or (c) to a fine or other pecuniary penalty imposed because of the alleged character of the employee's service;

(10) "penalize" means affect injuriously, either absolutely or in a relation to some other employee of the same board who has the same status.

(b) Words and phrases occurring in this act which are derived from words and phrases defined in this Section have derivative meanings in accordance with grammatical usage.

Section 2. Contracts:

(a) Every educational board shall enter into contract with the educational employees who, on the effective date of this act, are serving in its employ in the public schools of this state, at or before the beginning of the first school year beginning after such date and shall enter into contract with all other educational employees who may serve in its employ in the public schools of this state, at or before the beginning of such service. Contracts made under the provisions of this paragraph shall become effective on or before the final dates by which they must be executed.

(b) The said contracts shall be in writing, in triplicate, on uniform blanks furnished by the State Superintendent of Public Instruction, and shall be executed on behalf of the educational board by its chairman and secretary and signed by the educational employee. The secretary shall furnish one copy of the contract to the educational employee and a second copy to the State Superintendent of Public Instruction, who shall file the said copy among the records of his office; and the said secretary shall file the third copy among the records of the educational board.

(c) The said contracts shall contain the following statements and forms of statement, and no others:

"It is hereby agreed by and between. . . . . ., the employee, and. . . . . ., the employer, that the said employee, beginning . . . . . .19. . . ., shall serve in the employ of the said employer and its successors for a term of . . . . . .school months, the number of school months in the school year, for an annual compensation of $. . . . . .payable in equal monthly or semi-monthly installments during the said school months, less the contributions required by law to be paid to the Teachers' Retirement Fund and less other deductions required by law and not made for reasons of economy.

"It is further agreed by the parties hereto that this contract shall continue in force from year to year, until terminated in accordance with the provisions of the Teachers' T enure Act of 1939, and any amendments thereto prior to the date of this agreement, and that until such termination each of the said parties shall enjoy the rights and shall assume the obligations therein provided, none of which rights or obligations may be waived, either orally or otherwise.

"Nothing in this contract shall prevent the raising of the compensation of the said employee above, or the reduction of the term of service of the said employee below, the compensation and term of service specified herein.

"This contract is executed this ..... day of ..... 19..... ."

(d) No contract made under the provisions of this Section shall be terminated except by the dismissal of the educational employee in accordance with the provisions of this act, or by the resignation, retirement, or death of the educational employee.

Section 3. Dismissal and Demotion:

(a) Except as provided in paragraph (b) of this Section, no educational employee serving in a public school of this state shall be dismissed for any cause other than physical disability, mental disability, immorality, or/and gross inefficiency and no such employee shall be demoted for any cause other than inefficiency. The specific nature of any such demotion shall be based solely upon the specific nature of the inefficiency.

(b) Any educational employee serving in a public school of this state may be dismissed or demoted if such action is necessitated by the elimination of a position and if such elimination is required, or rendered advisable, by a substantial decrease in school enrollment or/and by a change in school curriculum or school organization which is demonstrably desirable for reasons other than reasons of economy. Such dismissal or demotion shall be governed by the following provisions.

(1) The educational employee last engaged by the board concerned, and performing the type of service being discontinued by the elimination of the position, shall be the particular employee to be ordered dismissed or demoted, but before such employee is so ordered, he shall have been offered the opportunity to accept any vacant position at the disposal of the board, for which he is properly qualified.

(2) Educational employees who have been ordered dismissed or demoted under the provisions of this paragraph shall be offered the opportunity, during the period of such dismissal or demotion, or impending dismissal or demotion, to accept any vacant position at the disposal of the board concerned, and for which they are properly qualified, in the inverse order in which their dismissals and demotions, taken together, were ordered, provided that, the opportunity to accept such position shall be accorded first as stated in provision (1) of this paragraph.

(3) No educational board shall engage any person who is not already serving in its employ in a public school of this state to fill any vacant position at its disposal if there are any educational employees who have been, or who are about to be, ordered dismissed or demoted by the board under the provisions of this paragraph, and who have not been restored to their original status, who are properly qualified for, and willing to accept, such position.

(4) Every educational employee whose dismissal or demotion is ordered under the provisions of this paragraph shall be given by the board concerned, prior to the effective date of such dismissal or demotion, a letter of honorable dismissal or honorable demotion, as the case may be.

(5) No educational employee whose dismissal under the provisions of this paragraph has become effective shall be prevented from engaging in other occupation during the period of such dismissal.

Section 4. Reduction of Salary and Other Penalties:

(a) No educational employee serving in a public school of this state shall have his salary in any year reduced below his salary in the immediately preceding year for any cause and no such employee shall be suspended without pay, fined, or penalized in any manner whatever not hereinbefore considered except for a just cause, provided that, penalizing an employee under provision (7) of Section 5 of this act shall be deemed to be for a just cause, and provided further that, penalizing an employee because of the failure to perform duties which are not legitimate duties, or because of race, creed, religion, marital status, organizational affiliation or activity, or the exercise of any civil or other right which may be exercised lawfully by citizens generally, shall not be deemed to be for a just cause. The specific nature of any penalty imposed under the provisions of this paragraph because of the alleged character of the employee's service shall be based solely upon the specific nature of the deficiency.

(b) If any educational employee serving in a public school of this state shall be required to serve in any year a greater total number of work-hours than he served in the immediately preceding year, his salary or compensation shall be raised at least proportionately to such increase. For the purposes of this paragraph, the computation of the time served by an employee shall not be affected by suspensions and/or absences.

Section 5. Institution of Proceedings:

Before any educational employee serving in a public school of this state shall be dismissed, demoted, or penalized in any other manner whatever, proceedings against such employee shall be instituted in accordance with the following provisions.

(1) Any member or members of the board concerned shall file with the secretary of the said board a written, signed, duly detailed, and duly verified statement, in duplicate, setting forth the alleged facts in the case. The said secretary shall bring the statement to the attention of the board within seven days after its receipt.

(2) The said board, after making such inquiry and investigation as it may deem necessary, shall either dismiss the matter or order such penalty as it may consider justified under the terms of this act.

(3) When serving its order upon the employee, the board shall enclose therewith (a) a copy of this act, (b) a copy of the statement filed with the secretary of the board, (c) a written, signed, and duly detailed report by the board of its findings in the matter, and (d) a notice informing the employee exactly when, with whom, and in what manner, under the terms of this act, the employee must file a request for a hearing if the order is to be set aside or amended.

(4) Except where an employee is charged by a board with intentionally performing his duties unsatisfactorily, no educational board shall serve its order for the dismissal of an employee because of gross inefficiency, or for the demotion of an employee because of inefficiency, unless at least ninety school days prior thereto the said employee shall have received from the board a written warning specifying the nature of such faults to date with such particularity as to furnish him an opportunity to correct them, and unless at the request of the employee, and if such transfer is practicable, he shall have been granted the opportunity to serve at least ninety school days of the intervening period under another superior officer, provided that, for employees holding, or qualified to hold, provisional certificates only, each period of ninety school days specified in this provision shall be reduced to a period of thirty school days.

(5) No order of any board shall be served upon any employee except during a school year.

(6) No order of any board shall become effective while the employee concerned has the right under the terms of this act to have the order set aside or amended, and no order of dismissal or demotion under paragraph (b) of Section 3 of this act shall become effective except at the close of a school year and after not less than sixty days' written notice to the said employee.

(7) Any employee against whom charges have been filed with the secretary of an educational board which, if wholly or partly correct, warrant the dismissal of the employee because of immorality, mental disability, or gross inefficiency due to intentionally unsatisfactory service, or the demotion of the employee because of inefficiency due to intentionally unsatisfactory service, may be suspended, if the board deems such action advisable, immediately after such charges have been brought to its attention, provided that, pending the board's order in the matter, the pay of the employee shall not be affected. Should the board, on the basis of such charges, decide to order the dismissal or demotion of the employee, it may suspend the said employee without pay immediately upon serving such order, provided that, if the said employee is exonerated of the charges by the final determination of the matter, he shall be entitled to all salary or compensation accruing during the period of such suspension.

(8) No notice of suspension issued under provision (7) of this Section shall be deemed an "order" as the term is used in this act.

Section 6. Right to, and Arrangement of, Hearing:

(a) After receiving an order of an educational board, the employee concerned shall have the right to request a hearing, at the option of the employee before the educational arbitration commission for the county in which the place of employment of the employee is located, hereinafter termed the county commission, or before the said educational board, but not before both, for the purpose of having the said order set aside or amended, but such right shall expire ten days after the receipt of the order and the order shall thereupon become final, provided that, no such right shall expire within sixty days after this act takes effect. If the employee requests a hearing before the county commission, he shall, when making such request, send a copy thereof to the educational board.

(b) The county commission (or educational board), immediately after receiving such request, shall set the exact time and place for the hearing and thereupon shall give notice thereof to the employee and the complainant (or to the employee), enclosing therewith a copy of its rules and regulations governing the conduct of its hearings. The complainant shall be deemed to be the members of the educational board concerned. The time fixed for the hearing shall be not less than ten days nor more than fifteen days after such notification may be expected to be received and the place fixed shall be a point within the county reasonably convenient for the parties concerned. The hearing shall be held at the time and place so fixed unless otherwise agreed to by both the employee and the complainant. If the cases of two or more employees are deemed by the county commission (or educational board) to be essentially similar, they may be tried at the same hearing.

Section 7. Conduct of Hearing:

The hearing before the county commission (or educational board) shall be conducted in accordance with the following provisions.

(1) The hearing shall be public unless otherwise requested by the employee.

(2) The employee and the complainant shall each have the right to be heard in person, to be represented by freely selected counsel, to call witnesses, to examine and cross-examine such witnesses, to inspect all documentary evidence produced, and to present such other evidence as may be relevant to the matter under inquiry, provided that, the burden of proof shall be upon the complainant.

(3) The county commission (or educational board) shall have the power to subpoena witnesses and documentary evidence and shall exercise such power at the request of either side. If any person shall refuse to appear and testify in answer to such subpoena, either side may petition the appropriate court setting forth the facts, which court shall thereupon issue its subpoena commanding such person to appear and testify before the said county commission (or educational board). Any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by the said court as contempt thereof.

(4) All testimony shall be taken under oath or affirmation, to be administered by any member of the county commission (or educational board) under the authority hereby granted. Any person making a false oath or affirmation shall be guilty of perjury and punished accordingly.

(5) All action taken by the county commission (or educational board) shall be by a majority vote of all the members thereof, to be recorded by roll-call.

(6) The county commission (or education board), at its expense, shall employ a competent and disinterested stenographer to make a literal record of the full proceedings at the hearing, which record shall include all evidence both oral and documentary and the decision and order of the county commission (or educational board). Such stenographer, within five days after the decision and order have been issued, shall send the employee and the complainant one copy each of a transcript of such record, which shall be certified by the stenographer and by the chairman of the county commission (or educational board) to be complete and correct.

(7) Unless otherwise agreed to by both the employee and the complainant, the hearing shall be concluded within twenty days after its commencement.

(8) After each side has presented its case, as hereinbefore provided, and after a full and impartial consideration of the evidence adduced, the county commission (or education board), on the basis of such evidence and within ten days after the conclusion of the hearing, shall render a decision in writing, setting aside, amending in a specific manner, or sustaining the order in dispute. The county commission (or education board) thereupon shall serve its order upon the employee and the complainant (or upon the employee).

Section 8. Right to, and Arrangement of, Appeal:

(a) After receiving the order of the county commission (or educational board), the employee and/or the complainant (or the employee) shall have the right to request a hearing before the court of common pleas of the county in which the place of employment of the employee is located, for the purpose of having the said order set aside or amended, but their respective rights (or the rights of the employee) shall expire ten days after the receipt of the order, and if, prior to such date, neither side has requested the hearing, the order shall thereupon become final. The side requesting such hearing shall, when making such request, send copies thereof to the opposing side and to the county commission concerned (or to the opposing side).

(b) The said court, after receiving such request, shall set the exact time for the hearing, which hearing shall be held, upon due notice to the parties concerned, at the earliest time possible and shall take precedence over all other cases, except older matters of the same character and except matters to which special preference may be given by law, provided that, such hearing shall not be held within ten days after the court receives the said request. If the cases of two or more educational employees are deemed by the court to be essentially similar, they may be tried at the same hearing.

Section 9. Conduct of Appeal:

The matter before the court shall proceed as other civil actions therein and, upon the conclusion of the hearing, the court shall render whatever decision it considers just, setting aside, amending in a specific manner, or sustaining the order in dispute. If it has been so specified in a request for the said hearing, such hearing shall be de novo.

The employee and the complainant shall each have the right to appeal from the decision of the court to the superior court of the county in which the place of employment of the employee is located, which appeal shall be taken and conducted under the laws and rules of court governing appeals in civil cases.

Section 11. Educational Arbitration Commissions:

(a) There is hereby created for each of the counties of this state an educational arbitration commission of three members, to be appointed by the Governor. Members shall be residents of the county concerned and at least one member of each commission shall be a practicing attorney.

(b) The terms of the members of the first county commission for each county shall begin thirty days after the effective date of this act, one member to be appointed for a term of three years, one member for a term of two years, and one member for a term of one year, the said members to be appointed prior to the beginning of their terms. Successors shall be appointed to serve for each successive three year period following the expiration of an initial term, such members to be appointed between thirty and sixty days prior to the beginning of their respective terms. In the event that any member of a county commission vacates his position before the expiration of his term, a successor shall be appointed to serve for the unexpired term as soon as possible, and not later than thirty days, after the vacancy occurs.

(c) Immediately after its members have been appointed, each of the commissions created under the terms of this act shall meet for the purpose of organization, at which time it shall elect one of its members as chairman and another as secretary and shall adopt rules and regulations, consistent with the provisions of this act, to govern its procedure.

(d) The members of the said commissions shall serve without compensation, but the actual and necessary expenses incident to the performance of their duties shall be paid by the state treasurer out of the general funds, in the manner already provided by law for the payment of accounts of boards and commissions.

(e) The sum of five thousand dollars is hereby appropriated for each of the fiscal years ending June thirty, nineteen hundred forty and June thirty, nineteen hundred forty-one to defray the expenses of the county commissions incurred in accordance with the provisions of this act.

Section 12. Resignation:

No educational employee serving in a public school of this state shall resign, except by mutual consent, without giving a written notice to the board concerned at least sixty days prior to the effective date of such resignation, but resignation in any other manner shall none the less terminate any contract between the said employee and the said board which may have been executed under the terms of this act.

Section 13. Educational Employees on Leave of Absence:

All the provisions of this act applying to educational employees serving in the public schools of this state shall be construed to apply both to educational employees on leave of absence from such service and to educational employees in active service.

Section 14. Sending of Written Communications:

All orders, reports, and other written communications provided for under the terms of this act shall be sent to the parties concerned at their last known addresses and by registered mail, with postage prepaid. Except where the contrary is stated in this act, such communications, if intended for boards and commissions, shall be addressed to the respective secretaries thereof, and if intended for courts, shall be addressed to the respective clerks thereof. The receipt of such communications by such individuals shall constitute receipt by the board, commission, or court concerned.

Section 15. Changes in the Personnel of Educational Boards:

None of the rights or privileges granted to educational employees under the terms of this act shall be impaired in any way by the consolidation of educational boards or by any other changes in their respective personnel.

Section 16. Inconsistent Laws:

All laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Section 17. Independence of Provisions:

If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, shall be adjudged invalid or unconstitutional, such adjudication shall not invalidate, impair, or affect the remainder of this act, or the application of such provision to any other person or circumstance.

Section 18. Short Title:

This act shall be known and may be cited as "The Teachers' Tenure Act of 1939."

Section 19. Effective Date:

This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its final enactment.

NOTES

Section 1:

Definition 1 is intended to indicate merely in a general way the class of persons to whom the act should apply and will undoubtedly need to be amended in conformity with the statutory provisions and educational conditions of the state in question. In numerous states, for example, the definition should be amended so as to cover certain non-certified employes as well, such as clerks, nurses, etc. (As used here, "regular employe" is intended to include both permanent and probationary employees, but not substitute employees. For reasons which are obvious, where there is no statutory provision which adequately limits the employment of non-regular employees, such a provision should be included in the present bill.)

At first glance it may appear that some of the definitions in this Section are unnecessary. But so far as they succeed in preventing interpretations of the bill which would reduce its force, their inclusion is strongly recommended. Indeed, in many states it will be desirable for this reason to include other definitions as well.

Section 2:

As in the Pennsylvania tenure law, the form of the contract has been included in the bill itself. Although this procedure is recommended, it may be mentioned that a detailed and exhaustive description of the contract could serve the same purpose -- that of establishing a clearly defined and fixed contractual relationship. (On this point, see Indiana ex rel. Anderson v. Brand S. Ct. No. 256. October Term, 1937.)

Though the wording of the present contract is similar to that of the Pennsylvania contract, it will be noted that some of the changes -- concerning "future" statutory amendments, the enjoyment of rights, etc. -- are of the utmost importance.

Section 3:

Every effort should be made to limit the grounds for dismissal to those here enumerated. The inclusion of indefinite, or unduly restrictive, grounds -- such as "conduct unbecoming a teacher" or "insubordination" -- should of course be especially resisted. Similar remarks apply to the grounds for demotion. (In existing tenure legislation the grounds for demotion are either not stated at all or stated so generally as to afford the employee little or no real protection. The present bill seeks to remedy this. It is hoped that the more explicit statement of appointment procedure -- in provisions 1, 2, and 3 of paragraph b -- constitutes a further improvement.)

Section 4:

It will be noted that the present bill (unlike any existing tenure law) makes provision, not only for dismissal and demotion, but for all other penalties as well. The importance of this fact becomes apparent when it is realized that at least some of these penalties -- e.g., prolonged suspension without pay -- conceivably could be just as serious in their consequences as dismissal or demotion.

It is highly probable that paragraph b will require local adjustment.

Section 5:

The exception at the beginning of provision 4 is made so that should an employee wilfully and deliberately refuse to perform his legitimate duties, the hands of the board will not be tied (see provision 7). On the other hand, it should be noted that provision 7, by providing that prior to the issuance of the board's order the pay of the employee shall not be affected, protects the employee against the possibility of a prolonged suspension without pay. The other safeguards provided in this Section are no less important.

The reference to provisional certificates in the proviso in provision 4 is to be understood in terms of the Model Certification Bill, Section 4. It should be said, however, that the desirability of including this proviso is open to question.

Section 6:

To require that employees shall be tried by their prosecutors (as is the case in most tenure laws) is palpably absurd. Fair hearings under such circumstances notwithstanding statutory precautions, are more likely to be the exception than the rule. "A decent respect for justice" demands, therefore, that, as in the present bill, an employee shall have the opportunity -- or shall be required -- to have the hearing before an independent body. Moreover, it may be pointed out that such a procedure, by greatly reducing the number of appeals, will to that extent eliminate the delays, the inconveniences, and the expenses which second hearings necessarily entail. (See, however, the note immediately below.)

Section 8:

If concessions with respect to the initial hearing (see the note immediately above) should prove to be necessary in order to secure employees the right to appeal to an independent authority -- preferably the courts -- such concessions should be made. This right, however, should be fought for uncompromisingly.

Section 11:

In certain states it will be desirable to substitute for the county a somewhat larger district -- though the advantage of the smaller district should not be forgotten. Again, in those states in which such procedure is constitutional, it may be desirable to have the courts, rather than the Governor, appoint the commissioners. The adequacy of the appropriation here provided will of course vary from state to state.

(The selection of particular parts of the bill for comment in these notes has of necessity to a large extent been arbitrary. No inferences should be drawn, therefore, on the basis of that selection.)

National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools
2 WEST 45TH STREET • NEW YORK 19, N. Y.
MURRAY HILL 7-1535

RELEASE
Wednesday A.M.
August 10, 1949

RECEIVED
AUG 15 1949
Southern Regional Council

NATIONAL SCHOOL COMMISSION PICKS

DU PONT EXECUTIVE AS STAFF DIRECTOR

New York, N.Y. --- Henry Toy Jr., 35, du Pont Company executive and founder of the Council for Delaware Education, has been appointed Executive Director of the new National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools, Roy E. Larsen, president of Time Inc. and chairman of the Commission, announced today.

"As a businessman who realizes the vital importance of the public schools to each community as well as to the nation, Mr. Toy has been largely responsible for the dramatic success of the Council for Delaware Education in helping citizens to improve the public schools in communities throughout Delaware," Mr. Larsen said.

"In his capacity as Executive Director of our Commission he will be able to give all his time and the full benefit of his experience to implementing the program outlined by our members. According to part of this program the Commission will act as a clearing house of information to enable one group of citizens endeavoring to improve their local public schools to profit from the experience of others. Mr. Toy will also assist us in carrying out many other projects which we are planning to help encourage the broad public interest in the public schools which we believe is necessary to solve the many extremely serious problems which confront the schools today."

The National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools is composed exclusively of laymen, many of them outstanding in business, labor, law and publishing. It was formed last May to work for concerted action by citizens in their own communities. The group has received initial financial support from the Carnegie Corporation and the General Education Board. Its officers are, besides Mr. Larsen: James F. Brownlee, former deputy director of the OPA, vice chairman; John A. Stevenson, president of Penn Mutual Life Insurance Co., treasurer; and Leo Perlis, director of the National CIO Community Services Committee, secretary.

The Council for Delaware Education, which Mr. Toy headed for two and a half years after founding it in November of 1946, is a dramatic illustration of what a group of determined citizens can do for their schools. It has been instrumental in achieving many far-reaching school improvements in Delaware. These include increases in teachers' salaries, appropriations for the construction of new school buildings, wide-spread legislative changes for the benefit of the schools, and an upsurge in public interest in the schools which has been reflected in a greatly increased number of voters turning out for elections affecting the schools. Last fall the gubernatorial election in Delaware was fought out largely on public school issues.

As Executive Director of the National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools, Mr. Toy will be heading the staff of an organization which Dr. James B. Conant, president of Harvard University, this spring called "potentially the most important move for the advancement of public education taken in the last fifty years."

The National Citizens Commission will soon be expanded to include sixty members not professionally identified with education, religion or politics, from many sections of the nation, and of varying points of view and experience. It now has twenty-eight members, many of them well-known. Besides the Commission's officers, these are: Mrs. Barry Bingham, Vice President, Louisville (Kentucky) Courier-Journal and Times; Stuart Bradley, Member of the Executive Board, Louisiana Education Foundation, New Orleans; John Cowles, President, The Minneapolis Star and Tribune; Edward R. Eastman, President and Editor, American Agriculturist, Ithaca, N. Y.; George Gallup, Director, American Institute of Public Opinion; Mrs. Bruce Gould, Editor, Ladies' Home Journal; Lester B. Granger, Executive Director, National Urban League; Ralph A. Hayward, President, Kalamazoo Vegetable Parchment Co.,

Parchment, Michigan; Robert Heller, Robert Heller & Associates, Inc., Cleveland; Palmer Hoyt, Editor and Publisher, The Denver Post.

Also, Mrs. Samuel A. Lewisohn, Chairman, Board of Trustees, New York Public Education Association; Walter Lippmann, columnist, Washington, D. C.; Robert Littell, Senior Editor, The Reader's Digest; Stanley Marcus, Executive Vice President, Neiman-Marcus Company, Dallas; James G. K. McClure, President, Farmers' Federation, Inc., Asheville, N. C.; George Houk Mead, Honorary Chairman of the Board, The Mead Corporation, Dayton, Ohio; Mrs. Eugene Meyer, The Washington (D.C.) Post; Raymond Rubicam, co-founder of Young and Rubicam, Inc. (N.Y.), Scottsdale, Arizona; Beardsley Ruml, New York; Harry Scherman, President, Book-of-the-Month Club; Louis B. Seltzer, Editor, Cleveland Press; Richard Joyce Smith, partner in law firm of Whitman, Ransom, Coulson & Goetz, New York; Charles Allen Thomas, Executive Vice President, Monsanto Chemical Company, St. Louis; and Judge Charles E. Wyzanski, Jr., U.S. District Judge for Massachusetts, Boston.

The Commission's headquarters are at 2 West 45th Street, New York City.

10- Education, Gen.

BIOGRAPHICAL INFORMATION ON HENRY TOY JR. WHO HAS BEEN APPOINTED EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE NATIONAL CITIZENS COMMISSION FOR THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Born in Easton, Pa., in 1914, Henry Toy Jr. is a graduate of the Woodbury, N. J. public school system, and the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania. He has been associated with the du Pont Company for eight and a half years, and for the past four years he has been manager of the Priority Section and has been responsible for the purchase of non-ferrous metals. He is married and has two children of school age.

Last February Mr. Toy was named Young Man of the Year by the Junior Chamber of Commerce in Delaware. In June he was winner of a membership competition of the National Association of Purchasing Agents. He served as secretary of the Wilmington Purchasing Agents Association and on two committees of the Philadelphia Purchasing Agents Association. Besides his work with the Council for Delaware Education, he has been president of the Oak Grove, Delaware Parent-Teachers Association and chairman of the legislative committee of the Delaware Congress of Parents and Teachers.

Mr. Toy's activity on behalf of the public schools began in 1946 when his wife decided to attend a bowling party, and he took her place at a Parent-Teacher Association meeting in Oak Grove, the small Wilmington suburb where he lived. He grew interested in the discussions there, and before leaving found himself appointed chairman of a committee to study teachers' salaries.

His work on this committee led him to a broad study of all local public school problems. In cooperation with the Delaware Congress of Parents and Teachers, he formed the Council for Delaware Education, which immediately began a dramatic campaign to improve the state's schools.

The Council includes approximately one hundred and fifty representatives of such organizations as the State Federation of Women's Clubs, the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Kiwanis, Rotary, Lions, church clubs, and Parent-Teacher Associations from all parts of the state.

To arouse interest in the public schools, the Council under Mr. Toy's leadership summarized in laymen's language the state's school laws, wrote and published, with the cooperation of the American Association of University Women, a description of each of Delaware's 174 school buildings, and arranged for the dramatic presentation of all school issues in radio, press and public meetings.

One of the most tangible results of this activity has been the passage of legislation calling for $19,000,000 worth of new school construction in Delaware, but Mr. Toy says, "The major achievement of the Council has been the reawakening of public interest in the schools here, and the realization by the people of what the schools can do for them, and what they can do for the schools."

Dr. William S. Carlson, President of the University of Delaware, has written of the Council for Delaware Education, "Education is sorely in need of the support of the entire community which it serves. This is particularly important on the local level. The success of any school system is dependent to a large measure upon the interest and support of the citizenry. The Council for Delaware Education, Inc. has been eminently successful in calling to the attention of the public the shortcomings of our schools, but more than that, they have done much to point the way to future improvement."

Materials — Ed. Div.

[Reprinted from EDUCATIONAL LEADERSHIP, Vol. VIII, No. 3, December 1950]

Schools versus Prejudice

GEORGE W. DENEMARK

Better intercultural attitudes can be built through democratic experimental education in our American schools. Professor George W. Denemark, School of Education, Boston University, outlines five major approaches to the reduction of prejudice.

TEACHERS AND ADMINISTRATORS committed to the task of promoting in their students intercultural attitudes consistent with the American Creed can find much of interest and of use in recent research reports on prejudice.[1] Emerging out of the welter of suggestions from numerous well-intentioned sources to which many educators have been exposed in recent years, is a clearer conception of the nature of prejudice and of the most effective means for combating it. Worthy intentions are increasingly capable of being coupled with a real understanding of the dynamics of attitude change.

A survey of contemporary research studies discloses an emphasis upon two elements as major sources of prejudiced attitudes in young people. One is the repeated frustration of the individual and the resultant tensions thus aroused which demand an outlet. The second source is the existence of such attitudes in parents and other groups with which the child associates—attitudes which are quickly learned and frequently adopted by him.

Prejudice has been found in numerous cases to be coincident with recurrent and marked frustrations of young people as they sought to cope with the developmental tasks of their own maturity level. Society, while rigorously defining these tasks, has frequently done little to facilitate their satisfactory achievement. Contradictions have existed in the expectations of home and school, of church and peer group, and a host of other social groups. These contradictions have resulted in unresolved tensions which all too frequently spill over in the form of hostility and aggression toward minority group members.

The character of contemporary society, imposing particularly burdensome tensions and insecurities upon parents, leaves its stamp at the same time upon their children. As a consequence, these children are often denied the warmth of affection, continuous encouragement in their explorations of the world in which they live, and the security that comes with membership in a family group that is close-knit and stable—conditions which are all so important in building healthy personalities.

Schools Affect Prejudices

Data on changing family functions and the extent to which today's families

[1] The remarks which follow are based upon a research project conducted by William Van Til and the author at the University of Illinois, with the financial assistance of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. The project was reported in the October 1950 issue of the Review of Educational Research.

are being broken by discord and divorce are familiar to most teachers. The impact of such factors upon the intergroup attitudes of the children of these families is perhaps not so familiar. A recent study of prejudiced persons revealed that in the backgrounds of the forty subjects selected for the study there was not a single example of a permanently well-adjusted marital relationship between their parents.[2]

Too frequently such evidence is interpreted by teachers as indicating the futility of efforts by the school to change pupil attitudes in the face of adverse home conditions. Instead they should recognize that to many children school can be a haven from, rather than a continuation of, the tensions and insecurities generated elsewhere.

Potential school sources of frustration for many students exist in the imposition of subject matter only remotely, if at all, related to their immediate problems, and in the conception of the classroom as a place primarily intended to inculcate passivity and conformity rather than imagination, responsiveness and creativity.

Another source of tension may be found in employment of grading systems which maximize the worst aspects of competition and ignore the necessity for success experiences for all but a small minority of the group. Tacit approval of classroom conduct and extracurricular activities which perpetuate and promote cliques and social class distinctions is still another. Tensions built up in these school situations, when coupled with those originating in the family and elsewhere, necessitate an outlet. The channel for their release often becomes the expression of hostility toward minority group members.

Prejudices Are Learned

Significant as are these sources of frustration in development of prejudice in many children, it is important to recognize that not all bigoted attitudes are traceable to such an origin. Prejudices expressed by some children seem to be nothing more than learned behavior. The child's conceptions of himself and of others are so heavily influenced by the social environment that the well-adjusted child too may express strong intergroup prejudices simply as a result of indoctrination in, and habituation to, adult anti-democratic values. Here too, as in the case of frustration as a source of prejudice, it is true that the influence of home and family is of key importance, and yet the potentialities of the school for introducing alternative ideas and broadening perspectives should not be overlooked.

Insensitivity to the role they play in this respect may result not only in little help by teachers in building accurate conceptions of out-group members, but also in actual perpetuation of existing unfavorable stereotypes. A recent study of the treatment given minority groups in over three hundred textbooks revealed that many such books perpetuated negative stereotypes of minority groups, usually not because of any malicious intent but rather because of insensitivity, limited treatment and important omissions.[3]

---

[2] Nathan W. Ackerman and Marie Jahoda, Anti-Semitism and Emotional Disorder (New York: Harper and Brothers, 1950).

[3] Howard E. Wilson and Others, Intergroup Relations in Teaching Materials (Washington, D. C.: American Council on Education, 1949).

Attitudes of teachers and administrators and of other pupils are important factors in the determination of the attitudes of those with whom they come in contact. Failure to recognize this responsibility may mean that many children have an opportunity to learn about other racial, religious and ethnic groups only in terms of stereotypes and rejection.

Schools Can Build Better Intercultural Attitudes

Given such an understanding of the nature of prejudice, what then? What can schools do toward building better intercultural attitudes? Recent research has suggested five major approaches to the problem.

Create Democratic Atmosphere

The first approach, and one which we have already to some degree discussed, is the creation of a democratic atmosphere designed to reduce the personal insecurities and tensions of children. A permissive atmosphere in which pupils and teacher plan together the experiences they will have is important, both as it is oriented around the real problems and concerns of the children, and as it employs a methodology or approach to those problems which provides an opportunity for wide participation, self-expression, and cooperation with others. The intimate relationship between content and method is nowhere better illustrated than here. The personality of the teacher and the warmth and genuine respect for the personalities of others which he can demonstrate daily in countless ways can also do much to create and maintain such an atmosphere.

Deliberate provision for opportunities for each child to experience success frequently in a wide range of activities is still another important factor. The school program that is rich and varied in order to develop and reward talent and achievement in mechanical, aesthetic, physical and social activities as well as strictly intellectual ones can do much to promote a healthy school climate in which democratic attitudes can grow. This is applicable to both regular classroom activities and to the extracurricular program of the school. But there is little need to go on. Each teacher can doubtless call to mind a dozen ways in which he can bring democracy to his classroom.

Encourage Intergroup Contacts

A second approach to intercultural attitude change which has received consideration and support in recent research is the encouragement of broadening intergroup contacts in situations involving cooperation. Experiences in the military services during the past war with mixed combat units and the utilization of joint facilities lead to the generalization that members of different cultural groups placed together in situations necessitating cooperation will grow to respect one another and approve of such contacts.[4] Such an approach seems to be most effective when the attention of the group is focused upon concrete tasks and objectives rather than upon more abstract considerations of justice.

---

4 Samuel A. Stouffer, Edward A. Suchman, Leland C. DeVinney, Shirley A. Star and Robin M. Williams, Jr., The American Soldier: Adjustment During Army Life (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1949).

There seems little evidence to indicate that such an approach could not be similarly effective with children in school situations. Admittedly, however, one important factor in the changes reported among troops was that most of the experiences occurred overseas, where pressures to conform to the standards of their home membership groups were at a minimum. One implication of this latter factor may be that teachers seeking to employ the contact approach need to be particularly sensitive to the conditions accompanying such contacts. They should seek to orient contact situations around problems which are real and specific, but which are yet sufficiently novel to avoid the possibility of having associated with them a large body of previously formed negative reactions.

There is evidence to support the approach of the teacher or administrator who acts on the assumption that members of various racial, religious and ethnic groups can and will work together harmoniously. It has been found that those who take the American Creed literally and assume that others will abide by it, encounter much less opposition than if they approach the situation more cautiously and obliquely by asking for reactions to such contacts. Doubt apparently breeds doubt in such matters. The fait accompli here, as in matters of politics, has demonstrated its effectiveness. It is important to recognize that this approach to intercultural attitude change should be accompanied by other approaches, so that the prejudiced child will not come to regard such contacts merely as unique exceptions to his previously formulated generalizations.

Provide Emotional Sensitization

A third approach involves the provision of opportunities for enhanced emotional sensitization to other culcural groups. Research has pointed to the importance of the emotional as well as the cognitive and action phases of intergroup attitudes, and yet most of our attempts at attitude change have been couched largely in terms of providing facts. While the necessity for providing valid data is indisputable, many children lack the experience from which they can interpret such data. Consequently they respond, if at all, only in the grossest and least sensitive manner.

The capacity for empathy or the ability to place oneself in the role of others needs much development in many children. One important way in which the classroom teacher can broaden the base from which his pupils view and react to other group members is through use of literature which emphasizes human relations themes.[5] Similarly movies, radio scripts and recordings which portray the contributions and problems of various cultural groups in an honest and sympathetic way may have an initial impact upon children who have heretofore had no awareness of any problems in this area.

As one of the reports from the Philadelphia Early Childhood Project pointed out, the principal value of literature lies in the extent to which it can re-enforce, interpret and extend the experience of children.[6] We should be aware that approaches which emphasize feeling must be accompanied by some rational translation of the emotional reactions generated into a set of values, if the changes effected are to be of more than temporary duration. Move students emotionally, yes, but accompany this by the clarification of the scientific base upon which such healthy attitudes rest.

---

[5] See publications of the Staff of Intergroup Education in Cooperating Schools, Reading Ladders for Human Relations and Literature for Human Understanding (Washington, D. C.: American Council on Education).

Expose Inconsistency of Attitudes

This suggests a fourth approach to attitude change in the schools; namely, the promotion of situations in which individuals may be exposed to the inconsistency or invalidity of some of their existing attitudes. Increasing recognition has been accorded the technique of action research in providing data which will substantiate or modify student attitudes toward other persons and groups.

Evidence which a pupil has gathered on his own in conjunction with a school group investigating community conditions has on many occasions been found to be more likely to involve attitude changes in the student than has the "ready made" data, no matter how complete, which the teacher may be able to provide.

The teacher who plans for and encourages class projects which involve analyses of community conditions and discussions of the implications of these conditions for all members of the community can do much to build better intergroup attitudes. Similarly, the administrator who encourages his staff to embark upon such projects and consciously promotes closer relationships between school and community can help to make possible learning situations in which children may become deeply involved because of their active participation in all stages of the problem.

Strengthen Support of Democratic Behavior

A fifth approach which research has indicated as important, is that of strengthening the social supports of democratic behavior. There is little likelihood that modifications of attitudes effected in the classroom will be permanent if the institutional structure and group pressures in the school and larger community are all unfavorable to the desired attitudes, and all remain unchanged. Class activities need to be accompanied by vigorous and courageous interpretation of democracy as applied to intergroup relations.

Policies of the school with respect to equality of opportunity for student office-holding and honors attainment, to equal access to all of the facilities of the school, and to the non-discriminatory character of clubs and athletic teams, as well as the impartiality of teachers to students of all cultural groups in matters of personal attention, grades and so on, need to be exemplary. Uncompromising policies on such matters are important because of the clarification and support they lend to democratic behavior. Healthy intergroup attitudes have a much better opportunity of being expressed if the group environment guarantees them backing.

Nor can the role of the teacher in community affairs be overlooked. Active support of fair employment and education practices legislation and vigorous enforcement of these, support of policies of non-discrimination in housing, eating places and recreational facilities, and similar activities having for their purpose the democratization of the community, all serve to establish a social environment for children which encourages healthy intergroup attitudes.

---

[6] Helen G. Trager and Roberta M. Everitt, "Tools for Human Relations Education," Educational Leadership 7:530-539 (May 1950).

Employment of posters and literature seeking to promote better human relations on a mass basis appears to be relatively ineffective in itself. This is the case because of the ease with which those to whom it is most applicable may ignore or distort its meaning. However, such techniques are valuable in that they encourage the overt expression of democratic attitudes in a community or school environment where the dominant attitude differs.

The activities suggested in the preceding paragraphs are by no means new to forward-looking teachers and administrators. Many of these activities have long been part of the programs of our better elementary and secondary schools. However, until recently many such practices were not seen in their relationship to attitude changes in children. It is indeed gratifying to find that the indications from contemporary research concerned with intercultural attitude change lend further support to the case for democratic experimental education in our American schools.

For your information

NEA
RESEARCH DIVISION

National Education Association of the United States
1201 Sixteenth Street, Northwest, Washington 6, D. C.

A

June 1953

EXTENT OF STATE AND LOCAL TENURE AND CONTINUING-CONTRACT LAWS AS OF 1953

Type of provisions	States and territories: Number	States and territories: Names
1	2	3
A. Tenure and protective continuing-contract provisions: (indefinite contracts from year to year until terminated by notice, statement of reasons, and opportunity for self-defense)
Statewide	18	Ala., Ariz., Dist. of Col., Fla., Hawaii, Iowa, Ky., La., Md., Mass., Minn., Mont., N. J., N. Mex., Pa., R. I., Tenn., W. Va.
In part of state:
Excluding certain rural areas only	2	Ind., N. Y.
Optional in smaller districts	3	Calif., Colo., Ohio
Optional thruout state	2	Mich., Va.
In certain cities or counties only	10	Conn., Ga., Ill., Kans., Mo., Nebr., N. C., Oreg., S. C., Wis.
B. Continuing-contract provisions of the spring-notification type: (contracts for one or more school years, automatically renewable unless timely notice is given)
Statewide	7	Ark., Del., Maine, Nev., N. Dak., S. Dak., Wash.

(OVER)

EXTENT OF STATE AND LOCAL TENURE AND CONTINUING-CONTRACT LAWS AS OF 1953 (Cont.)

Type of provisions	States and territories
	Number	Names
1	2	3
In part of state:
All districts except tenure areas.....	10	Conn., Ill., Ind., Kans., Mo., Nebr., N. C., Oreg., S. C., Wis.
C. No tenure or spring-notification continuing-contract provisions applicable:
In any part of the state.....	9	Alaska, Idaho, Miss., N. H., Okla., Texas, Utah, Vt., Wyo.
In part of state.....	2	Ga., N. Y.

NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES
1201 SIXTEENTH STREET NORTHWEST, WASHINGTON 6, D. C.

December 23, 1953

AH
could you
to Tom puzzle
this out,
+ let me know what to do?

Mr. George S. Mitchell
Executive Director
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
Room 432, 63 Auburn Avenue, N. E.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Mr. Mitchell:

We have your letter of December 16. We are of the opinion that there is no such thing as a model tenure law in the sense that it is a single law that could be applied to all states. For that reason we have never attempted to write a model law, but rather we have worked with individual states in the development of laws that seem to fit their needs and the unique conditions that existed in each state.

This has been pretty much the point of view of state education associations as shown by the variety of practice that continues to exist in the tenure field. The general status of tenure is shown in the enclosed memorandum marked A.

In our study, Teacher Tenure: Analysis and Appraisal, we tried to show some of the problems and difficulties that can be encountered (marked B). We have also given abstracts of a number of the tenure laws. The Teacher Tenure Manual (item C) is an attempt to approach the problem from the angle of the teacher and, therefore, it emphasizes some of the steps that would be taken by teachers. At the back of the report, however, there is an analysis of local and state tenure regulations.

We have not made a compilation of teacher tenure laws since July 1946. We are sending a copy of the 1946 compilation, under separate cover, because it includes the wording of the laws as of that time.

Cordially yours,

Frank W. Hubbard
Director, Research Division

FWH:Bgp
Enclosures

Phil: If you have no use for this — return it to me, huh? (esh)

January 26, 1954

Memo to: GSM

From: AH

Re: The teacher-tenure law puzzle Teacher Tenure ?

I have scanned the NEA material and can see the complications involved in recommending specific legislation without bringing the background of law in each state into consideration.

I think, however, we could draw enough from the NEA pamphlets and other sources to do a general article on tenure legislation emphasizing:

1. The particularly pressing need for tenure laws in the South in the coming transition from segregated to non-segregated schools.

2. The general goals to work for in securing tenure legislation (provisions considered necessary for best protection)--annual contracts, assurance of fair hearings, specific cause for dismissal, etc.

3. The status quo of tenure legislation in the South--what states have tenure laws? is coverage state-wide? Which ones seem strong enough? too weak?

4. Some pointers on working for tenure laws.

The fine points of tenure legislation strike me as being too complicated for the lay person and not important to getting the need for adequate legal protection for the public school teachers circulate

Attached NEA publication "Tenure Legislation--How to Get It and Keep It" approaches tenure from a more general standpoint than the ones they sent--and looks more like what we would want to do.

It occurs to me that one of the by-products of an article on tenure laws as they would affect de-segregation would be clearer understanding that teachers and administrators--as well as pupils--will be involved in de-segregation. There has been so little general discussion of the de-segregation from the teacher-administrator angle so far.

If you want me to work on this I will be glad to.

Educ.

News from CIO

EXECUTIVE 3-5581 Congress of Industrial Organizations 718 Jackson Pl. N.W., Washington 6, D.C.

CIO CHARGES ADMINISTRATION ENGAGES IN 'DOUBLE TALK' INSTEAD OF PROMPT ACTION TO MEET PROBLEM OF NEGLECTED SCHOOLS

FOR RELEASE, SUNDAY, A.M. PAPERS, MAY 2, 1954

The CIO today charged the Eisenhower Administration with engaging in "double talk" when prompt federal action is needed to meet the problem of the nation's neglected schools.

The charge was contained in the current edition of the Economic Outlook, monthly publication of the CIO Department of Research and Education.

Noting that "even President Eisenhower himself admitted that 'our school system needs some prompt, effective help'", the Economic Outlook added that "the Eisenhower Administration has spoken no word of approval" for bills proposing Federal aid for school construction.

The Administration, the Outlook continued, "has proposed instead that we hold conferences to discover the needs of our schools and what should be done about them."

This proposal, the CIO publication continued, "ignored" the vast volume of reliable data already collected. The Outlook said:

"Conferences to talk about it (the need for school assistance) are neither prompt nor effective, particularly when several years will be spent gathering material which is already available. This is not only double work but double talk."

Recalling the CIO's long fight for adequate public school education, the Economic Outlook noted that every America pays the cost of neglected public schools.

"We pay it in the cost of crime, especially juvenile crime; we pay it in wasted and unproductive lives of men and women whose talents might have been brought out by propr schooling; we pay it in Selective Service rejections for inability to read and write," the Outlook said.

The Economic Outlook said the school problem is "critical," and it detailed it this way: "Classrooms are crowded beyond capacity; teachers are hard to get and even harder to keep; building and teacher shortages that have plagued the elementary schools are now moving slowly in on the high schools."

Recalling the huge crop of World War II babies, the Outlook said present public school enrollment is estimated at 29.6 million and added, by "by 1959, this will have jumped to 36.3 million, an increase of approximately one million children a year."

To meet this increase, the Outlook continued the nation needs "at least 40,000 new teachers a year." But with current pay scales, averaging $3605 a year, the CIO publication continued, "it is small wonder that we can't attrack young people to teaching or keep them in the classroom for more than a few years."

Recalling the recent tragic school fire in upper New York State, which took 14 lives of children housed in a frame "temporary" building, the Economic Outlook reported that one out of every five school children is "housed in a building that doesn't meet minimum fire safety standards."

The Outlook recalled that in 1949, CIO and many other groups, supported the bill offered by Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D. Minn.) for a federal school construction bill allocating $3 billion over a five-year period. As of September, 1952, the Outlook said, the U.S. Office of Education reported the need, in 43 states, for 245,317 classrooms to relieve overcrowding, house the enrollment increase through that period and to replace obsolete buildings.

Yet, the Outlook observed, the average per family spending for schools is $200 per year, while the cost of crime is $495 per family.

Pointing out that this was a national problem, which could have been corrected in great part by the Hill-Anderson bill to use off-shore oil royalties for school purposes, the Economic Outlook said:

"Now, when not just a few areas here and there but whole regions are unable to provide a decent minimum standard of education, is the time for the federal government to give the states and localities some help." It suggested that bills allocating federal funds for school construction, such as those introduced by Sen. Humphrey and John S. Cooper (R. Ky.), would materially help.

The Economic Outlook concluded: "The public schools are closer to each American family than any other tax supported institution. They are free, first because entrance to them does not depend on economic status; in a much deeper sense they are free because they are answerable to no special interest but to us, the free citizens in a free democracy. All citizens have the responsibility to use this freedom to improve our public school system."

-30-

COPY OF THE ECONOMIC OUTLOOK IS ATTACHED

5-13-54

SCARBORO SCHOOL COST PER PUPIL IN A.D.

SCHOOL YEAR 1952-53 AS COMPARED WITH SCHOOL

Average Daily Attendance	School Year	Administration	Instruction	Plant Operation	Maintenance
172.64	1952-53	$ 10.74	$ 268.66	$ 72.78	$ 30.93
151	1951-52	$ 11.55	$ 294.93	$ 87.17	$ 49.75
Area Cost Per Pupil	1952-53	$ 10.80	$ 222.33	$ 36.16	$ 15.44
1/National Median Cost Per Pupil	1951-52	$ 7.00	$ 179.51	$ 26.29	$ 15.17
Percentage of Area Budget	1952-53	3.78%	77.91%	12.67%	5.41%
1/National Median Percentage	1951-52	2.8 %	71.5 %	10.5 %	6.0 %
*Average Secondary Cost Per Pupil	1952-53	$ 330.78
	1951-52	$ 351.02
*Average Elementary Cost Per Pupil	1952-53	$ 258.42
	1951-52	$ 256.33

1/Circular No. 371, Federal Security Agency - Group II Cities - 25,000 to 99,999 Popul

*Scarboro excluded from Average Cost

Includes all Coordinate Activities and Auxiliary Services

5/13/54

R PUPIL IN A.D.A.

RED WITH SCHOOL YEAR 1951-52

n Maintenance	Fixed Charges	Cafeteria	Health Supplies	Total Applicable Costs	Cost Per Pupil
$ 30.93	$ .80	$ 3.54	$ .15	$ 66,916.00	$ 387.60
$ 49.75	$ .75	$(1.29)	$ .18	$ 66,908.00	$ 443.10
$ 15.44	$ .80	$ (.29)	$ .15	$ 1,885,909.00	$ 285.40
$ 15.17	$9.71	$13.40			$ 251.08
5.41%	.28%	(.10)%	.05%
6.0 %	3.9 %	5.3 %

to 99,999 Population

6-9-54

MEMORANDUM

THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE
386 FOURTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.
MUrray Hill 5-0181

COMMUNITY SERVICE DEPARTMENT
DR. S. ANDHIL FINEBERG, Director

Education, Gen.

SEGREGATION - TWO EDGED-SWORD

By Milton M. Gordon and John P. Roche

The enclosed article reprinted from the April 25th issue of the New York Times Magazine deals with the harm that segregation does to white citizens in the United States in addition to its well-known effects on Negroes. The authors point out that the four major areas of substantial loss to white citizens are economic, psychological, moral and international and they discuss each of these areas in some detail.

Additional copies of this article may be had at $2. per 100.

* * * * *

ARE LOS ANGELES' SCHOOL TEACHERS AFRAID TO TEACH?

There have been numerous conjectures as to whether or not attacks on the public schools have made teachers fearful of dealing with controversial issues in the class room. A series of four articles that appeared in the Los Angeles Mirror have been brought together in the enclosed reprint, showing that the existence of such fear on the part of school teachers is indeed a fact.

Up to 10 additional copies of this reprint, reproducing the results of The Mirror poll, are available on request.

(Mrs.) Dorothy M. Nathan
Community Service Department

DMN/pc
June 9, 1954
SKE
Encls. 2

153-4-54
261

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE
Office of Education
Washington 25, D.C.

Edu. Gov.

November 1954 STATISTICAL CIRCULAR Circular No. 417

FALL 1954 STATISTICS ON ENROLLMENT, TEACHERS, AND SCHOOLHOUSING IN FULL-TIME PUBLIC ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY DAY SCHOOLS

By
Samuel Schloss, Specialist in Educational Statistics

and
Carol Joy Hobson, Research Assistant*

THIS CIRCULAR presents fall 1954 statistics for the public school system on the number of pupils enrolled, the number of teachers, the number of teachers teaching under substandard credentials, and the adequacy of schoolhousing, including the number of instruction rooms scheduled for completion during the current fiscal year. The data were collected through a brief questionnaire identified as "Form RSS-052," which was mailed to each State and territorial department of education.

This is the first of a series of annual surveys, to be taken by the Office of Education in the fall of the year, the purpose of which is to obtain certain essential data about the public school system for the year in progress. It represents an effort of the Office of Education to meet a growing demand for current information. Detailed public school statistics for the entire school year will continue to be available in the regular periodic surveys.

The current survey represents one phase of a comprehensive data-collection program for the public school system which has been developed during the past several years and incorporated in Handbook I, "The Common Core of State Educational Information" (Office of Education Bulletin 1953, No. 8). Recognizing the importance of comparability of educational statistics and a common understanding of basic items, the National Council of Chief State School Officers requested the Office of Education to conduct a cooperative project with State and territorial departments of education to achieve these objectives. Handbook I is now being adapted by the various States to their own data-collection systems. Chapter 11 of Handbook I laid the groundwork for the present survey by expressly providing for the collection by State departments of education of a "minimum list" of items of information in the fall of each year. Not all of the States were able to set up the machinery for obtaining the information for this first fall report. Because the usefulness of the information is dependent upon the promptness with which it is published, an early closing date had to be set for the filing of the individual State reports. Consequently, some States and Territories were unable to submit the required current information by the time this publication went to press. Reports were received from 41 States, the District of Columbia, and six outlying parts of the United States. Several of these States either did not fill in data for one or two of the items requested or indicated that they had used estimates where actual figures were not available.

*Under the general direction of Emery M. Foster, Head, Reports and Analysis.

State, by region	Number of pupils on current rolls			Number of teachers, full-time and part-time (excluding supervisors, principals, librarians, etc.)
	Total	Elementary	Secondary	Total	Elementary	Seconda
Continental United States
NORTHEAST
Connecticut	359,000	231,000	128,000	13,900	9,400	4,50
Massachusetts	669,617	462,233	207,384	27,446	17,201	10,24
New Hampshire	83,733	59,290	24,443	2/3,343	2/2,149	2/1,19
New Jersey	839,000	670,000	169,000	32,000	23,400	8,60
New York	2,261,161	1,401,920	859,241	88,800	50,050	38,75
Pennsylvania	1,808,868	1,171,868	637,000	64,821	36,292	28,52
Rhode Island	*	*	*	*	*
Vermont	66,573	48,637	17,936	2,630	1,874	75
NORTH CENTRAL
Illinois 3/	969,489	726,729	242,760	40,801	27,792	13,00
Iowa	541,000	411,000	130,000	22,551	15,068	7,48
Kansas	386,915	292,244	94,671	19,573	13,143	6,41
Minnesota	579,302	368,945	210,357	23,843	13,597	10,24
Missouri	732,565	571,400	161,165	24,800	18,000	6,8
Nebraska	240,148	178,241	61,907	12,514	8,746	3,7
North Dakota	120,733	91,779	28,954	3/6,046	4,559	1,4
Ohio	1,505,441	1,015,619	489,822	3/44,945	23,667	21,2
South Dakota	132,470	100,841	31,629	7,810	5,642	2,1
Wisconsin	*	*	*	*	*
SOUTH
Alabama	703,647	448,970	254,677	23,022	14,052	8,9
Arkansas	430,000	275,000	155,000	13,423	7,898	5,5
Delaware	57,921	35,372	22,549	2,542	1,415	1,1
Florida	600,877	382,870	218,007	24,180	14,250	9,9
Georgia	893,761	674,382	219,379	28,434	19,298	9,1
Kentucky	580,533	470,152	110,381	20,500	14,000	6,5
Louisiana	575,000	460,000	115,000	19,180	12,780	6,4
Maryland	453,800	289,037	164,763	15,906	8,844	7,0
Mississippi	540,157	450,110	90,047	15,122	10,838	4,2
North Carolina	1,018,067	798,417	219,650	32,255	23,885	8,3
Oklahoma	453,191	332,658	120,533	18,759	11,636	7,1
South Carolina	501,678	370,158	131,520	18,240	12,400	5,8
Tennessee	713,704	537,990	175,714	24,013	17,469	6,5
Texas	1,686,377	1,328,330	358,047	56,013	37,535	18,4
West Virginia	448,280	291,077	157,203	14,570	8,840	5,7
District of Columbia	104,491	66,103	38,388	3,620	1,939	1,6
WEST
Arizona	186,674	145,899	40,775	6,910	5,165	1,7
Colorado	266,534	204,165	62,369	11,606	8,531	3,0
Idaho	139,059	103,176	35,883	4,695	2,958	1,7
Montana	117,784	87,696	30,088	5,514	4,062	1,4
Nevada	42,187	33,289	8,898	1,732	1,303	4
Oregon	318,470	239,859	78,611	12,622	9,167	3,4
Washington	490,184	372,431	117,753	18,001	13,097	4,9
Wyoming	63,837	44,813	19,024	3,109	2,027	1,0
Outlying parts of the United States 5/
American Samoa	6,043	5,870	173	194	186
Alaska	25,003	21,309	3,694	1,132	916	2
Canal Zone	10,495	7,126	3,369	377	224	1
Puerto Rico	520,440	394,759	125,681	10,659	6,705	3,9
Virgin Islands (St. Croix)	2,130	1,550	580	66	40
Guam	10,917	8,687	2,230	364	292

* Data not available.

1/ Data for 96 towns only, which account for approximately half of all pupils in the State.

2/ Full-time only.

3/ Data, which are shown as reported by State, appear incomplete when compared with similar data previously re

4/ Includes 143 teachers not distributed by level.

5/ The outlying parts are not listed in strict alphabetical order because of the receipt of two late reports.

954 STATISTICS ON ENROLLMENT, TEACHERS, AND SCHOOLHOUSING, IN FULL-TIME PUBLIC ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY DAY SCHOOLS

full-time and ng supervisors, arians, etc.)		Number of full-time teachers teaching under substandard credentials			Number of pupils in excess of the normal capacity of the accessible publicly owned school plants in use			Total number of instruction rooms scheduled for completion during current fiscal year
ary	Secondary	Total	Elementary	Secondary	Total	Elementary	Secondary
00	4,500	875	831	44	1/6,886	*	*	1,652
01	10,245	8,212	6,880	1,332	41,470	28,470	13,000	940
49	2/1,194	261	208	53	4,588	3,549	1,039	227
00	8,600	3,000	2,700	300	81,000	64,000	17,000	1,000
50	38,750	4,200	3,900	300	130,000	120,000	10,000	4,951
92	28,529	1,600	800	800	52,369	47,971	4,398	6,000
*	*	117	88	29	*	*	*	237
74	756	266	229	37	8,448	7,024	1,424	103
92	13,009	2,684	2,282	402	40,614	33,420	7,194	2,116
68	7,483	500	385	115	70,500	50,900	19,600	1,300
43	6,430	45	33	12	1,427	1,107	320	920
97	10,246	400	280	120	*	*	*	700
00	6,800	9,300	8,000	1,300	48,000	40,000	8,000	1,200
46	3,768	739	564	175	7,137	5,120	2,017	430
59	1,487	400	350	50	3,000	2,500	500	150
67	21,278	3,159	2,799	360	81,516	59,317	22,199	2,021
42	2,168	921	921	-	13,380	10,180	3,200	174
*	*	*	*	*	12,500	10,000	2,500	1,050
52	8,970	2,067	1,442	625	330,287	330,287	-	1,051
98	5,525	5,000	3,500	1,500	86,671	55,429	31,242	242
15	1,127	266	262	4	700	700	-	*
50	9,930	1,364	1,148	216	82,789	61,260	21,529	1,613
98	9,136	450	*	*	40,000	*	*	2,000
00	6,500	2,200	1,900	300	60,000	42,000	18,000	1,000
80	6,400	2,500	2,440	60	86,250	62,610	23,640	2,200
44	7,062	3,317	2,636	681	37,849	29,688	8,161	732
38	4,284	1,057	957	100	150,000	112,500	37,500	300
85	8,370	2,400	2,160	240	9,500	7,500	2,000	*
36	7,123	-	-	-	*	*	*	900
00	5,840	650	400	250	70,000	50,000	20,000	2,200
69	6,544	950	691	259	37,166	28,016	9,150	1,031
35	18,478	2,810	1,686	1,124	20,300	20,000	300	4,000
40	5,730	887	756	131	3,500	2,000	1,500	103
39	1,681	450	300	150	7,132	5,760	1,372	24
65	1,745	35	15	20	22,471	15,575	6,896	442
31	3,075	600	540	60	52,000	40,000	12,000	1,000
58	1,737	1,250	906	344	*	*	*	327
62	1,452	553	553	-	14,000	10,000	4,000	405
03	429	4	3	1	5,950	4,560	1,390	247
67	3,455	1,503	1,503	-	1,100	1,100	-	700
97	4,904	1,500	1,200	300	85,000	64,600	20,400	1,000
27	1,082	220	212	8	1,308	849	459	125
86	8	20	20	-	-	-	-	6
16	216	59	56	3	8,000	7,000	1,000	127
24	153	37	36	1	-	-	-	-
05	3,954	4/1,368	583	642	257,049	221,758	35,291	479
40	26	8	3	5	213	213	-	34
92	72	*	*	*	44	44	*	*

previously reported for 1951-52.

ate reports.

Pupils Enrolled and Number of Teachers

It should be noted that the enrollment data appearing in this circular, which are compiled in the fall of the year, will not be comparable with the statistics on enrollment given in other publications of the Office of Education, which are cumulative for the year as a whole. Also, the data for teachers are for classroom teachers only, while in other reports the term "teachers" generally includes other instructional staff such as librarians and guidance officers but not supervisors and principals. Because of the lack of data from the nonreporting States, no totals for the continental United States are given in the table for any of the items. However, it is estimated that there are approximately 28,990,000 pupils who are taught by 1,050,000 teachers.

Shortage of Qualified Teachers

The individual States set the requirements for teachers for both regular certificates and emergency certificates. The proportion of teachers teaching under substandard credentials varied from State to State. Thirty-nine States and the District of Columbia reported data for both total teachers and teachers with substandard credentials. There were over 68,000 in the latter category, which constituted 8.3 percent of all teachers. Over four-fifths of the emergency teachers were concentrated in the elementary schools. There were also many teachers holding regular certificates who have met only the minimum State standards of preparation.

Adequacy of Schoolhousing

There were 1.8 million pupils in excess of the normal capacity of the accessible publicly owned school plants in those States which reported for this item. This represents 8.3 percent of their total enrollment. Normal capacity is defined as the number of pupils that can be accommodated in the instruction rooms of a given plant for the school day according to existing State standards exclusive of multiple sessions. When nonpublicly owned quarters or makeshift or improvised facilities are used, all pupils housed in such facilities are considered as in excess of normal capacity as well as the pupils who are in excess of the normal capacity in permanent publicly owned school plants. A total of 47,000 instruction rooms was reported as scheduled for completion during the current fiscal year.

Assuming that the new instruction rooms will be utilized entirely as additional facilities rather than as replacements for obsolete quarters, almost a half-million pupils currently on the rolls will still be housed in inadequate facilities if a ratio of 30 pupils per classroom is used. This points up the need for additional school construction to meet current demands as well as to provide for the continuing increases in enrollment from year to year.

GPO 884524

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF
HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE
Office of Education
Washington 25, D. C.

PENALTY FOR PRIVATE USE TO AVOID
PAYMENT OF POSTAGE, $300
GPO

Official Business

If you do not desire to continue receiving this publication, please check here ☐ and return to above address.

Editor,
The New South,
63 Auburn Ave., N.E.,
Atlanta, Ga.

E-22-4

Education, Gen

Scarboro School Enrollment

1953-54

Accumulative ADA to date	197.57
Total Enrollment	238
Enrollment for April	209
Percentage of attendance for year	91.89

Distribution of Enrollment

Kindergarten-4	97
5th-8th	66
9th-12th	46

1954

Materials - Teacher tenure and status - Ed. Gen.

Negro Teachers In "Integrated" School Systems

By Paul Cooke and Inez Imogene Hairston

Dr. Cooke, Associate Professor of English at Miner Teachers, recently conducted the research study for the Evaluation Commission of the American Council on Human Rights and has several articles on school integration in the Journal of Negro Education. Miss Hairston, who collaborated on the research and compilation of this article, is a member of the Beta Iota Chapter of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority and a 1953 graduate of Miner Teachers College.

On two occasions, December 1952 and December of last year, the full attention of Americans as well as the world generally was directed to arguments to end school segregation complained of in the five cases before the United States Supreme Court. Of course, during the past two decades the Supreme Court has issued a number of decisions which have led to the end of school segregation, particularly on the graduate level. And many institutions have voluntarily ended barriers against the Negro and admitted him to study. Ending racial segregation in education, in all areas of life for that matter, has been and is a primary goal for many people. It is, of course, an essential objective of the Delta Sigma Theta sorority as a member organization of the American Council on Human Rights, the Greek-letter societies' civil rights leader.

This article is directed to what is generally recognized as a secondary factor in the school segregation fight—employment of the Negro teacher. Secondary although the matter is, work for the Negro school teacher, constituting a significant economic factor, nevertheless is very important. How has he fared in integrated school systems? Is his employment on the increase or decrease? Can any conclusions relative to his employment in the integrated school systems be used to gauge his economic opportunity in school systems that change over from segregation to non-segregation and eventually integration?

This study presents certain information about the Negro teacher in the "integrated" school system, which is defined simply as that system which is not required to separate children or teacher by race because of any law or ordinance. The results, in general, are encouraging to the extent that

1. The Negro teacher is employed in many American cities all over the United States.
2. His employment has increased sharply in numbers (and percentage-wise), although by no means in the same numbers or percentages as in the segregated school systems.
3. Many cities, although not now employing Negro teachers, have stated a policy of non-discrimination in hiring educational employees.
4. The Negro works in many other professional and clerical capacities besides that of the classroom teacher.

The following information was collected, first, from questionnaires returned by school officials of public school systems during the school year 1947-48; second, from letters returned by school officials of such systems during the past school year 1952-53. The answers indicated conditions during those two school years. The material that follows has been grouped in four categories: (a) Increase in employment of Negro teachers, 1947-53; (b) Policy of non-discrimination but no Negro teachers; (c) Large cities for which no figures are available but for which an increased number is highly likely; (d) No favorable or unfavorable policy but no Negro teachers..

The information is available from highly reliable sources: generally school superintendents, their administrative assistants, or assistant superintendents; school research bureau officers; personnel officers; in one instance, a president of the A. F. L. teachers' union in that city; in another instance, the Council on Human Rights of another city.

CATEGORY I

Increase in Number of Negro Teachers, 1947 - 53

City School System (Alphabetical)	School Years 1947-48	School Years 1952-53	Increase Numerical	Increase Percent
BERKELEY, CALIF.	3	6[1]	3	50
CAMDEN, N. J.	91	—[2]	—	—
CINCINNATI, OHIO	136.3	—[3]	—	—
DAYTON, OHIO	130	151	21	16.1
DENVER, COLO.	—	23	—	—
ELIZABETH, N. J.
ERIE, PENNA.	1	1½	½	50
FLINT, MICH.	5	29	24	480
FORT WAYNE, IND.	0	1	—	—
GARY, IND.	135	239	104	77
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.	1	7	6	600
HARTFORD, CONN.	9	25[4]	—	—
LANSING, MICH.	0	4	—	—
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN	1	10[1]	9	900
MOUNT VERNON, N. Y.	2	4[1]	2	50
PATTERSON, N. J.	9	25	16	177
PORTLAND, OREGON	2	10-15[4]	—	—
ROCHESTER, N. Y.	2	15[5]	13	650
SACRAMENTO, CALIF.	1	3	2	200
ST. PAUL, MINN.	3	12	9	300
SOMERVILLE, MASS.	1	2	1	100
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.	1	3[4]	—	—
SYRACUSE, N. Y.	0	2[5]	—	—
TACOMA, WASH.	1	2[5]	1	100
TOLEDO, OHIO	24	43[6]	19	79
TRENTON, N. J.	33	36	3	9.9
YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO	5	14	9	180
ZANESVILLE, OHIO	0	1	—	—

[1] Not including substitute teachers
[2] "greatly increasing"
[3] "steadily increasing"
[4] Estimated number of teachers
[5] Additional—either qualified to teach or in adult education
[6] For school year 1951-52

The list of school systems, regional in scope, shows a consistent increase during the five-year period. The percentage increase is likely more striking that the actual increase in the number of teachers. On such a basis of past increase during 1947-48 and 1952-53, a prediction of future increase is reasonable.

CATEGORY II

A Policy of Non-Discrimination

In the letters from school superintendents (and one assistant superindendent) of the following public school systems are either flat statements of non-discrimination or indications that qualified Negro teachers would be hired. Here are pertinent quotations, describing situations in which Negro teachers are not employed but well might be.

1. Allentown, Penna. "Employment of teachers in the Allentown Schools, is so far as we can determine, based on merit of persons irrespective of race, nationality, or religion. We have had only negro (sic) application in recent years."
2. Cedar Rapids, Iowa. ". . . it is true that we have no segregation rule of any kind relative to race or anything else. At the present time we do not have any Negros employed in the school system. This is not because there has been any prejudice against it."
3. Manchester, N. H. "We had one Negro cadet teacher at one of our high schools in 1950 but no employees in a full-time capacity."
4. New Britain, Conn. "According to the policy of the New Britain Board of Education, we do not discriminate nor show preference on a religious, political, racial or nationality basis when considering candidates for employment as members of our staff. We have, during the past several years, interviewed Negro candidates for teaching positions but have not up to the present time been successful in finding any that were able to qualify for employment.
5. Providence, R. I. "In the Providence plan for selecting teachers no questions are raised regarding color, race or creed and teachers are selected in absolute order from a list . . . If you have any people interested in applying for teaching in Providence I suggest that they make application to the Director of Personnel who will send them the necessary blank."
6. Racine, Wisconsin, "I do not know the present feeling of the Board of Education, but I have not heard them make any objection to the employment of properly certified negro (sic) persons."
7. Reading, Penna. "The Reading School District employs no negro (sic) teachers in the school system at the present time." (Our italics.)
8. Scranton, Penna. "To the best of my knowledge, at no time has a Negro teacher made application for a position in the Scranton Public School System. This semester, however, we do have a young Negro girl, who will graduate from Marywood College in June, doing her practice teaching in one of our elementary schools. This same young lady was employed by us as a recreation leader during the past summer."

These statements, of course, guarantee no Negro teacher a job, but in varying degrees they are encouraging.

CATEGORY III

Several Large Cities and Negro Teachers

In varying percentages Negro teachers have for some time been a part of the teaching force of large city school systems. For the large cities—included here Chicago, Detroit, Los Angeles, New York City, and Philadelphia—figures are generally not easily obtainable. "No record"—Chicago. 385 in Detroit in 1958, no answer in 1953. Los Angeles: "Current Personnel Division records do not identify the race, color, or religion of any employe. This practice is considered consistent with the letter and spirit of the Board's policy that no racial discrimination be shown." In 1947 an assistant superintendent of New York City schools—". . . my estimate that there are several hundred Negro teachers . . ."; comparable figures in 1953 are not available. In Philadelphia in 1947 "a great many Negroes [teachers], in 1952-53, there has been an increase in the proportion of the Negro teachers employed in Philadelphia since 1947." No evidence or reason exists to believe that Negro teachers are not on the increase in numbers and percentage in these large cities.

CATEGORY IV

No Negro Teachers — No Policy

In this category are cities which have neither stated that they will employ teachers on their merit nor stated that they will not employ Negro teachers. No policy, in fact, is stated; as a matter of fact, no Negro teachers employed; as a matter of conjecture, none likely to be employed shortly, in many instances of this category.

In general, these cities have small Negro population, in one instance no Negroes, and apparently assume that no consideration should be given to hiring Negro teachers when the Negro school population is small. Cheyenne, Wyoming: ". . . so few Negroes in our community this particular problem does not present itself in a very serious form." (All of this information from the 1952-53 letters). . . . "no Negroes living in Cicero." . . . "number of Negroes in Salt Lake City and the state of Utah is very small." . . . "no Negro teachers and other educational workers in the public schools of Utica [New York]."

* * *

This whole subject of employment of Negro teachers in public school systems which are not required by law to segregate children and teachers calls for more study. But probably more important it calls for applications on the part of qualified Negro teachers. (Other professional and clerical workers might also apply, for the following workers are also found in the school systems of Categories I and III: medical officers and psychologists, principals and assistant principals, attendance officers; secretaries, clerks, and stenographers; maintenance and custodial employees. And in a very few instances Negroes are members of the "School Committee," or Board of Education.)

On the whole, Negro teachers in increasing numbers are finding employment in their profession in integrated school systems.

Reprint from THE DELTA JOURNAL, 1954

Citizens AND THEIR Schools

MARCH, 1955 NEWS FOR PEOPLE WORKING FOR BETTER SCHOOLS VOL. 5, NO. 6

1955: A BIG YEAR FOR EDUCATION

NSBA SET TO SPUR GRASS-ROOTS TALKS

Field Staff Will Service Communities Planning Meets

On-the-spot assistance to communities planning conferences on education will be provided by the National School Boards Association, thanks to recent action by the NSBA board of directors.

A field staff, headed by Dr. Maurice Stapley, Director of Projects for the NSBA, is now being set up.

The field men will be available to consult with local organizations and individuals and generally lend a hand in the community-wide meetings.

Dr. Stapley

The new NSBA project is intended to supplement the state, territorial, and White House conferences on education called for by President Eisenhower.

The majority of the states and territories have already set up machinery for state-wide meetings, to be held prior to the White House Conference, Nov. 28 - Dec. 1, 1955.

NSBA President Jesse Stratton called school boards "the logical group to take the initiative in assisting communities to do some concerted thinking about their public schools."

Dr. Stapley is on leave of absence as Assistant Dean, School of Education of Indiana University. His new mail address is Box 47, Bloomington, Indiana.

According to Stapley, "the NSBA will seek the cooperation of lay and educational organizations in each of the states in promoting interest in community conferences, and will encourage local board members to help in the planning of such conferences."

SUCCESSOR TO CARRY ON WORK

Responding to the pleas of hundreds of laymen and educators that some form of national impetus for school improvement be continued after the expiration of the charter of the National Citizens Commission, Roy E. Larsen, NCCPS chairman, today announced plans for a successor organization.

Tentatively called the National Citizens Council for Public Schools, the new group would be composed of interested laymen from a wide area of American life. Several new leaders have already emerged and have taken on the responsibilities of organizing the new group.

Meanwhile, the National Citizens Commission announced the extension of its charter through January 31, 1956. The new group, it is hoped, would start operations sometime during 1955 so both groups could operate concurrently for a period.

The exact nature of the new Council's work will be announced through this news bulletin as plans become more definite. Persons who have urged the NCCPS to continue its work have underscored the need for a continuing program to alert Americans to the problems of the public schools and to inspire cooperative work for their improvement. In setting up its program it is expected that the new group will respond to the wishes of citizens' committees and individuals interested in school improvement.

Financing of the successor group is made possible through an announced grant of $500,000 for a two and one half year period from the Carnegie Corporation, one of the NCCPS's principal sources of financial support.

COMMISSION TO BOOST COMMUNITY CONFABS

Will Use Ads, Booklets To Inspire Local Talks

A revival of the old town-meeting method for community action is in the offing -- and on the largest scale in the nation's history.

The National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools, set to disband in May, 1955, has extended its charter through January 31, 1956, in order to take part in stimulating the community-conference movement and has already begun setting up a program which is designed to inspire "a conference on education in every community."

Dove-tailing with President Eisenhower's program for state and territory-wide conferences culminating in the November 28-December 1, 1955 White House Conference on Education, the Commission's program will concentrate on sparking local-level talks before and after the state and national education discussions.

A grant of $250,000 from the Fund for the Advancement of Education will be used to encourage community-wide meetings.

According to Roy E. Larsen, NCCPS chairman, the Commission's decision to extend its charter results from "a reappraisal of the work that lies ahead."

"The year 1955," he said, "promises to be a most important one for education and our Commission believes that it will be serving the public good to continue its operations as a catalyst and as a clearinghouse of information during this important period of decision."

Activities of the Commission in this project will include:

- Stepped-up Better Schools advertising campaign materials, concentrating on community talks.
- Booklets and publications on the importance of the talks, with a new working guide How Can We Discuss School Problems? as a key piece.
- A special newspaper to disseminate information on local and state confer-

(Continued on page 2)

HOW GOOD ARE OUR TEACHING MATERIALS?

The answer must come from you.

And a new booklet in the Commission's working guide series gives the history of the teaching materials used in American public schools, provides a checklist study guide for local groups and gives sources of information -- all to help you determine your answer.

The new guide, How Good Are Our Teaching Materials? contains no judgment. Instead, by showing the evolution of textbooks and other instructional materials, it provides a background of knowledge necessary for the citizen who is concerned with the quality of the tools with which our school children learn.

As with all the booklets in the working guide series, it draws but one conclusion: that the responsibility for determining how good or bad instructional materials are lies with the citizens.

Says Commission Director Henry Toy, Jr.: "This new booklet will, I am sure, be of inestimable help to citizens' committees and other groups which are planning to study the materials being used in their local schools.

"In preparing the new guide, we have made no attempt to pass judgment on teaching materials used in our schools for we believe that the judgment must come from the citizens themselves. We believe that everyone is aware of the importance of the textbook and audio visual aids in the schools of today and that because our citizens are cognizant of their importance, they will want to make sure that the children in their schools are being taught with the best materials available. This new guide will help them to study those materials and to come up with their answer to the question posed in the title of our guide -- How Good Are Our Teaching Materials?

Some of the discussions contained in the 92-page guide include: Are American textbooks subversive? How are textbooks used? How have they changed over the years? Who writes them? Who publishes them? Who selects them? Who pays how much for textbooks? What do audio-visual aids contribute? What are their limitations? It also considers the school library, government publications and industry-sponsored materials as classroom tools.

Single copies of the guide are available from the Commission at no charge. Quantities are made available at cost price.

"Take a child, add one well-trained teacher and a good textbook...."
(Official photograph, Board of Education, City of New York)

Commission's Annual Dinner Postponed

The Sixth Annual Dinner of the National Citizens Commission -- its final annual meeting -- originally scheduled for May 9, 1955, has been postponed because of the Commission's extension of its charter.

The annual dinner meeting will be held at a date to be announced later. Watch Citizens and their Schools for more details.

HARTUNG HEADS LOCAL-TALKS WORK

Cecil H. Hartung, NCCPS regional director for Midwestern States, is now serving as Assistant Director of the NCCPS in charge of coordinating its work on community conferences.

He will be dividing his time between the Commission's New York office and his Minneapolis regional office. That office will remain open for business and will continue to service local and state citizens' committees in Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, North Dakota, Ohio, South Dakota and Wisconsin.

WRITE FOR

The teaching staff in District No. 1, Rye, New York, wanted to know what talents, hobbies and collections in the community could be of help in teaching children to learn, so they asked the local PTA to find out for them. A case history, COMMUNITY RESOURCE FILE, Rye, N.Y., tells how the PTA went about it.

* * *

The Citizens' Council for the Public Schools of the Pikes Peak Region took a long look at the schools in one district -- and they did their looking only after getting a good historical perspective. Their report, CITIZENS COUNCIL FOR THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF PIKES PEAK, shows how a knowledge of the schools' history helped in planning for tomorrow.

* * *

Want to find out what the people in your community think about their schools? A good guide to action can be found in a new case history from the citizens' committee in Danville, California. It tells how the committee conducted a public opinion survey, how it formed the questions, how it tabulated the answers, how it drew conclusions.

COMMISSION TO BOOST COMMUNITY CONFABS

(Continued from page 1)

ences, to promote them and to present findings of interest to conference planners.

- Intensified promotion of newspaper, magazine, radio and TV coverage of news from local, state and the national conference on education.
- Encouragement of other organizations to work with the NSBA (Page 1, Column 1) in making "1955: A Big Year For Education."

SEE OUR NEW SYMBOL ...

The Better Schools advertising campaign -- conducted by the Commission and The Advertising Council -- now has a new trade mark. It's the silhouette shown at right, five children sitting at their school desks. Watch for the new symbol on Better Schools ads and postage-meter ads. Use it yourself in your school-improvement work. Glossy prints available from the Commission.

BETTER SCHOOLS BUILD

BETTER COMMUNITIES

SPOT NEWS AROUND THE NATION

Great Neck, N.Y., residents gave their solid approval recently to their board's proposal calling for construction of a 1400-pupil junior and a 1200-pupil senior high school. The vote was 2475 in favor to 871 against. The turnout of voters was the largest ever recorded in that town, and the yes vote paves the way for restoration of single sessions in the junior high school.

* * *

The only film to describe in detail how a school board operates -- "School Board in Action" -- is now available for rental at film libraries in 41 states.

According to the National School Boards Assn., the 16mm film runs 27 minutes and is ideal for PTA and citizens' group meetings. For more information, get in touch with the NSBA, 450 East Ohio Street, Chicago 11, Ill.

* * *

It took two full pages of the Kalamazoo (Michigan) Gazette to tell how "All Kalamazoo is Working Together for Better Schools." With that as its title, a double page ad gave an annual school finance report, listed about 60 groups which are helping schools and paid special tribute to the PTA and citizens' committee as "forces that make Better Schools."

* * *

Mrs. Lois Belcher is the new president of the North Dakota Council on Education following a recent annual meeting. Warner Quale of Bismarck is vice-president; and Richard Klein of the same city was re-elected secretary-treasurer. Mrs. Belcher is from Fessenden.

Besides electing new heads, the Council changed its constitution and by-laws to provide for individual memberships on a non-voting basis and to suggest member organizations select delegates for at least a two-year period.

The teachers of Richmond, Virginia, will receive an across-the-board salary increase of $300 next year, thanks to the work of a special Citizens' Committee on Teachers Salaries appointed by the Richmond City School Board. The committee studied the teacher pay picture and came up with recommendations, which the board seconded as "sound and realistic." The City Manager's new budget provides for the increase.

* * *

In West Des Moines, Iowa, a citizens' committee -- formed last April -- played a big part in putting over a bond issue for 12 additional classrooms late in January. The committee set up sub-committees to study buildings, budget and school population. On the basis of the findings, brochures and a detailed survey book were prepared and distributed. When the votes were all counted they added up to this: 69 against, 799 in favor.

* * *

"101 Questions About Public Education" are answered by the National Congress of Parents and Teachers in a new booklet edited by Dr. John W. Studebaker. As chairman of the National Congress' Committee on School Education, Dr. Studebaker -- assisted by state presidents and other PTA leaders -- asked parents throughout America to decide what questions seemed most serious and important. The book is a selection of the 101 big questions to come out of the survey. It sells for $1. Write the National Congress of PTA, 700 North Rush Street, Chicago 11, Illinois. The Title: "101 Questions About Public Education."

* * *

Public-spirited Borg Warner, engineering production firm, in a "Ripley's Believe It Or Not!" advertisement plugging its products, gave a big plug to Better Schools. The advertisement urged readers to write to the Commission. The ad appeared in six leading magazines.

* * *

Both PTA groups in Elmwood Park, Illinois, have increased their scholarship fund from $5 to $250 to assist future teachers.

* * *

A citizens' committee to study school finance has been formed for the Eureka, Kansas, Public Schools.

* * *

The National Education Association and the Magazine Publishers Association have formed a joint committee "to coordinate educational efforts of schools and magazines in behalf of a better informed public." Roy E. Larsen, Commission chairman and president of TIME Inc. serves as co-chairman.

* * *

Thirty local citizens' committees in fast-growing Long Island are now forming a service agency through which they hope to help one another to work more effectively for their schools.

Previous workshop conferences attended by representatives of the 30 groups pointed up the need for the clearinghouse group, to be known as the Long Island Citizens Council for the Public Schools. It represents the first regional association of citizens' committees in New York State.

Citizens and their Schools is published by
National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools
2 WEST 45TH STREET • NEW YORK 36

Chairman.....Roy E. Larsen
Vice Chairman...Samuel C. Gale
Secretary.....Leo Perlis
Treasurer.....James F. Brownlee
Director.....Henry Toy, Jr.

Dad's Report Card

Reprinted courtesy National Newspaper Syndicate and Dallas Times Herald.

HELP RADIO HELP SCHOOLS: KEX

From Jesse Leonard, program department of KEX radio station, Portland, Oregon, comes this plea for local citizens' groups to get behind the Better Schools campaign .....

"I believe cities the size of Portland have organized citizens' committees for the betterment of education. Would it not be possible to suggest to such committees that they check the radio, TV stations, etc., to see that the material furnished (by the NCCPS and the Advertising Council) is sufficient? It is my feeling in radio at least that the announcements sent to the individual stations will be used, but after using each announcement once that will be the end of the campaign so far as the station is concerned."

The Commission seconds the motion and offers its booklet, How Can We Advertise School Needs? as a source for ideas.

DIRECTOR'S DIARY

by Henry Toy, Jr.

The three stories on page one point toward a big year for education in 1955.

The Commission's charter has been extended to the end of next January, a successor group is being planned, and the National School Boards Association is planning an all-out effort to help communities hold local conferences on education.

Citizens and their Schools will keep its readers informed of all three plans as they move from the drawing boards to the field of action. No matter what the details turn out to be, it's clear at the outset that the emphasis of all three organizations is going to be on the community.

In line with this, the Commission is preparing materials that can be shaped to fit the educational picture of the biggest state and the smallest community.

NEW GUIDE ON MEETINGS

Cornerstone of these materials is a booklet in our working guide series which will be ready shortly after this newsbulletin reaches you. It's called How Can We Discuss School Problems? and is a guide to conferences on school problems. It takes the reader through the steps of deciding on the purpose of the conference, planning, program, participation, arrangements, publicity and follow-up.

Besides the text on how to set up a workshop in your community, there are fourteen outline pages for the community to fill in. When that's done, those fourteen pages can become the outline for the conference.

We will be delighted to put one of these booklets into the hands of anyone helping or hoping to plan a meeting on school problems. Write us to reserve your copy.

AD CAMPAIGN BOOSTS TALKS

Meanwhile, the Advertising Council and Benton & Bowles Inc., volunteer advertising agency, are working with us on plans for promotion and advertising materials. These will include newspaper ads, radio and television spots, window posters - all of which can be used to tell your community about your local conference.

This added emphasis on community conferences is an indication of the Commission's continuing belief that school problems will be solved on the local level after intelligent discussion. It's also an indication that 1955 will be a big year for education.

But it will be only as big as you -- the citizens -- make it!

National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools
2 WEST 45TH STREET • NEW YORK 36

SEC.34.65(e) P.L.&R.
U. S. POSTAGE
PAID
New York, N. Y.
Permit No. 2488

Education Gen.

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE
Office of Education
Washington 25, D. C.

PRELIMINARY PRELIMINARY

September 1955 STATISTICAL CIRCULAR Circular No. 459

PRELIMINARY STATISTICS OF STATE SCHOOL SYSTEMS, 1953-54: PROVISIONAL DATA FOR 35 STATES AND ESTIMATES FOR CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES (Full-time Public Elementary and Secondary Schools)*

by

Samuel Schloss, Specialist in Educational Statistics
and
Carol Joy Hobson, Research Assistant

THIS CIRCULAR is issued in accordance with the general policy of the Office of Education to disseminate statistical information as promptly as possible. It presents preliminary statistics on public elementary and secondary education for the school year 1953-54, based on returns from the first 35 States and 5 outlying parts which furnished reasonably complete data for the Office of Education's Biennial Survey of Education. The reader is cautioned, however, that the figures for 1953-54 are still tentative and subject to revision.

Included in this circular are data on total and school-age population, pupil enrollment and attendance, number of high school graduates, number of instructional staff members, average salary of instructional staff, revenue and nonrevenue receipts, expenditures by major purpose, and current expenditure per pupil in average daily attendance. For purposes of comparison, national figures are also given for each item for the school year 1951-52. (No interim survey was conducted by the Office of Education for the year 1952-53.)

Summary

The school year 1953-54 was characterized by new records in both the size and cost of public elementary and secondary education. Total population and school-age population were at an all-time high. This was also true of total pupil enrollment, average daily attendance, number of instructional staff, and school costs. Only two items -- secondary-school enrollment and number of high school graduates -- were below their peaks, probably reflecting the smaller number of children born in the years from which these enrollments originated. Highlights of the changes between 1951-52 and 1953-54 for each of the major educational items are given below.

School-Age Population and Total Population at Beginning of School Year

During the biennium July 1, 1951-July 1, 1953, the estimated school-age population (ages 5-17 years, inclusive) grew at a rate far more rapid than that of the total population. The estimated number of 34.5 million school-age children on July 1, 1953 represented an increase of 3.2 million, or 10.1 percent, over the number estimated on July 1, 1951. During the same period the total population increased 3.2 percent--from 153.4 million to 158.3 million.

*Prepared under the general direction of Emery M. Foster, Head, Reports and Analysis.

(Continued on p. 4)

PRELIMINARY STATISTICS OF PUBLIC ELEMENTARY AND SE
AND ESTIMATES FOR CONTINEN

Region and State	Estimated population, July 1, 1953 (thousands)1/		Number of pupils enrolled (thousands)			Average daily attendance (thousands)	High school graduates	Number of instructional staff2/	Amount (thousands of dollars
	Total population (excluding armed forces overseas)	School-age population (5-17 years, inclusive)	Total	Elementary (kindergarten to 8th grade, inclusive)	Secondary (grades 9-12 and post-graduate)
1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10
CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES:
1953-54 (Estimated)	158,306	34,535	28,819	22,544	6,275	25,637	1,132,395	1,099,245	$7,864,538
1951-52	153,383	31,379	26,563	20,681	5,882	23,257	1,055,586	1,012,384	6,423,816
Percent increase, 1951-52 to 1953-54	3.2	10.1	8.5	9.0	6.7	10.2	7.3	8.6	22.4
NORTHEAST:
Connecticut	2,162	427	349	280	69	313	13,278	13,972	98,444
Massachusetts	4,900	953	711	541	170	623	33,052	29,505	195,990
New Jersey	5,141	992	794	623	171	701	31,610	33,128	251,319
New York	15,233	2,854	2,303	1,776	526	1,959	91,116	93,948	867,335
Pennsylvania	10,656	2,224	1,699	1,268	431	1,539	80,075	62,037	465,393
Vermont	377	88	64	50	14	59	2,690	2,887	17,356
NORTH CENTRAL:
Illinois	9,003	1,795	1,363	1,044	320	1,202	60,170	54,189	432,305
Iowa	2,605	572	523	399	123	464	25,205	25,736	151,301
Kansas	2,006	426	407	314	94	356	18,186	18,854	103,937
Michigan	6,852	1,510	1,241	975	265	1,150	48,209	49,380	390,534
Missouri	4,096	839	704	549	155	599	27,055	25,598	162,725
Nebraska	1,347	289	250	189	61	225	12,587	12,780	60,694
North Dakota	621	154	123	94	29	110	5,927	7,484	29,042
Ohio	8,369	1,757	1,474	1,145	329	1,332	59,683	52,888	387,978
South Dakota	657	153	128	98	31	116	6,417	7,651	35,564
Wisconsin	3,518	772	550	400	150	503	31,564	23,191	166,946
SOUTH:
Alabama	3,114	832	704	563	140	616	25,363	23,676	101,741
Arkansas	1,909	507	415	329	86	356	14,782	13,809	61,566
Delaware	358	73	57	45	12	50	2,136	2,520	26,497
Florida	3,353	694	628	498	130	541	20,638	23,136	151,150
Kentucky	2,965	745	592	484	108	511	17,736	20,265	91,796
Louisiana	2,884	729	552	443	109	489	17,351	19,728	142,299
Mississippi	2,183	601	527	439	89	452	14,178	16,386	55,780
Oklahoma	2,251	537	483	364	119	433	21,626	19,136	116,318
Texas	8,298	1,945	1,604	1,269	335	1,390	56,363	58,414	397,711
Virginia	3,547	817	695	565	130	616	21,130	25,219	156,739
West Virginia	1,937	508	452	351	101	410	17,586	16,420	83,921
District of Columbia	841	135	109	86	24	92	3,294	3,711	32,634
WEST:
Arizona	930	227	198	158	40	163	5,969	6,819	55,371
California	12,190	2,342	2,140	1,688	452	2,109	82,859	78,474	896,907
Colorado	1,413	309	289	226	63	243	11,281	11,534	84,441
Idaho	603	155	136	102	35	123	6,504	5,078	32,556
Nevada	206	41	44	35	9	36	1,409	1,621	13,376
Oregon	1,602	342	313	237	76	271	13,266	13,189	108,537
Utah	734	191	183	139	44	167	8,384	6,184	52,552
OUTLYING PARTS OF THE UNITED STATES:
Alaska	205	33	28	24	4	20	577	1,046	9,671
Canal Zone	57	9/10	12	10	2	10	349	405	3,464
Guam	9/59	13	10	9	2	10	204	389	1,896
Hawaii	523	124	--	--	--	103	4,775	3,904	21,897
Puerto Rico	2,229	774	505	448	57	451	8,916	10,565	40,037

1/ Source: U.S. Bureau of the Census. Continental U.S. data: Current Population Reports, Series P-25, No. 106. Outlying parts
2/ Includes supervisors, principals, teachers, librarians, and guidance and psychological personnel.
3/ Includes receipts from private sources which amounted to less than one-half of 1 percent of all revenue receipts.
4/ Includes all current expenditures, both allocated and not allocated to pupil costs.
5/ Less than .05 percent.
6/ Expenditures for junior colleges and evening, summer, and adult classes included in columns 16, 18, and 19.
7/ Computed amount furnished by State.
8/ Estimated.
9/ Data as of April 1, 1950.

NOTE: Due to rounding, detail may not add to totals.

ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY DAY SCHOOLS, FOR STATES REPORTING, IMATES FOR CONTINENTAL U.S.: 1953-54

ber of truc-onal aff2/	Revenue receipts: Amount (thousands of dollars)	Percent distribution, by source: Federal	State	Intermediate (County, etc.)	Local3/	Nonrevenue receipts (thousands of dollars)	Expenditures (thousands of dollars): Current expenditures for day schools4/	Capital outlay	Interest	Bond retirement	Summer, adult, and evening schools	Average salary per member of instructional staff2/	Current expenditure (allocated to pupil costs) per pupil in average daily attendance
9	10	11	12	13	14	15	16	17	18	19	20	21	22
99,245	$7,864,538	4.7	37.4	5.3	52.6	$1,867,423	$6,872,121	$2,082,406	$154,423	$358,499	- -	$3,835	$266
12,384	6,423,816	3.5	38.6	5.7	52.2	1,213,068	5,722,162	1,477,332	114,310	267,552	30,432	3,450	244
8.6	22.4	- -	- -	- -	- -	53.9	20.1	41.0	35.1	34.0	- -	11.2	9.0
13,972	98,444	3.2	17.8	- -	79.0	36,766	92,756	28,775	2,642	8,195	413	4,274	297
29,505	195,990	3.6	16.3	- -	80.2	- -	198,754	39,314	- -	- -	1,552	4,006	306
33,128	251,319	2.5	11.5	.9	85.1	63,431	233,639	56,386	6,503	13,351	856	4,271	333
93,948	867,335	1.1	35.7	- -	63.1	302,372	717,105	357,906	27,973	53,953	6,867	4,658	362
52,037	465,393	2.2	40.2	- -	57.7	53,734	463,533	48,708	4,142	19,633	- -	4,074	301
2,887	17,356	5.2	20.7	- -	74.2	3,850	13,258	2,279	169	500	40	2,820	224
54,189	432,305	2.0	17.3	.4	80.3	138,956	393,144	125,636	12,019	18,893	- -	4,347	327
25,736	151,301	2.3	12.3	1.0	84.3	45,900	124,878	33,497	1,768	4,968	- -	2,900	269
18,854	103,937	5.9	23.1	21.5	49.6	27,739	92,246	8,877	2,652	8,879	- -	3,258	259
49,380	390,534	3.7	50.6	.2	45.4	116,353	327,374	113,336	6,176	33,316	2,704	3,999	283
25,598	162,725	5.1	30.9	6.5	57.3	39,898	139,637	41,467	2,377	6,331	- -	3,188	233
12,780	60,694	3.4	6.5	9.9	80.1	2,664	58,905	7,227	575	- -	905	2,922	262
7,484	29,045	3.0	27.7	23.8	45.5	5,179	28,981	2,652	35	698	- -	2,546	263
52,888	387,978	2.9	25.5	(5/)	71.6	131,622	334,401	123,447	10,740	23,367	1,547	4,011	251
7,651	35,564	4.1	10.6	1.1	84.2	4,571	31,416	4,660	327	908	- -	2,638	270
23,191	166,946	2.6	15.1	3.7	78.5	35,293	150,286	28,437	1,128	4,144	9,723	3,840	298
23,676	101,741	10.1	68.7	10.9	10.3	6,955	90,874	9,965	665	1,852	2,694	2,783	148
13,809	61,566	12.3	46.5	1.1	39.9	19,371	55,839	13,584	1,718	3,762	1,644	2,286	152
2,520	26,497	1.8	88.0	- -	10.2	4,805	15,935	8,593	239	655	15	4,042	317
23,136	151,150	6.0	50.2	22.6	21.2	23,618	120,622	38,424	2,626	5,454	1,102	3,785	220
20,265	91,796	7.8	38.2	- -	53.9	6,744	75,158	5,474	1,090	1,895	- -	2,526	147
19,728	142,299	6.4	59.6	25.5	8.5	54,013	117,041	34,971	4,230	6,466	100	3,481	240
16,386	55,780	10.0	46.7	11.8	31.5	5,558	51,671	5,558	- -	- -	- -	1,864	114
19,136	116,318	5.6	45.7	5.9	42.8	12,078	102,857	21,594	1,822	4,056	- -	3,271	237
58,414	397,711	5.7	49.6	.4	44.3	68,479	346,614	78,418	13,017	19,327	733	3,886	249
25,219	156,739	12.5	40.4	25.8	21.3	42,434	111,483	62,001	1,971	5,022	1,441	3,082	181
16,420	83,923	4.0	60.7	35.1	.2	6,983	75,523	19,872	55	- -	- -	3,058	184
3,711	32,634	9.6	- -	- -	90.4	- -	27,696	2,991	- -	- -	- -	4,797	301
6,819	55,373	4.3	30.2	7.5	58.0	12,561	45,215	18,800	1,160	3,349	- -	4,401	277
78,474	896,907	4.9	42.5	1.1	51.5	214,218	6/768,271	282,635	6/17,765	6/43,870	(6/)	7/4,787	8/300
11,534	84,441	4.0	18.2	8.3	69.4	17,180	68,298	24,746	2,594	4,797	- -	3,640	274
5,078	32,558	6.4	22.2	16.3	55.1	8,709	28,127	7,453	503	1,537	- -	3,350	229
1,621	13,370	13.7	35.2	24.6	26.5	5,520	9,437	5,553	323	732	34	3,786	265
13,189	108,537	4.1	30.1	3.7	62.1	16,249	91,236	33,884	2,191	6,311	- -	4,163	337
6,184	52,552	6.4	41.3	- -	52.4	9,382	36,132	13,908	535	2,080	255	3,746	216
1,046	9,673	22.3	61.5	- -	16.3	- -	8,457	987	- -	314	- -	4,750	414
405	3,468	93.6	- -	- -	6.4	- -	2,497	896	- -	- -	5	4,006	238
389	1,896	- -	100.0	- -	- -	- -	1,694	390	- -	- -	29	3,371	172
3,904	21,897	14.6	75.4	10.0	- -	1	23,045	727	- -	- -	244	4,124	223
10,565	40,037	15.1	84.8	- -	- -	- -	39,717	1,482	- -	- -	702	1,890	84

6. Outlying parts: Total population—Current Population Reports, Series P-25, No. 97; school-age population—unpublished estimates.

ipts.

Enrollment and Attendance

Total public elementary and secondary enrollment[1/] rose from 26,563,000 in 1951-52 to 28,819,000 in 1953-54, an increase of 2,256,000, or 8.5 percent. The increase at the elementary level was 1.9 million, or 9 percent, compared with an increase of about 400 thousand, or 6.7 percent, at the secondary level. The percent of pupils enrolled, attending daily, has shown a steady upward trend over the years (with the exception of 1951-52), reaching 89 percent in 1953-54.

High School Graduates

The number of public high school graduates reached a post-World War II peak in 1953-54. The 1,132,000 graduates in that year represented an increase of 77,000 over the number of 1951-52. Only in the early 1940's were there more high school graduates.

Instructional Staff and Average Salary

Between 1951-52 and 1953-54, the 8.6 percent increase in the total instructional staff (which includes supervisors, principals, and teachers as well as librarians and guidance and psychological personnel) compared with an 8.5 percent increase in pupil enrollment. The size of the staff rose from 1,012,000 to 1,099,000, a gain of 87,000.

The average annual salary of the instructional staff was $3,835 in 1953-54 as compared with $3,450 in 1951-52, a rise of 11.2 percent; however, when adjusted to reflect the decrease in the purchasing power of the dollar, the average salary increased only 8.7 percent during the 2-year period.

Revenue and Nonrevenue Receipts

Revenue receipts (income from appropriations, taxes, permanent funds, school land leases, etc.) increased from $6,424 million in 1951-52 to $7,865 million in 1953-54, or a gain of 22.4 percent.

An analysis of revenue receipts by source indicates that since 1950 the proportion contributed by both the Federal Government and by local governments has increased, while the proportion contributed by State governments and intermediate administrative units, such as counties, has shown a downward trend. In 1953-54 the percentages for the various levels of government were as follows: Federal, 4.7; State, 37.4; intermediate, 5.3; and local, 52.6.

Nonrevenue receipts (income from bond sales, loans, sale of property, etc.), used principally for capital outlay purposes, increased from $1,213 million in 1951-52 to $1,867 million in 1953-54, a gain of 53.9 percent.

Expenditures

Current expenditures, which represent the day-by-day spending of the schools, amounted to $6,872 million in 1953-54, an increase of 20.1 percent over 1951-52. Even larger increases were registered in expenditures for capital outlay, which rose 41 percent to $2,082 million; and in interest payments, which increased 35.1 percent to $154 million.

The current expenditure (allocable to pupil costs)[2/] per pupil in average daily attendance amounted to $266 in 1953-54, a gain of $22, or 9 percent over 1951-52. When expressed in dollars of uniform purchasing power (1953-54 = 100) the increase during the 2-year period was 6.4 percent.

1/ The term "elementary" as used in this circular covers kindergarten through the 8th grade; "secondary" covers grades 9 through 12 and postgraduate.

2/ Items of educational expense not allocable to pupil costs include: expenditures for community services, such as a free public library maintained by the board of education; services or supplies to nonpublic school children, such as transportation and textbooks for children in parochial schools; and refunds of taxes or tuition when accounted for separately.

GPO 898398

A SOCIOLOGIST LOOKS AT EDUCATION

by

Edmund deS. Brunner*

~~Hist~~ - Ed Gen.

Address delivered at Eleventh Annual Supervisors' Conference
St. Petersburg, Florida
October 31, 1955

The excuse for appearing on this program is, I suppose, that your committee believes that the point of view of a person professionally involved in studying social institutions might be of some interest, for clearly the school is a social institution. It is, of course, also an educational institution but in the nature of the case all institutions are social. They involve the cooperation of people to achieve collectively what no one individual could secure alone.

The school, then, is an institution, social in its origins, its control, and its support, and educational in its objectives and purposes. When either one of these aspects of education is forgotten or even neglected, the institution--that is, the school--is very soon in trouble. Created and supported by society, the school is inevitably related to it and responsible for it. The situation in which it works conditions it in many ways. We don't, for instance, teach agriculture in New York City vocational schools except in one on the very edge of Brooklyn, close to Long Island's potato belt. If we did, the tax payers would rise up in wrath and charge that we were wasting their money. For the same reason you in Florida don't teach electro-plating in a rural high school in your citrus belt.

Even such obvious things are not everywhere accepted. Fortunately we in the United States do not hold to such a philosophy of education. The trouble is there are many things far less obvious with respect to the school as a social institution which too many educators neglect or are simply not aware of. Sometimes when the inevitable trouble comes, they do not even know why it has arisen or what hit them.

Certainly an outstanding reason for the trouble in a certain California city was a very human one. The educators were busy. They were so busy with the curriculum and administration of the school as an educational institution, they not only forgot, they also had a social institution on their hands, but they failed even to educate properly the representatives of society, of their community, sufficiently to have the support of a majority of the Board of Education. The educator, of course, says--as perhaps you are saying--"I'm not a sociologist. I'm a teacher, or a supervisor, a guidance specialist or a school administrator. What you are implying I should do simply isn't my job."

I grant that far too many professional educators were not trained to regard the school as a social institution; more's the pity for education's own sake. But even if every school system in the United States had a school sociologist (as so many have a school psychologist), every responsible member of any social institution who

*Dr. Edmund deS. Brunner is Professor of Sociology and Director of the Bureau of Applied Social Research at Columbia University

INVESTMENTS IN HUMAN RESOURCES (Motion Picture) Universal Films, Inc., 1951, 21 min., sd., color. "Shows how handicapped men and women aided by vocational rehabilitation and selective placement in suitable work are contributing to the wealth of the nation through their own self-support."--Educational Film Guide.

LIVING WEALTH (Motion Picture) Florida State University, 15 min., sd., color. "Depicts the problems facing a student entering college. Actual scenes of activities and classroom procedures at Florida State University are shown." FSU Film Library.

WORKING TOGETHER - Encyclopedia Brittanica Films, 23 min., sd., b & w. The story of how a workable adjustment of the interests of labor and management were achieved between the American Lead Pencil Company of Hoboken, N. J. and the local unit of the Textile Workers Union.

SOCIAL REVOLUTION - 17 min., sd., b & w. Traces social changes during the past two hundred years. Contrasts constructive or peaceful methods of change with destruction or violent methods.

CENTRALIZATION AND DECENTRALIZATION (Motion Picture) Encyclopedia Brittanica Films, 20 min., sd., b & w. Depicts the problems created by the gradual transfer of decision-making from local communities to centralized bodies at state and national levels. FSU Film Library.

PICTURE IN YOUR MIND (Motion Picture) International Film Bureau. 16 min., sd., color. "Through the use of symbols the film presents the earliest roots of prejudice and the reasons why any group, tribe or nation thinks its way of life is superior to the other man's mode of living." FSU Film Library.

DESPOTISM (Motion Picture) Encyclopedia Brittanica Films, 1947, 11 min., sd., 16mm. Provides a penetrating analysis of the true meaning of despotism. Reveals that any community can be rated somewhere along a scale from complete democracy to complete despotism. FSU Film Library.

DEMOCRACY (Motion Picture) Encyclopedia Brittanica Films, 1946, 11 min., sd., 16mm. Aimed at developing a keen appreciation for the meaning of democracy by analyzing for major concepts on which there is a substantial body of agreement. FSU Film Library.

fails to see it both in terms of its relations to the society of which it is a part, actually handicaps himself and it in the achievement of the purposes his institution was created to serve. Since, so far as I know, no school as yet employs a staff sociologist, there is all the more necessity for professional educators to remember that they are concerned with a social institution and behave accordingly. As the sociologist looks at public education, failure at this point appears to be both one of the greatest weaknesses and one of the greatest dangers of public education in the United States.

These are critical words, but said in kindness. After all, I have been a professor of education; moreover, it is a criticism to which I have been forced by a steadily accumulating mass of data--hard data which go beyond the case illustrations I used a few moments ago.

Let me cite some of these and begin with a study made in the Department of School Administration at Teachers College by Dr. Truman Pierce under the direction of Professor Paul Mort. It was a study designed to test the truth of the very claim I have been making. It used about thirty indices of community well-being, both economic and social, and related these to the performances of the schools studied, all in the M.A.S.C. The major conclusion was that two-thirds of what happened to the school as an educational institution was the result of what the community was and did, and only one-third was to be credited (or chafed!) to what went on within the four walls of the school buildings. With varying proportions, but always over one-half, these results have been confirmed elsewhere. Moreover, the original study was conducted in a locale where there is high state aid to education. One of these confirmation studies is from the areas of rural adult education which I mention, because with the very informality of adult education, one might expect a less positive result. However, Professor Coleman and Dr. Marsh found that the acceptance and adoption of agricultural practices taught by the Extension Service and other agricultural agencies in Kentucky varied to a significant degree among the communities studied because of differences in the prevailing attitudes, norms, values, and expectations of the people and somewhat also according to their economic status.

But let us turn to Florida itself and some data that all of you helped to make available, if the Census Enumerator found you in the Spring of 1950. You had, in 1950, 98 cities in Florida; that is, places of 2500 or more population. The median number of years of schooling completed by adults 25 years of age and over in these cities ranged from 6.1 to 12.8 years. In 11, all under 30,000, the average person had completed high school. In 37, he had had less than 9 years. You are supervisors. It is obvious, I'm sure, that the teachers and administrators with whom you deal in a city where the average voter has had, say, 7 or 8 years of school, will have problems that differ markedly from those of the teachers in places where the adults have, on the average, finished high school or better. For one thing, the image the parents in these two groups have of the school and of education will differ. So will their expectations for the education of their offspring. The problem of getting leadership for the PTA, to say nothing of the approaches teachers and administrators make to parents--a concise point in school-community relations--will have to take account of the disparaties in educational levels. In the lower community many of the assumptions which the teacher makes and which would be expected elsewhere may not be accepted, probably have never even been thought about. To make a standardized approach to teacher, supervisor, or school-community programs and relations, regardless of educational status, makes as much sense as for North Dakota to import a Florida agricultural agent to teach its farmers how to raise citrus fruit.

Again, Florida's population is older than average. The median age of the people of the United States is 30 years. Florida has 7 communities, several quite large, where the median is over 40 years. The high city approaches 50. It has one city, on the other hand, where there are as many people under 22 as over. Inevitably, the school situation in this place that belongs to youth will differ sharply from that where older people predominate. There will be little interest in the high school and its program, but the elementary school will be an institution of prime interest if the people are interested in education at all.

On the other hand, where there is an above average number of older people, you have conservatism and the pressures that come from living on a retirement income in a period of rising living costs. The elderly are not as interested in progress. They have lived their lives. If they are not actually looking backward, they are satisfied with the status quo. The social institution known as the school will have to deal with such attitudes where they exist when it asks the tax payers for money for better buildings, higher salaries, playgrounds, or equipment, for the simple reason that they exist importantly in the school's community.

Consider for a moment three cities in my native state of Pennsylvania, all under 75,000 population. The proportion of the population 15 years and under in these places varied from about 19 to about 25%. The proportion of those 65 years and over ranged from 3.8 to 7.3 The city with the smallest proportion of both youth and aged has one of the highest per pupil costs in the state. In another city with the same proportion of those 15 and under but with almost twice the ratio of elderly the reverse was true. Per pupil expenses were among the lowest in the state for this size of city. In a third city with the highest ratio of elderly and the second highest of children and thus with a total of almost one-third of its population in the so-called dependency years, the voters turned down a bond issue for a much-needed new school building. The leaders in the opposition to this bond issue were close to or over 65. The campaign for the building never considered the point of view of those nearing retirement or already retired. Labeling such persons as old fogies and unprogressive may be true, but it's not an argument to win friends and influence votes to build a new school.

Consider another comparison highly pertinent to education in this state. In your four most prosperous counties, family income in 1949 averaged from about $2700 to $3100. The average years of school completed by adults in these counties ranged from 10.1 to 11. At the other end of the scale you have four counties with per family incomes of between $900 and $1000. In these, the average adult had had barely six years of school. Consider what this means in terms of the children in these two groups of counties coming into your schools, differences in home backgrounds and cultural opportunities and in support of the schools--and here I do not refer to financial support alone.

To the sociologist contrasting situations like this would call for varying methods of teaching and supervision, for great care in selecting illustrative content material so that it can be understood by children from a relatively disadvantaged environment. The sociologist, too, would raise the question as to whether the schools could and should do anything to improve such economic and social conditions through educational means. After all, the Sloan Foundation experiments in Kentucky show that a great deal can be done. In one county in northern New York, that progress seems to have passed by, an even more ambitious effort is being made to raise the economic level of the area by education and action growing therefrom. This means, of course, that without abandoning the ideal of personality-development and self-realization through education we seek to achieve such lofty goals by learning the hard facts in the social situation and what they imply in terms of teaching content and methods, guidance, community relations, and adult education. In so often neglecting this last phase of education, the school not only overlooks an opportunity, but fails to make friends for the institution of education.

Statistics are boring to many people. I am trying to show that they have meaning for educational policy. It would be too bad if educators couldn't look some facts in the face because they were presented in numerical symbols. Permit me, then, one more comparison before passing on to the influence of some broader trends upon the school.

It is a truism that rural education has lagged behind urban. Great efforts are being made the nation over to lift the level of rural schools. But as I read the Florida data I can only infer that relative to the city, rural education is further behind urban, now, than it was in the 19th century. For those in this state over 65 years, urban residents have had about $2\frac{1}{2}$ more years of school than the farm population, and a year more than the villager. But when you take those 25 to 29 years of age, the city male is 4 years ahead of the farmer and the woman 3 years. In other words, the spread between rural and urban has widened, indeed, almost doubled. It has widened also for the villager, but only half as much.

You may say that this is due to rural-urban migration, that the better educated leave the country. From your census data on migration this seems to be only a minor factor. Even if it were true, is it to Florida's advantage in view of the growing complexity of agricultural science to leave a large sector of its farm plant in the hands of persons who average an 8th grade education? Your greatest competition in both citrus fruits and early vegetables for the northern market is about 3 years ahead of you in the median years of scholarship its farm labor force has had.

It might amuse some of you, as it would me, to go much further in explaining the structure of your society as portrayed by the census. Why, for instance, as of 1950, had 13-year-olds in Tampa completed just the average number of school grades for that age for the state and those in Miami almost half a year more? Why were 13-year-old girls in Jacksonville about 2/3 of a grade ahead of the boys of this age, but in your other major cities only about 1/3 of a year?

But the sociologist also views education against the background of the broad social trends that characterize our society as a whole and to which each community must adjust. There are many such. I have time to note only a few.

One of these trends is the fantastic expansion of knowledge in many fields and the demands for knowledge that life increasingly makes of us. On the crude level, this is expressed in the requirement of a college degree to get a job in a number of department stores in northern cities. On a higher level, it relates to the demands that citizenship in a democracy makes upon us. Is flexible parity, fixed parity or the Brannan plan the best way to remedy the ills of agriculture? The decision is likely to affect the pocketbooks of every one of us. So are plenty of other decisions in the area of policy on state and national levels. What business has public education with such issues? A lot! The business of a democracy is the business of all its citizens. If people ever begin to talk about the government of any unit as "they" instead of as "we"---"We the people"---can in truth fear for the future of our land. Does not this bring the public institution of education into controversial issues? Sure it does! So what? Should people make up their minds on major issues on the basis of what factual information is available, objectively presented, or on the basis of propaganda and specious, special interest pleadings? If they cannot secure objective information from an educational agency, where can they get it? A democracy is the best form of government yet devised. It is also the most difficult to operate. Not every people that have tried it have been successful, as witness the Weimar Republic in Germany after World War I. With the mounting strains in our society, the need for education, the continuing education which was recognized by many of the Founding Fathers, notably Jefferson, becomes an increasing responsibility of all levels of public education. The needs are manifold. They may be vocational so that an individual can up-grade himself They may concern public issues so that the exercise of citizenship may be improved. They may deal with art, drama, literature or music so that individual adults and groups may find the deeper things of life through self-expression.

Don't think this is not wanted or not needed. A few years before World War II the American Association for Adult Education estimated that counting all types of adult education, 23 million Americans were participating. Today, the estimate is 35 million. Enrollment has gone up in these 20 years more than twice as rapidly as population. Or in Florida terms, here are four counties in the north--some where the number of years of school adults have had is well below the state average--- which have recently launched adult education programs and already have about 500 enrolled in everything from literacy to theatre and drama. Don't forget, in 1950 one person in 7 in this state had either no schooling or was functionally illiterate by Department of Defense standards. Forty-two per cent of these people were white.

So the sociologist sees in this surge of interest in adult education an authentic social movement. He knows enough from long study of social movements and social institutions, to know that any institution legitimately in the tide of such a movement which seeks either to ignore it, or isolate itself from it, thereby weakens itself, and may even be supplemented.

Out of many world and national trends that impinge upon the school as a social institution, and which make the sociologist look anxiously as to its response, I have chosen two for brief comment. Both are controversial. I have chosen them, even though I cannot possibly review in the time allotted even all the chief facts, to try to illustrate that facts can be presented as such which can be considered, and should be, even though an individual or group may come to a decision contrary to the implication of some particular fact.

I spent much of 1954 in South Africa. They are much concerned there, especially the Boer group, over the rising tide of color. And well they may be. The native African and the Hindu and Moslem from India are not allowed to vote. Even tribal chiefs, duly chosen according to tribal procedures, may be deposed by government fiat. Their schools may be closed without notice. Scores of occupations are closed to them. For the Africans, only 1/3 of their children are in school and 2/3 of these in mission schools. Their slums are unequalled in extent and wretchedness to anything I have seen in Asia, New York, or the South. I was in one where 10,000 people live in less than 1/4 square mile and where the infant mortality rate the previous year had been 100%! This is the product of fear and of an era of Colonial exploitation that has ended in most of the world. John Gunther in his amusing Inside Africa says that Colonialism is on the way out in Africa. Outside the Nationalist party, now in power in South Africa, most responsible leaders agree quite frankly with this judgment.

We in America have taken a different road in dealing with this problem of race. True, North and South and West with Indian, Negro, and Oriental, we have made mistakes, for we are human. But I submit the fact that in no country in the world, in no age of history, has any race made the progress that the American Negro has done, from a time when he had no assets save his bare hands to this current year, whether measured in farm and home ownership, educational level, proportion of the labor force in the profession, ownership of business, or what not. The record is there for all to read in the U. S. Census and here these columns of figures appearing every 10 years reveal a dramatic story. The degree of progress differs among the states, but there is no state in the Union where this trend is not clear--not one. This is a fact of which Americans all can be proud, and which, admitting our mistakes, we could or should herald to the world.

Seen in the light of these trends and all legal issues aside, the Supreme Court decision on segregation in the schools, whether you agree with it or not, is sociologically understandable. The wisest part of the two decisions of the Court in this issue, it seems to me as a sociologist, was placing the burden of implementation on the local communities. This is as it should be in a democracy. This is why the man in the street needs adult education on many issues. Neither the educator nor any other civil servant or government agency, can ride rough shod over the mores and culture of the community--not yet in our kind of society, whether the issue be desegregation or how to teach Johnny to read. So, it is not for me to come from Connecticut and tell you how your schools and citizens should solve this desegregation problem. I happen to live in a state where the educational level of the non-whites is only slightly lower than that of the whites in Florida, in part because only 3% of our population is non-white. It's higher considerably in my high school district, but even so, less than 10%. The fact that our school is desegregated and always has been, therefore reflects no great credit on us. For what it may be worth, let me say that some months ago I spoke to an adult education group in one of the richest suburbs of New York. For 20 years or more over half its high school enrollment has been Negro, and the universal claim was this had raised no problems such as my South African friends envisage. And an amusing note is added from the brief strike against desegregation, experienced from outside, in a Washington high school in October, 1954. The picket line was desegregated! Negro and white children associated happily in a protest against associating in their classrooms. No, conditions differ. The cultural heritages of a community must be regarded even though groups work in democratic fashion to change them.

Why, then, bring this up? Because there is one fact of great importance to us nationally that is seldom mentioned in this connection. The world of color judges what we do on this issue by our protestations, by the great principles of our Constitution, our Bill of Rights, and our Declaration. Like it or not, we are no longer sheltered, and partly hidden, by the vast sweep of two great oceans. We live, as it were, in a goldfish bowl. Any mistake, any apparent denial of our principles, whether in such a tragedy as that in Mississippi or as the recent strike in Newcastle, Indiana, is wafted over the airwaves of the world to undermine our position of leadership by those who dread the threat of those principles in the power they wield as dictators. To this I can hear ample testimony.

Here, of course, we come to the overweening issue of our time; the struggle between what is called the Free World and the other, and the relation of the schools to it. Quite apart from the great principles in the basic document of our nation--self-evident truths, the Founding Fathers called them--when it comes to implementing them, why do dictators fear them?

It is a cardinal principle of our Western democracy that a man is innocent until proven guilty by due process of law and trial before his peers. You can't rid of a political opponent where this which have recently launched adult education programs and already have about 500 enrolled in everything from literacy to theatre and drama. Don't forget, in 1950 one person in 7 in this state had either no schooling or was functionally illiterate by Department of Defense standards. Forty-two per cent of these people were white.

So the sociologist sees in this surge of interest in adult education an authentic social movement. He knows enough from long study of social movements and social institutions, to know that any institution legitimately in the tide of such a movement which seeks either to ignore it, or isolate itself from it, thereby weakens itself, and may even be supplemented.

Out of many world and national trends that impinge upon the school as a social institution, and which make the sociologist look anxiously as to its response, I have chosen two for brief comment. Both are controversial. I have chosen them, even though I cannot possibly review in the time allotted even all the chief facts, to try to illustrate that facts can be presented as such which can be considered, and should be, even though an individual or group may come to a decision contrary to the implication of some particular fact.

I spent much of 1954 in South Africa. They are much concerned there, especially the Boer group, over the rising tide of color. And well they may be. The native African and the Hindu and Moslem from India are not allowed to vote. Even tribal chiefs, duly chosen according to tribal procedures, may be deposed by government fiat. Their schools may be closed without notice. Scores of occupations are closed to them. For the Africans, only 1/3 of their children are in school and 2/3 of these in mission schools. Their slums are unequalled in extent and wretchedness to anything I have seen in Asia, New York, or the South. I was in one where 10,000 people live in less than 1/4 square mile and where the infant mortality rate the previous year had been 100%! This is the product of fear and of an era of Colonial exploitation that has ended in most of the world. John Gunther in his amusing Inside Africa says that Colonialism is on the way out in Africa. Outside the Nationalist party, now in power in South Africa, most responsible leaders agree quite frankly with this judgment.

We in America have taken a different road in dealing with this problem of race. True, North and South and West with Indian, Negro, and Oriental, we have made mistakes, for we are human. But I submit the fact that in no country in the world, in no age of history, has any race made the progress that the American Negro has done, from a time when he had no assets save his bare hands to this current year, whether measured in farm and home ownership, educational level, proportion of the labor force in the profession, ownership of business, or what not. The record is there for all to read in the U. S. Census and here these columns of figures appearing every 10 years reveal a dramatic story. The degree of progress differs among the states, but there is no state in the Union where this trend is not clear--not one. This is a fact of which Americans all can be proud, and which, admitting our mistakes, we could or should herald to the world.

Seen in the light of these trends and all legal issues aside, the Supreme Court decision on segregation in the schools, whether you agree with it or not, is sociologically understandable. The wisest part of the two decisions of the Court in this issue, it seems to me as a sociologist, was placing the burden of implementation on the local communities. This is as it should be in a democracy. This is why the man in the street needs adult education on many issues. Neither the educator nor any other civil servant or government agency, can ride rough shod over the mores and culture of the community--not yet in our kind of society, whether the issue be desegregation or how to teach Johnny to read. So, it is not for me to come from Connecticut and tell you how your schools and citizens should solve this desegregation problem. I happen to live in a state where the educational level of the non-whites is only slightly lower than that of the whites in Florida, in part because only 3% of our population is non-white. It's higher considerably in my high school district, but even so, less than 10%. The fact that our school is desegregated and always has been, therefore reflects no great credit on us. For what it may be worth, let me say that some months ago I spoke to an adult education group in one of the richest suburbs of New York. For 20 years or more over half its high school enrollment has been Negro, and the universal claim was this had raised no problems such as my South African friends envisage. And an amusing note is added from the brief strike against desegregation, experienced from outside, in a Washington high school in October, 1954. The picket line was desegregated! Negro and white children associated happily in a protest against associating in their classrooms. No, conditions differ. The cultural heritages of a community must be regarded even though groups work in democratic fashion to change them.

Why, then, bring this up? Because there is one fact of great importance to us nationally that is seldom mentioned in this connection. The world of color judges what we do on this issue by our protestations, by the great principles of our Constitution, our Bill of Rights, and our Declaration. Like it or not, we are no longer sheltered, and partly hidden, by the vast sweep of two great oceans. We live, as it were, in a goldfish bowl. Any mistake, any apparent denial of our principles, whether in such a tragedy as that in Mississippi or as the recent strike in Newcastle, Indiana, is wafted over the airwaves of the world to undermine our position of leadership by those who dread the threat of those principles in the power they wield as dictators. To this I can hear ample testimony.

Here, of course, we come to the overweening issue of our time; the struggle between what is called the Free World and the other, and the relation of the schools to it. Quite apart from the great principles in the basic document of our nation--self-evident truths, the Founding Fathers called them--when it comes to implementing them, why do dictators fear them?

It is a cardinal principle of our Western democracy that a man is innocent until proven guilty by due process of law and trial before his peers. You can't rid of a political opponent where this principle is accepted by the mere process of accusation and arrest. That's very inconvenient for a dictator. No man is considered guilty because whether by chance or design he knows someone who is. That principle would have stopped the Russian and Chinese purges dead in their tracks. You can't, under the tenents of democracy, render judgment, without giving the accused the right to face and cross-examine his accusers. If you've read any of the few accounts of political prisoners who manage to escape from Russia, you know this right was perhaps more emphatically denied than any other. Nor can you, under our legal system, accept the unsworn, unevaluated, often annonymous gossip of spiteful, perhaps unbalanced, people as in truth derogatory of the character and service of trusted civil servants, from General Marshall who was called a traitor on the floor of the Senate, on down the scale.

In Britain and in North America men have fought, bled, and died to establish these principles, men who have places of honor in the Hall of Fame of the Anglo-Saxon world. They are among the principles that have brought this country of ours to its position of power and world leadership.

Yet, as the late Justice Jackson of the U. S. Supreme Court pointed out in his last book; as John Lord O'Brian, Dean of the N. Y. bar, emphasized so eloquently in his recent Godkin lectures at Harvard University, we have increasingly violated every one of these guarantees of our Constitution in recent years in the name of national security, usually by extra-legal means. And as O'Brian says:

> "One curious paradox growing out of this program of government activity is that instead of promoting a sense of security among the citizenry, it has had the opposite effect of spreading doubt, suspicion and mistrust; and creating...a real and anxious sense of insecurity."

This, of course, is what our enemies want--to create dissension among us, lack of confidence in our government. That is why Mr. Philbrick who spent 8 years within the Communist movement as an F.B.I. agent has said Senator McCarthy was "the darling of the Communists."

The sociologist observing the national scene recognizes in the dark, shameful multitude of these instances, the ground swell of a social movement that threatens everything that has made America the hope of a distraught, wounded world.

Of course we must safeguard our land against the fool, the subversive, and the traitor. My own ten years of part-time experience in the War Food Administration and the U.S.D.A. would convince me of that, even if my common sense did not. But I, for one, have high confidence in the almost inspired wisdom of the Founding Fathers who built into our basic law that which would at once safeguard the ordinary, loyal citizen in his freedom of assembly, expression, and religion, and equally safeguard the nation against the criminal and the traitor.

They had had enough experience with ruthless, self-seeking men, trying to climb to power by actual or character assassination. They had had enough experience with dictators to realize that to open the door to unprincipled, unbalanced, notoriety-seeking, or just plain ignorant vigilantes would spell the death knell of the nation they were trying to build, a nation "conceived in liberty."

We have been in the grip of an unreasoning, yes, a hysterical fear in the U. S. in these last years. Fear did not establish this nation. Fear did not make it great. Fear will not keep it great. Fear and democracy are as incompatible as democracy and dictatorship.

What has education to do with this? Much, for the schools are supposed to teach citizenship. President Eisenhower a year ago proclaimed December 15th as Bill of Rights Day. It was the 163rd anniversary of the adoption of that great document. Did the schools of Florida observe it? Or did they in effect by ignoring it, follow the example of a government department where it was removed from the bulletin board because it was controversial!

Controversial? It sure is! It is at the very heart of the ideological conflict between the Free World and the other. Are we in the schools going to be free or bound? Are we going to teach the essence of Americanism or delight the Communists by adopting their methods and giving them the chance to show, as they do at every opportunity, that our democratic protestations are a false front? In geography, when it comes to Russia, are we going to leave a blank space on our maps and say, "Dear children, there is land and there are people in the place that blank space stands for, but they are so wicked we don't dare speak about it," or are we going to take this and every other opportunity in civics, social studies, literature, history, to show the differences between our land and that one, to convince these Americans of tomorrow that they live under the best form of government thus far devised by the mind of man?

If some misguided person is subversive enough to attack a book in the school library he happens not to agree with, are we going to examine it objectively and if it fits our educational purposes, stand on our constitutional rights to use it, or are we, in fear, going to yield to those forces that, if unchecked, can do our nation far more harm than any Fifth Column and eventually make our schools resemble those in Hitler's Germany?

I need not tell you the schools are under fire. Some of the criticism is deserved, for the schools, as human institutions, are not perfect and cannot be. Education has its lunatic fringe that would go back to naught but the three R's or, at the other extreme, minimize the teaching of the basic content of knowledge in favor of happy words of sweetness and light. We have been so disregardful of our obligations as a social institution that we have failed to convince society of our strengths. I am shocked to find how very, very few adults know that hundreds of tests in fundamental subjects show that the children of the 1950's spell better, read better, figure better than their parents did a generation ago, despite the vast increase in enrollments. I am shocked that very, very few educators have even heard of the amazed and almost fulsome praise of our educational system that has come from English, Australian, and New Zealand leaders who had contact with our G.I.'s in World War I and again in World War II. And never forget in struggling with the daily chores of education that the attack on the schools springs from the same basic fears as the attack on the basic principles of democracy. One has to go no further than the current best seller, Why Johnny Can't Read, to see this, for Dr. Flesch soberly avers that those who teach reading other than by his formula are unwittingly or knowingly furthering the Communist cause. This is a new criterion for determining the subversive. How soon will McCarthy discover it?

And so, as a sociologist, I would say my hope for the school is that it will discover and accept its role as a social institution, analyze the community and the culture of which it is a part, even to using the census as a basis for arithmetic problems, and that it will stand four-square in the development of a citizenship able and worthy to carry this nation, under God, to the greatness this hour demands. So shall be answered that prayer which 50 years ago Henry Van Dyke put into the mouth of the Stranger within our gates, the immigrant who chose to be an American:

"America!
Oh never be thy shining image hurled
From the adoring breast of him who worships
Thee with holy awe."

ADULT EDUCATION WORKSHOP
FLORIDA A & M UNIVERSITY

The second Florida A & M adult education workshop is planned for June 15th to July 6th at Tallahassee.

This year the workshop will concentrate on the study of materials and methods for teaching adults. There will be new materials to examine and chances for you to try all kinds of different methods to use with your adult class.

Several nationally noted adult educators who are particularly skilled in materials and methods will come to A & M to help with the workshop.

To help you, A & M is providing for advance registration.

If you are interested in participating this year, you'd better write immediately to reserve your place on the list.

Send a note to Dr. Leander S. Shaw, Department of Education, Florida A & M University, Tallahassee, Florida.

He will send you information as the planning for the workshop progresses. If you have any ideas as to things we might include in the program, send them in.

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE
Office of Education
Washington 25, D. C.

Education Gen.

November 1955

Circular No. 467
(Preliminary)

FALL 1955 STATISTICS ON ENROLLMENT, TEACHERS, AND SCHOOLHOUSING IN FULL-TIME PUBLIC ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY DAY SCHOOLS

By
Samuel Schloss, Specialist in Educational Statistics
and
Carol Joy Hobson, Research Assistant*

THIS CIRCULAR presents fall 1955 statistics for the public school system on the number of pupils enrolled, the number of classroom teachers, the number of teachers who do not hold standard teaching certificates, the number of pupils in excess of normal capacity of the accessible publicly-owned school plants in use, and the number of instruction rooms scheduled for completion during the current fiscal year. The data were collected through a brief questionnaire identified as "Form RSS-052," mailed to each State and territorial department of education.

This is the second of a series of annual surveys conducted by the Office of Education in the fall of the year, the purpose of which is to obtain certain essential data about the public school system for the year in progress. It represents an effort of the Office of Education to meet the demand for current information. Detailed public school statistics for the entire school year will continue to be made available through the regular periodic surveys.

In the current survey, considerable improvement has been effected in the data-collection process. Last year, a number of States did not actually canvass their school districts but filled in the Office of Education questionnaire by using the best available estimates. This year, however, it is evident that fewer States resorted to estimation.

Brief discussions of the data for each of the items are given below. Figures cited refer to continental United States, which includes the 48 States and the District of Columbia.

Enrollment

Full-time public elementary and secondary day schools enrolled 30.6 million pupils in the fall of 1955 -- 22.1 million in elementary schools, and 8.5 million in secondary schools. The increase in total enrollment was 1,048,000, or 3.5 percent more than a year ago. Separate comparisons of trends in elementary and secondary enrollments cannot readily be made because the definitions of elementary and secondary are more clearly defined in the current survey than in the previous one. In the current survey, State departments of education were requested to report data by type of organization of the school. Thus, junior high schools are classified as secondary schools. Last year, on the other hand, enrollment data were to a considerable extent reported by grade-group (kindergarten through grade 8 for elementary, and grades 9 through 12 for secondary).

It should be noted also that the enrollment data in this Circular, compiled in the fall, are not directly comparable with the cumulative statistics on enrollment which, in other Office of Education publications, are given for an entire school year.

---

* Under the general direction of Emery M. Foster, Head, Reports and Analysis Section.

(Continued on p. 4)

State, by region	Number of pupils enrolled			Number of teachers, full-time a part-time (excluding supervisor principals, librarians, etc.)
	Total	Elementary 1/	Secondary 1/	Total	Elementary 1/	Secondar
CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES:
Fall 1955	30,574,162	22,101,989	8,472,173	1,138,922	730,822	408,10
Fall 1954	29.525,990	21,309,172	8,216,818	1,065,803	690,109	375,69
Percent change, 1954 to 1955	+3.5	+3.7	+3.1	+6.9	+5.9	+8.
NORTHEAST
Connecticut	383,783	243,352	140,431	15,472	10,364	5,10
Maine	177,028	136,895	40,133	6,951	4,855	2,09
Massachusetts	733,680	490,060	243,620	29,346	17,853	11,49
New Hampshire	87,169	61,993	25,176	3/3,472	3/2,207	3/1,26
New Jersey	835,409	654,973	180,436	34,338	23,836	10,50
New York	2,337,760	1,465,620	872,140	92,925	51,600	41,32
Pennsylvania	1,786,167	1,130,522	655,645	63,455	35,450	28,00
Rhode Island	113,424	71,568	41,856	4,545	2,454	2,09
Vermont	66,921	48,477	18,444	2,882	2,055	82
NORTH CENTRAL
Illinois	1,493,498	1,131,056	362,442	56,807	39,296	17,51
Indiana	830,000	630,000	200,000	29,000	18,800	10,20
Iowa	579,868	453,152	126,716	23,439	14,172	9,26
Kansas	436,210	338,210	98,000	18,373	12,535	5,83
Michigan	1,385,000	905,000	480,000	51,000	31,000	20,00
Minnesota	598,500	375,900	222,600	23,700	13,600	10,10
Missouri 7/	745,000	583,500	161,500	25,650	18,750	6,90
Nebraska	250,967	188,381	62,586	13,136	9,376	3,76
North Dakota	8/121,542	8/92,880	8/28,662	8/6,815	8/5,050	8/1,76
Ohio	1,557,726	1,212,726	345,000	57,300	33,800	23,50
South Dakota	132,177	100,784	31,393	7,649	5,621	2,02
Wisconsin	617,500	455,000	162,500	24,645	16,800	7,84
SOUTH
Alabama	720,478	453,990	266,488	27,481	18,297	9,18
Arkansas	418,300	269,803	148,497	14,299	8,365	5,93
Delaware	61,924	37,733	24,191	2,552	1,448	1,10
Florida	650,263	404,123	246,140	24,906	14,786	10,12
Georgia	924,467	687,808	236,659	29,935	19,857	10,07
Kentucky	595,292	437,536	157,756	20,977	14,217	6,76
Louisiana	593,500	474,800	118,700	22,411	14,567	7,84
Maryland	479,737	302,905	176,832	17,129	9,453	7,67
Mississippi	541,938	448,780	93,158	16,235	10,725	5,51
North Carolina	1,030,000	805,500	224,500	33,000	24,500	8,50
Oklahoma	468,800	344,535	124,265	18,922	11,738	7,18
South Carolina	529,655	385,132	144,523	20,389	13,140	7,24
Tennessee	728,829	549,391	179,438	24,649	17,932	6,71
Texas	1,755,300	1,382,000	373,300	65,225	41,750	23,47
Virginia	724,964	528,196	196,768	11/26,282	11/17,012	11/9,27
West Virginia	448,031	288,567	159,464	14,740	8,990	5,75
District of Columbia	106,401	67,766	38,635	3,645	1,929	1,71
WEST
Arizona	201,607	157,570	44,037	7,772	5,798	1,97
California	2,447,000	1,914,000	533,000	85,500	56,500	29,00
Colorado	296,500	222,375	74,125	12,256	9,076	3,18
Idaho	137,548	102,719	34,829	5,054	3,488	1,56
Montana	123,752	89,686	34,066	5,926	4,145	1,78
Nevada	46,334	36,541	9,793	1,949	1,450	49
New Mexico	179,786	142,421	37,365	5,578	3,330	2,24
Oregon	340,000	259,000	81,000	13,162	9,569	3,59
Utah	193,241	118,351	74,890	6,246	3,603	2,64
Washington	489,186	365,712	123,474	18,602	13,583	5,01
Wyoming	72,000	55,000	17,000	3,200	2,100	1,10
OUTLYING PARTS OF THE UNITED STATES:
Alaska	28,079	23,987	4,092	1,189	964	22
American Samoa	5,072	4,865	207	178	165	1
Canal Zone	10,598	7,093	3,505	345	214	13
Guam	11,410	9,202	2,208	393	315	7
Hawaii	119,048	75,468	43,580	3,956	2,516	1,44
Puerto Rico	536,795	402,256	134,539	11,216	7,022	4,19
St. Croix, V.I.	2,284	1,933	351	68	41	2

1/ Unless otherwise noted, data for elementary and secondary schools are classified by type of organization of Elementary includes kindergarten. 2/ Includes estimate for nonreporting States. 3/ Full time only. 4/ I their teaching load. 5/ Data for 1954-55. 6/ Data exclude 3 counties. 7/ Data for elementary and secon secondary. 8/ State reports that data are for 1953-54 (the latest available), but probably approximate the curr current year; the figure therefore includes some classrooms completed during the preceding fiscal year. 11/ Inc

955 STATISTICS ON ENROLLMENT, TEACHERS, AND SCHOOLHOUSING, IN FULL-TIME PUBLIC ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY DAY SCHOOLS

s, full-time and ing supervisors, rarians, etc.)		Number of full-time teachers teaching under substandard credentials			Number of pupils in excess of the normal capacity of the accessible publicly owned school plants in use			Total number of instruction rooms scheduled for completion during fiscal year 1955-56
y 1/	Secondary 1/	Total	Elementary 1/	Secondary 1/	Total	Elementary 1/	Secondary 1/
22	408,100	2/77,646	2/58,013	2/19,633	2/2,385,239	2/1,741,600	2/643,639	2/66,258
09	375,694	91,191	75,171	16,020	2,644,355	2,197,624	446,731	60,005
9	+8.6	-14.9	-22.8	+22.6	-9.8	-20.8	+44.1	+10.4
54	5,108	950	910	40	23,578	16,129	7,449	1,236
55	2,096	303	247	56	9,340	7,800	1,540	232
53	11,493	247	180	67	27,125	21,086	6,039	1,465
07	3/1,265	286	228	58	4,931	4,105	826	257
86	10,502	3,750	3,311	439	42,409	35,685	6,724	1,555
00	41,325	4,800	3,600	1,200	137,000	125,000	12,000	6,090
50	28,005	4/3,907	4/1,000	4/2,907	23,000	17,000	6,000	3,000
54	2,091	144	96	48	4,862	3,229	1,633	122
55	827	5/315	5/248	5/67	6,804	4,176	2,628	199
96	17,511	6/2,761	6/2,394	6/367	6/23,629	6/17,546	6/6,083	6/1,850
00	10,200	2,800	2,000	800	77,000	75,000	2,000	1,500
72	9,267	300	200	100	64,000	46,000	18,000	900
85	5,838	0	0	0	15,100	13,200	1,900	900
00	20,000	5,900	5,000	900	77,000	54,000	23,000	2,500
00	10,100	400	284	116	125,953	80,686	45,267	1,500
50	6,900	2,600	1,800	800	4,200	2,800	1,400	1,202
76	3,760	705	538	167	6,415	5,582	833	419
50	8/1,765	529	454	75	12/-	12/-	12/-	390
00	23,500	2,700	2,500	200	57,426	41,647	15,779	2,000
21	2,028	223	223	0	2,280	1,880	400	183
00	7,845	2,000	1,760	240	12/-	12/-	12/-	2,000
97	9,184	2,927	2,604	323	300,000	250,000	50,000	910
55	5,934	4,000	2,340	1,660	293,587	156,775	136,812	440
48	1,104	340	320	20	9/	9/	9/	10/202
86	10,120	1,586	1,200	386	87,895	57,727	30,168	1,927
67	10,078	367	292	75	40,000	32,000	8,000	7,000
7	6,760	2,400	1,900	500	65,000	45,000	20,000	650
97	7,844	900	580	320	9/	9/	9/	750
53	7,676	3,892	2,937	955	47,211	31,275	15,936	773
25	5,510	658	568	90	150,000	112,500	37,500	350
00	8,500	9/	9/	9/	9/	9/	9/	9/
88	7,184	0	0	0	36,000	20,000	16,000	750
40	7,249	375	375	0	55,500	40,000	15,500	2,000
82	6,717	740	538	202	33,252	25,065	8,187	992
50	23,475	2,000	1,849	151	40,495	31,851	8,644	4,100
12	11/9,270	2,186	1,926	260	81,593	64,004	17,589	1,024
00	5,750	892	804	88	17,000	15,000	2,000	198
29	1,716	475	315	160	8,978	6,864	2,114	118
98	1,974	55	55	0	19,708	13,986	5,722	322
00	29,000	9,000	6,000	3,000	110,000	90,000	20,000	8,000
76	3,180	527	460	67	40,000	30,000	10,000	1,300
88	1,566	935	673	262	9/	9/	9/	548
45	1,781	592	582	10	6,132	4,448	1,684	389
50	499	12	12	0	6,092	5,487	605	192
80	2,248	0	0	0	15,000	8,000	7,000	500
99	3,593	2,096	524	1,572	4,500	3,000	1,500	700
03	2,643	727	546	181	21,961	15,626	6,335	513
83	5,019	1,800	1,400	400	77,231	51,327	25,904	1,000
00	1,100	500	400	100	3,000	3,000	0	120
64	225	47	41	6	6,100	5,300	800	95
65	13	20	20	0	90	90	0	23
4	131	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
5	78	79	79	0	722	634	88	62
16	1,440	737	580	157	7,538	5,439	2,099	400
22	4,194	1,684	858	826	249,224	218,533	30,691	1,059
1	27	7	4	3	58	58	12/-	0

ganization of the school, rather than by grade-group. Thus, junior high schools are classified with the secondary schools. nly. 4/ Includes 2,407 teachers (339 elementary and 2,068 secondary) who are on emergency certificates for only part of ary and secondary schools are reported by grade-group: Kindergarten through grade 8 for elementary, and grades 9-12 for imate the current situation. 9/ Data not available. 10/ Covers classrooms in use for the first time during the . 11/ Includes librarians, guidance officers, and psychological personnel. 12/ Nil or negligible.

Number of Classroom Teachers

In the fall of 1955, there were 1,139,000 teachers -- 731,000 in elementary and 408,000 in secondary schools, a gain of more than 73,000, or 6.9 percent over a year ago. The number of elementary teachers increased 41,000, or 5.9 percent; while the number of secondary teachers increased 32,000, or 8.6 percent. The number of teachers during the past year increased proportionately more than the number of pupils, resulting in a reduction in the overall pupil-teacher ratio (from 27.7 to 26.8). Since the pupil-teacher ratio in secondary schools is generally lower than in elementary schools, it may be expected that as the wave of increased enrollment moves into the secondary schools, the overall ratio will decrease. The national pupil-teacher ratio does not, of course, reveal the local situations where the ratio of pupils to teachers may be considered to be too high.

Shortage of Qualified Teachers

The proportion of teachers with substandard credentials (those holding less than standard certificates) differs from State to State. Inter-State comparisons of the number of teachers holding substandard certificates cannot readily be made because of the variation among the States in the minimum requirements for standard teaching certificates. Thus, to qualify for elementary certificates (as of September 1953*), 26 States required the bachelor's degree; but the requirements in the other States ranged from less than 1 year of college in 2 States to 3 years of college in 5 States. For high school certificates, the minimum requirement ranged from 2 years of college in 3 States to 5 years of college in 5 States. The data on teachers holding substandard certificates have value mainly in pointing up the extent of the shortage of qualified teachers within the individual States.

State departments of education reported that in the fall of 1955 there were 78,000 full-time teachers with substandard credentials -- some 14,000 or 14.9 percent fewer than a year ago. Full-time teachers holding emergency certificates constituted 6.8 percent of all classroom teachers.

Pupils in Excess of Normal Capacity of the Accessible Publicly-Owned School Plants in Use

Almost 2.4 million pupils were reported as in excess of the normal capacity of the accessible publicly-owned school plants in use. This number was a quarter of a million less than the number reported a year ago. That the reduction was not general is indicated by the fact that 18 States showed an increase in excess pupils.

The effects of the extensive school construction program carried out during the 1954-55 school year are reflected in an overall reduction in the existing backlog of excess pupils during a period of rising enrollments. Thus, while 9 percent of the total enrollment was reported as in excess of normal capacity in the fall of 1954, the present proportion has been reduced to 7.8 percent.

The number of pupils "in excess of normal capacity" includes pupils exceeding the number that can be accommodated, without multiple sessions, in the instruction rooms of accessible publicly-owned school plants in use, according to State and local standards of normal capacity. Because such standards differ, comparisons between States must give careful attention to such differences. These categories are included in the count of excess pupils: (1) the number of pupils exceeding normal capacity of instruction rooms (regardless of whether the structure may be considered obsolete); (2) in the case of multiple sessions, the difference between the normal capacity of a single full session and the number attending all sessions; (3) the total number of pupils in makeshift or improvised facilities; (4) the total number of pupils in nonpublicly-owned buildings; and (5) the total number of pupils in non-school public buildings. It should be noted that not all pupils in unsafe, over-age, or educationally unsuitable structures are included in the count, but only those in excess of the normal capacity in such structures. This survey therefore gives only a partial measure of the total schoolhousing shortage.

Number of Instruction Rooms to be Completed During Fiscal Year 1955-56

Some 66,300 new instruction rooms are scheduled for completion during the current fiscal year, as compared with 60,000 a year ago. "Instruction rooms" include classrooms, laboratories, and shops; but exclude auditoriums, gymnasiums, lunchrooms, libraries, study halls, and multipurpose rooms. These figures cover the instruction rooms that are "scheduled for completion" during the current fiscal year; this is not necessarily the same as the number that will actually be completed. Approximately three-fifths of the States reported increases in scheduled construction over last year. The outstanding gain was reported by Georgia -- from 2,000 instruction rooms in 1954-55 to 7,000 rooms during the current school year.

Assuming that the 66,300 new instruction rooms will be utilized entirely as additional facilities for the present pupil population (rather than as replacements for obsolete quarters), and assuming further that one new instruction room is needed for each 30 pupils enrolled, almost 2 million pupils of the 2.4 million in excess of the normal capacity would be provided for. If a 25 pupil-per-instruction room ratio were used, the scheduled construction would take care of only 1.6 million pupils, instead of 2 million. In view of the large backlog of classroom needs, the certainty of further expansion in school enrollment, and the need also to replace buildings which are becoming obsolete (either due to age, reorganization of school districts, or population mobility), it is clear that the present rate of school construction must be considerably increased.

---

*Tabular Summary of Teacher Certification Requirements in the United States (1953), issued jointly by U. S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Office of Education, and National Education Association.

GPO 900444

A Report to the President

Education, General

The Committee for THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON EDUCATION

APRIL 1956

SUMMARY STATEMENT

COMMITTEE FOR THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON EDUCATION

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER, President of the United States—Honorary Chairman.
MARION B. FOLSOM, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare—Honorary Vice Chairman.
S. M. BROWNELL, U. S. Commissioner of Education—Honorary Vice Chairman.
NEIL H. MCELROY, Cincinnati, Ohio, president, Procter & Gamble Co.—Chairman.
FINIS E. ENGLEMAN, Hartford, Conn., State commissioner of education—Vice Chairman.
MILDRED C. AHLGREN, Whiting, Ind., past president, General Federation of Women's Clubs.
ETHEL G. BROWN, Los Angeles, Calif., president, National Congress of Parents and Teachers.
RALPH J. BUNCHE, Kew Gardens, N. Y., Under Secretary, United Nations.
JOHN S. BURKE. New York, N. Y., president, B. Altman & Co.
JOHN COWLES, Minneapolis, Minn., President, Minneapolis Star & Tribune.
JOHN A. HANNAH, East Lansing, Mich., president, Michigan State University.
JAMES W. HARGROVE, Shreveport, La., vice president, Texas Eastern Transmission Corp.
ALBERT J. HAYES, Silver Spring, Md., president, International Association of Machinists.
MARGARET HICKEY, St. Louis, Mo., editor, Public Affairs Department, Ladies Home Journal.
HENRY H. HILL, Nashville, Tenn., president, George Peabody College for Teachers.
OVETA CULP HOBBY, Houston, Tex., president, The Houston Post.
MILDRED MCA. HORTON, Cambridge, Mass., past president, Wellesley College.
JAMES R. KILLIAN, JR., Cambridge, Mass, president, Massachusetts Institute of Technology.
ALLAN B. KLINE, Western Springs, Ill., past president, American Farm Bureau Federation.
W. PRESTON LANE, JR., Hagerstown, Md., Ex-Governor of Maryland.
ROY E. LARSEN, Fairfield, Conn., president and director, Time, Inc.; past chairman, National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools.
THOMAS LAZZIO, Patterson, N. J., president, Local 300, UAW-CIO.
JOSEPH C. MCLAIN, Mamaroneck, N. Y., principal, Mamaroneck Senior High School.
WILLIAM E. MCMANUS, Washington, D. C., assistant director, Department of Education, National Catholic Welfare Conference.
LORIMER D. MILTON, Atlanta, Ga., president, Citizens Trust Co.
DON G. MITCHELL, Summit, N. J., chairman of board, Sylvania Electric Products, Inc.
FRANK C. MOORE, Buffalo, N. Y., president, Government Affairs Foundation, Inc.
HERSCHEL D. NEWSOM, Takoma Park, Md., master, National Grange.
WILLIAM S. PALEY, Manhasset, N. Y., chairman of board, Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
JAMES F. REDMOND, New Orleans, La., superintendent of schools.
MARTHA SHULL, Portland, Oreg., teacher and first vice president, National Education Association.
FRANK H. SPARKS, Crawfordsville, Ind., president, Wabash College.
POTTER STEWART, Cincinnati, Ohio, judge, United States Court of Appeals.
JESSE G. STRATTON, Clinton, Okla., past president, National School Boards Association, Inc.
HAROLD W. SWEATT, Minneapolis, Minn., chairman of board, Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co.
H. GRANT VEST, Denver, Colo., State commissioner of education.
MAYME E. WILLIAMS, Miami, Fla., teacher and president, National Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers.

CLINT PACE, Director

Foreword

In December 1954, President Eisenhower appointed a 34-member Committee for the White House Conference on Education and charged it with responsibilities in carrying out "the most thorough, widespread, and concerted study the American people have ever made of their educational problems." To the Governors of 53 States and Territories, he expressed a hope that each would call a citizens' conference on education, and that the entire program would then culminate in the White House Conference on Education.

All 53 States and Territories took part in the program, with more than 3,500 local, county, regional, and State conferences on education being held prior to the White House Conference in Washington November 28–December 1, 1955. More than a half-million American people were directly involved with these studies of school needs.

The responsibility placed on the President's Committee included giving assistance, on request, to the States and Territories in holding their conferences; planning and conducting the Nation's first White House Conference on Education; and reporting to the President on ways of meeting school needs.

The summary report which follows is the opening statement of the Committee's report to the President. It is not the full report, but it summarizes the Committee's statements and principal recommendations in six areas of elementary and secondary education. It is the Committee's hope that wide distribution of this summary report will acquaint many citizens with some of the needs of their schools and encourage them to obtain and study the full report, which contains the detailed findings of the Committee, the Report of the White House Conference on Education, and a summary of the reports of the State and Territorial conferences.

The full report is available from the Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C., at a cost of 40 cents a copy.

Summary Statement of the Report of the Committee for the White House Conference on Education

From the work of the Committee for the White House Conference on Education, one fundamental fact emerges: schools now affect the welfare of the United States more than ever before in history, and this new importance of education has been dangerously underestimated for a long time.

Some of the reasons for the rapidly increasing importance of the schools have been often noted. Ignorance is a far greater handicap to an individual than it was a generation ago, and an uneducated populace is a greater handicap to a Nation. This trend is obviously going to continue and quicken.

An equally important and less frequently mentioned reason for the growing importance of education is the plain fact that the schools have become the chief instrument for keeping this Nation the fabled land of opportunity it started out to be. In other decades, the opportunities of America lay primarily in escape from the rigid class barriers of Europe, the availability of free land at the frontier, and the excitement of a violently growing nation, where farms often became villages and villages became cities within the span of one human life. When the frontier was closed, it would have been easy for opportunities to dry up in this Nation, and for rigid class barriers to develop. It has been primarily the schools which have prevented this from happening. As long as good schools are available, a man is not frozen at any level of our economy, nor is his son. Schools free men to rise to the level of their natural abilities. Hope for personal advancement and the advancement of one's children is, of course, one of the great wellsprings of human energy. The schools, more than any other agency, supply this hope in America today. By providing a channel for ambition, they have taken the place of the frontier, and in a highly technical era have preserved the independent spirit of a pioneer nation. The schools stand as the chief expression of the American tradition of fair play for everyone, and a fresh start for each generation.

It is this fundamental conception of schools designed to give a fresh start to each generation that has broadened the ideals of education in America so much in the past 25 years. It is no longer thought proper to restrict educational programs to the skills of the mind, even though those skills remain of fundamental importance. Schools also attempt to improve children's health, to provide vocational training, and to do anything else which will help bring a child up to the starting line of adult life as even with his contemporaries as native differences in ability permit.

The most practical aspect of this new concept of education is that it calls for the most careful mining and refining of all human talents in the land—it is in itself a kind of law against waste. This new educational ideal represents the fullest flowering of the long western tradition of emphasizing the dignity of the individual. Many difficulties, of course, attend its development, but the members of this Committee believe that in essence it is noble and right and that in the long run it will prove to be one of the great strengths of America.

It is, of course, obvious that much progress has been made toward realizing this new educational ideal in the United States during the recent past. It is the belief of this Committee, however, that improvement has been nowhere near fast enough. The onrush of science has outstripped the schools. What is even more important, ideals of human conduct have in some areas advanced as rapidly as technology. Many a school which seemed good enough a generation ago now seems a disgrace to the community where it stands.

The schools have fallen far behind both the aspirations of the American people and their capabilities. In the opinion of this Committee, there is growing resolve throughout the Nation to close the gap between educational ideals and educational realities. This Committee therefore makes the following fundamental recommendations:

1. We recommend that school authorities emphasize the importance of priorities in education. This Committee has embraced with enthusiasm the concept of schools which provide a great variety of services designed to do all that is possible to fit children for fruitful adult lives, but there is real danger that in attempting to do everything a little, schools may end by doing nothing well. At present school funds are limited, and the student's time will always be limited. It is essential that schools pursue a policy of giving children first things first. In the rush for a great quantity of courses, quality must not be lost. The desire to provide education for all American children need not be inconsistent with the need to provide full opportunity for the gifted.

2. We recommend that the American people study carefully their systems of schools organization and consider measures to deny funds, other than local, to districts which do not after reasonable time, organize on an efficient basis. If the American people are asked to make sacrifices for better education, they deserve to have their funds used as efficiently as possible. This cannot be done without a great deal of reorganization in both rural and urban areas. There is no excuse for the existence of the 8,674 school districts which operate no schools. That is just one dramatic example of the need for reorganization. There is special need for studies of school systems in large cities, where most American children are now congregated. Ways must be found to decentralize large urban school systems to make them more responsive to the will of the people.

3. We recommend that local boards of education quickly assess their school building needs, and give this information to their State departments of education, and that the chief State school officers quickly relay this information to the United States Office of Education. Responsible estimates place the Nation's school building need at from less than 200,000 to nearly a half-million additional classrooms by 1960. Inadequate communication between local school districts and State departments of education is the chief cause for these contradictory figures. This Committee also recommends that every community and every State do all that is economically possible to construct the buildings required, and that during such emergency periods as now exists, Federal funds also be used wherever shown to be necessary. In the richest nation in all history, there is no valid reason for the grimy, dilapidated, and overcrowded school buildings which too many children now occupy. It is an ironic truth that most Americans would not permit their children to live in a house which is as bad as the school buildings which many pupils are forced by law to attend.

4. We recommend that greater inducements of all kinds be offered to attract and retain enough good teachers, and that during the coming decade of teacher shortages, every effort be made to utilize the services of available teachers more effectively. Practical steps must be taken to change the concept of teaching as an impoverished occupation. Teaching must be made a financially comfortable profession. Every effort must be made to devise ways to reward teachers according to their ability without opening the school door to unfair personnel practices. Present salary schedules have the effect of discouraging many able people from entering the profession. Teacher preparation programs have the reputation of requiring needless and repetitious courses. This reputation has the effect of deterring brilliant young people from becoming teachers. Salary schedules and preparation courses should be reexamined and changed where necessary to make the teaching profession more attractive to the most able young men and women. This Committee believes that the next decade and possibly two decades will be emergency periods during which the teacher shortage will grow more acute, but that there is ample reason to hope for sufficient supplies of good teachers in the long run.

5. We recommend that a new look be taken at the entire question of how much money this society should spend on education. In view of the recommendations of this Committee concerning the objectives of education, teachers, and buildings, it seems obvious that within the next decade the dollars spent on education in this Nation should be approximately doubled. Such an increase in expenditure would be an accurate reflection of the importance of education in this society. The exact sources of the necessary funds will be determined more easily when there is more public agreement that the funds must be provided, and more vigorous determination to do something about it. In the opinion of this Committee, money for schools must continue to come from all three levels of government, with a portion of funds for school buildings being made available by the Federal Government on an emergency basis. Good schools are admittedly expensive, but not nearly so expensive in the long run as poor ones.

6. We recommend that every possible step be taken to encourage the interest and activity of all citizens in school affairs. Citizen advisory groups, organizations of parents and teachers, education conferences, and all other means at the disposal of the people of a democracy should be utilized to keep the schools in close contact with the people. In the final analysis, it is only the public which can create good schools and nurture them. In the long run, schools must do what the public wants, and if no strong public will is made known, schools falter. Public interest in education is aroused only by knowledge of problems and intentions, and can continue only if the public can play an active role in school affairs.

7. We recommend that a White House Conference on Higher Education, similar in scope to the program just concluded on the needs of elementary and secondary schools, be held promptly to consider the many complex problems facing, or soon to face, the Nation's colleges and universities. This Committee believes there is yet time to acquaint the American people with their imminent needs in higher education, but the time grows shorter and shorter. The flood of students now in the elementary and secondary schools is not far away from the colleges. If the people of the United States expect to attract more and more students into college, they must begin preparing for them now.

The full report of the Committee for the White House Conference on Education, of which this statement is a summary, is available from the Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C., at a cost of 40 cents a copy.

Mrs Grace Hamilton
Sou Reg Council
63 S Auburn Ave
Atlanta Ga

E-WHC-3

COMMITTEE FOR THE WHITE HOUSE
CONFERENCE ON EDUCATION
WASHINGTON 25, D. C.

OFFICIAL BUSINESS

PENALTY FOR PRIVATE USE TO AVOID
PAYMENT OF POSTAGE, $300
(GPO)

Ed. Rev

Circular No. 490

Fall 1956

ENROLLMENT, TEACHERS, and SCHOOLHOUSING

in full-time public elementary and secondary day schools

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE
Office of Education

Circular 490 was prepared by

Samuel Schloss and Carol Joy Hobson

Under the general direction of

Emery M. Foster, Chief, Research Studies and Surveys Section

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE
Marion B. Folsom . . . . . Secretary
Office of Education . . . . . Lawrence G. Derthick, Commissioner

UNITED STATES
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
WASHINGTON: 1957

For sale by the Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office
Washington 25, D. C. - Price 15 cents

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE
Office of Education
Washington 25, D. C.

January 1957 Circular No. 490

FALL 1956 STATISTICS ON ENROLLMENT, TEACHERS, AND SCHOOLHOUSING IN FULL-TIME PUBLIC ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY DAY SCHOOLS

By

Samuel Schloss and Carol Joy Hobson*

THIS CIRCULAR gives statistics of public elementary and secondary schools, as of the fall of 1956, for a number of basic educational items such as enrollment, the number of teachers, the number of teachers who do not hold standard teaching certificates, the extent of pupil overcrowding, and the number of instruction rooms available, needed, and under construction. The Office of Education collected the data by a brief questionnaire /Form RSS-052(56)/ addressed to all State and territorial departments of education (See pages 7 and 8).

This is the third in a series of annual fall surveys conducted by the Office of Education, the purpose of which is to obtain certain basic data about the Nation's public schools at the beginning of the school year. Public school statistics, collected biennially for an entire school year, which are considerably wider in scope and presented in greater detail, will continue to be made available in the regular biennial surveys, with the usual time-lag for such comprehensive publications.

In the current survey, several new items have been included for the first time in order to provide data which the Office of Education is constantly being called upon to supply. The new items include the number of classrooms currently available, the number of additional rooms needed, and the number actually completed the previous year. Another item, dealing with the general education requirements for the lowest regular teaching certificate, has been added to supplement and place in perspective the data on teachers with substandard credentials. In a survey of this nature, some States have had to resort to estimates, especially for some of the new items on the questionnaire. However, it appears that more and more States are making this type of information an established part of their reporting system, with a corresponding improvement in the validity of the data which they supply.

Summary

According to the reports received from the States, the enrollment of pupils in public schools in continental United States in the fall of 1956 rose 1 million over a year ago, to a record 31.5 million with the largest increase taking place at the secondary level. The teaching staff is increasing at a somewhat faster rate than pupils, thereby reducing the pupil-teacher ratio from 26.9 in 1955 to 26.3 in 1956. There is a continuing shortage of fully qualified teachers, with 1 teacher in 13 lacking a standard teaching certificate. The States reported that there were 2,295,000 pupils in excess of the normal capacity of accessible publicly-owned school plants in use. These pupils constituted 7.3 percent of the total enrollment. The States reported that 69,200 instruction rooms were scheduled for completion this school year, a 10 percent increase over the record of 62,800 rooms built last year. The schoolhousing shortage in the fall of 1956 was reported as 159,000 instruction rooms. The current construction rate indicates that the shortage is being reduced very slowly. The classroom problem, of course, involves not only the accumulated shortage, but also the need to provide adequate classrooms for additional enrollment increases estimated for the next several years at over 1 million new pupils each year, and the additional classrooms needed each year to replace facilities as they become obsolete or unsatisfactory.

* Under the general direction of Emery M. Foster, Chief, Research Studies and Surveys Section.

A brief discussion of the changes that occurred between the fall of 1955 and the fall of 1956 for each of the major educational items covered in the survey is presented below. National figures cited refer to the continental United States which includes the 48 States and the District of Columbia.

Enrollment

Full-time public elementary and secondary day schools enrolled 31.5 million pupils in the fall of 1956-- 22.2 million in elementary schools, and 9.3 million in secondary schools. The increase in total enrollment was 1.0 million, or 3.3 percent more than a year ago. It is difficult to make separate comparisons of trends in elementary and secondary enrollments because of changes in reporting patterns in some States. In the regular fall survey, States are requested to report enrollment data by type of organization of the school. Thus, the seventh and eighth grade pupils in junior high schools are classified as secondary school pupils. Therefore, elementary-secondary data classified by organization cannot be compared with similar data collected by grade-group (kindergarten through grade 8, and grades 9 through 12). It should be noted also that the enrollment data in this Circular, compiled in the fall, are not directly comparable with the cumulative statistics on enrollment for an entire school year which are obtained in the Office of Education's biennial surveys. The difference between the two types of enrollment data is estimated at between 2 and 3 percent.

Number of Classroom Teachers

In the fall of 1956, there were 1,197,000 full-time and part-time teachers-- 750,000 in elementary schools and 447,000 in secondary schools, a gain of 61,000, or 5.4 percent over a year ago. The number of elementary teachers increased 21,000, or 2.8 percent, while the number of secondary teachers rose 40,000, or 9.9 percent. The number of teachers increased proportionately more than the number of pupils during the past year, resulting in a reduction in the overall pupil-teacher ratio from 26.9 to 26.3. Since the class size in secondary schools is generally lower than in elementary schools, it may be expected that as the wave of increased enrollment moves into the secondary schools, the ratio will continue to decrease. /The pupil-teacher ratio for the Nation as a whole does not, of course, reveal the local situations where the ratio of pupils to teachers may be too high./

Shortage of Qualified Teachers

The proportion of teachers with substandard credentials (those holding less than standard certificates) differs from State to State. Interstate comparisons of the number of teachers holding substandard certificates are subject to qualification, because of the variation among the States in the minimum requirements for the lowest standard teaching certificates. Thus, according to the data obtained in the present survey, 29 States require the bachelor's degree as a qualification for regular elementary teaching certificates, 15 States require between 2 and 4 years of college preparation, and 5 States require less than 2 years of college. For high school certificates, 46 States require the bachelor's degree or better and 3 States require between 2 and 3 years of college. The present survey requested information only on the general education requirement for teacher preparation and not on the other requirements such as semester hours of professional education and directed teaching.

State departments of education reported that in the fall of 1956 there were 89,400 full-time teachers with substandard credentials -- 11,800 or 15.3 percent more than a year ago. Full-time teachers holding emergency certificates constituted 7.5 percent of the total teaching staff, compared with 6.8 percent one year ago. The increase in the proportion of substandard teachers was due in part to higher certification requirements adopted by some States.

Pupils in Excess of Normal Capacity of the Accessible Publicly-Owned School Plants in Use

Survey figures showed 2,295,000 public elementary and secondary school pupils in excess of the normal capacity of accessible publicly-owned school plants in use, as compared with 2,262,000 in 1955. Although this is an increase of 33,000 or 1.4 percent over the number a year ago, the proportion that the excess pupils constitute of the total enrollment has remained about the same (7.3 percent).

The number of pupils "in excess of normal capacity" includes pupils exceeding the number that can be accommodated, without multiple sessions, in the instruction rooms of accessible publicly-owned school plants in use, according to State and local standards of normal capacity. For the purposes of this report, the excess enrollment in one school is not reduced by any unused capacity in another. The report form employed in the survey defined "pupils in excess of normal capacity" as including: (1) the number of pupils exceeding normal capacity in overcrowded instruction rooms (regardless of whether the structure might be considered obsolete); (2) in the case of multiple sessions, the differences between the normal capacity of a single full session and the number attending all sessions; (3) the total number of pupils in makeshift or improvised facilities; (4) the total number of pupils in non-publicly-owned buildings; and (5) the total number of pupils in non-school public buildings.

Inventory of Instruction Rooms

"Instruction rooms" include classrooms, laboratories, and shops, but exclude auditoriums, gymnasiums, lunchrooms, libraries, study halls, and multipurpose rooms. The number of instruction rooms available in public schools of continental United States in the fall of 1956 was reported by the States to be 1,087,000--an increase of approximately 49,000, or 4.7 percent, over the number a year ago. Some 14,000 instruction rooms were abandoned during the past school year--reflecting mainly, it is believed, school district reorganization and the closing of small schools. Informal oral reports (supplementary to the survey data) indicate that the number of rooms abandoned because of structural defects or obsolescence was small.

Additional Instruction Rooms Currently Needed

The States were asked to report the number of additional instruction rooms needed to take care of the pupils currently enrolled. Figures were requested in two categories: (a) additional instruction rooms needed to accommodate enrollment "in excess of normal capacity of the accessible, publicly owned school plants in use"; and (b) new instruction rooms needed to replace unsatisfactory facilities (exclusive of rooms counted in (a)). The States reported that a total of approximately 159,000 additional rooms were needed in continental United States: 80,000 to accommodate the 2.3 million pupils in excess of normal capacity; and a nearly equal number, 79,000, to replace unsatisfactory facilities.

These figures are not presented as a precise measurement of the current shortage of instruction rooms in public schools. The figures are presented simply as a factual statement of the shortage as reported by the States in the fall of 1956. Precise measurements are virtually impossible, because interpretations of such terms as "normal capacity" and "unsatisfactory facilities" inevitably will vary in some degree from person to person, from place to place, from one period to another, and under different circumstances. The evaluation of obsolescence is especially difficult, and will vary according to the standards employed.

The School Facilities Survey of four years ago, for example, involved quite different methods of reporting under substantially different circumstances. All reliable studies, however, show a continuing, widespread, significant classroom shortage.

(Text continued on page 6)

FALL 1956 STATISTICS ON ENROLLMENT, TEA
PUBLIC ELEMENTARY AND

State, by region	Number of pupils enrolled			Number of classroom teachers			Number of teachers teaching under substandard credentials 1/			Degree or number of semester hours required for lowest teaching certificate 2/
	Total	Elementary 3/	Secondary 3/	Total	Elementary 3/	Secondary 3/	Total	Elementary 3/	Secondary 3/	Elementary 3/	Secondary 3/
1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	12
CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES	31,527,695	22,236,110	9,291,585	1,196,980	749,851	447,129	89,388	66,205	23,183	-	-
NORTHEAST:
Connecticut	399,000	5/273,000	5/126,000	16,000	10,600	5,400	1,060	900	160	B	B
Maine	182,052	138,739	43,313	7,286	5,047	2,239	336	255	81	7/96	7/B
Massachusetts	770,364	514,563	255,801	30,813	18,745	12,068	295	170	125	B	B
New Hampshire	91,061	63,560	27,501	3,831	2,481	1,350	279	208	71	B	B
New Jersey	881,087	555,085	326,002	36,829	20,511	16,318	4,565	3,391	1,174	B	B
New York	2,426,400	1,483,400	943,000	98,200	53,900	44,300	5,700	4,000	1,700	B	B
Pennsylvania	1,831,929	1,158,142	673,787	65,112	36,338	28,774	8/5,050	8/1,625	8/3,425	B	B
Rhode Island	116,465	72,134	44,331	4,936	2,702	2,234	257	75	182	B	B
Vermont	67,752	49,098	18,654	2,976	2,086	890	500	400	100	60	B
NORTH CENTRAL:
Illinois	1,487,458	1,115,569	371,889	58,223	40,121	18,102	4,767	4,067	700	7/B	7/B
Indiana	878,504	5/672,901	5/205,603	33,842	5/19,164	5/14,678	3,974	2,474	1,500	B	B
Iowa	531,029	5/401,311	5/129,718	24,086	5/14,579	5/9,507	300	200	100	7/63	7/B
Kansas	426,000	326,000	100,000	19,100	13,000	6,100	-	-	-	60	60
Michigan	1,455,000	942,000	513,000	51,500	30,500	21,000	6,307	5,200	1,107	7/30	7/B
Minnesota	617,000	387,500	229,500	25,150	14,400	10,750	425	290	135	80	B
Missouri	745,000	578,000	167,000	9/27,339	9/19,582	9/7,757	2,300	1,500	800	60	B
Nebraska	249,449	176,934	72,515	13,421	9,131	4,290	686	462	224	12	7/B
North Dakota	127,108	96,332	30,776	6,881	5,000	1,881	450	400	50	32	B
Ohio	1,633,831	1,255,858	377,973	62,700	37,800	24,900	4,020	3,094	926	B	B
South Dakota	141,092	107,751	33,341	7,794	5,665	2,129	110	110	-	30	B
Wisconsin	641,000	475,000	166,000	25,487	17,407	8,080	1,500	1,230	270	64	B
SOUTH:
Alabama	745,100	458,000	287,100	26,000	15,600	10,400	4,000	3,000	1,000	B	B
Arkansas	424,000	268,000	156,000	13,540	7,890	5,650	3,900	2,301	1,599	60	60
Delaware	65,915	39,830	26,085	2,872	1,580	1,292	201	147	54	B	B
Florida	725,124	445,541	279,583	27,410	16,034	11,376	640	533	107	B	B
Georgia	917,265	678,866	238,399	30,181	19,965	10,216	236	11/188	11/48	60	60
Kentucky	594,673	437,060	157,613	21,726	14,873	6,853	2,400	1,800	600	64	B
Louisiana	617,400	492,800	124,600	23,611	15,367	8,244	13/466	13/396	13/70	B	B
Maryland	506,834	319,560	187,274	18,255	10,048	8,207	4,163	3,208	955	B	B
Mississippi	550,000	451,000	99,000	16,525	10,755	5,770	5,228	11/4,444	11/784	14/B	14/B
North Carolina	1,009,382	782,500	226,882	36,004	26,191	9,813	2,010	1,815	195	B	B
Oklahoma	478,800	350,682	128,118	19,322	11,988	7,334	-	-	-	B	B
South Carolina	528,259	383,467	144,792	20,460	13,100	7,360	425	425	-	B	B
Tennessee	739,745	557,620	182,125	25,901	18,843	7,058	783	569	214	B	B
Texas	1,814,100	1,423,850	390,250	68,802	43,771	25,031	1,564	1,011	553	7/B	7/B
Virginia	751,013	539,725	211,288	27,507	17,456	10,051	2,247	1,955	292	B	B
West Virginia	449,000	288,000	161,000	14,683	8,872	5,811	872	804	68	64	B
Dist. of Columbia	107,312	70,225	37,087	3,794	2,079	1,715	600	375	225	B	15/B
WEST:
Arizona	212,210	165,622	46,588	8,269	6,229	2,040	60	60	-	B	B+6
California	2,607,000	1,830,000	777,000	90,500	59,000	31,500	9,500	7,200	2,300	B	B+30
Colorado	320,566	201,675	118,891	13,340	7,719	5,621	632	525	107	7/60	7/B
Idaho	139,038	86,494	52,544	5,756	3,142	2,614	1,083	759	324	B	B
Montana	129,625	89,312	40,313	5,998	4,266	1,732	321	263	58	64	B
Nevada	48,502	37,401	11,101	2,168	1,587	581	49	49	-	30	B
New Mexico	185,853	146,107	39,746	6,757	4,228	2,529	-	-	-	60	7/B
Oregon	351,393	264,762	86,631	16,123	11,664	4,459	2,294	2,158	136	B	B
Utah	199,972	122,404	77,568	6,781	3,859	2,922	839	615	224	B	B
Washington	538,733	407,430	131,303	19,759	12,731	7,028	1,574	1,254	320	B	B
Wyoming	72,300	55,300	17,000	3,430	2,255	1,175	420	300	120	60	B
Outlying parts of the United States:
Alaska	30,053	25,185	4,868	1,357	1,102	255	70	57	13	90	B
American Samoa	5,092	4,803	289	207	192	15	25	23	2	B	B
Canal Zone	10,653	6,818	3,835	345	210	135	-	-	-	16/B	16/M
Guam	11,757	9,463	2,294	421	331	90	97	97	-	60	90
Puerto Rico	544,893	400,615	144,278	11,759	7,272	4,487	2,197	1,167	1,030	67	B
Virgin Islands—St. Croix	2,331	1,648	683	71	44	27	29	25	4	60	60
—St. Thomas & St. John	3,725	2,611	1,114	119	77	42	46	43	3	60	B
Hawaii	123,131	77,697	45,434	4,110	2,569	1,541	833	606	227	B	B

1/ Some of the "substandard" teachers included here may have met the minimum general education requirements given in columns 11 and 12 but equivalent of 120-128 semester hours; "M" means the master's degree. 3/ Unless otherwise noted, data for elementary and secondary schools a 5/ Data for elementary and secondary schools are reported by grade group: kindergarten through grade 8 for elementary, and grades 9-12 for seco
Personnel in the United States", 1955 Edition. 8/ Includes 850 teachers (425 elementary and 425 secondary) who are on emergency certificate
414 classrooms to be constructed for the school years 1955-56 through 1958-59 under the 1955 School Building Act. 11/ Distribution by level reoccupied. 13/ Number of temporary certificates valid for 1 year. 14/ Effective Dec. 1, 1956. 15/ Requirement for teaching in juni citizens; a Republic of Panama Normal School certificate, or its equivalent, is the requirement for the lowest regular teaching certificate in

TEACHERS, AND SCHOOLHOUSING, IN FULL-TIME AND SECONDARY DAY SCHOOLS

Number of pupils in excess of normal capacity of the accessible publicly-owned school plants in use			Inventory of instruction rooms				Additional instruction rooms needed (as of fall 1956)
Total	Elementary 3/	Secondary 3/	Available, beginning 1955-56 school year	Abandoned for instructional purposes during the 1955-56 school year	Completed during 1955-56 school year	Available, beginning 1956-57 school year	Total	To accommodate excess enrollment reported in column 13	To replace unsatisfactory facilities (exclusive of those in column 21)	Instruction rooms scheduled for completion during 1956-57 school year
13	14	15	16	17	18	19	20	21	22	23
4/2,295,000	4/1,685,000	4/610,000	4/1,038,000	4/14,000	62,766	4/1,086,766	4/159,000	4/80,000	4/79,000	4/69,200
66,000	6/	6/	12,992	-	796	13,788	2,600	2,100	500	2,102
10,184	7,864	2,320	6,860	-	240	7,100	900	378	522	391
33,910	26,360	7,550	26,456	310	1,160	27,306	2,240	1,240	1,000	1,420
7,877	5,057	2,820	3,374	58	177	3,493	690	280	410	330
76,201	49,502	26,699	26,066	271	1,877	27,672	3,841	2,591	1,250	1,436
137,000	125,000	12,000	6/	6/	6,090	6/	6/	2,200	6/	7,000
39,393	21,901	17,492	61,706	1,081	2,163	62,788	8,366	1,525	6,841	5,454
5,000	3,300	1,700	3,904	65	131	3,970	700	200	500	202
5,873	3,653	2,220	2,892	42	127	2,977	862	198	664	207
52,338	41,674	10,664	51,435	677	2,788	53,546	3,435	1,924	1,511	2,809
44,094	43,000	1,094	29,010	206	1,823	30,627	4,170	1,470	2,700	2,100
30,000	20,000	10,000	19,862	200	400	20,062	1,000	6/	6/	450
13,800	12,100	1,700	16,000	700	900	16,200	1,800	800	1,000	500
80,000	50,000	30,000	46,923	750	3,430	49,603	3,300	2,250	1,050	3,[illegible]00
92,400	61,600	30,800	25,280	275	1,043	26,048	4,345	3,825	520	1,200
14,600	14,000	600	25,000	-	1,200	26,200	4,000	700	3,300	1,300
5,538	4,010	1,528	13,402	351	358	13,409	418	235	183	302
6/	6/	6/	3,020	92	390	3,318	570	470	100	223
57,900	41,900	16,000	55,911	225	1,275	56,961	4,460	2,036	2,424	1,500
3,661	2,780	881	7,695	-	213	7,908	246	146	100	125
3,000	2,000	1,000	25,153	125	1,735	26,763	470	120	350	2,000
287,820	240,000	47,820	13,240	150	556	13,646	11,354	9,594	1,760	407
93,026	49,304	43,722	9,285	326	396	9,355	8,324	3,454	4,870	350
616	616	-	2,125	2	43	2,166	25	25	-	10/138
74,217	49,393	24,824	22,028	205	1,998	23,821	4,643	2,529	2,114	1,584
194,130	129,420	64,710	27,711	1,319	1,770	28,162	7,471	6,471	1,000	2,700
60,000	45,000	15,000	18,000	441	12/1,098	18,657	7,000	2,000	5,000	800
6/	6/	6/	22,411	50	1,300	23,661	6/	6/	6/	1,100
63,790	39,737	24,053	13,959	99	888	14,748	3,150	1,898	1,252	831
76,720	57,540	19,180	17,214	75	350	17,489	6,579	2,192	4,387	600
7,136	11/6,066	11/1,070	33,152	676	1,788	34,264	4,867	1,586	3,281	2,076
10,000	6,000	4,000	20,000	150	1,750	21,600	500	350	150	1,200
55,500	40,000	15,500	18,665	1,000	1,400	19,065	6,453	1,953	4,500	1,186
45,110	34,004	11,106	24,433	336	955	25,052	*	*	*	*
55,590	45,687	9,903	53,430	300	5,487	58,617	7,561	4,538	3,023	5,064
74,833	54,306	20,527	24,163	289	1,214	25,088	4,974	2,680	2,294	993
19,500	17,000	2,500	16,422	625	300	16,097	1,823	780	1,043	450
15,921	14,871	1,050	3,694	16	170	3,848	537	537	-	50
5,300	3,500	1,800	5,218	20	350	5,548	205	175	30	250
115,000	90,000	25,000	74,000	1,000	8,000	81,000	10,000	4,000	6,000	10,000
24,746	17,136	7,610	11,017	211	1,043	11,849	1,197	621	576	1,000
4,850	2,728	2,122	4,493	83	269	4,679	613	181	432	208
4,418	3,051	1,367	6,054	139	304	6,219	661	214	447	309
4,497	3,743	754	1,719	43	244	1,920	271	137	134	106
6/	6/	6/	6/	6/	100	6/	6/	487	6/	100
17,025	11,833	5,192	13,312	-	650	13,962	6/	680	6/	700
13,066	8,982	4,084	6,335	174	585	6,746	709	432	277	124
81,138	54,092	27,046	18,795	332	1,322	19,785	3,344	1,456	1,888	1,417
1,800	1,800	-	3,100	30	120	3,190	210	60	150	100
4,454	3,441	1,013	1,202	36	199	1,365	305	191	114	133
-	-	-	183	7	11	187	6	-	6	25
-	-	-	401	39	16	378	7	-	7	4
17/810	6/	6/	404	-	27	431	27	27	-	15
229,749	202,570	27,179	7,942	-	325	8,267	7,245	5,869	1,376	1,042
261	261	-	48	-	21	69	33	9	24	29
650	536	114	101	10	7	98	31	18	13	1
3,466	2,275	1,191	4,044	78	318	4,284	493	114	379	276

but lack either the required semester hours in professional education or directed teaching. 2/ "B" means the bachelor's degree, the ls are classified by type of organization of the school, rather than by grade-group. 4/ Includes estimate for nonreporting States.
secondary. 6/ Data not available. 7/ Source: National Education Association "A Manual on Certification Requirements for School cates for more than half of their teaching load. 9/ Includes supervisors and principals. 10/ Represents one-third of the remaining evel estimated by Office of Education. 12/ Includes 123 new classrooms produced by remodeling other space and 353 abandoned classrooms junior high schools; master's degree required for teaching in senior high schools. 16/ Requirement for teaching in schools for U. S. in schools for Latin Americans. 17/ Estimated by Office of Education. *Data not available until current survey is completed.

Number of Instruction Rooms Scheduled for Completion During School Year 1956-57

States reported that 69,200 instruction rooms are scheduled for completion in the public schools of continental United States during the current school year. Last year the number of instruction rooms reported as scheduled for completion was 67,000; but this has been revised to 61,900, because the figure of 7,000 rooms originally reported by one State for 1955-56 was later certified by the State as the total number of rooms scheduled for completion for the 4-year period 1952-56. Adjustment for this fact reduces the number reported as scheduled for completion in 1955-56 to 61,900--which is within 1 percent of the number reported, in the current survey, as actually built in that year, viz, 62,800.

It is of interest to compare the need for instruction rooms with the number of rooms scheduled for completion in 1956-57. An assumed construction rate of 69,200 instruction rooms per year for public schools in continental United States will take care of the needs which may be expected to arise from enrollment increases, obsolescence, and losses due to fire, flood, hurricanes, etc.; but it will do little toward reducing the backlog of need.

FORM RSS-052(56)

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE
Office of Education
Washington 25, D.C.

Budget Bureau No. 51-R236.2
Approval Expires: 12/31/56

Fall 1956 Report on
ENROLLMENT, TEACHERS, AND SCHOOLHOUSING
(Full-time Public Elementary and Secondary Day Schools)

Important

This information should reflect the facts on or about October 1, or the nearest date thereto when enrollment can be considered stabilized. If some of the actual data are not available, please furnish reasonable estimates. Please notify this Office at once if you foresee any delay in getting this report to us by November 1.

Fall 1955 data, which have been taken from your report for last year, are furnished for reference purposes.

State (or Territory) _____

Report made by: _____ (Name) _____ (Title)

Item	Fall 1956		Fall 1955
	Elementary level (including Kindergarten)	Secondary level (including junior high)	Elementary level (including Kindergarten)	Secondary level (including junior high)
1	2	3	4	5
1. Number of full-time and part-time classroom teachers.....	_____	_____	_____	_____
2. Number of full-time classroom teachers with substandard credentials (those who do not meet the regular certification requirements of the State).....	_____	_____	_____	_____
3. Degree or number of semester hours required for lowest regular teaching certificate	_____	_____	_____	_____
4. Number of pupils enrolled....	_____	_____	_____	_____
5. Number of pupils enrolled in excess of normal capacity 1/ of the accessible publicly-owned school plants in use..	_____	_____	_____	_____

See footnotes on reverse side.

6. Total number of all publicly-owned elementary and secondary instruction rooms:2/

(a) Available at the beginning of the 1955-56 school year..... _____

(b) Abandoned for instructional purposes during the 1955-56 school year _____

(c) Completed during the 1955-56 school year [NOTE: In your Fall 1955 report, _____ instruction rooms were reported as scheduled for completion during 1955-56]..... _____

(d) Available at the beginning of the 1956-57 school year (a minus b plus c)..... _____

7. Additional public elementary and secondary instruction rooms2/ needed (as of Fall 1956) for housing the pupils enrolled:

(a) Needed to accommodate excess enrollment reported in columns 2 and 3 of item 5 ..... _____

(b) Needed to replace unsatisfactory3/ facilities exclusive of classrooms counted in (a) above..... _____

(c) Total additional instruction rooms needed (a plus b)..... _____

8. Number of instruction rooms scheduled for completion during the 1956-57 school year..... _____

1/ The number of pupils "in excess of normal capacity" includes pupils exceeding the number that can be accommodated, without multiple sessions, in the instruction rooms of accessible publicly-owned school plants in use, according to State and local standards of normal capacity. For the purposes of this report, the excess enrollment in one school is not to be reduced by any unused capacity in another. The following categories are to be included in the count: (1) the number of pupils exceeding normal capacity in overcrowded instruction rooms (regardless of whether the structure might be considered obsolete); (2) in the case of multiple sessions, the differences between the normal capacity of a single full session and the number attending all sessions; (3) the total number of pupils in makeshift or improvised facilities; (4) the total number of pupils in non-publicly-owned buildings; and (5) the total number of pupils in non-school public buildings.

2/ Instruction rooms include classrooms, laboratories, and shops, but exclude auditoriums, gymnasiums, lunchrooms, libraries, study halls, and multipurpose rooms.

3/ An "unsatisfactory" facility is one which should be abandoned because its condition or location is such that it cannot be made satisfactory with any reasonable expenditure.

U. S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE : 1957 O -415662

UNITED STATES
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
DIVISION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS
WASHINGTON 25, D. C.

OFFICIAL BUSINESS

PENALTY FOR PRIVATE USE TO AVOID
PAYMENT OF POSTAGE, $300
(GPO)

If you do not desire to continue to receive this type of publication, please CHECK HERE ☐; tear off this label and return it to the above address. Your name will then be promptly removed from the appropriate mailing list.

Citizens and Their Schools

a collection of center section reports-in-depth from 1956 issues

of

BETTER SCHOOLS

A CLEARINGHOUSE FOR SCHOOL IMPROVEMENT

Published by the NATIONAL CITIZENS COUNCIL FOR BETTER SCHOOLS, 9 East 40th Street, New York 16, N.Y.

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF
HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE
Office of Education
Washington 25, D. C.

January 1957 — Supplement to Circular No. 490

Comparative Statistics on Enrollment, Teachers, and Schoolhousing in Full-Time Public Elementary and Secondary Day Schools, With Related Population Data: Fall 1954, 1955, and 1956

Continental United States*

Item	Fall 1954	Fall 1955	Fall 1956	Annual change [Minus (-) denotes decrease] Number 1954 to 1955	Number 1955 to 1956	Percent 1954 to 1955	Percent 1955 to 1956
1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8
A. POPULATION 1/
Total population	162,114,000	165,130,000	168,029,000	3,016,000	2,899,000	1.9	1.8
Population aged 5-17 years, inclusive	36,315,000	37,695,000	39,117,000	1,380,000	1,422,000	3.8	3.8
Percent of total population aged 5-17	22.4	22.8	23.3	-	-	2/.4	2/.5
B. ENROLLMENT
Total enrollment	29,410,118	30,532,166	31,527,695	1,122,048	995,529	3.8	3.3
Elementary schools . . .	3/	22,059,688	22,236,110	3/	4/176,422	3/	4/.8
Secondary schools . . .	3/	8,472,478	9,291,585	3/	4/819,107	3/	4/9.7
Percent of total enrollment in elementary schools . .	3/	72.3	70.5	-	-	3/	2/-1.8
Percent of total enrollment in secondary schools . .	3/	27.7	29.5	-	-	3/	2/ 1.8
Percent of population aged 5-17 years enrolled . . .	81.0	81.0	80.6	-	-	-	2/-.4
C. PUPILS IN EXCESS OF NORMAL CAPACITY
Total number of pupils enrolled in excess of normal capacity of accessible publicly owned school plants in use	2,336,068	2,262,434	2,295,000	-73,634	32,566	-3.2	1.4
Elementary schools . . .	3/	1,706,735	1,685,000	3/	4/-21,735	3/	4/-1.3
Secondary schools . . .	3/	555,699	610,000	3/	4/ 54,301	3/	4/ 9.8
Percent of total excess enrollment in elementary schools	3/	75.4	73.4	-	-	3/	2/-2.0
Percent of total excess enrollment in secondary schools	3/	24.6	26.6	-	-	3/	2/ 2.0
Pupils in excess of normal capacity as percent of total enrollment	7.9	7.4	7.3	-	-	2/-.5	2/ -.1
Elementary schools . . .	3/	7.7	7.6	-	-	3/	2/ -.1
Secondary schools . . .	3/	6.6	6.6	-	-	3/	2/ -

See footnotes on page 2.

Item	Fall 1954	Fall 1955	Fall 1956	Annual change [Minus (-) denotes decrease] Number 1954 to 1955	Number 1955 to 1956	Percent 1954 to 1955	Percent 1955 to 1956
1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8
D. CLASSROOM TEACHERS
Total teachers, full-time and part time	1,066,853	1,135,930	1,196,980	69,077	61,050	6.5	5.4
Elementary	690,457	729,194	749,851	38,737	20,657	5.6	2.8
Secondary	376,396	406,736	447,129	30,340	40,393	8.1	9.9
Percent of total teachers in elementary schools . . .	64.7	64.2	62.6	-	-	2/-.5	2/-1.6
Percent of total teachers in secondary schools	35.3	35.8	37.4	-	-	2/ .5	2/-1.6
E. PUPIL-TEACHER RATIO
Pupil-teacher ratio, all schools	27.6	26.9	26.3	-	-	2/-.7	2/ -.6
Elementary	3/	30.3	29.7	-	-	3/	2/ -.6
Secondary	3/	20.8	20.8	-	-	3/	2/ -
F. TEACHERS WITH SUBSTANDARD CERTIFICATES
Total full-time teachers with substandard certificates . .	74,815	77,554	89,388	2,739	11,834	3.7	15.3
Elementary	60,520	59,453	66,205	-1,067	6,752	-1.8	11.4
Secondary	14,295	18,101	23,183	3,806	5,082	26.6	28.1
Percent of teachers with substandard certificates in elementary schools . . .	80.9	76.7	74.1	-	-	2/-4.2	2/-2.6
Percent of teachers with substandard certificates in secondary schools . . .	19.1	23.3	25.9	-	-	2/ 4.2	2/ 2.6
Teachers with substandard certificates as percent of total teachers	7.0	6.8	7.5	-	-	2/ -.2	2/ .7
Elementary	8.8	8.2	8.8	-	-	2/ -.6	2/ .6
Secondary	3.8	4.5	5.2	-	-	2/ .7	2/ .7
G. SCHOOLHOUSING
Number of publicly owned instruction rooms at beginning of school year	3/	1,038,000	1,086,766	3/	48,766	3/	4.7
Number of rooms abandoned for instructional purposes during school year	3/	14,000	-	3/	-	3/	-
Number of instruction rooms completed during school year.	3/	62,766	-	3/	-	3/	-
Total number of additional instruction rooms needed for housing pupils enrolled at beginning of school year. . .	3/	3/	159,000	3/	3/	3/	3/
To accommodate pupils in excess of normal capacity . .	3/	3/	80,000	3/	3/	3/	3/
To replace unsatisfactory facilities	3/	3/	79,000	3/	3/	3/	3/
Percent of additional instruction rooms needed:
To accommodate pupils in excess of normal capacity . .	3/	3/	50.3	3/	3/	3/	3/
To replace unsatisfactory facilities	3/	3/	49.7	3/	3/	3/	3/
Total number of instruction rooms scheduled for completion during school year . .	60,005	5/61,868	69,200	1,863	7,379	3.1	11.9

* Includes 48 States and District of Columbia.

1/ Data as of October 1. Source: U.S. Bureau of the Census. 2/ Absolute change in percentage points. 3/ Data not available. 4/ Separate comparisons of trends in elementary and secondary enrollments cannot readily be made because of changes in reporting patterns from year to year. 5/ This figure differs from the one previously published (67,098), because the 7,000 rooms reported by one State for the school year 1955-56 was later certified by the State as the total number of classrooms scheduled for completion for the 4-year period 1952-56.

Source:
Fall 1954 and 1955: Office of Education Circular No. 467 Revised; Fall 1956: Circular No. 490.

Negro Schools In Georgia
From Georgia Teachers & Education Association
January 1957

REGION ONE

County	School	Principal - Address	No. of Trs
Bartow	Bartow Elem.	Walter Johnson, Cartersville	19
Ringgold	Ringgold Elem.	William M..Pride, Ringgold	3
Chattooga	Co. Trng. Sch.	John R. Rosser, Rte. 2, Lyerly	10
	Menlo Colored	Evelyn L. Rambo, Menlo	2
	Summerville Col.	Dewey D. White, Summerville	9
Trion City	Westside Sch.	Mrs. Virginia Shropshire, Trion	2
Dade	Hooker School	Miss Lula D. Paris, Trenton	2
Fannin	Blue Ridge Sch.	Edith B. Brown, Blue Ridge	1
Calhoun City	Stephens School	Mrs. Betty M. Smith, Calhoun	13
Floyd	E. S. Brown Sch.	Eugene Perdue, Cave Springs,	5
Cartersville City	Summer Hill Hi	J. S. Morgan, Sr.,Cartersville	10
	Summer Hill Elem.	J. S. Morgan, Sr., Cartersville	10
Rome City	Main School	C. W. Aycock, Watters St.,Rome	37
	Mary T. Banks	Samuel Burell, E. 12th St., Rome	8
	South Rome	Harold Al dridge, E. 12th St., Rome	6
	West Rome	Mrs. Sarah T. Hixon, Grahm St., Rome	4
Haralson	County High & Elem. Colored School	Charles J. George, Waco	16
Murray	Chatsworth School	Miss Eila Lee Branham, Chatsworth	1
Paulding	Matthews Cons.	B. L. Fuse, Dallas	15
Polk	Elm Street	L. C. Baylor, Rockmart	21
	Lyle	Morris Morgan, Jr., Cedartown	9
Cedartown City	Cedar Hill	R. A. Bryant, Cedartown	16
Walker	Hill Hi & Elem. Sch.	Oliver R. Lumpkin, LaFayette	16
	Wallaceville Sch.	Mrs. Rosa B. Clements, Rte. 1, Chickamauga	9
Whitfield
Dalton	Emery School	James R. Hightower, Emery St., Dalton	15

REGION TWO

County	School	Principal - Address	No. of Trs.
Butts	Henderson Hi & Elem	N. E. Walker, Jackson,	38
Carroll	Antioch	James O. Reynolds, Clem,	5
	Glanton-Hindsman	Yeadon D. McCleary, Villa Rica,	12
	Hillside	Annie M. C. Heard, Rt. 2, Carrollton	2
	Hudson	Asa A. Chambliss, Bowdon,	9
	Mandeville	Lucy L. Bowen, Bowdon Junction,	1
	Pineview	Jessie D. Stokes, Carrollton	1
	Providence	Walter Strickland, Temple,	5
	Rose Hill	Sanford N. Holliway, Roopville	6
	Shady Dale	Mary A. Bailey, Carrollton	2
Carrollton City	Alabama St. Elem.	L. S. Molette, Box 418, Carrollton,	15
	Carver High	L. S. Molette, Box 418, Carrollton,	17
Coweta	Eastside	W. A. Long, Rt. 1, Senoia,	15
	Grantville Brown	L. D. Walker, Grantville,	15
	Newman-Coweta Central High	F. A. Dodson, Newnan,	25
	Northside	J. E. Jennings, Rt. 2, Newnan,	13
	Westside	Leroy Norwood, Rt. 4, Newnan,	8
Newnan City	Howard Warner	Robert J. Rowe, 55 Savannah St. Newnan,	15
	Ruth Hill	Ulysses S. Jackson, Sunset Lane, Newnan,	11
Douglas	Hutcheson	Ulysees Byas, Douglasville,	20
	Winston	William H. Endsley, Winston,	4
Fayette	Fayette Co. Trng.	Mrs. Pearl Webb, Fayetteville,	26
Heard	Mary Johnson	Felton J. Ransby	18
Henry	Hampton Rosenwald	Percy E. Parks, Hampton,	9
	Henry Co. Trng.	Joseph F. Smith, McDonough,	42
	Shoal Creek	Robert E. Davenport, Locust Grove,	11
	Stockbridge-Rosenwald	Elizabeth S. Clifford	9
Meriwether	Greenville Consolidated	Earl H. Stokes, Greenville,	23
	Durand Elem.	William Mitchell, Durand,	4
	Luthersville Elem.	William C. Clemons, Luthersville,	9
	Meriwether Co., Tng.	Ira Parks, Manchester,	19
	McCrary	Homer C. Williams	11
	Eleanor Roosevelt	Vergil C. Demery, Warm Springs,	4
	Woodbury	I. P. Lewis, Woodbury,	12
Pike	Pike Co., Consolidated	S. H. Harris, Concord,	22
	East Pike Elem.	Marcellous Whitehead, Zebulon,	15
Griffin Spalding	Annie Shockley	Otis C. Boddy, Griffin,	12
	Cora Nimmons	Sadie Kirkpatrick, Griffin,	11
	Fairmont High	Horace E. Tate, Griffin,	19
	Moore	Beatrice Dominis	23
	Mt. Pleasant	Hazel Reeves, Griffin,	2
	Pleasant Grove A.	Christopher Hunter, Griffin,	2
	Pleasant Grove B.	Nellie Sanders, Griffin,	1
	Pomona	Josie Spikes, Griffin,	2
	Rover	Alice Johnson, Griffin,	2

REGION TWO CONTINUES:

County	School	Principal - Address	No. of Trs.
Troup	Ethel W. Kight E. & Hi.	Luther R. Eccleston, LaGrange,	29
	Mount Pleasant Elem.	Alonza R. Ransom, Mountville,	20
Hogansville City	West End	J. E. Robinson, Hogansville,	17
LaGrange City	E. Depot Elem	Ethel Moore, LaGrange,	16
	E. Depot High	J. L. Powell, LaGrange,	13
	Jones Street	Emma Inez Kight, LaGrange,	4
	Kelley	J. H. Hawkins, LaGrange,	17
	Thomastown	W. J. Griggs, LaGrange,	11
West Point City	Tenth St.,	Elmer R. Gould, West Point,	15
	Harrison High	Warren Minniefield, West Point,	8

REGION THREE

County	School	Principal - Address	No. of Trs.
Cherokee	Co. Trng. Sch.	Gertrude B. Hubert, Canton	12
Clayton	Wm. A. Fountain Hi	M. D. Roberts, Forest Park	28
	Jonesboro Col.	Mrs. Roberta T. Smith, Jonesboro	15
Cobb	Acworth School	Robert L. Horton, Acworth	5
	Austell School	Edith B. Murray, Austell	10
	Smyrna School	Franklin S. Jones, Smyrna	10
Marietta City	Lemon St. Sch.	M. J. Woods, Marietta	14
	Lemon St. Elem.	M. J. Woods, "	16
DeKalb	Bruce St. Hi & Elem-	Coy Flagg, Lithonia	22
	County Line	Mrs. Fannie M. Eberhardt, Ellenwood	7
	Hamilton Hi	William Hatton, Avondale Ests.	14
	Lynwood Park Hi & Elem. School	L. A. Robinson, No. Atlanta-19	19
	Robert Shaw	Mrs. E. C. Riggins, Avondale Ests.	23
	Victoria Simmons	Edward Bouie, Stone Mountain	9
Decatur City	Trinity Hi	A. J. Martin, Decatur	13
	Beacon Elem.	Sara T. Blackmon, Decatur	17
Fulton	Bailey-Johnson	Mrs. M. C. Echols, Alpharetta	11
	J. F. Beavers	Mrs. A. Cathryn Johnson, College Pk.	21
	East Point Ele.	Neill A. Bridges, East Point	25
	Fairburn Ele.	James R. Ealey, Fairburn	13
	Palmetto Ele.	John T. Gibson, Palmetto	10
	Stonewall	Mrs. Agnes S. Clark, Stonewall	5
	South Fulton Hi	Frank McClarin, 506 S. Bayard East Point	31
SPECIAL EDUCATION		College Park -Palmetto	2
Aidmore		1420 Burlington Rd., N. E. Atlanta	1
Grady Hospital		Mrs. Adeline Michael, 36 Butler St, SE	1

REGION THREE - Atlanta

School	Principal - Address	No. of Trs.
D. T. Howard Hi	F. W. Sullivan, 551 Houston St., N. E.	80
C. W. Hill Ele	Felix Maddox, 417 Piedmont Ave., N. E.	45
John Hope Ele	Ralph Long, 112 Boulevard, N. E.	25
H. R. Butler Ele	Frederick D. Brown, 89 Younge St., S. E.	43
Wesley Avenue Ele	Mrs. S. F. Coan, 187 Wesley Ave., N. E.	28
English Ave. Ele	B. S. Burch, 627 English Ave., N. W.	53
Gray St. Ele	Mrs. Florence M. Hogan, 448 Gray St., N. W.	21
Mary M. Bethune Ele	Miss D. E. Hornsby, 220 Northside Dr., N. W.	18
E. R. Carter Ele	Mrs. F. D. Furlowe, 80 Ashby St., N. W.	43
Walker St. Ele	Miss Helen M. Toliver, 165 Walker St., S. W.	26
W. F. Hardnett Ele	Miss Ruth M. Harper, 1201 Bridges Ave., S. W.	4
Lena T. Campbell Ele	G. B. Hollingsworth, 13 Thayer Ave., S. E.	20
W. H. Crogman Ele	Mrs. M. A. Mitchell, 1114 West Ave., S. W.	47
E. P. Johnson Ele	W. J. Rowe, 494 Martin St., S. E.	47
E. A. Ware Ele	Otis White, 569 Hunter St., N. W.	41
Thomas Slater Ele	A. J. Lewis, 1320 Pryor Road, S. W.	64
A. F. Herndon Ele	Mrs. O. P. Davie, 1095 Simpson Road, N. W.	22
Frank L. Stanton Ele	Miss Josephine Po[illegible], 1625 Mozley Dr., S. W.	22
Thomasville School	Mrs. Lottie B. Latimer, 1965 Lewis Rd., S. E.	19
William Scott Ele	Mrs. B. A. Burrus, 1752 Hollywood Rd., N. W.	18
Rockdale Ele	Kennon Thompson, 1557 Johnson Rd., N. W.	41
Anderson Park Ele	Miss Audrey Williams, 2107 Tiger Flowers Dr., NW.	27
E. C. Clement Ele	Mrs. L. P. Brown, 180 Holly Rd., N. W.	22
Thomas Oliver Ele	Mrs. Willie D. Kirkland, 1981 County Line Rd Ben Hill	10
Nathan Forrest Ele	R. G. Gay, 608 Forrest Road, N. E.	22
Georgia Ave. Ele	J. Y. Moreland, 252 Georgia Ave., S. W.	28
Carolyn Harper Ele	Mrs. Ruby G. Bennett, 180 Poole Creek Rd., S. E.	9
Samuel W. Archer Hi	Arthur Richardson, 2250 Perry Blvd., N. W.	41
H. M. Turner Hi	D. F. Davis, 98 Anderson Ave, N. W.	54
B. T. Washington Hi	C. N. Cornell, 45 Whitehouse Dr., S. W.	109
B. T. Washington(Evening)	Milton White, 45 Whitehouse Dr., S. W.	15
Carver Vocational	J. H. Bohannan, 1275 Capitol Ave., S. W.	45
Carver Vocational (Ext.)	C. L. Gideon, 1275 Capitol Ave., S. W.	10
L. J. Price Hi	R. E. Cureton, 1670 Capitol Ave., S. E.	62

REGION FOUR

County	School	Principal - Address	No. of Trs.
Banks	Banks Co. Elem.	George O. Jenkins, Homer,	3
Barrow	Bethlehem	Grace P. Young, Bethlehem,	4
	Fairfield	Lewis J. Barnes, Statham,	5
	Tanner's Bridge	Edward D.Curry, Bethlehem,	4
Winder City	Glenwood E. & H.	L. D. Sims, Winder	10
Clark	Athens H. & I.	H. T. Edwards, P. O. Box 1501, Athens,	29
	East Athens	Mrs. Jessie McWhorter, Peter St., Athens,	14
	Lyons	Miss Cordelia Wymbs, Winterville Rd. "	20
	North Athens	Mrs. Ella G. Brown, Barber St., Athens,	17
	West Broad	Mrs. Mamie M. Freeman, W. Broad St. "	13
Elbert	Bell's Grove	Tommie F. Moss, Elberton,	1
	Bethel's Grove	Edward H. Brownlee, Middleton,	1
	Blackwell Memorial	James W. Hawes, Jr., Elberton,	20
	Bowman	L. R. Neal, Bowman,	13
	Downer's Grove	Cleopatra Blackwell, Elberton,	4
	Heard's Grove	Mamie L. Banks, Middleton,	2
	Hill's Chapel	Thresa W. Browne, Elberton,	1
	Jones St. Elem.	Janesta McKenney, Elberton,	5
	Maple Springs	Annie L. Brewer, Dewey Rose,	4
	Morrison's Chapel	Nellie B. Rucker, Elberton,	1
	Nelm's Chapel	John H. Lee, Jr., Middleton,	2
	Rose Hill	Lillian B. Rucker, Middleton,	2
	St. Paul	Julia M. Walton, Elberton,	1
	Ward's Community	Ruth Burton, Elberton,	2
	Ward's Grove	Thelma K. Strickland, Elberton,	2
Franklin	Lavonia	George T. Henderson, Lavonia,	8
	Royston	W. H. Lyles, Royston,	6
	Union Grove	Louie H. Hardy, Jr., Carnesville,	7
Gwinnett	Duluth	W. C. Jones, Duluth,	3
	Hooper-Renwick	R. L. Hightower, Lawrenceville,	14
	Norcross	H. E. Johnson, Norcross,	3
	New Bethel	Miley Mae Hemphill, Lithonia,	1
	Shiloh	Johnnie D. Jordan, Lithonia,	1
Buford City	Buford	W. A. Watson, Buford,	9
Greene	Alexander Center	Harvey V. Smith, RFD. Greensboro,	3
	Eastover	Mary J. Moss, White Plains,	1
	Greensboro High	Eli J. Jackson, Greensboro,	25
	Jones Central	Mattie B. Neal, RFD Madison,	3
	Siloam	Willie M. Alexander, Siloam,	12
	Union Point	Ulysees Bacon, Union Point,	9
	White Plains	Prince Davis, White Plains,	7
	Woodville	Chas. W. McNair, Woodville,	7
Hart	Hart Co. Trng.	Harvey B. Coleman, Hartwell	30
Hall
Gainesville City	Fair St. Elem	E. D. Billingslea, Gainesville	21
	Fair St. High	E. C. Billingslea, Gainesville	11
Habersham	Clarkesville	Miss Joan Harbin, Clarkesville,	1
	Cornelia	Oswald Wright, Cornelia,	8

REGION FOUR CONTINUES:

County	School	Principal - Address	No. of Trs.
Jackson	Bryan High	Lewis W. Jay, Jefferson,	16
	Center	Jessie Ruth Deadwyler, Center,	1
	Hoschton Chapel	James L. Robinson, Hoschton,	2
	Jones Chapel	Julia D. Bryson, Commerce,	1
Commerce City	Johntown High	C. W. Gannaway, Commerce,	7
Jasper	Carrie Taylor	J. L. Lawson, Shady Dale,	6
	Jasper Co. Trng.	A. R. Payne, Monticello,	29
Lumpkin	Dahlonega	Gradie G. Whelchel, Dahlonega,	1
Madison	Northside	Robert L. Calloway, Ila,	5
	Southside	Bertha Carithers, Colbert,	19
Morgan	Burney St. Pearl Hi	William Ingram, Madison,	24
	Ebenezer	Mrs. Mary L. Jordan, RFD, Madison,	1
	Flat Rock	Mrs. Roline Bass, Madison,	1
	Holland Spring	Mrs. Irene Moore, Madison,	1
	Jackson Grove	Mrs. Jessie E. Manuel, Madison,	1
	Mars Hill	Mrs. Pernella C. Anderson, Mars Hill,	1
	McHugh's Hill	Mrs. Minnie W. Bell, Madison,	1
	Moses Chapel	Mrs. Eula M. Griffin, Ruthledge,	1
	Mt. Zion	Mrs. Lilla B. Ashe Jones, Buckhead,	2
	New Enon	Mrs. Eura S. Davis, Godfrey,	2
	Pleasant Grove	Mrs. Mary L. White, Newborn,	3
	Rock Springs	Mrs. Daisy B. Davis, Madison,	2
	Ruthledge	Mrs. Elder B. Walton, Ruthledge,	3
	Smyrna	Margaret N. Love, Madison,	1
	Springfield	Rev. Lee H. Stinson, Madison,	3
	Sweet Home	Mrs. Bettye E. Brown, Bostwick,	2
	Thankful	Mrs. Viola Saeggers, Madison,	1
	Bethel	Mrs. Lillian Moore, Madison,	2
	Buckhead	Mrs. Ida Belle Stewart, Buckhead	2
Newton	Bentley	Frances McCord, Covington,	2
	Dixie	Horace Johnson, "	4
	Leguin	Hazel Binder "	3
	Livingston Chapel	Robert Clement "	5
	Newborn	Ossie Hamm, Newborn,	2
	Oxford	Nathaniel Mitchell, Oxford,	6
	Rose Hill	Odessa Washington, Porterdale,	2
	Washington Street	Robert L. Stewart, Covington,	28
Oconee	Edd Stroud	Marvin F. Billups, Watkinsville,	16
Oglethorpe	Oglethorpe Co.Trng.	W. D.Tolbert
Putnam	Butler-Baker	W. N. Glockton, Eatonton,	42
Pickens	Pickens Co., Trng.	G. W. Hatcher, Tate,	7
Rockdale	Bryant	George L. Edwards, Jr.
Rabun	Ivy Hill	Audrey Lee Allen, Clayton,	1
Stephens	Bethelem	W. C. Rice, Toccoa,	1
	Deercourt	Snowbird Grant, Toccoa,	1
	Oak Hill	Georgia Mae Williams, Toccoa,	4
Toccoa City	Whitman	L. L. Banks, Toccoa,	20

REGION FOUR CONT'D

County	School	Principal - Address	No. of Trs.
Walton	Bethany	Florence B. Etchinson, Monroe,	2
	Carters Hill	Elizabeth Thompson, Loganville,	2
	Carver	C. P. Cochran, Monroe,	18
	Etchinson	Arnella W. Camp, Loganville,	2
	Good Hope-Peters	Clyde C. Carr, Good Hope,	14
	Loganville	Curtis Richardson, Loganville	2
	Mt. Enon	Cora J. Smith, Campton,	2
	Social Circle	E. P. Yorpp, Social Circle,	17
	Spring Hill	Azalee Richardson, Campton,	2
	Thompson	Ella Mae Butler, Monroe,	1
White	Oak Spring	Fannie M. Sidney, Cleveland,	2

REGION FIVE

County	School	Principal - Address	No. of Trs.
Burke	Palmer Ele	Chas. I Bennifield, Jr., Keysville	8
	Cousins Ele	James C. Griggs, Sardis	10
	Girard Ele	John E. Briggs, Jr., Girard	10
	Gough Ele	Paul G. Walser, Gough	14
	Midville Ele	Chas. H. Brown, Jr., Midville	14
	Waynesboro H & I	Robert E. Blakeney, Waynesboro	63
Columbia	Allen Grove *	Essie Watkins, Appling	1
	Appling Hi *	Charlie Lazenby, Appling	18
	Central *	Hattie Smith, Harlem	2
	Community *	Annie Mae Thomas, Evans	22
	Ellis *	Ruth Dent Sauls, Harlem	1
	Galilee *	Julia Johnson, Appling	2
	Gibbs Ele & Hi	Sarah Washington, Evans	7
	Gospel Water Br. *	Eula Evans, Martinez	2
	Jerusalem *	Rev. Geo. Wingfield, Grovetown	1
	Lampkin Grove *	Bernice Mason, Appling	1
	Macedonia *	Virginia B. Mims, Martinez	3
	Oakey Grove *	Margaret Gardener, Evans	1
	Pollard Academy	Mary E. Sanders, Harlem	6
	Poplar Springs *	Deliah D. Lamkin, Appling	1
	Rehoboth *	Lillie B. Collins, Appling	2
	Rosemont *	Lillian P. Geter, Appling	1
	Smith Grove *	Mary J. Beard, Appling	1
	Solid Rock *	Serena J. Lamar, Appling	1
	Steiner Grove *	Mamie R. Samuels, Grovetown	1
	Walnut Grove *	Ethel S. Williams, Appling	1
	Water Branch *	Annie M. Rhodes, Appling	1
	Wingfield *	Hattie Marshall, Appling	1

* Schools are scheduled to consolidate in December.
The four Centers will be:

The John P. Blanchard Elementary & High (Appling Hi Sch.)

George T. White Elementary (Pollard Academy)

Gibbs Elementary (Gibbs)

The Phinizy Area Elementary School (Has not been Officially named)

Glascock	Glascock Co. Trng. School	Ulysses S. Evans, Gibson	11

REGION FIVE (Continued)

County	School	Principal - Address	No. of Trs.
Hancock	Culverton	Lizzie J. Smith, Culverton	1
	East End	Jesse W. Landers, Sr., Sparta	8
	Galilee	James E. McMullen, Sparta	3
	Green Springs	Horace A. Ruff, Sparta	2
	Harris Grove	Romie S. Turner, Devereux	1
	Hickory Grove	Antee Lawson, Culverton	2
	Hunt's Chapel	Elizabeth L. Coleman, Sparta	2
	L. S. Ingraham	Carlton H. Morse, Sparta	25
	New Buelah	Dorothy L. Lott, Culverton	2
	Old Buelah	William McMullen, Devereux	4
	Sandy Run East	Mazie E. Burton, Sparta	1
	Springfield	Charles W. Hill, Mayfield	6
	Stanton Grove	Carrie W. Jackson, Devereux	1
	Thankful	Rosa M. Chappell, Culverton	1
	Union	Derrie Harmon, Mayfield	2
	Warren	Marvin E. Lewis, Devereux	8
Jefferson	Atwell	Valeria Brown, Wrens	1
	Avera	Carrie Singuefield, Avera	1
	B. T. Washington	Hewitt Lundy, Bartow	8
	Carver	Q. E. Parker, Wadley	18
	Ebenezer	Sarah Harden, Louisville	1
	Farmers Grove	Rhina Quarterman, Louisville	2
	Galilee	Mattie Brown, Louisville	1
	Grange	Lillie B. Mack, Louisville	1
	Gordon Grove	Mattie Baskett, Louisville	1
	Hardeman	Pearl L. Scantling, Louisville	1
	Jefferson Co. Trng.	W. E. Price, Louisville	22
	Lewis Grove	Gladys Whigham, Wadley	1
	Lockhart	Tabitha Hobbs, Louisville	1
	Lofton	Bettie M. Simpkins, Wrens	2
	Mathews	Frank Allen, Matthews	3
	Mt. Olive	Fannie Osborne, Louisville	1
	Pine Hill	Kate Walker, Louisville	2
	Spring Bethel	Ira D. Mack, Louisville	1
	Springfield	Annie L. Ivey, Avera	3
	Stapleton	Fannie Garrett, Stapleton	2
	Tarvers Grove	C. B. Mitchell, Bartow	1
	Tenders Grove	Lois H. Daniels, Avera	1
	Wrens	O. S. Beasley, Wrens	16
Lincoln	County Trng.	W. E. Mason, Lincolnton	27
McDuffie	County Trng.	R. L. Norris, Thomson	32
	Mt. Gilead	Walter Moses, Dearing	8
	Mt. Pleasant	Principal, Thomson	1
	Piney Grove	Principal, Dearing	2
	White Oak	Principal, Thomson	1
	Allen Chapel	Principal, Thomson	1
	Farr	Principal, Dearing	1

REGION FIVE (Continued)

County	School	Principal - Address	No. of Trs.
Richmond	Ursula Collins	Charles L. Butler, Augusta	39
	Peter H. Craig	Wm. Lamback, Augusta	20
	Doughty	Miss Annie M. Jones, Augusta	4
	Fifth Ward	L. R. Williams, Augusta	2
	Silas X. Floyd	Y. N. Myers, Augusta	23
	Hepzibah Cons.	Hubert Wilson, Hepzibah	21
	Johnson Jr. Hi	Lloyd Reese, Augusta	37
	Lucy Laney Hi	Charles W. Johnson, Augusta	49
	C. T. Walker	I. E. Washington, Augusta	43
	Weed	James L. Starks, Augusta	19
	Levi White	Robert L. Blount, Augusta	20
Taliaferro	Murden	Harry S. King, Crawfordville	21
Warren	Warrenton Hi & Ele	Mildred Freeman, Warrenton	26
	Norwood Ele	Delmus Bacon, Norwood	12
Washington	Beech Grove Ele	Harold Duggan, Tennille	2
	California Ele	Ida Hall, Sandersville	2
	Cleveland	Bertha Jackson, Bartow	1
	Davisboro	Elbert L. Lawson, Davisboro	8
	T. J. Elder Hi	C. W. Daniels, Sandersville	33
	Gardner Ele	Doris W. Crawford, Oconee	2
	Harrison Ele	Itola M. Powell, Harrison	2
	Green Grove Ele	Cleveland Rayford, Sandersville	2
	Jones Chapel Ele	Mary J. Rowland, Bartow	2
	Jordon Jr. Ele	Margaret Gordy, Sandersville	2
	Jordon Station Ele	Geraldine A. Poole, Sandersville	2
	Middle Hill Ele	Celia Reeves, Sandersville	2
	Mineral Springs	Eva K. Pinkston, Sandersville	2
	Tennille Ele	Jack Daniels, Tennille	9
	Mt. Olive Ele	Elmus Williams, Sandersville	4
	Pringle Ele	Bertha Walker, Harrison	1
	Riddleville	Lucius Woods, Davisboro	4
	Royal Ele	Marion K. Smith,Sandersville	7
Wilkes	Clifford's Grove	Annie J. Stephens, Rayle	2
	Gibson Grove	Mary Jane Hill, Washington	2
	Hilliard Station	Doretha Jenkins, Rayle	1
	Lyonville	Mary Lou Mattox, Rayle	1
	Mt. Nebo	Carrie M. Stephens, Washington	2
	New Hope	Pecola O. Moore, Washington	2
	New Ford	John H. Hill, Danburg	8
	New Salem	Mary L. Felts, Washington	3
	Peerman Grove	Elizabeth Davenport, Rayle	1
	Pleasant Grove	Sadie B. Willis, Rayle	1
	Poplar Springs	Mattie Stokes, Rayle	1
	Pole Branch	Minnie L. Willis, Tignall	1
	Reeves Chapel	Ardelia S. Hull, Tignall	2
	Rosenwald	John T. Parks, Tignall	5
	Rocky Mount	James Ella Mays, Washington	1

REGION SIX

County	School	Principal - Address	No. of Trs.
Harris	Carver Ele-Hi	Rev. S. A. Laing; Hamilton,	17
	Dunbar	Joseph Kennebrew, Chipley;	8
	Johnson	George P. McKinney; Rt. 1, W. Point,	7
	Laney	Edward F. Robinson, Waverly Hall,	15
	Thomas	Theodore C. Bowen, Cataula;	9
Lee	Lee Co., Trng.	Johnnie J. Jones, Leesburg,	38
Macon	Felton Chapel	Rosetta O. Kendrick, Oglethorpe,	1
	Flint River Farms	Moses Lightfoot, Montezuma;	14
	Garden Valley	Bettye R. Loyd, Oglethorpe,	2
	Hicks Mill	Bertha L. Hicks; Reynolds,	1
	Ideal	K. H. Hankerson, Ideal,	8
	Lamson-Richardson	S. R. Hollinshed, Marshallville,	12
	Macon Co., Trng.	T. E. Moore, Montezuma,	16
	Oglethorpe	Pauline M. Fields, Oglethorpe,	10
	Red Oak	Aurrie Belle J. McCrary, Reynolds,	1
	Wilbur Hall	John W. Matthews, Reynolds;	1
Marion	Marion Co. Trng.	Casilo Hughes; Buena Vista,	35
Muscogee	Carver Heights	B. F. Moseley, 3042-8th St. Columbus,	31
	Carver Jr.	S. P. Charleston, 3042-8th St. "	18
	Claflin	George E. Pope, 1532-5th St. "	24
	Cusseta Road	Sadie Sanford, Old Cusseta Road "	12
	Fifth Avenue	W. B. Hudson, 627-5th Ave. "	20
	Forrest Road	Z. B. Anderson, Forrest Road "	13
	Harrison Avenue	Helen R. Burt, Harrison Avenue "	6
	Lynch Road	T. T. Alexander, Lynch Road "	10
	Manley Taylor	L. D. Bussey, 1152 Cusetta Road "	13
	Pou Street	Lyda H. Hannan, 2412-13th Ave. "	6
	Radcliff	M. A. Clarke; 733 Radcliff Ave. "	13
	Shepherd Drive	W. M. Thomas; 1822 Shepherd Dr. "	24
	Spencer Jr.	J. A. Huling; 800-10th Ave. "	23
	Spencer High	C. W. DuVaul, Shepherd Drive "	41
	St. James	Mattie B. Minter; Dawson Drive "	2
Quitman	Kaigler Trng.	Julius L. Thomas, Georgetown,	17
Randolph	Benevolence	James B. Smith, Benevolence,	8
	Coleman	Leon J. Young, Coleman,	8
	Enterprise	Jentsey M. Morris, Shellman,	1
	Joe Terrell	Mable P. Thomas, Shellman,	1
	Martin	Lawrence W.Wilson, "	5
	Pumpkintown	Verneal Powell, Cuthbert,	6
	Randolph Co.Tng.	Melvin P. Davie, "	32
	Shellman Voc.	Charles M. Fuller; Shellman,	16
	Springdale	Lillie P. Stergis, Springdale,	1
Sohley	Ellaville	F. D. Harrold, Ellaville,	9
	Spring Hill	Ozie Lee Thompson, Ellaville,	3
	New Phillip	Nannie K. Smith, "	2
	Simmons Chapel	Alma Smith, "	1
	Marietta	Artelia Seldon, Ellaville	1
	Horry Level	Mary Paschal, "	1
	Cedar Creek	Rosa G. Smith, "	1
	St. James	Eula Mann, Buena Vista,	1
	Wall's	Clara Freeman, Ellaville,	1
	Jerusale	Annie Rumph, "	1
	Mt. Zion	Eddie D. DeLoach, Ellaville	1

REGION SIX CONT'D

County	School	Principal Address	No. of Trs.
Stewart	Athens Hill	Johnnie W. Mathis, Lumpkin,	1
	Bluff Springs	Alvetta Brown, "	2
	Brooklyn	William D. Foy, Brooklyn,	3
	Charles	Sammie P. Castor, Lumpkin,	1
	Coffinton	Ethel P. Brown, Omaha,	1
	Florence	D. J. Flanagan, Omaha,	2
	Green Grove	Sammie G. Hudson, Lumpkin,	2
	Kimbrough	Jakie W. Willis, Richland,	1
	Louvale	Walter A. L. Williams, Louvale,	3
	Lumpkin H & I.	Lawrence S. Young, Lumpkin,	14
	Mt. Airy	Daisy A. Flanagan, Lumpkin,	2
	Mt. McKeithan	Bessie Davis, Omaha,	2
	Mt. Olive	Hattie P. Thornton, Richland,	2
	Omaha Trng.	Joseph Ash, Jr., Omaha,	4
	Philadelphia	Olivia J. Adams, Lumpkin,	2
	Pleasant Valley	Hattie S. Young, Lumpkin,	2
	Randall	Hattie M. Hardwick, "	2
	Richland H & I	George O. Lawson, Richland,	12
Sumter	Andersonville	Maxine Dorsey, Andersonville,	2
	Antioch	Mattye Sue Taylor, Plains,	2
	Corrinth	Reva Lowe, Americus,	1
	Davis Grove	Hallie Mann, Leslie,	2
	DeSoto	Albert Battle, DeSoto,	3
	Eastpoint	Louis Dix, Rt. 4, Americus,	1
	Flintside	Eula Bell Sellers, Rt.1, DeSoto,	1
	Leslie	Doshia Burton, Leslie,	3
	Mt. Carmel	Gladys Holt, Americus,	2
	Mt. Hope	Henry Mathis, Americus,	2
	Nunn Ind.	Kelsie Daniels, Rt.2, Leslie,	5
	Paradox	Katie Brown, Rt 1, Smithville,	1
	Plains	Annie B. Floyd, Plains,	6
	Piney Grove	Viease Dowdell, Rt. 1, Americus,	1
	Pleasant Grove	Wilhelmenia Robinson, RtlAmericus,	1
	Seay	Emily Seay, Rt.2, Americus,	2
	Shady Grove	Willie Paschal, Rt. 1, "	6
	Shipp Chapel	Carobel Balkcom, Americus,	1
	Shipp Trng.	Lewis Lowe, "	5
	Spring Hill	Irma Hart, Rt 1, Americus,	1
	Union Grove	Ella Clark, Americus,	1
	Union Oak Grove	Janie Cotton, Andersonville,	1
	Wards Chapel	Elizabeth Russell, Americus,	2
	Welcome	Theodore London, Rt 1, Americus,	3
Americus City	Staley High	James L.Bozeman, Americus,	13
	McCoy Hill	John W. Harris, Americus,	25
Talbot	Ruth Carter Hi	Lonnie M. Clark, Talbotton,	29
	John H. Woodall E.	J. B. King, Jr., Woodland,	12
	Geneva Elem.	David M. Bradley, Geneva,	7
Taylor	Eureka	R. L. McDougald, Butler,	31
	Reynolds Elem.	R. E. Brown, Jr., Reynolds,	14

REGION SIX CONT'D

County	School	Principal - Address	No. of Trs.
Terrell	Bethel	Laura N. Dyer, RFD, Dawson,	1
	Carver	E. E. Sykes, Dawson,	22
	Corner	Hattie P. Albritten, RFD, Dawson,	2
	Cottondale	Lula B. Odum, RFD, Dawson	1
	Dover	Susie S. Pollard, RFD, Dawson,
	Dunbar	Susie S. Moore, Sasser,	9
	Helen Gurr	Robert R. Aaron, Parrott,	7
	Hickory Level	Ruby D. Weston, RFD, Dawson,	1
	James Griggs	Jessie Marshall, Graves,	4
	Laing	Rosa W. Scott, RFD, Dawson,	3
	Martin	Petronia K. Burch, Bronwood,	4
	Mt. Grove	Fannie Richardson, RFD, Dawson,	2
	Piney Grove	Forrest P. Johnson, RFD, Dawson,	1
	Pleasant Hill	Fannie Wilbon, RFD, Dawson,	1
	Red Hill	Mary Gordon, RFD, Parrott,	1
	Shiloh I	Sarah R. Ward, RFD, Dawson,	1
	Shiloh II	Mamie J. Huckaby, RFD, Bronwood,	1
	Walker Chapel	Jajie Breedlove, RFD, Dawson,	1
	Yeomans	Bernadine Dorsey, RFD, Dawson,	4
Upson	Fellowship	Marion Underwood, Rte. 3, Thomaston,	8
	Lincoln Park	Monroe Worthy, RTE. 5, Thomaston,	20
	Thomaston Trng.	Andrew Johnson, Thomaston,	25
	Yatesville	Lewis Conn, Yatesville,	10
Thomaston City	Thomaston Trng.	Andrew S. Johnson, Thomaston,	25
Webster	Archery	Beatrice Johnson, Plains,	1
	Brooks	Susie Ward, Richland,	1
	Bethlehem	Clara Franklin, Richland,	1
	Church Hill	Nannie B. Hawk, Preston,	1
	Daniel Chapel	Gurlena Smith, "	2
	Green Pond	Mattie King, Parrott,	1
	St. James	Leola Archibald, Richland,	1
	St. Mart	Lilla Goodwin, Weston,	2
	Preston	Ruby Lee McCluster, Preston,	1
	Rosenwald	Adolphus Gunter, "	5
	Zion	Johnnie Freeman, "	1

REGION SEVEN

County	School	Principal - Address	No. of Trs.
Baldwin	J. F. Boddie Hi	Joseph M. Graham, Milledgeville	21
	Carver Ele	Charles C. Phelps, Milledgeville	22
	Harrisburg Ele	Marion D. Heath, Milledgeville	14
	Northside Ele	Oscar S. Austin, Milledgeville	12
Bibb	Ballard-Hudson Sr. High	R. J. Martin, Macon	58
	Ballard-Hudson Jr.	R. J. Martin, Macon	28
	Green Street	Mrs. Carolyn Douglas, Macon	15
	George W. Carver	Miss Kate Shakespeare, Macon	13
	L. H. Williams	B. H. Price, Macon	26
	Unionville	Miss Lottie Price, Macon	20
	M. M. Burdell	Mrs. Lilla C. Parker, Macon	23
	B. S. Ingram	Miss Juliette Brown, Macon	22
	Ada J. Banks	Miss Elfleta Moore, Macon	30
	Eugenia Hamilton	Mrs. Mae M. Miller, Macon	18
	Special Education	Melvin Hudson, Macon	2
	Pleasant Grove	Mrs. Lilla Davis, Lizella	9
	Duresville	Mrs. Essie F. Harvey, Macon	10
	Bessie Capel	Mrs. Maude Pye, Macon	8
	Henry A. Hunt	Stewart B. Gandy, Macon	17
Crawford	County Trng. Sch.	E. E. Owens, Roberta	30
Houston	County Trng. Sch.	Adleigh D. Redmond, Perry	28
	New Hope Ele	James E. Ash, Perry	15
	Pearl Stephens	John P. Johnston, Warner Robins	17
	Southside Ele	Walter J. Rollins, Perry	14
Jones	Coliff Hi	B. F. Crawford, Gray	25
	Idello Duncan	Willie Barnes, Haddock	7
	Bradley-Wayside	Marie H. Collins, Gray	8
Lamar	Booker	E. P. Roberts, Barnesville	40
Monroe	Hubbard Ele	Samuel B. Hubbard, Forsyth	32
	Hubbard High	Samuel B. Hubbard, Forsyth	13
Peach	County Trng.	Harriett M. Tabor, Ft. Valley	17
	H. A. Hunt Hi & Ele	H. E. Bryant, Ft. Valley	47
Twiggs	Antioch Ele	Annie Stewart, Dry Branch	8
	Jeffersonville	A. M. Fields, Jeffersonville	28
	Mt. Olive Ele	Henry Bryant, Jeffersonville Rte. 1	7
Wilkinson	Brundage Mt.	Robert C. Carruthers, McIntyre	5
	Danville Cons.	Christine Watson, Danville	9
	Gordon	Walter Z. Thomas, Gordon	10
	Irwinton Jr. Hi	Kenneth F. Allgood, Irwinton	6
	Toomsboro Rosenwald	Kermit E. Robinson, Toomsboro	9

REGION EIGHT

County	School	Principal - Address	No. of Trs.
Bulloch	Mary Jackson Elem.	John D. Redwine, Rte. 6, Statesboro,	6
	Edward Johnson "	R. W. Campbell, RFD, Brooklet,	11
	New Hope Elem.	Corrie Everett Brown, RFD, Register,	6
	Willow Hill Elem.	John W. Lawton, Rt.4, Statesboro,	15
	William James Elem.	Floriene Bates, Statesboro,	9
	William James Hi & El.	Robert Hamilton, Statesboro,	33
Candler	Candler Co., Trng.	Elmer Collins, Metter,	22
Emanuel	Emanuel Co. El & Hi	D. D. Boston, Swainsboro,	31
	Lexsy	N. F. Williams, Lexsy,	8
	Summertown	J. A. Thomas, Summertown,	11
	Twin City Elem.	L. T. Southerland, Twin City,	9
Effingham	Clyo Jr. High	Mack W. Davis, Clyo,	8
	Eden Elem.	Inez Love Griffin, Eden,	1
	Effingham Co H & E.	Clifton Allen Wiggins, Springfield,	13
	Effingham Co. Trng. (Guyton Elem.)	Elisha Hall, Guyton,	7
	Meldrim Elem.	Isadell Scott Wilson, Meldrim,	1
	Oak Grove	Perrie Lee Irving, Egypt,	1
	Rincon Jr. Hi.	Amos E. Hagins, Rincon,	5
Evans	Evans Co. High	Raleigh Macon, Claxton,	25
Jenkins	Aaron	Franklyn F. Banks, Millen,	11
	Cousins	John G. Jenkins, Millen,	8
	Herndon-Birdsville	Minnie S. Wallace, Millen,	7
	Burgess Landrum	S. P. Pride "	26
Johnson	Adrian	Bessie Mae Smith, Adrain,	3
	Dock Kemp	W. J. Burton, Wrightsville,	21
	Kite	"Babe" Duncan, Kite,	2
Montgomery	County High	James Collins, Ailey,	24
	Uvalda	James Brown, Uvalda,	6
Dublin City	Oconee High	Lucius T. Bacote, Dublin,	16
	Susie Dasher Elem.	Sophronia D. Walker, Dublin,	12
	Washington St. Elem.	Eula C. Jackson, Dublin,	11
Screven	Arnett	L. L. Ballard, Rte 6, Sylvania,	16
	Annie E. Daniels	Johnnie C. Owens, Box 192, Sylvania,	15
	Central High	J. Tolbert Lacy, Sylvania,	42
	Southside Elem.	Ashley Aiken, Newington,	11
Tattnall	Collins Col. Elem.	William P. Forrest, Jr., Collins,	9
	Glennville Elm.	Sylvester Ashford, Glennville,	13
	Tattnall Co., Ind.	John E. Clark, Reidsville,	21
Toombs	Johnson Corner	Chas. D. Bell, RFD, Lyons,	3
	Lyons Ind.	T. R. Maxwell, Lyons,	20
Vidalia City	Dickerson Trng.	Alonza L. Epps, Vidalia,	22
Treutlen	Treutlen County Trng.	Augustus McArthur, Soperton	17
Wheeler	Alamo High	Maudecca L. Wilson, Alamo,	8
	Glenwood High	A. T. Johnson, Glenwood,	9
	McArthur High	Woodrow Love, RT.2, Lumber City,	6

REGION NINE

County	School	Principal - Address	No. of Trs.
Baker	East Baker Hi	Jacob Freeney, Newton	21
	Christ Church	Pecola H. Phipps, Arlington	2
	Davis Grove	Gussie O. Jones, Leary	1
	New Salem	Lula Mae Kunney, Elmodel	3
	Pleasant Hill	Thelma J. Hall, Damascus	1
	Piney Grove	Candace E. George, Arlington	3
	Providence	Eloise P. Miller, Colquitt	5
Berrien	Nashville Hi & Ele	-Walter M. Simmons, Nashville	18
Brooks	Barney	Rubye I. Golden, Barney	3
	Brooks Co. Trng.	Erasmus Dent, Dixie	12
	Cross Roads	Thelma J. Wells, Dixie	3
	Elizabeth	Lizettae F. Brown, Quitman	4
	New Empress	Maceo Horne, Quitman	4
	Grooverville	Nellie Miller, Quitman	23
	Ham City	Verna Frazier, Pidcock	2
	Liberty	Maggie Davis, Quitman	1
	Morning Star	Esther Spencer, Quitman	1
	Morven Rosenwald	Turner H. Tillman, Morven	12
	Mt. Moriah	Buelah Davis, Quitman	1
	Mt. Zion Pavo	Maggie Mae Felder, Pavo	2
	Pidcock	Ruth Thurman, Pidcock	1
	Pine Hill Barwick	Rosa D. Robinson, Barwick	2
	Salem	Louvenia Jenkins, Quitman	3
	St. Phillips Piscola	- Velma Young, Quitman	3
Quitman City	Washington Hi & Ele	-C. W. Rutherford, Quitman	27
Calhoun	Arlington Ele (Col)	-William Powers, Arlington	13
	Edison Col Ele	James A. Slaton, Edison	11
	H. T. Singleton Hi	James A. Slaton, Edison	12
	Leary Col. Ele	Mary Anderson, Leary	9
	Morgan Col. Ele	Luburda Sullivan, Morgan	7
Cook	County Trng.	Walter C. King, Adel	24
	Lennox Ele	Dosha B. White, Lenox	3
	Sparks Ele	Elijah Williams, Sparks	3
Colquitt	Charlie A. Gray	Mrs. F. S. McHenry, Moultrie	34
	Doerun	David Hooker, Doerun	13
Moultrie City	Moultrie Negro Hi	George W. Parker, Moultrie	25
Clay	Speight Ele & Hi	Melvin C. Berry, Ft. Gaines	24
	Bluffton Ele	Harvey Maxwell, Bluffton	8
Decatur	Attapulgus	J. A. McCullough, Attapulgus	7
	Attapulgus-Mt. Moriah	Annie K. Maddox, Attapulgus	13
	Climax Ele	Ilah J. Jackson, Climax	5
	Faceville	Florence L. Walden, Bainbridge	4
	Fowlstown Ele	Elsie G. Paul, Fowlstown	4
	Hutto Hi & Ele	W. D. Mann, Bainbridge	29
	John Johnson Ele	Evelyn B. Martin, Bainbridge	15
	Mt. Moriah Ele	Collin J. Greenleee, Climax	7
	West Bainbridge Ele	-Norvie H. Guyton, W. Bainbridge	17

REGION NINE (Continued)

County	School	Principal - Address	No. of Trs.
Dougherty	Monroe Hi	Melvin L. Heard, Albany	30
	Carver Jr. Hi	Ruth Kimbrough, Albany	26
	Coachman Park	George S. Bragg, Albany	23
	Jackson Heights	Robert Harvey, Albany	15
	Madison Street	Fletcher V. Rollins, Albany	20
	River Road	Louis M. Taylor, Albany	25
	Tift Ele	Carrie H. Sprye, Albany	18
Early	Carver Ele	Ernest T. Brown, Jakin	9
	Kestler Hi & Ele	John R. Harris, Damascus	28
	Washington Hi &Ele	Curtis E. Stanley, Blakely	51
Echols	Herctoma Col.	E. K. Howell, Statenville	6
Grady	Beckbranch	Noah Lester, Calvary	9
	Washington	D. T. Grant, Cairo	48
	Whigham	Bessie Weston, Whigham	7
Lanier	Lakeland Hi & Ele	Theodore R. Small, Lakeland	13
Lowndes	Bemiss Ele	Cora S. Howell, Valdosta	5
	Mineola Ele	Annie M. Hunter, Valdosta	3
	Mt. Zion Hi	E. T. Townsend, Valdosta	14
	Webb-Miller	Lamar C. Copeland, Hahira	13
	Wetherington-Robinson	J. B. Everett, Valdosta	6
	P. G. Williams Ele	-Owen H. Davis, Valdosta	14
Valdosta City
	Magnolia St. Ele	Randolph P. Binford, Valdosta	18
	Lomax Jr. Hi	James L. Lomax, Valdosta	18
	Pinevale Hi	Charles C. Hall, Valdosta	20
	South St. Ele	Alfred L. Kincey, Valdosta	23
Mitchell	Camilla Cons.	Monscree Sanders, Camilla	39
	Cotton Ele	N. J. Smith, Cotton	7
	Dent-Reynolds	Cornelius Williams, Baconton	8
	Oak Grove	Claude Gervin, Camilla	8
	Sale City Ele	Albert Marshall, Sale City	5
Pelham City
	Mitchell Co. Trng.	Beaufort C. Mandeville, Pelham	30
Miller	Bethel Hi	James E. Merritt, Colquitt	29
Seminole	Seminole Co. Trng.	R. D. Rambeau, Donaldsonville	34
Telfair	Lumber City Negro	Henry J. Dent, Jr., Lumber City	10
	Milan Negro	Arthur R. Edington, Milan	8
	Rock Hill	William A. Williams, Jacksonville	12
	Twin City Hi	Joseph H. James, McRae	20
Thomas	Barwick	Fannie Harris, Pavo	2
	Boston	W. L. McDonald, Boston	17
	Centenial	Octavia O'Neal, Thomasville	2
	Coolidge	Richard C. Brown, Coolidge	9
	Greenwood	Maggie E. Hall, Thomasville	1
	Magnolia	Margaret Munson, Thomasville	1
	Lincoln-Brown	Lucinda C. Saunders, Meigs	8
	Metcalf	Eva S. Grooms, Metcalf	3
	New Union	Napoleon Greene, Boston	11
	Ochlochnee	Walter L. Dawkins, Ochlochnee	6
	Spring Hill	Estelle Richardson, Thomasville	33
Thomasville City
	Douglass Hi & Ele	W. J. Varner, Thomasville	37
	Normal Park	Mrs. Susie Dunlap, Thomasville	16

REGION TEN

County	School	Principal - Address	No. of Trs.
Bleckley	Brown Hill	Pearle H. Bryant, Cochran	3
	Center Hill	Sara Burch, Cochran	2
	Green Grove	Lula Mizell Carson, Cochran	2
	St. Paul	Rosa Dupree Willis, Cochran	2
	Wimberly	Mary K. Hall, Cochran	2
Cochran City	Cochran Col	Lee J. Hudson, Cochran	11
Ben Hill	Queensland	M. C. Pettigrew, Fitzgerald	25
Fitzgerald City	Monitor Ele	G. W. Ellis, Fitzgerald	27
Coffee	Carver	Leonard N. Rodgers, Douglas	37
	Mary Hayes	Joseph D. Murray, Broxton	8
	Paulk	L. W. Stribling, Ambrose	7
	Special	Lillie P. Thomas, Douglas	1
Crisp	Arabi	Thomas Dent, Cordele	7
	Buck Hill	Willie Mae Johnson, Cordele	2
	Cross Road	Anita Harris, Cordele	1
	Long Pond	Rosa Lee Harris, Cordele	1
	McKenzie	Hattie Dunlap, Cordele	1
	Penia	Willie Mae Wellons, Cordele	2
	Piney Grove	Gladys Evans Morris, Cordele	1
	Pleasant Hill	Mamie Laman Kirk, Cordele	1
	Raines	Georgia Mae Mack, Cordele	1
	St. Paul	Eloise Anderson, Cordele	2
Cordele City	A. S. Clarke	Lawrence Coleman, Cordele	26
	Southview	George B. Tutt, Cordele	19
Dooley	Bay Point	Robert B. Duncan, Byromville	3
	Big Poplar	Jodie B. Burgess, Unadilla	1
	Brown Grove	Geraldine Oliver, Vienna	1
	Byromville	Frank E. Williams, Byromville	4
	Dooling	Bernice B. Waters, Dooling	3
	Drayton	Maxie G. Duncan, Byromville	2
	Forest Chapel	Earl K. Chaney, Pinehurst	3
	Holly Grove	Annie L. Harris, Elko	1
	Lebannah	Thelma L. Harris, Vienna	2
	Lilly	John N. Torrence, Lilly	4
	Little Poplar	Anthony Bowens, Byromville	3
	Oak Grove	Elnora Wright, Pinehurst	1
	Pinehurst	Rufus Hatten, Pinehurst	4
	Snow	Ora Lee West, Pinehurst	1
	Unadilla	James F. Glover, Unadilla	8
	Vienna Hi & Ind.	Napoleon Williams, Vienna	18
Dodge	Chauncey Jr.	S. T. Spaulding, Chauncey	4
	Chester, Jr.	John A. Pope, Chester	9
	Copeland Hi	Irwin A. Hamilton, Rhine	7
	Lisbon Hi	John H. Rollins, Eastman	7
	Mt. Olive	E. W. Dean, Eastman	8
	Peabody Hi	St. Elmo Morgan, Eastman	15
Irwin	Ocilla Hi & Ind.	Alfonso Owens, Ocilla	28
	Mystic Ele	Rosebud Smith, Jr., Mystic	5
	Holt Ele	Joseph Bell, Ocilla	8

REGION TEN

County	School	Principal - Address	No. of Trs.
Jeff Davis	Hazelhurst Hi & Ele	Willis A. Long, Hazelhurst	19
	St. Matthew	Viola Cornish, Hazelhurst	3
Pulaski	Bembry Hill	Mary E. Allen, Hawkinsville	3
	Harmony	Douglas Anderson, Hawkinsville	3
	Hawkinsville Ind.	William V. Walton, Hawkinsville	16
	Lampkin	Robert Pickett, Hawkinsville	6
	Little Poplar	Helene Jackson, Hawkinsville	3
	Mt. Air	Elmira Bembry, Finleyson	2
	New Hope	Rosa Frazier, Finleyson	3
	Oak Grove	Willie Belle Thomas, Hawkinsville	2
Tift	Chula	Willia Mae Wyche, Chula	2
	Omega	Evelyn Bolton, Omega	2
	Ty Ty	Daniel DeLoatch, Ty Ty	5
	Tift Co. Hi & Ind	R. L.Mack, Tifton	44
Turner	Coverdale	Leola McKenzie, Ashburn	2
	Eureka	Hodge King, Ashburn	26
	Inaha	A. C. Murph, Sycamore	3
	Rebecca	Wilda T. Cleveland, Rebecca	3
	Sycamore	S. C. Murph, Sycamore	5
Worth	Blue Springs	Mathie Lee Taylor, Oakfield	1
	Bridgeboro	Annie Mae Hudson, Bridgeboro	2
	Buckaloo	Willie Mae Sampson, Oakfield	1
	Charity	Thelma Williams, Oakfield	2
	Evergreen	Elizabeth Atkins, Sylvester	2
	Fort Early	J. R. Plummer, Warwick	3
	Friendship	Maggie Lowe, Oakfield	1
	Harrisonville	Precious N. Jackson, Sylvester	2
	Isabella	Sadie S. Carter, Sylvester	2
	Jackson Grove	Mary Johnson, Sylvester	1
	Mercer Mill	Mary L. Fowler, Oakfield	2
	Millers Chapel	Marie Fulton, Sumner	1
	Mitchell Grove	Annie H. Jackson, Bridgeboro	2
	Morning Star	Osie L. Whearry, Sylvester	2
	Mount Olive	Birnelle Williams, Warwick	3
	Morris Hill	Clarice Davis, Sylvester	2
	New Bethel	Annie B. Shipp, Sylvester	2
	New Hope	Fannye P. Dixon, Warwick	2
	Oakfield	Bessie M. Jordon, Oakfield	2
	Oak Grove	Essie Mae Threatts, Sylvester	2
	Parkerville	Mary Jackson, Sylvester	2
	Oak Hill	I. J. Cantrell, Sylvester	22
	Pleasant Hill	William Calhoun, Sumner	1
	Porter's Corner	Wessie Mae Henry, Sylvester	3
	Poulan	Irma Sadl er, Poulan	2
	Powelltown	Thelma P. Williams, Sylvester	1
	St. James	Dorothy Washington, Oakfield	2
	Shady Grove	Theresa F. Keaton, Sylvester	1
	Slinger	S. W. Berry, Poulan	5
	Spring Hill	Vivian Rogers, Sylvester	1
	Sumner	I. D. Paramore, Sumner	3
	Unionville	Willie B. Glover, Warwick	1
	Zion Grove	Lucile M. Rawls, Sylvester	1
Wilcox	Abbeville	K. N. Colclough, Abbeville	8
	Pineview	J. E. Hill, Pineview	5
	Rochelle	J. R. Moore, Rochelle	15

REGION ELEVEN

County	School	Principal-Address	No. of Trs.
Appling	Co. Consolidated	S. D. Tarver, Baxley	21
	Baxley Trng.	W. E. Henry, Baxley	6
	Surrency Ele	Marion B. Cooke, Surrency	6
Atkinson	County Trng.	Daughtry L. Thomas, Pearson	13
	Willacoochee Col.	Eva Mae Perkins, Willacoochee	4
Bacon	Alma Hi	W. A. Myles, Alma	11
Brantley	Hoboken	Betty A. Crittenden, Hoboken	2
	Nahunta	William D. Eastern, Nahunta	3
Bryan	G. W. Carver	E. W. Lash, Richmond Hill	11
	Mill Creek Ele	Edna Sanders, Ellabelle	4
	Pembroke Hi	Leon Dingle, Pembroke	12
Camden	County Trng.	Lillie S. Harris, St. Mary's	6
	Kingsland Union	Afphny D. Armstrong, Kingsland	7
	R. J. Bunche Hi	Emerson O. Bynes, Woodbine	22
	Tarboro Cons.	Evelyn Martin, White Oak	9
Chatham	Antioch	Mrs. Frances Sharpe, Savannah	3
	Alfred E. Beach	Otha L. Douglas, Savannah	43
	Cuyler	Arthur Dwight, Savannah	28
	DeReene	Miss Frankie Golden, Savannah	31
	East Broad	Mrs. Esther Warrick, Savannah	16
	Florence	Mrs. Willie G. Edwards, Savannah	29
	Gadsden	Norman Elmore, Savannah	28
	Harris	Mrs. Esther Warrick, Savannah	11
	Haven Home	Mrs. Ophelia McIver, Savannah	20
	Montieth	Mrs. Eunice Clay, Savannah	2
	Paulson	Miss Matella Maree, Savannah	11
	Powell Lab.	Mrs. Dorothy Hamilton, Savannah	7
	Spencer	R. P. Jordon, Savannah	24
	Springfield Terr.	Malcolm Thomas, Savannah	15
	West Broad	W. G. Dixon, Savannah	23
	W. Savannah	Mrs. Ayler Lovett, Savannah	28
	Woodville	James Luten, Savannah	51
Charlton	Folkston Col.	Robert DeLoach, Jr., Folkston	16
Clinch	Homerville Hi &Ele	Ellis Whitaker, Homerville	19
Glynn	Risley Jr. & Sr. Hi	J. S. Wilkerson, Brunswick	33
	Risley Ele	Elizabeth C. Smith, Brunswick	32
	Perry Ele	Priscilla Massey, Brunswick	17
Liberty	Baconton *	DeWitt F. Morrison, Walthourville	3
	Free Branch *	Margaret Baker, McIntosh	2
	Hineshaw *	Jessie A. Stevens, Hinesville	9
	Holmestown *	Doretha Dryer, McIntosh	3
	Liberty Co. Hi	Samuel L. Smith,McIntosh	27
	Moose Hill *	Gertrude Johnson, McIntosh	3
	Riceboro Ele	Evans B. Cooper, Riceboro	12

* Schools to be consolidated during this term

Long	Walker Hi	E. J. Junior, Ludowici	15
McIntosh	Todd-Grant	C. A. DeVillars, Darien	21
	Eulonia	Thomas P. Williams, Eulonia	7
	Sapelo Island	Jessie Mae Moore, Sapelo	3
	Dean's Grove	Orlease C. Thorpe, Riceboro	3
	Cannon Bluff	Daisy Johnson, Townsend	2
	Carneghan	Rosalind Curry, Meridan	2

REGION ELEVEN (Continued)

County	School	Principal - Address	No. of Trs.
Ware	Glenmore Manor	Almary Moody, Waycross	3
	Telmore	Mary L. Barr, Waycross	6
Waycross City
	Center Hi	J. C. Reese, Waycross	25
	Bailey St.	C. L. Rawls, Waycross	27
	Hazzard Hill	Mrs. Carrie M. Akery, Waycross	7
	Reedsville	Mrs. Rosa Belle Gunn, Waycross	7
Wayne	Screven Col.	Christopher Greene, Screven	7
	Wayne Co, Trng.	Frank Robinson, Jesup	24

Education, 1956-57 F.B.I.

LABOR'S ECONOMIC REVIEW

PUBLISHED BY AFL-CIO

Vol. 2, No. 3 — March, 1957

IN BRIEF

Despite record-breaking school construction, the classroom shortage crisis continues. In fact, in the next five years it may get worse.

Why the crisis? Where is the greatest need? Why can't local and state governments cope with it?

This month Labor's Economic Review seeks out the answers to these questions and shows what must be done if the birthright of a decent education is to be enjoyed by the nation's children.

HELP OUR SCHOOLS NOW!

For some of those who live in prosperous and well-established communities, it may be hard to face the fact that America's classroom shortage is still critical or, indeed, that a crisis exists at all.

After all, their hometown school needs, they say, are satisfied. Besides, haven't they seen with their own eyes that more schools are going up than ever before? Why, last year alone, a record 63,000 new classrooms were constructed across the country, the Federal Government reports!

Perhaps you, too, live in one of those few fortunate places where school needs are now completely met. Nonetheless, for most of the nation—and notwithstanding the construction boom—the school crisis does continue. In fact, without rapid and substantial federal aid, it threatens to become worse.

A glance at the chart below helps explain the reason why.

(1) Total capital investment in new primary and secondary schools, in constant dollars, is shown by the bottom line.

While investment began to rise spectacularly after 1945, note how it lagged during all the long years of depression and World War II. In fact, school outlays only got back to the earlier peak of 1925 in the year 1950—after a 25-year construction lag.

Thus, for a quarter century a tremendous school construction deficit was gradually piling up.

(2) Now look at the upper line which traces the enrollment rise.

By 1950, after a moderate decline—due to the low depression birthrate and the impact of the war—enrollment began to skyrocket. The avalanche of war-time babies was now advancing on the schools.

In the last five years, public school attendance has mushroomed by 5½ million, the U. S. Office of Education says. Today, over 32 million chil-

LABOR'S ECONOMIC REVIEW
ISSUED MONTHLY BY AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
GEORGE MEANY, President WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Sec.-Treas.
Department of Research
Director: STANLEY H. RUTTENBERG
Assistant Director: PETER HENLE
Economists:
SEYMOUR BRANDWEIN NAT GOLDFINGER
FRANK FERNBACH BERT SEIDMAN
AFL-CIO Building, Washington 6, D. C. Sent without charge to affiliated unions.
Subscription rate for other subscribers: $1.50 per year.

dren are in the schools; this is over a million more than just 12 months ago. And, an additional 6 million pupils will be knocking on the doors five years from now. By 1965, well over 40 million young Americans are expected to be seeking admission into the nation's public schools.

Despite the school construction boom, we are building scarcely enough classrooms to keep pace with the yearly enrollment rise and our replacement needs due to current obsolescence and school destruction.

As a consequence, millions of our children are still attending overcrowded and substandard schools. They are paying a high price—and so is the entire nation—for the 25-year construction deficit that hasn't been overcome.

Even if we are able to maintain school building at last year's record level for the next five years—and without Federal aid this is not a likely prospect—the deficit will not be dented. In fact, it is likely to grow.

Measuring the Need

According to a recent state-by-state survey by the Office of Education, about one million public schoolrooms were in use at the start of the school term last autumn.* However, enrollment exceeded the normal capacity of these classrooms (judged to be 30 pupils per room) by about 2.3 million pupils.

In the words of Secretary Marion Folsom of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare:

". . . These children, and additional millions of their classmates, are handicapped by split sessions of half-day schooling, or obvious overcrowding, or emergency use of makeshift quarters such as warehouses or fire stations. This is no theoretical shortage. These are children in school today, and they can be counted with reasonable accuracy. The States estimated 80,000 new classrooms are needed specifically to correct these conditions." *

In addition, the Secretary said, there are other classrooms which may not be overcrowded but are too old, unsafe, or otherwise unsatisfactory to be in use today. At a minimum, there are 79,000 of these substandard classrooms (excluding those listed above) which should be replaced immediately.

Thus, just to end present overcrowding and to eliminate existing obsolete and unsafe structures, at least 159,000 new classrooms are urgently needed right now. This is our legacy from the 25-year lag.

But, in addition, school authorities calculate about 45,000 new classrooms will be needed each year just to accomodate the enrollment rise. Over the next five years, about 225,000 additional schoolrooms must be built for this one reason alone. (See chart, page 19.)

Remember, too, that every year our total stock of schools is growing older; deterioration and destruction constantly go on.

At least 20,000 more new classrooms are needed every year just to offset the current obsolescence rate. This is a conservative calculation based on an annual replacement rate of less than 2%. Furthermore, destruction due to fire, floods, and other catastrophes creates a replacement need for an additional 2,000 schoolrooms every year. Thus, deterioration and destruction alone necessitate the building of 110,000 classrooms over the next five years.

Now add together:

(1) Our backlog of immediate classroom needs to replace substandard schools, and to end present overcrowding (159,000).

(2) Additional classrooms needed over the next five years just to take care of the enrollment rise (225,000).

(3) Replacement required merely to make good current losses due to school obsolescence and destruction (110,000).

In the next five years, America will need, and should build, almost a half million new public school classrooms.

Taking the foregoing into account, therefore, even if last year's school construction rate is actually maintained, the classroom deficit will, in all likelihood, grow by another 20,000.

* "Enrollment, Teachers, and Schoolhousing in Full-time Public Elementary and Secondary Day Schools," U. S. Office of Education, Circular No. 490, issued January 1957.

* Statement before the General Education Subcommittee of the House Committee on Education and Labor, February 5, 1957.

The Heavy Local Burden

With classroom needs so great, how can anyone doubt that construction will expand until the school requirements of this wealthy and education-minded country are fully met?

To understand why school building may, indeed, decline in the years ahead, one must be aware of the outmoded and inequitable manner in which the education of American children is still financed.

Since the beginning of our public school system, major responsibility has been borne by our local governments. The local school district, the local school board and the local property tax have been —and still are—the media through which most public education is administered and financed.

As long as the country remained predominately agricultural, the local property tax met school needs fairly well. After all, the curriculum was rigid and simple, the term was short and the cost was low. Besides, the overall functions and expenditures of government were slight; road building, protection of life and property, and support of the schools were the major forms of public service. Furthermore, in those days property ownership pretty well measured a man's wealth and income and, consequently, comparative ability to bear his share of taxes.

But as the nation became more urbanized — as more and more families converged on the cities, and as the way people lived and earned their living altered—the financing of education became more difficult.

To live successfully in our increasingly industrialized society, young people are required to grapple with a variety of complex problems which, in turn, involves broader knowledge and the mastery of more complicated skills. Inevitably the curricula of schools had to broaden, the school term lengthened, and the number of children of school age in attendance mounted.

For example, whereas only 68.6% of all children aged 5 through 17 were in the public schools in 1890, there were 83.5% by 1954. While the average pupil spent only 86 days in school in 1890, the average was 159 days by 1954. While in 1890 the kindergarten was practically unknown, the needs of pre-schoolagers and of their working mothers had sent 1.2 million youngsters into kindergartens by 1954.

Inevitably, as the responsibilities of public education rose, current school operating costs per child—for teaching, equipment and maintenance —went up, too. And, for the same reason, per pupil school construction costs also rose. Space for science teaching, shop crafts, physical education, libraries and kindergartens can in no sense be regarded as "frills" today.

While sole dependence on local property taxes for school needs had obviously become inadequate, it took the disaster of the depression to finally move the states into action. Since then, school equalization programs, geared primarily to helping the poorest school districts through grants from state collected funds, have been widely in-

WHY THE CLASSROOM SHORTAGE GROWS

	NUMBER OF PUPILS
ENROLLMENT KEEPS GOING UP
In last 5 years, public school enrollment	UP 5½ million
In the next 5 years, estimated rise	UP 6 million
MORE CLASSROOMS - A MUST	NEW CLASSROOMS NEEDED
Right now: To eliminate overcrowding and substandard schools	159,000
In the next 5 years
To meet the enrollment rise	225,000
To meet current obsolescence and destruction due to fire, flood, etc.	110,000
We must build, in the next 5 years	494,000
BUT THE SCHOOL DEFICIT IS GROWING
Last year, new classrooms totalled	63,000
At that rate, the 5-year total would be	315,000
AND THE DEFICIT—without federal aid, would rise to	179,000

troduced. However, as we shall see later, many states are hardly able to provide adequate aid. Besides, most of the state assistance is earmarked to help schools keep open by defraying operating costs and not to meet school construction needs.

Thus, the tremendous burden of classroom expansion—to adjust to a modern school curricula, to eradicate the 25-year construction lag, and to meet the growth in school enrollment—still remains a local responsibility and, in many instances, an insurmountable burden.

Although more classrooms are needed almost everywhere, we must not overlook the added burden that population shifts are bringing about, a factor which overall statistics on rising enrollment tend to obscure. We refer to the mushrooming growth of the suburbs and the spectacular growth of whole regions, like the west and southwest. Population shifts are occurring between states and within every state. They add still another school space problem with which the local school districts are forced to cope.

The Heroic Local Effort

During the current 1956-57 school year, an estimated $11.8 billion will be spent for primary and secondary public education throughout the United States. This sum includes both the expected outlay for current school operations and for capital investment and interest on the school debt as well.

Nearly two-thirds of this total is being raised by local governments—primarily from property taxes and by further borrowing.

*About one-third is coming from the states—aid that is largely financed by regressive sales tax levies.

Only about 3% will be contributed by the Federal government—for vocational training, the school lunch program, and to aid school districts with abnormally high enrollments due to a large influx of Federal employees.

Of this $11.8 billion total, approximately $3.1 billion is being spent this year for capital investment in the schools and to meet interest charges on existing school debt. These expenditures—primarily outlays for school construction—are almost exclusively a local government burden.

In their frantic effort to increase revenue for current operating costs and capital needs, and to reduce the cost of school construction, harassed school boards have done many things.

Almost everywhere property assessments and tax rates have been, and still are being, raised.

Almost universally school construction standards have now been cut down to the bone.

Across the country, school district consolidation has become a continuing process. From 127,000 school districts twenty-five years ago, the number has now been cut to about 52,000, and continues to go down. Yet, consolidation—a favorite nostrum of the Chamber of Commerce to finally "solve" the problems of the schools—is no certain cure for rising costs. The merger of two bankrupt districts doesn't create solvency. Besides, consolidation almost always necessitates the building of new classrooms to replace abandoned ones.

Despite limited local resources, the school building record of the last five years stands as a monumental effort. A total of 325,000 new classrooms have been built and an additional 69,000 are expected to go up during the present school term. This achievement could not be accomplished, however, without an astronomical rise in local debt.

The outstanding indebtedness of all local governments has gone up from $13½ billion in 1946, to $35 billion by 1956, a 160% rise in one decade. The debt of school districts, on the other hand, went up over 600%, from $1.3 billion to more than $8 billion. Even this is an understatement since the approximate $1 billion rise in indebtedness of school systems run by cities and counties is recorded in the local government debt total.

Without doubt, local school borrowing would have been even greater but for three restraining factors:

(1) In many localities the school debt has reached its legal maximum. This is true in 18% of our districts of more than 10,000 population, according to a recent survey conducted by the American Federation of Teachers. In 35% of these districts more than 75% of the legal bonding power had already been used up.

(2) The present "hard money" policy of the Federal government has drastically increased borrowing costs. Interest charges on tax-free school bonds, which ranged from 2% to 2½% but two years ago, have now skyrocketed to 3% to 4%, and even higher. It costs $300,000 more to borrow $1 million for 30 years at 4% than at 2%. Because of the long-term burden present interest rates impose, some districts are now being forced to postpone borrowing even in the face of continuing critical school construction needs.

(3) Many school districts across the country can't borrow because the inhabitants are just too poor. The bankers deem the tax base too low to afford a "reasonable risk."

* See November 1956 issue of Labor's Economic Review, "State and Local Taxes Hit Low Income Families Hardest."

ANY CANDID ASSESSMENT OF ALL THESE FACTORS CAN LEAD TO BUT ONE CONCLUSION. NO MATTER HOW VALIANT THE LOCAL SCHOOL EFFORT, NEITHER AN EXPANSION OF LOCAL TAX REVENUE NOR OF LOCAL BORROWING SHOWS PROMISE OF RAISING, OR EVEN OF LONG SUSTAINING, OUR PRESENT CLASSROOM CONSTRUCTION RATE.

THE BETTER-OFF MINORITY OF SCHOOL DISTRICTS WILL ERADICATE THEIR CLASSROOM BACKLOG IN THE YEARS AHEAD. BUT THOUSANDS OF POORER DISTRICTS ARE WITHOUT RESOURCES TO FORGE AHEAD OR EVEN TO SUSTAIN PRESENT CAPITAL OUTLAYS. AS A CONSEQUENCE, THE NATION-WIDE BUILDING RATE WILL PROBABLY GO DOWN.

Poor States—Richer States

Impoverished school districts exist in every state, but no nation-wide wide survey has catalogued them. Comparisons of educational standards between states are available, however.

After studying the table on Page 24, the following facts become evident:

(1) A shocking inequality exists in educational standards—the outlay for current school operations, teachers' salaries, and the adequacy of classrooms.

(2) School standards within a state closely reflect the personal income level of its inhabitants.

(3) Low standards do not reflect a lack of effort to raise them. Many poor states with low standards show high educational outlays in relation to the limited income of their citizens.

Operating Expenditures Per Pupil for the current school year are estimated to average $295 for the country as a whole (see Column 1). For the Arkansas child, however, this outlay is only one-third ($138) of the level in New York ($473), or in New Jersey ($397). Eight states are spending $190 or less for each child enrolled. Nine wealthier states, on the other hand, are supporting expenditures of $350 or more.

Classroom Teachers' Salaries now average about $4,220 throughout the country (Column 2), a slight improvement after the long war and post-war lag. Yet, they still remain too low considering the training, skill, and responsibility required of the teacher.

The nation-wide "average" tends to obscure the extent of this inequity. For example, in Arkansas the average is $2,380, Mississippi $2,442, Kentucky $2,800, and North Dakota $3,000. Salaries show up best in more prosperous Nevada, $4,890, Michigan $4,900, California $5,150, and New York $5,550.

Thirty-five percent of our 1.2 million teachers still earn under $3,500; more than half of the teachers in fifteen states earn less than this amount. In seven states—Arkansas, Kentucky, Mississippi, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota and Tennessee—over a quarter receive less than $2,500.

(In the current school year we need 180,000 new teachers to take care of rising enrollment and to replace emergency teachers and the large number dropping out. Less than a third of this number, however, will graduate from our teacher education institutions and go into the schools.)

Current Classroom Need, because of substandard and overcrowded schools, is overwhelming in the poorer states. But overcrowding is also a major problem where suburban growth and the population shift have rapidly raised school enrollment (Columns 3, 4 and 5).

For example, fast-growing California and Florida report 115,000 and 75,000 pupils in excess of normal classroom capacity. Connecticut and New Jersey—with mushrooming suburbs—report a pupil excess of 66,000 and 76,000 respectively. On the other hand, in a few states where population and dispersal patterns have changed but slowly—like Wisconsin, Delaware, Oklahoma and Nebraska—current classroom need is low.

Educational Effort: When school expenditures are measured against the ability of the citizens in each state to pay for public education (Column 8), it becomes clear that low standards and poor results (Column 6) are not due to lack of effort. Low income is the major factor (Column 7).

While the nation as a whole spends 2.3% of its personal income for public schools, the outlay of the people in the eight states with the lowest expenditure per child is, in all cases, more. In contrast, the citizens of New York and New Jersey—with the highest standards—spend considerably less.

While our 12 wealthiest states have less than one-fourth of the classroom shortage, they currently are building 45% of the new school total, according to Secretary Folsom. Our poorest 12 states, on the other hand, suffer well over 35% of the shortage, but are able to build only 16% of the United States total.

Lack of effort is not a factor. Ten of the 12 poorest states are spending more than the national average for their children's education.

A National Problem

If all American children are to enjoy their educational birthright—a chance to acquire understanding and the skills on which individual welfare so much depends—the public school burden no longer can be entirely shouldered by the localities and the states alone. Some Federal aid is imperative.

More than the well-being of each child is at stake. In our mobile and inter-related society, educational failure anywhere touches the lives of all of us. Juvenile delinquency and crime can't be quarantined. And when millions are ill-prepared to participate effectively in the enterprises of the nation or to contribute to its defense, a staggering burden falls on everyone.

Only recently the White House Conference on Education—the most representative and distinguished group ever assembled to weigh school problems—voted by more than two to one for Federal support for pubic schools. The form of aid overwhelmingly endorsed was a program of Federal grants to the states to accelerate school construction in the neediest districts.

Both great political parties have pledged themselves to support this concept of Federal aid and, today, two important bills are being considered by the Congress.

H.R. 1, introduced by Augustine Kelley, a Democratic Congressman from Pennsylvania, would authorize $3.6 billion in Federal grants to the states for school construction over a 6-year period. This proposal would provide enough Federal aid to build about 15,000 additional classrooms a year, or a total of about 90,000.

H.R. 3986, introduced by Samuel McConnell, Jr., a Republican Congressman from Pennsylvania, is the official Administration bill. It is calculated by its authors to be sufficient to eradicate the classroom shortage in four years. Yet, to achieve this tremendous undertaking it would authorize a total outlay that would build only 33,000 additional schoolrooms in four years.

Clearly, the amount of Federal aid proposed by both bills is too small to reduce our classroom need substantially. Besides, the commendable additional provisions which would authorize Federal loans for school districts that otherwise could not borrow under reasonable terms, have, in both cases, a major defect: The proposed interest charge of the Federal Government—about 3½%—is higher than most hard-pressed school districts can afford to meet.

Nonetheless, AFL-CIO has strongly endorsed the principle of Federal aid which both bills would secure. While we have urged a substantial increase in the size of the Federal grant and a reduction in the cost of obtaining Federal school construction loans, we are supporting with all our force the effort to secure aid for the nation's hard-pressed schools in this session of the Congress.

In its recent testimony on this issue, the AFL-CIO concluded:

> "We are confident that the members of this Committee and the overwhelming majority of both Houses of the Congress are now aware of the gravity of our nation's school problem, and are resolved to let nothing obstruct the passage of an adequate school construction bill." *

The forces arrayed against the interests of the nation's children are, however, formidable. The National Association of Manufacturers, the Chamber of Commerce, the Farm Bureau—all traditional opponents of Federal activity in areas of proven need—are vociferously opposing Federal school construction aid.

Once again the familiar nostrums of school district consolidation and the end of "frills" are advanced as the solution.

Some charge that the classroom shortage is only a statistical mirage—a figment of the imagination of the professional school administrators. Others, while conceding that the problem does indeed exist, argue that, if left alone, it will quickly liquidate itself.

Finally, they thunder about the danger of Federal domination of our public schools if Federal assistance for construction is enacted.

But, the Federal Government has aided schools in other ways for almost 100 years, and there is no Federal domination of education today. All that is now proposed is that Federal funds be allocated to the states to help financially hard-pressed communities provide brick and mortar for more schools. "Once the schools have been built," Secretary Folsom has pointed out, "the local authorities would take title to the buildings and the Federal Government will have no contact or connection whatsoever with the operation of the schools."

Poor Schools—A False Economy

More than a century ago, the trade unionists of that day gave leadership in the initial effort to establish free and universal public education throughout this land. It was labor's view then—as it is today—that our democracy can not be fully achieved unless a decent education is available to all children.

Whether a child is born and reared in Iowa, Oregon, Mississippi or New York, he is, at the same time, a child of the United States. The welfare of both the nation and of every child requires that at least a minimum educational opportunity be assured.

To marshal all the resources for our schools that are now required to match our needs, the Federal Government must join our hard-pressed states and localities in supporting education at a minimum financial level.

As a nation, we certainly have the means. America has both the most productive and one of the most rapidly expanding economies in the world. Today our national output approximates an annual rate of $425 billions. By 1965, we may reasonably expect to be creating goods and services worth one-third more than the total we produce and enjoy today.

Surely a larger share of this expanding wealth should and must be invested in the education of our future citizens. But if our public schools are to have access to this growing national income, Federal support from revenues derived from the Federal income tax is the most direct—and surely the most equitable—method of achieving it.

Today, as in the past, people who do not wish to face the necessities brought on by changing times, who are insensitive to the school needs of our children, or who are seeking tax avoidance for themselves, are massed against the Federal school construction bills.

In the present session—just as mounting public approval and bipartisan support have seemed to insure passage of Federal legislation for the schools—a new argument is being raised in order to postpone it. It is now said that school aid must be tabled once again because of the necessity of cutting the Federal budget.

However, while the prudent use of public funds should always be demanded of those who govern, no "economy drive"—no matter how well-meaning—can justify the continued deterioration of America's public schools.

Unfortunately, those most victimized by our classroom shortage—our millions of children—have no vote. It's up to adult Americans to be their spokesmen. If our voices are loud, the Congress will hear.

* Copies of the AFL-CIO testimony before the House Subcommittee on General Education, February 12, 1957, are available on request.

HOW DO YOUR SCHOOLS RATE?

A Report On Primary and Secondary Education in Your State*

States	Operating Expenditure Per Pupil 1956-57, School Year§	Average Salary of Classroom Teachers, 1956-57	No. of Pupils in Excess of Normal Capacity, Fall, 1956	Additional Classrooms Needed to Eliminate Overcrowding and to Replace Unsatisfactory Facilities, Fall, 1956	Additional Classrooms Needed in Relation to Existing Classrooms, Fall, 1956	Selective Service Registrants Disqualified by the Mental Test, 1955	Per Capita Personal Income, 1955	Effort: Percent of Personal Income Spent for Public Schools, 1953-54
	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8
United States	$295.00	$4,220	2,295,000†	159,000	14.6%†	14.7%	$1,847	2.3%†
Alabama	175.00	3,366	287,820	11,354	83.2	40.2	1,181	2.5
Arizona	340.00	4,600	5,300	205	3.7	18.1	1,577	3.1
Arkansas	138.00	2,380	93,026	8,324	89.0	24.3	1,062	2.4
California	328.40	5,150	115,000	10,000	12.3	15.7	2,271	2.6
Colorado	301.48	3,750	24,746	1,197	10.1	4.0	1,764	2.7
Connecticut	340.00	4,650	66,000	2,600	18.9	4.6	2,499	1.8
Delaware	350.00	4,750	616	25	1.2	7.9	2,513	1.9
Florida	254.00	4,117	74,217	4,643	19.5	30.5	1,654	2.3
Georgia	197.00	3,275	194,130	7,471	26.5	30.0	1,333	2.7
Idaho	250.00	3,550	4,850	613	13.1	6.4	1,462	3.1
Illinois	355.00	4,725	52,338	3,435	6.4	12.9	2,257	1.9
Indiana	290.00	4,200	44,094	4,170	13.6	7.8	1,894	2.3
Iowa	287.00	3,741	30,000	1,000	5.7	1.4	1.577	3.0
Kansas	276.00	3,650	13,800	1,800	11.1	3.0	1,647	2.7
Kentucky	230.00	2,800	60,000	7,000	37.5	23.7	1,238	2.0
Louisiana	268.00	3,875	‡	‡	‡	31.5	1,333	3.0
Maine	220.00	3,025	10,184	900	12.7	7.1	1,593	2.3
Maryland	284.00	4,700	63,790	3,150	21.4	13.9	1,991	1.9
Massachusetts	303.00	4,325	33,910	2,240	8.2	5.9	2,097	2.0
Michigan	300.00	4,900	80,000	3,300	6.7	7.7	2,134	2.2
Minnesota	355.00	4,200	92,400	4,345	16.7	1.0	1,691	2.7
Mississippi	152.00	2,442	76,720	6,579	37.6	45.3	946	2.6
Missouri	272.00	3,780	14,600	4,000	15.3	8.4	1,800	1.9
Montana	356.00	4,000	4,418	661	10.6	2.0	1,844	3.0
Nebraska	275.00	3,138	5,538	418	3.1	6.0	1,540	2.7
Nevada	350.00	4,890	4,497	271	14.1	11.4	2,434	2.0
New Hampshire	290.03	3,620	7,877	690	19.8	6.2	1,732	2.1
New Jersey	397.00	4,880	76,201	3,841	13.9	11.8	2,311	2.0
New Mexico	310.00	4.650	‡	‡	‡	13.1	1,430	3.1
New York	473.00	5,550	137,000	‡	‡	8.8	2,263	2.1
North Carolina	181.00	3,291	7,136	4,867	14.2	45.4	1,236	2.9
North Dakota	275.00	3,000	‡	570	17.2	3.0	1.372	3.6
Ohio	300.00	4,400	57,900	4,460	7.8	4.7	2,062	1.9
Oklahoma	295.00	3,700	10,000	500	2.3	8.3	1,506	2.9
Oregon	364.00	4,525	17,025	‡	‡	2.1	1,834	3.0
Pennsylvania	320.00	4,640	39,393	8,366	13.3	4.4	1,902	2.2
Rhode Island	330.00	4,525	5,000	700	17.6	6.0	1,957	1.5
South Carolina	184.00	3,125	55,500	6,453	33.8	35.3	1,108	2.9
South Dakota	305.00	3,150	3,661	246	3.1	2.9	1,245	3.5
Tennessee	168.00	3,150	45,110	‡	‡	20.3	1,256	2.4
Texas	255.00	3,925	55,590	7,561	12.9	21.2	1,614	2.5
Utah	253.00	4,000	13,066	709	10.5	2.3	1,553	2.8
Vermont	255.00	3,300	5,873	862	29.0	4.9	1,535	2.5
Virginia	215.00	3,400	74,833	4,974	19.8	26.9	1,535	2.0
Washington	330.00	4,551	81,138	3,344	16.9	2.0	1,987	2.4
West Virginia	190.00	3,410	19,500	1,823	11.3	14.3	1,288	2.9
Wisconsin	315.00	4,200	3,000	470	1.8	2.3	1.774	2.3
Wyoming	380.00	3,775	1,800	210	6.6	4.8	1.753	2.9

* Sources: U. S. Office of Education, U. S. Department of Commerce, Office of the Surgeon General and estimates by the National Association of Education.

§ Includes teachers' salaries, books, maintenance, etc. Capital outlays for school construction and interest on the school debt are not included.
† Includes estimate for non-reporting states and the District of Columbia.
‡ Data not available.

Materials - Ed - Gen.

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE
Marion B. Folsom, Secretary
Office of Education
Lawrence G. Derthick, Commissioner

PRELIMINARY STATISTICS OF STATE SCHOOL SYSTEMS 1955-56

Selected Data for 35 States and 6 Outlying Parts,
With Estimates for Total Continental United States
(Full-Time Public Elementary and Secondary Schools)

October 1957 | Washington 25, D. C. | Circular No. 508

This circular is issued in accordance with the general policy of the Office of Education to make available as promptly as possible, in preliminary form, the findings of the Biennial Survey of Education. It presents summary statistics of public elementary and secondary education for the school year 1955-56, based on returns from the State departments of education of the first 35 States and 6 outlying parts which furnished reasonably complete data. The reader is cautioned, however, that the figures for 1955-56 are still tentative and subject to revision.

Included in this circular are data on total population, school-age population, pupil enrollment and attendance, number of public high school graduates, number of instructional staff members, average salary of instructional staff, revenue and nonrevenue receipts, expenditures by major purpose, and current expenditure per pupil in average daily attendance. For purposes of comparison, national figures (totals for the 48 States and the District of Columbia) are also given for each item for the school year 1953-54. No interim survey was conducted by the Office of Education for the year 1954-55.

This report was prepared in the State School Systems Unit of the Research and Statistical Services Branch by Samuel Schloss and Carol Joy Hobson. Assistance in analyzing and tabulating the data for this report was given by Bronson Price and Ann Mitchell.

The Year in Brief

Reflecting the steady growth of the country's population, the giant enterprise represented by American public elementary and secondary education reached a new peak during the 1955-56 school year. On whatever basis size is determined--whether in terms of total enrollments, number of high school graduates, number of instructional staff, or school costs--the figures were bigger for 1955-56 than for any prior year. Highlights of the significant changes that occurred between 1953-54 and 1955-56 for each of the major educational items are given in the following paragraphs.

Growth of School-Age Population and Total Population

During the biennium July 1, 1953-July 1, 1955, the estimated school-age population (ages 5-17 years, inclusive) grew at over twice the rate of the total population. The estimated number of 37.3 million school-age children on July 1, 1955 represented an increase of 2.7 million, or 7.9 percent, over the number on July 1, 1953. During the same period the total population increased 3.8 percent--from 158.3 million to 164.3 million.

(text continued on page 4)

PRELIMINARY STATISTICS OF PUBLIC ELEMENTAR AND ESTIMATES FOR

Region and State	Estimated population, July 1, 1955 (thousands) 1/		Number of pupils enrolled (thousands)			Average daily attendance, K-12 (thousands)	High school graduates	Number of instructional staff 3/				Reve (amounts
	Total population (excluding armed forces overseas)	School-age population (5-17 years, inclusive)	Total	Kindergarten and grades 1-8 2/	Grades 9-12 and postgraduates				Total revenue receipts	Federal		Stat
										Amount	Percent of total	Amount
1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	12	13
CONTINENTAL U.S.:
1955-56 (Est.)	164,303	37,262	31,145	24,224	6,921	27,760	1,256,000	1,217,000	$9,694,301	$406,312	4.2	$3,870,071
1953-54	158,313	34,540	28,836	22,546	6,290	25,644	1,129,000	1,098,000	7,866,852	355,237	4.5	2,944,103
Percent increase over 1953-54	3.8	7.9	8.0	7.4	10.0	8.3	11.2	10.8	23.2	14.4	--	31.5
NORTHEAST:
Connecticut	2,200	455	389	311	77	350	15,075	15,957	122,429	4,679	3.9	32,639
Maine	906	214	177	141	36	164	6,744	7,501	38,076	1,972	5.2	10,316
Massachusetts	4,773	982	766	582	184	689	35,139	32,136	236,288	8,063	3.4	48,851
New Jersey	5,324	1,074	865	679	185	766	35,416	37,421	329,087	8,258	2.5	79,518
New York	16,021	3,160	2,468	1,899	569	2,115	96,677	103,520	1,080,552	17,910	1.7	386,473
Vermont	370	89	71	56	15	64	2,802	3,006	18,598	905	4.9	4,787
NORTH CENTRAL:
Illinois	9,301	1,935	1,487	1,141	346	1,309	64,439	59,073	437,945	15,586	3.5	105,251
Iowa	2,671	614	551	422	129	492	9/26,749	27,214	173,801	4,653	2.7	22,922
Kansas	2,060	453	435	335	99	381	19,911	20,217	127,407	8,791	6.9	33,250
Michigan	7,326	1,677	1,370	1,085	285	1,264	55,347	55,026	515,032	7,677	1.5	250,990
Missouri	4,201	895	742	575	168	631	29,417	27,339	200,045	9,846	4.9	72,917
Nebraska	1,394	309	258	196	62	237	15,325	13,442	70,762	3,485	4.9	5,716
North Dakota	643	167	127	96	31	117	6,307	7,359	32,796	1,520	4.6	9,219
Ohio	8,945	1,968	1,618	1,254	364	1,468	67,579	59,697	468,580	14,670	3.1	114,055
Wisconsin	3,702	846	10/596	439	10/157	547	10/33,821	25,916	208,094	7,813	3.8	40,281
SOUTH:
Alabama	3,110	852	733	580	154	649	26,051	25,448	124,783	10,267	8.2	90,168
Arkansas	1,802	490	419	326	93	360	16,636	14,144	63,100	7,038	11.1	26,724
Delaware	390	82	65	51	14	57	2,600	2,852	25,684	780	1.8	21,490
Florida	3,580	757	734	580	154	632	24,637	27,546	201,283	10,615	5.3	107,073
Kentucky	3,011	784	598	478	120	535	20,025	21,442	104,375	8,728	8.4	37,462
Louisiana	2,934	762	599	474	125	532	21,320	21,850	177,220	8,791	5.0	113,079
Maryland	2,744	614	495	393	102	438	16,765	18,104	157,593	13,112	8.3	51,445
Mississippi	2,133	607	531	436	95	444	17,589	16,799	75,394	6,232	8.3	40,270
North Carolina	4,344	1,154	1,024	801	223	927	38,161	35,312	213,973	12,562	5.9	148,035
Oklahoma	2,210	537	502	374	128	453	23,457	19,843	137,277	10,104	7.4	59,678
Tennessee	3,414	867	755	597	158	678	26,081	26,351	140,349	11,006	7.8	81,820
Texas	8,748	2,092	1,760	1,387	373	1,527	64,291	65,672	509,094	19,096	3.8	277,498
Virginia	3,579	865	750	612	138	668	25,953	27,898	165,424	23,180	14.0	58,238
West Virginia	1,984	537	458	352	106	416	19,253	16,720	92,847	4,231	4.6	55,275
Dist. of Col.	857	122	111	87	24	95	3,034	3,947	38,419	5,415	14.1	--
WEST:
California	12,961	2,697	2,459	1,942	517	2,360	96,746	91,754	1,155,713	48,957	4.2	481,127
Idaho	612	162	145	108	37	131	6,883	5,484	37,600	2,194	5.8	9,574
Montana	629	153	128	97	31	116	5,843	6,589	48,322	2,793	5.8	11,969
Nevada	235	50	52	42	11	44	1,780	2,114	16,292	2,468	15.2	6,705
Oregon	1,685	382	339	255	84	298	15,256	14,630	135,983	4,855	3.6	35,965
Utah	797	215	199	151	47	181	9,045	7,125	60,665	3,484	5.7	22,933
OUTLYING PARTS OF THE U. S.:
Alaska	209	38	32	27	5	27	670	1,230	13,819	2,601	18.8	6,838
American Samoa	21	7	5	5	1	4	--	279	295	295	100.0	--
Canal Zone	53	12/10	11	9	2	10	402	372	3,130	2,902	92.7	--
Guam	12/59	14	12	10	2	10	333	416	2,238	--	--	--
Hawaii	560	136	119	13/65	13/54	113	5,233	4,359	28,788	2,586	9.0	--
Virgin Islands	30	9	4	13/ 3	13/ 1	5	150	204	1,127	73	6.5	--

* Estimated.

1/ Source of population data: (1) Current Population Reports, Series P-25, Nos. 145 and 151, and unpublished estimates, U. S. Bureau of the Census. (2) Annual reports of the Territorial governors.

2/ Includes nursery schools.

3/ Includes supervisors, principals, teachers, librarians, and guidance and psychological personnel.

4/ Includes other revenue receipts (tuition and transportation fees from patrons and gifts) which amounted to less than .05 percent of all revenue receipts.

5/ Includes expenditures for community services, summer schools, community colleges, and adult education.

6/ Includes capital outlay expenditures by school building authorities.

IC ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY DAY SCHOOLS, FOR STATES REPORTING, STIMATES FOR CONTINENTAL U.S.: 1955-56

Revenue receipts by source (amounts in thousands of dollars)						Nonrevenue receipts (thousands of dollars)	Expenditures (thousands of dollars)					Average annual salary per member of instructional staff 3/	Current expenditure per pupil in average daily attendance (Col. 21 ÷ Col. 7)	Region and State
State		Intermediate		Local 4/				Current expenditures
Amount	Percent of total	Amount	Percent of total	Amount	Percent of total		Total (Sum of cols. 21, 22, 23, and 24)	Elementary and secondary schools	Other programs 5/	Capital outlay 6/	Interest
13	14	15	16	17	18	19	20	21	22	23	24	25	26	27
														U. S.:
$3,870,071	39.9	$164,514	1.7	$5,253,404	54.2	$2,361,868	$11,155,294	$8,192,944	$172,000	$2,581,242	$209,108	$4,139	$295	1956
2,944,103	37.4	240,733	3.1	4,326,779	55.0	1,824,004	9,092,449	6,790,923	92,464	2,055,178	153,884	3,825	265	1954
31.5	- -	7/	- -	21.4	- -	29.5	22.7	20.6	7/	25.6	35.9	10.8	11.3	% Incr.
														N. E.:
32,639	26.6	- -	- -	85,111	69.5	32,835	156,406	119,198	772	32,511	3,925	4,730	341	Conn.
10,316	27.1	- -	- -	25,788	67.7	5,156	39,911	36,312	258	2,855	486	2,801	221	Maine
48,851	20.7	- -	- -	179,374	75.9	- -	272,666	226,214	2,086	44,367	- -	4,337	328	Mass.
79,518	24.2	19	8/	241,293	73.3	97,091	399,081	292,543	1,277	96,949	8,311	4,701	382	N. J.
386,473	35.8	- -	- -	676,169	62.6	492,791	1,256,339	899,963	21,838	297,293	37,245	5,277	426	N. Y.
4,787	25.7	- -	- -	12,906	69.4	7,238	21,024	16,939	24	3,806	255	3,105	263	Vt.
														N. C.:
105,251	24.0	13	8/	317,095	72.4	214,349	627,899	465,304	- -	145,399	17,196	4,950	355	Ill.
22,922	13.2	1,802	1.0	144,424	83.1	51,271	185,081	147,257	753	34,482	2,589	3,181	291	Iowa
33,250	26.1	23,813	18.7	61,553	48.3	28,538	131,737	101,927	1,160	*25,000	3,649	3,673	267	Kans.
250,990	48.7	1,809	0.4	254,555	49.4	154,230	632,423	438,575	6,789	177,404	9,655	4,711	347	Mich.
72,917	36.4	13,394	6.7	103,887	6.0	39,603	220,217	164,507	- -	51,866	3,844	3,520	261	Mo.
5,716	8.1	6,971	9.9	54,591	77.1	1,594	72,520	67,603	878	3,887	152	3,171	278	Nebr.
9,219	28.1	7,658	23.3	14,399	43.9	10,201	41,887	33,684	- -	6/7,571	632	2,927	294	N. Dak.
114,055	24.3	54	8/	339,801	72.5	169,909	573,343	415,367	2,845	139,677	15,455	4,337	283	Ohio
40,281	19.4	6,576	3.2	153,423	73.7	58,213	237,374	183,215	1,937	50,324	1,899	4,127	335	Wis.
														SOUTH:
90,168	72.3	- -	- -	24,348	19.5	3,462	127,921	118,798	1,250	7,212	660	3,350	183	Ala.
26,724	42.4	- -	- -	29,337	46.5	10,123	71,690	57,825	851	11,112	1,902	2,378	160	Ark.
21,490	88.0	- -	- -	3,414	10.1	6,697	28,589	19,938	31	8,294	327	4,376	348	Del.
107,073	53.2	- -	- -	83,596	41.5	38,919	226,826	11/163,430	11/641	58,410	4,345	4,150	259	Fla.
37,462	35.9	- -	- -	58,185	55.7	8,522	106,651	90,005	1,033	14,492	1,121	2,698	168	Ky.
113,079	63.8	- -	- -	55,350	31.2	45,102	194,536	153,601	290	35,155	5,489	3,907	289	La.
51,445	32.6	- -	- -	93,037	59.0	46,371	188,884	131,109	1,508	49,738	6,528	4,513	299	Md.
40,270	53.4	8,074	10.7	20,818	27.6	4,545	73,199	67,000	205	5,906	88	2,436	151	Miss.
148,035	69.2	- -	- -	53,376	24.9	18,245	225,301	174,924	1,339	45,111	3,926	3,400	190	N. C.
59,678	43.5	9,987	7.3	57,509	41.9	30,573	145,693	110,837	200	34,505	151	3,703	245	Okla.
81,820	58.3	- -	- -	47,522	33.9	18,214	155,927	128,120	739	25,991	1,077	3,156	189	Tenn.
277,498	54.5	1,630	.3	210,870	41.4	100,427	546,691	407,826	14,601	107,273	16,991	3,983	267	Tex.
58,238	35.2	- -	- -	84,005	50.8	27,231	189,271	143,364	1,278	41,447	3,182	3,422	215	Va.
55,275	59.5	- -	- -	33,341	35.9	4,794	95,173	81,982	692	12,403	*96	3,112	197	W. Va.
- -	- -	- -	- -	33,004	85.9	- -	38,060	33,084	741	4,235	- -	5,394	349	D. C.
														WEST:
481,127	41.6	22,650	2.0	602,979	52.2	264,977	1,280,393	818,135	93,098	343,636	25,525	5,243	352	Calif.
9,574	25.5	5,120	13.6	20,713	55.1	8,850	43,259	32,515	- -	9,882	863	3,550	248	Idaho
11,969	24.8	13,387	27.7	20,173	41.7	9,614	51,722	40,483	111	10,408	720	3,600	349	Mont.
6,705	41.2	- -	- -	7,118	43.7	820	21,638	15,179	49	5,827	584	4,496	348	Nev.
35,965	26.4	4,933	3.6	90,229	66.4	12,486	135,148	106,412	- -	25,922	2,814	4,423	357	Oreg.
22,933	37.8	- -	- -	34,249	56.5	5,779	68,861	43,598	539	23,946	777	3,922	240	Utah
														TERR.:
6,838	49.4	- -	- -	4,380	31.7	- -	13,093	11,179	- -	1,673	241	5,431	419	Alaska
- -	- -	- -	- -	- -	- -	- -	311	311	- -	- -	- -	901	75	Samoa
- -	- -	- -	- -	228	7.3	- -	2,922	2,707	193	22	- -	5,288	273	C. Z.
- -	- -	- -	- -	2,238	100.0	- -	3,682	2,225	88	1,369	- -	3,657	212	Guam
- -	- -	- -	- -	26,202	91.0	1	28,677	26,569	132	1,601	375	4,230	236	Hawaii
- -	- -	- -	- -	1,054	93.5	- -	1,098	1,016	63	19	- -	2,940	187	V. I.

ureau

cent of

7/ A direct comparison between 1955-56 and 1953-54 data cannot readily be made because of changes in the classification of items.
8/ Less than .05 percent.
9/ Includes persons granted high school equivalency certificates.
10/ Excludes vocational schools.
11/ Current expenditures for community colleges included with elementary and secondary day schools.
12/ Data as of April 1, 1950.
13/ Data by organizational level instead of by grade group.

Note: Detail may not add to totals because of rounding.

Enrollment and Attendance

Total enrollment in public elementary and secondary day schools rose from 28.8 million in 1953-54 to 31.1 million in 1955-56, an increase of 2.3 million or 8 percent. The increase in kindergarten and grades 1 through 8 was 1.7 million, or 7.4 percent, compared with an increase of 631,000 or 10 percent, in grades 9 through 12 (including postgraduates). The percent of enrolled pupils attending daily has shown a steady upward trend over the years, reaching a peak of 89.1 percent in 1955-56.

High School Graduates

The number of public high school graduates reached an all-time high in 1955-56. The 1,256,000 graduates in that year represented an increase of 127,000 over the number in 1953-54. The increase between 1953-54 and 1955-56 was 11.2 percent as compared with an increase of 7 percent between 1951-52 and 1953-54.

Instructional Staff

The total instructional staff 1/ increased from 1,098,000 in 1953-54 to 1,217,000 in 1955-56, an increase of 10.8 percent. The larger proportionate increase in staff than in pupil enrollment resulted in a reduction in the ratio of pupils to instructional staff (from 26.3 in 1953-54 to 25.6 in 1955-56).

The average annual salary of the total instructional staff was $4,139 in 1955-56 as compared with $3,825 in 1953-54, a rise of 8.2 percent.

Revenue and Nonrevenue Receipts

Revenue receipts (income from appropriations, taxes, permanent funds, school land leases, etc.) rose from $7,867 million in 1953-54 to $9,694 million in 1955-56, a gain of 23.2 percent.

1/ Includes supervisors, principals, teachers, librarians, and guidance and psychological personnel.

The proportions of revenue receipts derived from Federal and State sources have been increasing in recent years while the proportions derived from intermediate and local sources have been declining. During the 10-year period from 1945-46 to 1955-56 the changes in proportions derived from various sources were as follows: income from Federal sources increased from 1.4 percent to 4.2 percent, income from State sources increased from 34.7 to 39.9 percent, and income from local (including intermediate) sources declined from 63.9 to 55.9 percent.

To finance the huge capital outlay programs of recent years, nonrevenue receipts (income from bond sales, loans, sale of property, etc.), have likewise shown large gains. Nonrevenue receipts rose from $1,213 million in 1951-52, to $1,824 million in 1953-54, and to $2,362 million in 1955-56.

Current Expenditures, Capital Outlay, and Interest

Current expenditures, which represent the day-by-day spending of public elementary and secondary schools, amounted to $8,193 million in 1955-56, an increase of 20.6 percent over the $6,791 million spent in 1953-54. Some of the increase in expenditures may be attributed to the rising proportion of pupils in secondary schools where educational costs are generally higher. When related to the total number of pupils to be educated the percent increase in cost was not as great. Thus, the current expenditure per pupil in average daily attendance was $295 in 1955-56, an increase of $30 or 11.3 percent over 1953-54.

Expenditures for capital outlay, which have been mounting steadily in recent years, reached a peak of $2,581 million in 1955-56, a gain of 25.6 percent over the $2,055 million spent in 1953-54.

Interest payments rose even more markedly during the 2-year period--from $154 million in 1953-54 to $209 million in 1955-56, or 35.9 percent.

GPO 932017

COPY

TABLE 5.--CURRENT EXPENDITURES BY MAJOR ACCOUNT AND UNIT EXPENDITURES FOR FULL-TIME PUBLIC ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY DAY SCHOOLS, BY STATE: 1953-54

(In thousands of dollars)

Region and State	Current expenditures							Current expenditure (allocated to pupil costs) per pupil in average daily attendance	Average salary per member of total instructional staff 3/
	Total current expenditures	Administration 1/	Instruction	Operation of plant	Maintenance of plant	Fixed charges	Other 2/ school services
1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10
CONTINENTAL U. S.:
1953-54	4/ $6,790,923	$310,995	$4,552,349	$622,671	$284,871	$446,252	$573,785	$264.76	$3,825
1951-52	5,682,345	265,636	3,781,837	508,575	248,674	341,601	536,022	244.24	3,450
Percent increase, 1951-52 to 1953-54	+19.5	+17.1	+20.4	+22.4	+14.6	+30.6	+7.0	+8.4	+10.9
NORTHEAST	1,776,053	72,460	1,152,253	167,834	71,722	168,535	143,249	-	-
Connecticut	92,755	3,370	64,443	9,003	3,835	6,445	5,659	296.80	4,274
Maine	30,872	1,055	19,879	3,251	1,106	2,041	3,540	199.33	2,427
Massachusetts	189,814	7,111	126,700	20,383	8,619	8,100	18,901	298.39	4,006
New Hampshire	19,025	1,105	11,963	1,844	490	1,554	2,069	256.38	3,252
New Jersey	233,639	10,544	152,872	23,188	12,545	17,211	17,279	333.31	4,271
New York	709,174	24,344	471,779	64,417	23,139	76,336	49,159	361.99	4,658
Pennsylvania	460,628	23,202	277,740	41,228	20,286	55,028	43,144	299.31	4,074
Rhode Island	25,608	935	18,075	3,030	961	693	1,914	268.05	3,881
Vermont	14,542	795	8,803	1,490	742	1,127	1,585	245.31	2,820
NORTH CENTRAL	2,010,872	88,175	1,337,806	229,612	95,201	94,700	165,378	-	-
Illinois	383,164	18,013	250,488	44,225	17,752	21,347	31,339	318.81	5/ 4,353
Indiana	192,114	3,642	122,510	28,645	8,024	10,374	18,919	279.57	4,086
Iowa	127,059	7,908	79,936	13,084	6,857	5,417	13,857	273.91	2,897
Kansas	94,014	3,286	65,420	9,209	3,979	2,324	9,796	263.79	3,258
Michigan	4/ 325,497	15,734	223,851	37,610	14,275	13,272	20,755	282.82	3,999
Minnesota	143,829	8,121	93,788	17,309	5,743	4,764	14,104	286.59	3,687
Missouri	139,481	6,338	93,528	12,928	6,964	5,853	13,870	232.79	3,188
Nebraska	59,027	3,549	40,684	5,802	3,331	2,956	2,705	262.45	2,922
North Dakota	28,924	1,147	20,280	3,227	1,269	1,089	1,912	262.40	2,659
Ohio	338,214	11,780	227,488	38,522	17,676	19,113	23,635	253.88	4,012
South Dakota	31,930	1,899	21,822	3,248	1,473	663	2,825	274.91	6/ 2,638
Wisconsin	147,615	6,755	98,012	15,800	7,859	7,528	11,661	293.39	6/ 3,840
SOUTH	1,774,172	81,377	1,234,974	111,009	65,891	98,913	182,008	-	-
Alabama	92,895	2,715	67,492	3,684	2,588	5,595	10,821	150.88	2,783
Arkansas	49,598	3,789	33,035	3,690	1,380	1,251	6,453	139.19	2,286
Delaware	16,597	1,438	10,715	1,630	513	409	1,892	325.42	4,042
Florida	7/ 123,843	5,347	93,333	7,522	4,608	3,919	9,114	228.74	3,785
Georgia	125,198	4,299	87,270	6,363	3,574	6,904	16,788	177.41	2,862
Kentucky	78,332	3,409	53,586	5,364	2,994	2,794	10,185	153.17	2,526
Louisiana	120,523	5,514	72,906	5,404	5,634	11,116	19,949	246.65	3,504
Maryland	103,849	2,846	71,273	7,784	4,124	7,454	10,368	268.47	4,148
Mississippi	55,444	3,523	32,586	2,681	1,794	4,917	9,943	122.60	1,864
North Carolina	154,700	4,606	113,878	8,009	6,013	10,468	11,726	176.97	3,354
Oklahoma	4/ 96,969	5,186	70,101	7,568	5,068	2,972	6,074	223.87	3,271
South Carolina	80,527	4,310	54,197	4,285	2,303	5,459	9,973	176.34	2,815
Tennessee	106,402	3,736	75,090	6,632	3,282	5,623	12,039	166.36	2,875
Texas	4/ 346,615	23,642	245,267	22,515	11,338	18,497	25,356	249.22	3,886
Virginia	118,701	3,995	83,056	8,462	5,319	4,880	12,989	192.56	3,082
West Virginia	76,244	2,400	51,918	5,954	3,892	4,431	7,649	186.09	3,058
District of Columbia	27,735	620	19,273	3,464	1,467	2,224	687	302.10	4,797
WEST	1,229,827	68,984	827,317	114,215	52,057	84,104	83,150	-	-
Arizona	45,990	2,379	31,905	4,155	1,928	2,349	3,274	281.63	9/ 4,401
California	8/ 727,557	45,989	488,905	66,603	30,784	55,742	39,534	314.51	4,787
Colorado	4/ 69,210	2,790	45,660	6,103	2,721	6,336	5,600	279.76	3,640
Idaho	29,229	1,551	18,372	2,832	921	1,669	3,884	237.81	3,350
Montana	34,989	2,228	22,391	3,632	1,644	1,428	3,666	327.99	3,530
Nevada	10,482	601	6,681	1,102	402	1,137	559	294.12	3,786
New Mexico	38,367	1,624	28,318	2,610	157	1,585	4,073	264.71	4,127
Oregon	91,236	4,118	60,546	9,040	4,229	5,099	8,204	336.72	4,163
Utah	34,723	1,219	24,924	3,006	1,637	834	3,103	208.18	3,746
Washington	129,610	5,484	87,528	13,254	6,959	7,102	9,283	305.42	4,334
Wyoming	18,434	1,001	12,087	1,878	674	824	1,970	329.86	3,512
OUTLYING PARTS OF THE UNITED STATES:
Alaska	8,409	701	5,763	1,030	191	213	511	411.46	5,016
Canal Zone	2,370	79	1,849	182	117	111	32	233.63	4,005
Guam	1,685	44	1,346	178	36	-	81	172.10	3,380
Hawaii	23,313	566	17,265	1,272	1,360	1,419	1,431	225.92	4,172
Puerto Rico	37,796	3,619	21,514	1,397	240	2,568	8,458	83.72	1,922

1/ Includes expenditures for administration at all levels -- State, intermediate, and local.

2/ Includes expenditures for personal services to pupils which are primarily concerned with getting the children to school and their physical and social well-being; viz., attendance, transportation, health, and food services.

3/ Includes supervisors, principals, teachers, and other instructional staff.

4/ Includes current expenditures not allocable to pupil costs, as specified: Continental United States, $1,460,000; Michigan, $126,000; Oklahoma, $32,000; Texas, $213,000; and Colorado, $1,090,000. These amounts for the continental United States and for the individual States are excluded from the computations in column 9.

5/ Includes salaries of administrators.

6/ Excludes salaries of vocational teachers.

7/ Includes expenditures for community colleges operated by local school administrative units.

8/ Includes expenditures for junior colleges, evening and summer schools, and adult education.

9/ Represents weighted average of median salaries of total instructional staff in elementary and secondary schools.

NOTE: Detail may not add to totals because of rounding.

GPO 911428

UNITED STATES
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
DIVISION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS
WASHINGTON 25, D. C.

OFFICIAL BUSINESS

PENALTY FOR PRIVATE USE TO AVOID
PAYMENT OF POSTAGE, $300
(GPO)

Editor,
The New South,
63 Auburn Ave., N.E.,
Atlanta, Ga.

E-22-4

Materials - Ed - Gen

LLOYD - EX 3-6300
Ext. 3036

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF
HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE
Office of Education
Washington 25, D. C.

FOR RELEASE
Friday, January 24, 1958 HEW--H1

The estimated shortage of public school classrooms dropped from 159,000 in the fall of 1956 to 140,400 last fall, a 12 percent reduction, reports from State departments of education indicate.

The estimated number of pupils in excess of normal classroom capacity dropped from 2,295,000 to 1,937,000, the State reports show.

These and other statistics are contained in a preliminary report by the Office of Education on data supplied by the States in the fourth annual fall survey of public school enrollment, teachers, and housing.

The indicated shortage of 140,400 classrooms breaks down this way:

--Classrooms needed to accommodate students in excess of normal capacity, 63,200.

--Classrooms needed to replace makeshift, obsolete or otherwise unsatisfactory facilities, 77,200.

State procedures for determining the classroom situation and other aspects of public school education are steadily being improved, the Office of Education reported. This year's figures are based on district-by-district surveys in about three-fourths of the States.

(More)

The biggest change from last school year was the reduction in the estimated number of pupils in excess of classroom capacity. Reductions were reported by 25 States. Six of this group--Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Georgia, Minnesota and South Carolina--accounted for about 75 percent of the reduction. Like a number of other States, they reported that their changes were the result of such factors as improved estimating procedures, actual school surveys, and additional classroom construction.

The schoolhousing situation improved in 24 States, while the shortage became worse in 17, the Office of Education said. A similar comparison could not be made in the preliminary report for the remaining States, it was explained, because data were lacking for one of the two years.

According to the State reports, 68,600 classrooms were built between the fall of 1956 and the fall of 1957, an increase of 9.3 percent over the number constructed the previous year. The estimate for the 1956-57 school year had been 69,200. Estimated construction during the current school year is 70,800 classrooms, an increase of 3.2 percent over actual construction in 1956-57. (The Office of Education estimates enrollments will increase by 1.3 million, or 4 percent next fall.)

About 14,300 classrooms were abandoned during the 1956-57 school year chiefly because of obsolescence and reorganization and consolidation of school districts. A like number were abandoned the previous year.

The 68,600 new classrooms built last year, less the number of rooms abandoned, produced a net increase in the country's public school plant of 54,300 rooms, for a total of 1,155,300.

(More)

Meanwhile, enrollments continued to increase. Full-time public elementary and secondary schools enrolled a record 32.9 million pupils (22.8 in elementary schools and 10.1 million in secondary schools) last fall--an increase of 1.3 million, or 4.3 percent more than enrollments the previous fall.

The States reports also indicate a slight reduction in the pupil-teacher ratio and in the proportion of teachers not holding regular teaching certificates.

In the fall of 1957, there were 1,255,000 full-time and part-time classroom teachers (786,000 in elementary schools and 469,000 in secondary schools) a gain of 58,000 or 4.8 percent over the fall of 1956. The average ratio of pupils to teacher throughout the country was reduced from 26.4 to 26.2.

There were 91,200 full-time teachers with substandard certificates in the fall of 1957--an increase of 1,800 or 2 percent over the previous year. Proportionately, however, these "emergency" teachers constituted 7.3 percent of the total teaching staff, compared with 7.5 percent the previous year.

Totals in the report are for the continental United States. Reports were received from 47 States and the District of Columbia, although information on some items was not supplied by some States. The totals actually reported for each item were projected to cover the States not reporting on that item and thus round out estimates for the country as a whole. The survey also covered Alaska, American Samoa, the Canal Zone, Guam, Hawaii, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

- 30 -

Note: Copies of the report, "Fall 1957 Statistics on Enrollments, Teachers and Schoolhousing," Circular No. 513, may be obtained from the Office of Education, Washington 25.

Materials - Education - Gen. Teachers Status + Tenure

VTA REPORT

FEBRUARY, 1958

You Were Represented In Legislature

HIGHER TEACHER SALARIES ASSURED

It pays handsomely for Teachers Associations to continue to fight in Virginia General Assembly for "higher teachers salaries." As a result of mounting pressure by citizens of Virginia, spearheaded by the VTA and other educational organizations in the Commonwealth, twelve million dollars has been "found." This is to be added to the State budget for the biennium 1958-60 recommended by outgoing Governor Stanley. According to reliable authorities the major portion of these "newly discovered" monies in the State coffers will go to increase Virginia public school teachers' salaries. Varying amounts will also be allotted for capital outlay for the State supported universities, colleges and other institutions.

"Teachers salaries will still be much too low in Virginia and more buildings will be needed on our college campuses, but this increase in State Appropriations will help," VTA Executive Secretary J. Rupert Picott declared. Dr. Picott, who with the VTA President A. L. Scott and others has appeared several times before committees of this session of the Legislature, deplored the low ranking in comparison with the other states which Virginia will continue to have. He urged all citizens "to keep up the fight for adequate teacher pay and reasonable and proper State support of Virginia's public school system."

President A. L. Scott is shown just before he addressed the Joint Session of the House Appropriations Committee and the Senate Finance Committee of the 1958 Virginia General Assembly.

A degree teacher employed in a State-aid assigned teaching position during 1957-58 without any prior teaching experience is now entitled to receive $2400. If such person remains in the teaching profession in the public schools of Virginia based on anticipated appropriation by this session of the General Assembly, the salary will be $2700 in 1958-59 and $2950 in 1959-60. If a person is not at the maximum of $3600, the salary will be $3750 in 1958-59 and $3850 in 1959-60. An assigned teaching position is defined as a position for each 30 pupils in average daily attendance in elementary grades and 23 in the high school grades.

In summation, the VTA Executive Secretary said, "favorable action by this Legislature should result in

(1) upgrade in the salary schedule of $150 the first year for every State-aid teaching position in the State, and $100 additional upgrade in the salary schedule the second year for every State-aid teaching position in the State.

(Continued on page 4)

Attention, Please

"Wake Up and Read!" will be National Library Week's advice to Americans everywhere. Scheduled March 16-22, 1958, this first observance is being sponsored by the American Library Association and the National Book Committee.

Wallace van Jackson, chairman, VTA Department of Librarians and Director of the Virginia State College Library, Petersburg, urges all schools and citizens in the Commonwealth to share in the Library Week celebration.

VTA REPORT

Editor: J. Rupert Picott

FEBRUARY, 1958

1958 Nominating Committee For State General Officers

Note: All persons listed were appointed by the district president or elected by the membership of the district.

FIRST DISTRICT: Mr. G. B. Ruffin, Union High School, Bowling Green

SECOND DISTRICT: Mr. J. Murray Brooks, Thomas Hunter High School, Mathews

THIRD DISTRICT: Mr. J. Rodman Ransome, Randolph Jr. High School, Richmond

FOURTH DISTRICT: Mr. Clyde S. Scott, Peabody High School, Petersburg

FIFTH DISTRICT: Mr. E. L. Morse, South Hill

SIXTH DISTRICT: Mr. George Harris, Carter G. Woodson School, Dillwyn

SEVENTH DISTRICT: Mr. Leon D. Harding, Johnson-Williams School, Berryville

EIGHTH DISTRICT: Mrs. Ethel G. Anderson, Box 47, Amissville

NINTH DISTRICT: Miss Eunice Poindexter, Booker T. Washington Jr. High School, Roanoke

TENTH DISTRICT: Miss Ethel L. Wiley, Route 1, Box 2, Gladstone

ELEVENTH DISTRICT: Mrs. Hattie Heath, Tazewell

Contact Your District Representative

ELECTION TIME APPROACHES

FROM THE CONSTITUTION OF THE VIRGINIA TEACHERS ASSOCIATION, INC.

Revised as of October 16, 1947

ARTICLE VIII—Section 5: There shall be a Nominating Committee appointed by the President. This committee shall meet at least ninety days prior to the annual meeting of the State Association and nominate candidates for offices of the Association. The various districts shall have the privilege to submit names of probable candidates to the Nominating Committee. Said district suggestions must be made prior to the meeting of the Nominating Committee held for the purpose of selecting candidates for offices.

The time has now come again when we must think in terms of the nomination and election of the person who will direct the Virginia Teachers Association for the biennium 1958-'60. Our VTA President is elected for a two year term and cannot immediately succeed himself. This policy was adopted by our Association some fifteen years ago to assure the continuance of new and progressive leadership in our State Teachers Association's activities. Incidentally, it is the policy that is now followed by national and state teachers associations and other professional groups all over America.

President A. L. Scott, like his predecessors in office in the Virginia Teachers Association, is anxious to avoid any hint of "politiking" in this election. He, therefore, requested the president of each of the eleven districts to select the district's official representative to serve on the Nominating Committee. These VTA members who live and work in your section of the State are listed. Your suggestions of names of possible nominees for VTA General Officers should be sent to your VTA State Nominating Committee District Representative. Do not send names of nominees to the Executive Secretary office.

STATE ELECTION PROCEDURE

- Suggestions are made by teachers or local associations all over the State to our official representatives on the Nominating Committee.
- The representatives of the eleven VTA districts meet in Richmond as a Nominating Committee and select two or more persons who shall be candidates for each of the VTA general offices.
- A ballot listing the names of the candidates is prepared and sent to the local association secretaries throughout Virginia.
- Official announcement of the selection is made in the May-June issue of the Virginia Education Bulletin which is sent to each teacher.
- Actual voting on the candidates takes place during the month of September, and is by secret ballot cast by teachers in their local association meeting.
- Ballots are counted by the local association secretary or other designated persons and sent to the Executive Secretary's office in Richmond.
- Official Ballot Reports from each local association are submitted to a special Ballot Counting Committee which meets as a part of the annual VTA Convention.
- Total voting results as certified by the Official State Association Ballot Committee are reported to the convention and the newly elected officers are formally installed.

It is our belief that the Virginia Teachers Association now has the most democratic election procedure of any similar organization in all Virginia. There is ample reason to be proud of this system. Your continued cooperation and assistance in making it work efficiently and properly again this year is solicited.

These are the Salaries Paid in Virginia this School Year

These schedules are for regular classroom teachers with Bachelor's Degrees only; they do not apply to Home Economics, Agriculture, etc., principals, supervisors, Master's Degree holders or part-time teachers.

No. of years	0	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	12	13	14	15	16
Accomack	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500
Albemarle	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800
Alleghany 1	3200	3200	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900	4000	4100	4200
Amelia	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Amherst	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Appomattox	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Arlington	3800	3950	4100	4300	4500	4700	4900	5100	5300	5400	5500	5600	5700	5800	5900
Augusta	2600	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800
Bath
Bedford	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800
Bland	2400	2600	2800	3000	3200	3400
Botetourt	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800
Brunswick	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Buchanan
Buckingham	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Campbell 2	2400	2550	2700	2850	3000	3150	3300	3450	3600
Caroline	2500	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Carroll	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700
Charles City	2400	2600	2800	3000	3200	3400
Charlotte
Chesterfield	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900	4000	4100	4200	4300
Clarke	2600	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700
Craig
Culpeper	2600	2650	2700	2750	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700
Cumberland	2450	2550	2650	2750	2850	2950	3050	3150	3250	3350	3450
Dickenson	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
No. of years	0	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	12	13	14	15	16
Dinwiddie	2800	2850	2900	2950	3000	3050	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800
Essex	2900	2900	2900	2900	2900	3000	3100	3200	3400	3500
Fairfax	3800	3900	4100	4400	4600	4800	5000	5100	5200	5300	5400	5500	5600	5700	5800	5900	6000
Fauquier	3000	3000	3000	3050	3100	3150	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900	4000
Frederick
Floyd
Fluvanna	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700
Franklin
Giles 3	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900
Gloucester 4	3000	3000	3000	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Goochland	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Grayson	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500
Green	2400	2550	2700	2850	3000	3150	3300	3450	3600
Greensville	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Halifax	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700
Hanover	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700
Henrico	3300	3450	3600	3750	3900	4050	4200	4350	4500	4650	4800
Henry	2800	2850	2900	2950	3000	3050	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800
Highland
Isle of Wight	2800	2850	2900	2950	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900
James City
King George	2500	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800
King and Queen	2400	2550	2700	2850	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
King Wm.	2400	2550	2700	2850	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Lancaster	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Lee	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Loudoun	3240	3300	3360	3420	3480	3540	3600	3660	3720	3780	3840	3900	3960	4020	4080
Louisa	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Lunenburg	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Madison	2450	2550	2750	2850	3000	3150	3300	3450	3600
No. of years	0	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	12	13	14	15	16
Mathews	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Mecklenburg	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Middlesex	2800	2900	2900	3000	3100	3150	3200	3300	3400	3460
Montgomery	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Nansemond	2850	2900	2950	3000	3050	3100	3150	3200	3250	3350	3450	3550	3650	3750
Nelson	2400	2500	2700	2900	3100	3300	3500	3600
New Kent	2400	2600	2800	3000	3200	3400
Norfolk	3000	3100	3150	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900	4000	4100	4200	4300	4400	4500
Northampton	2400	2550	2700	2850	3000	3150	3300	3450	3600
Northumberland	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Nottoway	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700
Page	2700	2825	2950	3075	3200	3325	3450	3575	3700
Patrick	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Pittsylvania	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Powhatan	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500
Prince Edward	2450	2550	2650	2750	2850	2950	3050	3150	3250	3350	3450
Prince George	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700
Prince Wm.	3300	3400	3600	3800	4000	4100	4200	4300	4400	4500	4600	4700
Princess Anne	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900	4000	4100	4200	4300	4400
Pulaski	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800
Rappahannock
Richmond	2500	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400
Roanoke 5	3050	3050	3050	3100	3150	3250	3350	3450	3550	3650	3750	3850	3850	4050	4150
Rockbridge	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800
Rockingham	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700
Russell	2500	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700
Scott	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500
Shenandoah	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700
Smyth	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700
Southampton	2800	2850	2900	2950	3000	3050	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3650	3700
Orange	2600	2650	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700

1 Covington
2 Salaries are being adjusted
3 Men paid $100 per year more than women until the maximum is reached, then, both the same thereafter.
4 Maximum $3,720 in twenty years.
5 21 years—$4,250.

(Continued from page 1)

(2) Annual increments of $150 each year for those in State-aid assigned teaching positions who do not have eight or more years of experience.

Proposed Revision of State Minimum Salary Schedule:

	Years of Experience	Present Scale	Proposed 1958-59	Proposed 1959-60
Collegiate and Collegiate Professional	0	$2400	$2550	$2650
	1	2550	2700	2800
	2	2700	2850	2950
	3	2850	3000	3100
	4	3000	3150	3250
	5	3150	3300	3400
	6	3300	3450	3550
	7	3450	3600	3700
	8	3600	3750	3850
Normal Professional, Elementary and Special	0	$2000	$2150	$2250
	1	2100	2250	2350
	2	2200	2350	2450
	3	2300	2450	2550
	4	2400	2550	2650
	5	2500	2650	2750
	6	2600	2750	2850
	7	2700	2850	2950
	8	2800	2950	3050
	9	2900	3050	3150
	10	3000	3150	3250
	11	3100	3250	3350
	12	3200	3350	3450

GRIMROSE GRAMMAR

Distributed by NASSTA

"I teach him in his dreams all day long and in mine all night long."

No. of years	0	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	12	13	14	15	16
Spotsylvania	2600	2700	2700	2800	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Stafford	2500	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800
Surry	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500
Sussex	2800	2825	2850	2875	2900	2950	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700
Tazewell	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Warren	3000	3050	3050	3100	3150	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900	4000
Washington	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Westmoreland	2500	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400
Wise	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Wythe	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
York	3100	3150	3200	3250	3300	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900	4000	4100	4200
No. of years	0	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	12	13	14	15	16
Alexandria	3900	4000	4100	4200	4300	4400	4650	4750	4850	4950	5050	5200	5400	5600	5800	6000
Bristol
Buena Vista
Charlottesville	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900	4000	4100	4200	4300
Clifton Forge	2900	2950	3000	3050	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900	4000
Colonial Heights	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900	4000	4100	4200
Covington 6	3200	3200	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900	4000	4100	4200
Danville	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900	4000
Falls Church	3800	3850	3950	4050	4250	4400	4550	4700	4850	5000	5150	5300	5450	5600	5750	5900
Fredericksburg	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900	4000	4100	4200	4300	4400	4500
Galax	2400	2500	2600	2700	2800	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600
Hampton	3100	3200	3325	3450	3550	3650	3750	3850	3950	4050	4150	4250	4350	4450	4550
Harrisonburg	2750	2800	2850	2900	2950	3050	3150	3250	3350	3450	3550	3650	3750	3850	3950	4050
Hopewell
Lynchburg	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3800	3900	4000	4100	4200	4300	4400
Martinsville	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900	4000	4100	4200	4300	4400
Newport News	3250	3375	3500	3625	3750	3875	4000	4125	4250	4375	4500	4625	4750
Norfolk	3000	3100	3200	3350	3500	3650	3800	3950	4100	4250	4400	4450	4500
Norton	2500	2650	2800	2950	3100	3250	3400	3550	3700
Petersburg	3000	3150	3300	3450	3600	3750	3900	4050	4200
Portsmouth	3000	3150	3200	3350	3500	3650	3750	3850	3950	4050	4150	4250	4350	4450	4500
Radford	2700	2700	2800	2800	2900	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800
Richmond	3300	3450	3600	3750	3900	4050	4200	4350	4500	4650	4800
Roanoke 7	3000	3100	3200	3300	3370	3440	3510	3580	3650	3720	3790	3860	3930	4000	4070	4140	4210
South Norfolk	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900	4000	4100	4200	4300	4400	4500
No. of years	0	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	12	13	14	15	16
Staunton	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900	4000	4100	4200
Suffolk	3300	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900	4000
Virginia Beach
Warwick	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900	4000	4100	4200	4300	4400	4500	4600	4700
Waynesboro 8	2900	3000	3100	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900	4000	4150	4400	4500
Williamsburg	3050	3150	3250	3350	3450	3550	3650	3750	3850	3950	4050	4150	4250	4300
Winchester	3200	3300	3400	3500	3600	3700	3800	3900	4000

6 Same as Alleghany County
7 Maximum in eighteen years $4350
8 Twenty years plus $4600

Coming Events...

DATES AND PLACES OF NEXT VTA DISTRICT MEETINGS

FIRST DISTRICT
Date: October 10, 1958
Place: Poole Jr. High School, Stafford

SECOND DISTRICT
Date: March 28, 1958
Place: Hampton Institute, Hampton

THIRD DISTRICT
Date: April 12, 1958
Place: Bruton Heights School, Williamsburg

FOURTH DISTRICT
Date: March 8, 1958
Place: Peabody High School, Petersburg

FIFTH DISTRICT
Date: March 22, 1958
Place: Edwin A. Gibson School, Danville

SIXTH DISTRICT
Date: April 12, 1958
Place: Carter G. Woodson School, Dillwyn

SEVENTH DISTRICT
Date: Ocotber 3, 1958
Place: Douglas High School, Winchester

EIGHTH DISTRICT
Date: October 3, 1958
Place: Douglass High School, Leesburg

NINTH DISTRICT
Date: March 28, 1958
Place: Carver High School, Salem

TENTH DISTRICT
Date: October 3, 1958
Place: Jackson P. Burley High School, Charlottesville

ELEVENTH DISTRICT
Date: October, 1958
Place: Tazewell County High School, Bluefield

VTA Has General Assembly Lobbyist

"Approximately 50 per cent of the salaries of Virginia public school teachers in Virginia is provided from the treasury of the Virginia State government," VTA President A. L. Scott declared. "This," Mr. Scott said, "is one of the basic reasons why the VTA maintains a lobbyist in the Virginia Assembly." The Teacher's representative is VTA Executive Secretary J. Rupert Picott, who has been working with the lawmakers on behalf of teachers salaries and other welfare projects for the past thirteen years.

(Continued on page 6)

General Officers To Be Elected For 1958 - '60 Term

PRESIDENT: Incumbent, Mr. A. L. Scott, Principal, J. J. Wright Consolidated School, Snell

TREASURER: Incumbent, Mrs. Lavinia J. Banks, Richmond

AUDITOR: Incumbent, Mr. P. J. Chesson, Principal, Bowling Park Elementary School, Norfolk

SECRETARY OF CIVIC EDUCATION: Incumbent, Miss Sadie V. Lawson, Teacher, Lucy Addison High School, Roanoke

SECRETARY OF RESEARCH: Incumbent, Mr. H. A. Marshall, Assistant Director, Norfolk Division, Virginia State College, Norfolk

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEMBERS-AT-LARGE: Incumbents,

Mr. A. McKee Banks, Teacher, Union High School, Bowling Green

Mr. C. B. Jeter, Area Supervisor, Agricultural Education, State Department of Education, Richmond

Mrs. Lillian W. McDaniel, Teacher, Blackwell Jr. High School, Richmond

Mr. W. H. Pitts, Principal, Parker-Gray High School, Alexandria

Miss Lillian M. Weaver, Teacher
Huntington High School,
Newport News

SWEETIE PIE By Nadine Seltzer

"I want to dictate a letter to my congressman about schools!"

3-28-58

Did You Know?

Seventeen VTA Statewide Committees At Work For Teachers

The Virginia Teachers Association operates in a number of ways to help Virginia teachers. One of the chief means is through our fourteen active, functioning state committees. These committees are as follows:

Committee on Conferences on Education
Chairman: Miss Willie Mae Watson, Supervisor, Norfolk City Public Schools, Norfolk

Committee on Teaching the Fundamentals in Our Schools
Chairman: Mrs. Aurelia E. Huggard, Teacher, Augusta County Training School, Staunton

Committee on Insurance
Chairman: Dr. L. H. Schuster, Professor, Division of Business, Virginia State College, Petersburg

Committee on Teacher Education and Professional Standards
Chairman: Dr. William M. Whitehead, Superintendent, Virginia State School, Hampton

Committee on Travel
Chairman: Mrs. Margaret B. Whylie, Teacher, Walker-Grant School, Fredericksburg

Committee on Citizenship
Chairman: J. A. Hubbard, Principal, Tazewell County Training School, Bluefield

Committee on Publications and Public Relations
Chairman: Mrs. Addie Pleasants, Teacher, Fairfax County Public Schools, Fairfax

Committee on Legislation and Teacher Welfare
Chairman: Mrs. Madge J. Wheaton, Teacher, Booker T. Washington Junior High School, Roanoke

Committee on VTA Diamond Jubilee
Chairman: George M. Richardson, Principal, Hoffman-Boston School, Arlington

Committee on Ethics
Chairman: Miss Wilhelmina E. Hamlin, Head, Division of Elementary Education, Virginia State College, Petersburg

Committee on NEA Membership and Activities
Chairman: Mrs. Esther Wallace, Teacher, Brunswick County Public Schools, Lawrenceville

Committee on Federal Credit Unions
Chairman: Sumner G. Madden, Teacher, Armstrong High School, Richmond

Committee on Educational Television
Chairman: Mrs. Alice E. Houston, Teacher, Maggie L. Walker High School, Richmond

Committee on Economic Competence
Chairman: P. P. Wimbush, Teacher, Northside High School, Gretna

Committee on Necrology
Chairman: C. P. Hazzard, Principal, Rosenwald School, Warrenton

Committee on Resolutions
Chairman: Alfred Ferguson, Visiting Teacher, Martinsville Public Schools, Martinsville

Committee on Citations
Chairman: C. B. Jeter, Area Supervisor of Agricultural Education, State Department of Education, Richmond

VTA Has General Assembly Lobbyist

(Continued from page 5)

Mr. Scott referred to the Constitution of the State Teachers professional organization which states that the "Virginia Teachers Association exists for the protection of the teacher and the promotion of education throughout Virginia."

The VTA president and Spotsylvania County School principal told of the several appearances of himself, Dr. Picott and VTA Executive Committee members before the current session of the Legislature. Mr. Scott recited the program which the VTA urged the lawmakers to adopt. This package recommendation asked for "establishment of a state-wide salary for holders of Bachelor Degrees up from $3,600 to $6,000 per teacher per year, applicable throughout the State." Other features of the VTA proposal included "classes of not over 25 pupils in elementary or secondary schools, permissible retirement for both men and women with full benefit at age 60, more generous sick leave, definite sabbatical leave, maternity leave, teacher tenure, increased allowances per school for teaching supplies and equipment and other classroom, school buildings and teacher welfare improvement."

"Quick, Teach Them Science — How Much?"

—Flannery in The Evening Sun, Baltimore

RECEIVED MAR 28 1958

MM file

VTA REPORT
VIRGINIA TEACHERS ASSOCIATION
316 E. Clay Street
Richmond 19, Virginia

Non-profit Organization
U. S. POSTAGE
PAID
Richmond, Va.
Permit No. 1385

MR. FRED ROTH, REPRESENTATIVE
SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL INC
RM. 432, 63 AUBURN AVE., N.E.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

Postmaster—Form 3547 requested

mm

7-2-58

919 North Michigan Avenue • Chicago 11, Illinois

NEWS

F.W. DODGE CORPORATION

the magazine of better school administration

For IMMEDIATE release

Attn: Education Editor

$12,000 ANNUAL SALARY IN SIGHT

FOR ELEMENTARY SCHOOL TEACHERS

CHICAGO, July 00 -- A $12,000 annual salary for elementary school teachers became possible through a referendum recently voted by the citizens of Winnetka, Ill.

According to an article in the June issue of The Nation's Schools, teaching salaries in Winnetka can rise through an "incentive formula" by frequent earned steps to an ultimate $12,000 - from a starting low salary of $4,200.

In addition to the "incentive formula" for salary increases, a four-compartment package of supplementary benefits will give Winnetka teachers extra insurance and retirement protections almost unique among school systems of the world.

Dr. S. P. Marland, Jr., superintendent of schools at Winnetka, merits great credit for obtaining the higher salary schedule and other benefits according to The Nation's Schools. He convinced his school board that dollars are one of the principal forces in putting teachers and teaching on a par with other lifetime careerists and learned professions.

MORE

Then in May 1957 the Winnetka Board of Education carefully selected a 13 member Citizens Advisory Committee on Teachers Salaries. Less than a year later, so well had this committee performed its study and informed the community of its findings, that the citizens passed by a vote of almost 5 to 1 a referendum that will make a teaching post in Winnetka one of the most rewarding - financially and professionally - of any city in the nation.

Commenting on the new salary and benefit program Dr. Marland states, "...those teachers who are merely looking for a fast buck will find no advantage in the Winnetka schedule...We are interested primarily in the long-term, the career teacher...we expect each of our teachers to turn his talents toward high quality teaching first, but also toward research and development. Our schools are to be laboratories for learning."

The new teachers' salary schedule is divided into two parts, the first of which will go into effect in Fall. The remaining steps will be put into effect annually hereafter.

The supplementary benefits, which have been voted not only for teachers, but for non-professional personnel, contain four features:

1 - a retirement benefit at age 60, which consists of $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per year of annual earnings in excess of $8000.

2 - total medical and health insurance, under Blue Cross-Blue Shield, and (after a $100 corridor) an additional coverage of major medical expenses up to $10,000.

3 - a group life insurance policy amounting to $5000.

4 - disability income, after sick leave benefits are exhausted.

The supplemental retirement plan is paid for entirely by the board of education. Costs of group insurance and comprehensive medical and health coverage are divided equally between board and board employee.

###

July 2, 1958

For further information call:

A. H. Rice, Editor
SUperior 7-6402
Chicago, Illinois

or

Daniel J. Howe, Jr.
OXford 5-3000, ext. 75
New York, New York

Ed. Dem.

HAYES--EX 3-6300
Ext. 5433

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF
HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE
Office of Education
Washington 25, D. C.

FOR RELEASE
Thursday, August 28, 1958 HEW-132

The Nation's total school and college enrollment, increasing for the 14th consecutive year, will reach a new all-time peak of about 45 million in school year 1958-59, Lawrence G. Derthick, U. S. Commissioner of Education, said today.

One of every four persons in the United States will attend school or college, Dr. Derthick pointed out.

The shortage of qualified teachers, Dr. Derthick said, will continue this school year.

Enrollment will be about 1,750,000 higher than the previous record enrollment of 43,195,000 last school year, the Commissioner reported.

Public and private school enrollment in kindergarten through Grade 8 is expected to total about 31,793,000, a gain of more than a million over last year's elementary school enrollment of 30,670,000.

A gain of almost half a million is expected in high school (Grades 9 through 12), with an enrollment of 8,880,000 in 1958-59 compared with 8,424,000 last year.

For every 100 persons aged 14-17 years, 83 persons will be enrolled in high school. Ten years ago 75 in 100 were enrolled.

Colleges and universities are expected to enroll about 173,000 more students during the coming academic year than they did last year -- 3,623,000 this year, 3,450,000 last year.

(More)

Dr. Derthick said approximately 245,500 additional qualified teachers are needed this year -- 99,000 to replace teachers who died, retired, or left the profession to be married or to take other employment last year; 55,000 to meet requirements of increased enrollments, and 91,000 to replace emergency teachers.

It is estimated that 90,300 men and women will enter the teaching profession for the first time this year and that 23,000 former emergency teachers will have attained qualified status. The remaining shortage of 132,200, Dr. Derthick said, will be met by a return to teaching by former teachers and the employment of emergency teachers, and in part by too-large classes.

Approximate school and college enrollments in recent years follow:

School Year	Kindergarten through Grade 8	Grades 9 through 12	Higher Education
1929-30	23,740,000	4,812,000	1,101,000
1939-40	21,127,000	7,130,000	1,494,000
1949-50	22,207,000	6,453,000	2,659,000
1957-58	30,670,000	8,424,000	3,450,000
1958-59	31,793,000	8,880,000	3,623,000

- 30 -

NOTE TO EDITORS: See attached tables.

SUPPLY AND DEMAND FOR ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY PUBLIC AND NONPUBLIC SCHOOL TEACHERS: 1958-59

Item	Elementary and Secondary
Supply
Total teachers 1957-58 1/	1,412,000
Less emergency teachers 1957-58 2/	91,500
Total qualified teachers 1957-58	1,320,500
Less 7.5 percent turnover of qualified teachers 3/	99,000
Qualified teachers returning for 1958-59	1,221,500
Emergency teachers qualifying for 1958-59 4/	23,000
New supply of qualified teachers (82.9 percent of elementary and 65.5 percent of high school teachers trained in 1957-58) 5/	90,300
Beginning and continuing qualified teachers 1958-59	1,334,800
Demand
Total teachers 1957-58 1/	1,412,000
Teachers needed to meet increase in enrollment in 1958-59 6/	55,000
Total Demand 1958-59	1,467,000
Teachers needed in addition to new supply of qualified teachers 7/	132,200

1/ The number of elementary and secondary school teachers in the public school system, in the fall of 1957, was 1,254,000 (Office of Education Circular No. 513 revised). To this has been added an estimated 158,000 teachers in nonpublic schools (private and parochial), in model and practice schools, in subcollegiate departments of colleges and universities, in residential schools for exceptional children, and in schools operated under Federal auspices.

2/ Office of Education Circular No. 513 revised.

3/ Turnover, as used here, includes only those who leave the profession of teaching through death, retirement, marriage, or to take a position in some other field. Changes of positions from one school system to another are not included.

4/ Approximately one quarter of the emergency teachers the previous year, probably a generous estimate. No figures are available.

5/ "The 1958 Teacher Supply and Demand Report," prepared by the National Education Association Research Division.

6/ The need for teachers is calculated at 30 pupils per teacher for grades K-8 and 25 per teacher for grades 9-12.

7/ The need for 132,200 elementary and secondary teachers will probably be met by additional emergency teachers, by the re-entrance of former teachers into the profession, and by further overcrowding. In the calculations of this figure, no provision was made for additional teachers to reduce present overcrowding or to enrich the curriculum.

Ed-Ben.

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE
Office of Education
Washington 25, D. C.

Table 1. - OFFICE OF EDUCATION ENROLLMENT ESTIMATES: CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES, 1958-59 and 1957-58

SCHOOL	YEAR 1958-59	YEAR 1957-58
Kindergarten through Grade 8:
Public school system (regular full-time) 1/	26,927,000	26,037,000
Nonpublic schools (regular full-time) 1/	4,693,000	4,466,000
Federal schools for Indians	25,000	26,000
Federal schools under P. L. 874 2/	20,000	20,000
Other 3/	128,000	121,000
Total kindergarten through Grade 8	31,793,000	30,670,000
Grades 9-12:
Public school system (regular full-time) 1/	7,790,000	7,399,000
Private and parochial schools (regular full-time) 1/	1,002,000	942,000
Federal schools for Indians	11,000	11,000
Federal schools under P. L. 874 2/	1,000	1,000
Other 3/	76,000	71,000
Total grades 9-12	8,880,000	8,424,000
Total elementary and secondary	40,673,000	39,094,000
Higher education:
Universities, colleges, professional schools, including junior colleges, normal schools and technical institutes	3,623,000	3,450,000
Other schools:
Private commercial schools (day and evening)	560,000	560,000
Nurse training schools (not affiliated with colleges and universities)	89,000	91,000
Total other schools	649,000	651,000
GRAND TOTALS	44,945,000	43,195,000

1/ Office of Education projections of February 1957.
2/ Includes only "schools operated on post by Federal Agency."
3/ Includes model and practice schools in teacher training institutions, subcollegiate departments of colleges, and residential schools for exceptional children.

NOTE: These estimates include enrollments for the entire school or college year; they are not restricted to September enrollments alone.

Total estimated population of continental United States (excluding Armed Forces overseas) as of July 1, 1957, was 170,333,000.

Total estimated 1958-59 school enrollments include 26 percent of this population.

LLOYD--EX 3-6300
Ext. 3036
BUCKLEY--Ext. 2237

Ed. Rem.

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF
HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE
Office of Education
Washington 25, D. C.

ADVANCE RELEASE FOR
Sunday, August 30, 1959 HEW-L9

The Nation's school and college enrollment, increasing for the 15th consecutive year, will reach an all-time high of 46,480,000 in the school year 1959-60, Commissioner of Education, Lawrence G. Derthick, announced today.

This is an increase of 1,940,000 over the 44,540,000 enrollment for the 1958-59 school year.

Commissioner Derthick estimated that a total of 1,563,000 teachers will be needed in both public and nonpublic schools in the coming year, whereas the number presently qualified is 1,368,000.

Making up this total supply are 1,248,000 teachers expected to continue in service; 97,000 newly trained teachers; and 23,000 teachers formerly employed with substandard credentials but now fully trained and certified. A part of this shortage will be met by former instructors returning to service, but the number cannot be determined.

"The deficit of teachers will mean, in many communities, over-large classes or the employment of teachers without adequate training, or both," Commissioner Derthick said. "In many instances, it will also mean curtailing the number of subjects offered."

Last year, elementary and secondary schools were 182,000 teachers short of the total need.

Intensifying the scarce supply of teachers, Commissioner Derthick said, is the teacher-turnover rate of 10.9 percent, which represents the proportion of teachers who leave the profession each year. Studies in progress confirm this rate as being more accurate than the 7.5 percent formerly utilized in calculating teacher shortages.

The Commissioner pointed out that one out of every four persons in the United States is now attending school, from kindergarten through college. Last October, 89.2 percent of boys and girls 14 through 17 years of age were enrolled in secondary schools and colleges. Ten years ago, 81.8 percent were enrolled.

Anticipated enrollments for the 1959-60 school year in public, non-public and miscellaneous elementary and secondary schools are estimated, by grade levels, to be 33,460,000 in kindergarten through Grade 8 and 9,240,000 in Grades 9 through 12, compared with 32,010,000 and 8,940,000, respectively, last year.

Institutions of higher education expect a total enrollment of 3,780,000 as compared with 3,590,000 last year.

Commissioner Derthick warned that swelling enrollments and their attendant problems are likely to continue for many years. Four years from now, he said, the school-age population--pupils 5 through 17 years of age--will probably go as high as 48.8 million or 13 percent more than at present.

Approximate school and college enrollments in recent years follow:

School-Year	Kindergarten through Grade 8	Grades 9 through 12	Higher Education
1929-30	23,740,000	4,812,000	1,101,000
1939-40	21,127,000	7,130,000	1,494,000
1949-50	22,207,000	6,453,000	2,659,000
1958-59 (Est.)	32,010,000	8,940,000	3,590,000
1959-60 (Est.)	33,460,000	9,240,000	3,780,000

- 30 -

NOTE TO EDITORS: Additional details are contained in 5 attached tables.

Table 1--OFFICE OF EDUCATION ENROLLMENT ESTIMATES: CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES (EXCLUDING ALASKA), 1959-60 AND 1958-59

(Estimates are for total enrollment during the school year. These figures are larger than figures for fall enrollment)

GRADE LEVEL AND TYPE OF SCHOOL	1959-60	1958-59
Kindergarten through Grade 8:
Public school system (regular full-time)	27,890,000	26,780,000
Nonpublic schools (regular full-time)	5,400,000	5,060,000
Other schools[1]	170,000	170,000
Total, Kindergarten through Grade 8	33,460,000	32,010,000
Grades 9 through 12:
Public school system (regular full-time)	8,100,000	7,840,000
Nonpublic schools (regular full-time)	1,050,000	1,010,000
Other schools[1]	90,000	90,000
Total, Grades 9 through 12	9,240,000	8,940,000
Kindergarten through Grade 12:
Public school system (regular full-time)	35,990,000	34,620,000
Nonpublic schools (regular full-time)	6,450,000	6,070,000
Other schools[1]	260,000	260,000
Total, Kindergarten through Grade 12	42,700,000	40,950,000
Higher Education:
Universities, colleges, professional schools, junior colleges, normal schools, and teachers colleges (degree-credit enrollment)	3,780,000	3,590,000
Total, elementary, secondary, and higher education	46,480,000	44,540,000

[1] Includes Federal schools for Indians, Federally-operated elementary-secondary schools on posts, model and practice schools in teacher training institutions, subcollegiate departments of colleges, and residential schools for exceptional children.

Table 2--OFFICE OF EDUCATION ESTIMATES OF SUPPLY AND DEMAND, ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY CLASSROOM TEACHERS, PUBLIC AND NONPUBLIC SCHOOLS: CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES (EXCLUDING ALASKA), 1959-60

DEMAND
Total classroom teachers, preceding year (1958-59).....	1,493,000
Total classroom teachers needed to meet enrollment increases from 1958-59 to 1959-60.....	70,000
Total classroom teachers needed, 1959-60.....		1,563,000
SUPPLY FROM REGULAR SOURCES
A. Qualified teachers of the preceding year returning to classroom service:
Total classroom teachers, preceding year (1958-59).....	1,493,000
Less teachers with substandard credentials in public schools preceding year (Fall 1958).....	92,300
Qualified classroom teachers, preceding year.....	1,400,700
Less qualified teachers not returning to classroom service in 1959-60[1].....	152,700
Qualified teachers of the preceding year returning to classroom service in 1959-60.....		1,248,000
B. Newly trained teachers entering classroom service[2].....		97,000
C. Teachers with substandard credentials becoming fully certificated[3].....		23,000
Total qualified teachers from above sources in classroom service, 1959-60.....		1,368,000
SUPPLY NEEDED FROM OTHER SOURCES, 1959-60.....		195,000
To be met by the re-entrance of former teachers into the profession, employment of teachers with substandard credentials, further overcrowding of classes, or curtailment of curriculum. (The corresponding figure for 1958-59, using the same dropout rate, is 182,000[1])

1/ This figure for the number of qualified teachers not returning to classrooms is estimated on the basis of a 10.9 percent dropout rate. The total is approximately 50,000 higher than would be obtained by using the dropout rate of 7.5 percent employed in previous years. The advisability of using the new rate was indicated by the results of a survey being conducted by the Office of Education.

2/ Derived from "The 1959 Teacher Supply and Demand Report," National Education Association, Research Division. Computed as 83.3 percent of newly certificated inexperienced elementary teachers, and 67.8 percent for high school teachers.

3/ One-quarter of the teachers with substandard credentials the preceding year, probably a generous estimate. No data available.

Table 3--OFFICE OF EDUCATION DATA ON ENROLLMENT, TEACHERS, AND CLASSROOMS IN PUBLIC, ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY SCHOOLS, BY STATE: Fall of 1958

STATE	Fall Enrollment 1/		Classroom Teachers		Classrooms
	Number	Percent of U. S. total	Number	Percent of U. S. total	Number	Percent of U. S. total
(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)	(5)	(6)	(7)
Continental U. S. excluding Alaska	33,936,470	100.00	1,300,560	100.00	2/1,232,667	2/100.00
1. Alabama	780,000	2.30	26,000	2.00	23,375	1.90
2. Arizona	273,734	.81	9,215	.71	8,562	.69
3. Arkansas	420,700	1.24	13,830	1.06	9,954	.81
4. California	3,035,000	8.94	104,600	8.04	98,000	7.95
5. Colorado	360,972	1.06	15,177	1.17	14,188	1.15
6. Connecticut	440,832	1.30	17,892	1.38	16,241	1.32
7. Delaware	73,551	.22	3,234	.25	2,805	.23
8. District of Columbia	113,030	.33	4,089	.31	3,667	.30
9. Florida	857,723	2.53	32,521	2.50	28,194	2.29
10. Georgia	893,431	2.63	30,950	2.38	30,272	2.46
11. Idaho	149,638	.44	6,034	.46	5,792	.47
12. Illinois	1,612,145	4.75	67,040	5.15	56,892	4.62
13. Indiana	910,000	2.68	33,000	2.54	31,522	2.56
14. Iowa	554,223	1.63	24,746	1.90	19,965	1.62
15. Kansas	441,000	1.30	20,100	1.55	3/	3/
16. Kentucky	614,607	1.81	22,602	1.74	22,290	1.81
17. Louisiana	655,191	1.93	25,377	1.95	23,652	1.92
18. Maine	191,622	.56	7,653	.59	7,450	.60
19. Maryland	557,540	1.64	20,784	1.60	18,027	1.46
20. Massachusetts	809,100	2.38	33,040	2.54	35,432	2.87
21. Michigan	1,603,194	4.72	62,000	4.77	58,978	4.78
22. Minnesota	650,800	1.92	28,025	2.15	26,222	2 13
23. Mississippi	552,000	1.63	16,620	1.28	15,212	1.23
24. Missouri	787,419	2.32	28,680	2.21	29,035	2.36
25. Montana	136,901	.40	6,689	.51	6,669	.54
26. Nebraska	267,618	.79	14,021	1.08	13,798	1.12
27. Nevada	56,396	.17	2,318	.18	2,229	.18
28. New Hampshire	98,953	.29	4,112	.32	3,880	.31
29. New Jersey	971,000	2.86	41,500	3.19	33,700	2.73
30. New Mexico	204,137	.60	7,925	.61	7,627	.62
31. New York	2,624,582	7.73	111,234	8.55	106,400	8.63
32. North Carolina	1,061,171	3.13	36,000	2.77	37,711	3.06
33. North Dakota	127,003	.37	4/6,939	.53	5,984	.49
34. Ohio	1,782,637	5.25	65,812	5.06	63,334	5.14
35. Oklahoma	5/540,433	1.59	19,439	1.49	25,512	2.07
36. Oregon	359,215	1.06	14,701	1.13	14,497	1.18
37. Pennsylvania	1,915,051	5.64	68,943	5.30	68,098	5.52
38. Rhode Island	125,165	.37	4,988	.38	4,407	.36
39. South Carolina	558,212	1.64	19,762	1.52	19,149	1.55
40. South Dakota	145,608	.43	8,007	.62	8,407	.68
41. Tennessee	769,506	2.27	27,795	2.14	24,048	1.95
42. Texas	1,956,000	5.76	74,621	5.74	70,876	5.75
43. Utah	218,157	.64	7,790	.60	7,340	.60
44. Vermont	71,061	.21	3,045	.23	3,086	.25
45. Virginia	803,719	2.37	29,783	2.29	27,187	2.21
46. Washington	595,850	1.76	24,799	1.91	20,875	1.69
47. West Virginia	458,425	1.35	16,458	1.26	16,171	1.31
48. Wisconsin	675,000	1.99	27,050	2.08	29,741	2.44
49. Wyoming	77,218	.23	3,620	.28	3,315	.27

SOURCE: Office of Education Circular 551, Fall 1958 statistics on enrollment, teachers, and school housing in full-time public elementary and secondary schools. Detail may not add to total because of rounding.

1/Fall 1958 enrollment is slightly less than enrollment for the entire school year 1958-59.
2/Includes estimate for nonreporting States.
3/Data not available.
4/Excludes kindergarten teachers.
5/Data for 1957-58.

Table 4.--BUREAU OF CENSUS DATA ON SCHOOL-AGE POPULATION as of July 1, 1955, 1959, and 1963; Percent of Increase, 1955 to 1959 and 1959 to 1963; by State
(Amounts in Thousands)

STATE	School-Age Population (5-17 years, inclusive)				Increases in School-Age Population
	1959 (estimated)		1955 (actual)	1963 (estimated)	1955 to 1959		1959 to 1963
	Number	Percent of U.S. Total			Number	Percent Increase	Number	Percent Increase
(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)	(5)	(6)	(7)	(8)	(9)
Continental United States excluding Alaska	43,347	100.00	37,262	48,815	6,085	16.33	5,468	12.61
Alabama	891	2.06	852	909	39	4.58	18	2.02
Arizona	319	.74	249	400	70	28.11	81	25.39
Arkansas	467	1.08	490	436	-23	-4.69	-31	-6.64
California	3,512	8.10	2,697	4,296	815	30.22	784	22.32
Colorado	444	1.02	351	527	93	26.50	83	18.69
Connecticut	541	1.25	455	623	86	18.90	82	15.16
Delaware	111	.26	82	139	29	35.37	28	25.23
Florida	1,068	2.46	757	1,354	311	41.08	286	26.78
Georgia	1,069	2.47	961	1,159	108	11.24	90	8.42
Idaho	181	.42	162	193	19	11.73	12	6.63
Illinois	2,318	5.35	1,935	2,666	383	19.79	348	15.01
Indiana	1,170	2.70	985	1,338	185	18.78	168	14.36
Iowa	690	1.59	614	743	76	12.38	53	7.68
Kansas	530	1.22	453	599	77	17.00	69	13.02
Kentucky	819	1.89	784	842	35	4.46	23	2.81
Louisiana	882	2.03	762	997	120	15.75	115	13.04
Maine	233	.54	214	245	19	8.88	12	5.15
Maryland	760	1.75	614	889	146	23.78	129	16.97
Massachusetts	1,082	2.50	982	1,170	100	10.18	88	8.13
Michigan	2,056	4.74	1,677	2,434	379	22.60	378	18.39
Minnesota	862	1.99	747	967	115	15.39	105	12.18
Mississippi	625	1.44	607	626	18	2.97	1	.16
Missouri	996	2.30	895	1,105	101	11.28	109	10.94
Montana	181	.42	153	205	28	18.30	24	13.26
Nebraska	356	.82	309	392	47	15.21	36	10.11
Nevada	70	.16	50	93	20	40.00	23	32.86
New Hampshire	137	.32	122	153	15	12.30	16	11.68
New Jersey	1,329	3.07	1,074	1,540	255	23.74	211	15.88
New Mexico	252	.58	218	294	34	15.60	42	16.67
New York	3,614	8.34	3,160	4,046	454	14.37	432	11.95
North Carolina	1,253	2.89	1,154	1,330	99	8.58	77	6.15
North Dakota	176	.41	167	185	9	5.39	9	5.11
Ohio	2,346	5.41	1,968	2,751	378	19.21	405	17.26
Oklahoma	557	1.28	537	561	20	3.72	4	.72
Oregon	450	1.04	382	496	68	17.80	46	10.22
Pennsylvania	2,597	5.99	2,352	2,821	245	10.42	224	8.63
Rhode Island	195	.45	166	214	29	17.47	19	9.74
South Carolina	717	1.65	653	764	64	9.80	47	6.56
South Dakota	184	.42	166	199	18	10.84	15	8.15
Tennessee	916	2.11	867	953	49	5.65	37	4.04
Texas	2,553	5.89	2,092	2,941	461	22.04	388	15.20
Utah	257	.59	215	294	42	19.53	37	14.40
Vermont	93	.21	89	96	4	4.49	3	3.23
Virginia	1,018	2.35	865	1,132	153	17.69	114	11.20
Washington	707	1.63	592	792	115	19.43	85	12.02
West Virginia	527	1.22	537	508	-10	-1.86	-19	-3.61
Wisconsin	987	2.28	846	1,114	141	16.67	127	12.87
Wyoming	87	.20	76	95	11	14.47	8	9.20
District of Columbia	161	.37	122	185	39	31.97	24	14.91

1/ Civilian non-institutional population aged 5-17 years, inclusive, as of July 1. Estimates for 1959 and 1963 assume migration at 1950-57 levels.

NOTE: Details may not add to total because of rounding.

Source: Cols. 2 and 5, Bureau of the Census, P-25, No. 201; Col. 4, P. 25, No. 151.

Table 5.--OFFICE OF EDUCATION DATA ON HIGHER EDUCATION ENROLLMENT AND DEGREES: By State: 1958

STATE	Higher Education Degree-Credit Enrollment Fall 1958		Bachelor's and 1st Professional Degrees, School Year 1957-58		Master's Degrees School Year 1957-58		Doctor's Degrees School Year 1957-58
	Number	Percent of U.S. Total	Number	Percent of U.S. Total	Number	Percent of U.S. Total	Number	Percent of U.S. Total
(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)	(5)	(6)	(7)	(8)	(9)
Continental United States excluding Alaska.....	3,226,038	100.00	362,554	100.00	65,487	100.00	8,938	100.00
Alabama.....	44,036	1.36	6,104	1.68	731	1.12	27	.30
Arizona.....	29,607	.92	2,449	.68	507	.77	9	.10
Arkansas.....	23,054	.71	3,249	.90	466	.71	14	.16
California.....	386,520	11.98	26,501	7.30	5,435	8.29	882	9.87
Colorado.....	44,778	1.39	5,235	1.44	1,306	1.99	134	1.50
Connecticut.....	43,332	1.34	4,974	1.37	1,314	2.01	228	2.55
Delaware.....	6,865	.21	457	.13	132	.20	21	.23
Florida.....	59,573	1.85	6,375	1.76	981	1.50	107	1.20
Georgia.....	48,739	1.51	6,133	1.69	538	.82	32	.36
Idaho.....	10,829	.34	1,162	.32	149	.23	-	-
Illinois.....	173,222	5.37	18,505	5.10	3,911	5.97	747	8.36
Indiana.....	85,852	2.66	11,579	3.19	2,525	3.86	458	5.12
Iowa.....	51,919	1.61	6,918	1.91	856	1.31	291	3.26
Kansas.....	48,194	1.49	6,223	1.72	869	1.33	91	1.02
Kentucky.....	42,703	1.32	5,565	1.53	761	1.16	37	.41
Louisiana.....	52,479	1.63	6,261	1.73	822	1.26	87	.97
Maine.....	11,992	.37	1,780	.49	157	.24	-	-
Maryland.....	46,029	1.43	4,989	1.38	651	.99	186	2.08
Massachusetts.....	125,951	3.90	16,979	4.68	3,788	5.78	674	7.54
Michigan.....	143,962	4.46	15,671	4.32	4,234	6.47	439	4.91
Minnesota.....	70,163	2.17	8,378	2.31	973	1.49	221	2.47
Mississippi.....	30,250	.94	4,103	1.13	467	.71	6	.07
Missouri.....	77,012	2.39	9,055	2.50	1,131	1.73	134	1.50
Montana.....	11,235	.35	1,552	.43	195	.30	5	.06
Nebraska.....	30,525	.95	3,813	1.05	399	.61	48	.54
Nevada.....	3,354	.10	245	.07	27	.04	-	-
New Hampshire.....	10,866	.34	1,732	.48	180	.27	5	.06
New Jersey.....	73,268	2.27	6,911	1.91	1,506	2.30	197	2.20
New Mexico.....	15,554	.48	1,372	.38	388	.59	16	.18
New York.....	326,846	10.13	35,941	9.91	9,917	15.14	1,397	15.63
North Carolina.....	61,872	1.92	8,744	2.41	1,286	1.96	163	1.82
North Dakota.....	12,618	.39	1,529	.42	177	.27	9	.10
Ohio.....	156,385	4.85	17,287	4.77	2,239	3.42	350	3.92
Oklahoma.....	53,105	1.65	6,524	1.80	1,269	1.94	72	.81
Oregon.....	38,530	1.19	4,451	1.23	736	1.12	85	.95
Pennsylvania.....	175,061	5.43	23,506	6.48	3,512	5.36	514	5.75
Rhode Island.....	16,677	.52	2,100	.58	161	.25	42	.47
South Carolina.....	29,764	.92	4,199	1.16	292	.45	14	.16
South Dakota.....	14,610	.45	1,916	.53	263	.40	-	-
Tennessee.....	56,910	1.76	7,465	2.06	1,463	2.23	130	1.45
Texas.....	175,854	5.45	19,321	5.33	3,721	5.68	263	2.94
Utah.....	30,972	.96	3,821	1.05	385	.59	55	.62
Vermont.....	8,060	.25	1,246	.34	188	.29	2	.02
Virginia.....	54,104	1.68	6,099	1.68	525	.80	61	.68
Washington.....	57,385	1.78	6,303	1.74	720	1.10	141	1.58
West Virginia.....	27,918	.87	3,337	.92	444	.68	7	.07
Wisconsin.....	67,596	2.10	8,266	2.28	1,288	1.97	311	3.48
Wyoming.....	6,362	.20	599	.17	167	.26	12	.13
District of Columbia.....	41,738	1.29	3,794	1.05	1,128	1.72	214	2.39
U.S. Service Schools.....	11,808	.37	1,836	.51	207	.32	-	-

NOTE: Detail may not add to total because of rounding.
Source: Col. 2, Office of Education Circular No. 544 Table 1, Opening (Fall) Enrollment in Higher Education, 1958: Institutional Data
Cols. 4, 6, 8 Office of Education Circular No. 570 Table 18, Earned Degrees Conferred by Higher Educational Institutions: 1957-58

SOUTHEASTERN OFFICE

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH

41 Exchange Place, S. E. Atlanta 3, Ga.

LWD

MEMORANDUM

Mat - Intergroup Education

To: ADL Chairmen

From: Murray L. Shapiro

Date: March 10, 1960

Subject: Anti-Semitism -- What The School Can Do To Prevent It

Much concern has been evidenced in various local communities over the recent rash of anti-Semitic incidents in the United States. Since the vast majority of these desecrations have been committed by adolescents between the ages of 14 and 19, we feel that the responsibility for these acts must be shared equally between the home, the church and the school. The facts concerning these incidents seem to indicate that the young people involved are largely ignorant of Nazism, the meaning of the swastika, and the threat of such totalitarian ideology to our democratic way of life.

Specifically regarding the responsibility of the school, we strongly recommend that the following information be shared with the public school educators in your community:

1. Teachers should recognize that schools share in the responsibility for anti-social behavior, and therefore they cannot ignore the problem.

2. Teachers should become more sensitive to what happens to Jewish children in school:

   (a) from kindergarten to the 12th grade some experience name-calling, scapegoating and abuse.

   (b) from early teens on, some experience exclusion; e.g., from parties and from certain school clubs and prestige activities.

3. Teachers should examine their own and their pupils' attitudes and behavior towards Jews and Judaism. The teacher sets an example which the children follow. At all ages, pupils identify with teachers' values.

4. Teachers should teach the facts:

   (a) about the various ethnic groups in American history and in present-day American life (their contributions to business, industry, science, medicine, literature, theatre, films, art, music, military services).

   (b) about the World War 11 period, and specifically about the Nazi movement and the swastika symbol as dangerous to Democracy and to Christianity, as well as to Jews.

   (c) about intergroup education as an integral part of teaching democratic principles.

5. Teachers should never ignore pupils' anti-social speech (stereotypes) and action (rejection) and the symbol of the swastika, which may point to the existence of organized anti-social behavior which needs to be exposed. They can challenge and correct stereotypes and help children to respect, understand and include those different from themselves.

6. Teachers should encourage classroom discussions of current events which call for the use of critical thinking and propaganda analysis.

7. Teachers should develop school-wide programs of intergroup education (for which you can offer to provide materials and consultant service), with the objective of creating a society within the school in which anti-Semitic behavior is unacceptable.

8. Teachers can help parental understanding of the problem of anti-social behavior by discussing it in PTA's, Church Study Groups, Mental Health Associations, and by cooperating in programs and projects with local human relations groups such as your ADL committee.

In order to help teachers implement the above suggestions, your regional ADL office has prepared a special packet of resource materials specifically designed for classroom use. The packet has been priced at the minimal cost of $3.00 so that your ADL committee can make at least one available to each school in your community.

ms:dg
cc: B'nai B'rith Presidents

ORDER FORM

Southeastern Regional Office
ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH
41 Exchange Place, SE, Atlanta 3, Ga.

Please send_____packets of resource materials dealing with anti-semitism and prejudice, specifically designed for classroom use.

Included in the packet are the following:

Prejudiced - How Do People Get That Way	.25
American Jews: Their Story	.35
Danger in Discord	.35
Prejudice and Society	.35
A Primer for Parents	.40
The Jews (Look reprint)	.10
Position of Jews in America Today (reprint)	.10
ABC's of Scapegoating	.35
Behind the Desecrations	n/c
Barriers (soft-cover)	1.50
	3.75

SPECIAL PRICE PER PACKET 3.00

(Individual items as indicated above)

_____
name

_____
address

_____
city

Note: Postage charges will be absorbed if remittance is included with order.

mm
919 North Michigan Avenue • Chicago 11, Illinois

NEWS

F.W. DODGE CORPORATION

the magazine of better school administration

Ken

For IMMEDIATE release

Attn: Education Editor

MAT- ED- Teacher Status and Tenure

A VOTE FOR MERIT RATING

CHICAGO, July 00 -- In the past two years a majority of school administrators have become more favorably disposed toward the merit rating system for teachers according to a representative sampling of school administrators throughout the nation by The Nation's Schools and published in the June issue.

In response to whether fellow teachers, parents and children should help to identify the superior teacher, 62.6% of those who answered yes felt it should be fellow teachers only, with 55.5% responding no to the question of whether teacher superiority should be the responsibility of the administrative staff and board.

Several superintendents participating in the poll felt "that before any merit salary system is adopted by schools, there should first be a satisfactory base pay."

One superintendent whose school has successfully conducted a merit salary plan for many years states, "The reluctance of school administrators and organized teacher groups to consider the merit pay question, in my opinion, has been one of the chief deterrents to the development of truly professional salary levels. As we increase the ceiling of opportunity, we should be able to recruit more of the most able minds into the teaching profession."

MORE

The following table shows the breakdown of replies:

EXTRA PAY FOR SUPERIOR TEACHING?

1. Do you favor the principle of extra pay for superior teaching (that is, paying the teacher somewhat in accordance with the quality of his or her teaching)?
   Yes.....80.8% No.....19.2%

2. Do you think your teachers favor this principle?
   Yes.....34% No.....59.2% No opinion.....6.8%

3. Do you think your school board would favor this principle?
   Yes.....74% No.....22.8% No opinion.....3.2%

4. Should the rating of a teacher's superiority be solely the responsibility of the administrative staff and the board?
   Yes.....40.4% No.....55.5% No opinion.....4.4%

5. If extra pay is to be granted for superior teaching, should any of the following groups participate in helping to identify the superior teacher: fellow teachers, parents, children?
   Yes.....65.2% No.....14.4% No opinion.....20.4%

   Of those who answered Yes:

   Teachers....62.6% Parents....2.5% Children....1.2%
   Teachers and parents....8% Parents and Children....0.6%
   Teachers and children....5.5%
   Teachers, parents, children....19.6%

6. Have you changed your mind on merit rating within the last two years? If so, are you: more favorable to merit rating? more opposed?
   Yes.....74.8% No.....11.2% No opinion.....14%
   More favorable.....77.5% More opposed.....22.5%

###

July 2, 1958

For further information call:

A. H. Rice, Editor
SUperior 7-6402
Chicago, Illinois

or

Daniel J. Howe, Jr.
OXford 5-3000, ext. 75
New York, New York

Ed, Sm

A Research Report from

ENGELHARDT, ENGELHARDT AND LEGGETT 300 PARK AVENUE, NEW YORK 22, NEW YORK

CONSULTANTS TO BOARDS OF EDUCATION IN THE DETERMINATION OF SCHOOL BUILDING NEEDS AND THE PLANNING OF SCHOOL BUILDINGS

SCHOOL ENROLLMENT BEGINS LONG CLIMB

by N. L. Engelhardt, Jr.

STAGGERING PROBLEMS AHEAD

National public school enrollment in 1952 is estimated to be 7 per cent above the 1940 figure. By 1960, the enrollment may be expected to rise to a figure 34 per cent higher than in 1940.

School enrollment began its climb in 1946, when it numbered approximately 23,500,000 pupils. It is estimated that, in 1952, the total enrollment is 27,000,000. By 1960, the total may be expected to exceed 34,000,000.

Heavy kindergarten enrollments this year are the result of the large number of births in 1947 - but 1951 broke 1947's record in births, and it looks as though 1952 would see an all-time high.

The full effect of the high plateau in birth figures between 1947 and 1952 will not be felt in the elementary schools until 1958; until then, expect a steady climb.

If your community follows the national average, first grade enrollments this year are about 20 per cent above last year's figure. Next September will bring another 12 per cent rise, after which there will be a three-year lull before the upward trend begins again.

Junior high schools will feel the full impact about 1959. Enrollment in senior high schools, climbing slowly at present, will increase sharply following 1961.

COPYRIGHTED 1952 BY ENGELHARDT, ENGELHARDT AND LEGGETT

For every six elementary school classrooms in use in 1952-53, you will need, within five years, an additional room - or more, if you have not been keeping up with enrollment increases.

For every 100 pupils in junior high school today, you may expect 140 by 1961.

For every 100 pupils in senior high school today, you may expect 150 by 1965.

ESSENTIAL FACTS

Births

The number of children born in 1951 attained a record high. Preliminary estimates for 1952 indicate the possibility that a new record may be achieved. This means six successive, record-breaking years.

The birth rate from 1935 to 1940 ranged from 18 to 19 births per thousand population. From 1941 to 1945 the rate ranged from 20 to 23, while from 1946 to 1952 the rate has exceeded 24.

Marriages

The number of marriages in the United States reached a peak in 1946, undoubtedly reflecting delays in marriages of young people due to the war. Subsequent years witnessed a continuing high marriage rate, although considerably below the 1946 peak.

The number of families has increased significantly in recent years, from an estimated 32,000,000 in 1940 to approximately 40,000,000 in 1951. Similarly, the size of the family has also increased.

People are getting married at an earlier age. The median age for first marriages for men was 24.6 years in 1920 and 22.6 years in 1951, while for women it was 21.2 in 1920 and 20.4 in 1951.

A greater percentage of the total population is now married than ever before. In 1940, 60 per cent of all persons sixteen years of age and over were married; in 1951, the percentage stood at 68.

TRENDS IN NUMBERS OF BIRTHS, MARRAGES AND NEW HOMES
1930–1951

ENGELHARDT, ENGELHARDT AND LEGGETT
Educational Consultants

All this would indicate that the increase in the number of children which is occurring cannot be passed off as simply a temporary rise following the war.

New Homes

A surge in the construction of new homes occurred between 1936 and 1941, when it was halted by the war. A tremendous resurge began in 1944, with the count still high in 1952. The large number of new families which have been organized contributed much to this demand. Equally significant are decentralization of large urban centers, new locations for business and industry, and superhighways extending the radius of daily activity. New neighborhoods and new communities have been created where the demand for schools never before existed.

LOOKING WAY AHEAD

On the average, the parents of today's elementary school (K-6) children were born during the years from 1919 through 1925. During those years, there were 20,425,000 births, compared with today's enrollment of 17,110,000 pupils in kindergarten through sixth grade.

During the years from 1946 through 1952, there were 25,888,000 births - the parents of the children who will be in elementary school in 1979-80.

If high birth rates continue, by 1980 the elementary school enrollment will exceed 30,000,000, instead of today's 17,000,000. Even if the very low birth rate of the thirties should recur, the elementary school enrollment will, in all likelihood, exceed the present enrollment.

Every fact points to the vital need for long-range educational planning in all communities. Thus, the maximum use of facilities would be secured, financing ability would be conserved, and proper and orderly development to meet this staggering load of the future would be assured.

INDEX NUMBERS OF ENROLLMENT TRENDS

The table and graphs of index numbers provide a simple method of comparing your local enrollments with the national trend. The base year is 1940, with an index number of 100. Comparisons can be made by converting your enrollment figures into index numbers and plotting them on this graph.

Index numbers are obtained by dividing the enrollment figures for each year by the enrollment for 1940. By plotting these index figures, you can readily see whether your community is above or below the national norm. This may also give you some inkling of the trend that may be faced by your schools over the next few years. Even if you do not have kindergartens, these index numbers may be used with a reasonable degree of accuracy.

INDEX NUMBERS OF TRENDS IN PUBLIC SCHOOL ENROLLMENTS
IN THE UNITED STATES, 1940-41 - 1969-70

Base: 1940 = 100

School Year	K-6	7-9	10-12	K-8	9-12	Total
1940-41	100	100	100	100	100	100
1941-42	98	97	96	98	95	97
1942-43	97	96	90	97	91	95
1943-44	95	93	81	95	83	92
1944-45	95	91	82	95	83	92
1945-46	96	89	83	95	84	92
1946-47	97	90	87	96	87	93
1947-48	100	90	84	99	84	94
1948-49	103	91	84	101	84	97
1949-50	106	94	84	105	85	99
1950-51	108	96	86	106	87	101
1951-52	110	98	88	108	88	103
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1953-54	122	102	92	119	93	112
1954-55	126	106	94	123	94	116
1955-56	129	112	96	127	97	119
1956-57	133	115	98	131	100	122
1957-58	139	113	102	134	105	126
1958-59	142	118	107	138	108	130
1959-60	142	127	110	142	107	133
1960-61	142	137	108	143	112	134
1961-62		140	113		120
1962-63		138	123		125
1963-64		140	131		131
1964-65		143	134		133
1965-66		146	132		133
1966-67			134		135
1967-68			137		137
1968-69			140
1969-70			141

INDEX NUMBERS OF TRENDS IN PUBLIC SCHOOL ENROLLMENTS IN THE UNITED STATES, 1940–41 – 1969 – 70

BASE : 1940 = 100

ENGELHARDT, ENGELHARDT AND LEGGETT

Educational Consultants

INDEX NUMBERS OF TRENDS IN PUBLIC SCHOOL ENROLLMENTS IN THE UNITED STATES, 1940–41 – 1969 – 70

BASE : 1940 = 100

ENGELHARDT, ENGELHARDT AND LEGGETT

Educational Consultants

Are L.A.'s Schoolteach

(Editor's Note: In keeping with its policy of going "behind" the news, The Mirror today begins a series of four articles on a poll of Los Angeles teachers. Purpose of the poll was to learn the teachers' state of mind and whether they feel the public schools are serving democracy.)

BY VERNON MACPHERSON and GEORGE KETZE
Mirror Staff Writers

More than half the political science and history teachers in Los Angeles high schools who answered a Mirror poll are "afraid to teach" because of recurrent uproars over "controversial subjects."

Teachers are afraid they'll be accused of being "leftwingers" if they try to lead classroom discussions on such topics as the New Deal, public housing, Sen. McCarthy and Communism.

They're afraid they'll lose their jobs.

They believe this fear of controversy stifles public education.

They believe knowledge of those subjects is essential to good citizenship and that their students are being cheated of this knowledge by fear.

Those are just a few of the conclusions reached in a Mirror poll of Los Angeles high school political science and history teachers.

The poll was an honest effort to prove or disprove charges that Los Angeles teachers are so browbeaten their students are being deprived of knowledge of the social and political world in which they live.

Two hundred and fifty questionnaires were sent out. The response was excellent, despite the fact that the poll concerned controversial matters and that teachers were asked to outline their reasons for answering as they did.

In publishing these comments, The Mirror has been careful to present a balanced view, with both sides of every question receiving fair representation.

Ten questions were asked, ranging from inquiries concerning teachers' fear of losing their jobs to whether they feel spied upon by loyalty investigators.

The answers received were illuminating, especially in view of charges by Robert Hutchins, former chancellor of the University of Chicago, that American teachers are afraid blunt and forthright in their comments.

Here are some samples:

"Students certainly are being deprived. Few students are even conscious of the most important issues. It is just too dangerous for teachers to raise questions about which there is disagreement. We have seen acquaintances who were guilty of nothing but energetic good teaching attacked and discredited with no adequate means of defense.

"We have seen them cleared, and then penalized for having been accused. The best teachers are looking for other work if young, and most of us who plan to continue until retirement are being most careful.

"The inquisition is damaging through its paralyzing effect on the many teachers who fear unjust and damaging attacks on their deservedly good reputations."

Another teacher doesn't agree with that summing-up of the situation in local schools.

He wrote:

"The lack of freedom of teachers to teach in Los Angeles has been exaggerated by Dr. Hutchins' article in a recent issue of Look magazine. It is a disappointing contribution of half-truths and wild imaginings from an educator who should know better."

Here is a short, pithy No vote:

"It is entirely false for anyone to say that students are being deprived educationally."

One of the bitterest of the local uproars was about UNESCO, a U.N. agency whose announced purpose is the free exchange of knowledge among the nations of the world.

Russia has never joined UNESCO, but despite that it has been accused of being a Communist-infiltrated organization.

Pressure was brought to bear on the school board, which after a year of committee meetings and discussion, instructed teachers they could discuss UNESCO and the United Nations in current affairs but banned any organized U.N. or UNESCO teaching program as such.

such subjects as the New Deal, public housing, McCarthy and Communism.

More than 21% consider the U.S. Constitution, the Bill of Rights and the 5th Amendment "dangerous" subjects for classroom discussion.

Sixty-seven per cent feel they shoulud be careful of subscribing to certain books and magazines and of attending meetings and joining organizations.

In general, teachers answering the poll felt that everyone, including parents, should be wary of joining organizations.

"Without question," one teacher wrote, "teachers feel they must be cautious about the books and magazines they subscribe to and the meetings or organizations they attend.

"Whether we like it or not, we are used as examples of conduct and we must keep this in mind. It is generally assumed that teachers do help direct mass thinking and we have been placed in the role of community leader. What we do, what we say, what books we read, where we go, are all made that they won't be misinterpreted or misquoted and that they will get the message of open thinking and discussion across.

"Many teachers have reached the point where they consider it dangerous to confess there are still improvements to be made in our society."

A courageous teacher wrote:

"I try to handle controversial subjects honestly and frankly and let the chips fall where they may."

One teacher wrote he handles frankly such topics as the New Deal and public housing but "avoids any discussion of McCarthy or Communism."

"I feel this is prudent at the present time," he commented.

Another teacher disagrees:

"We can still discuss — and give FACTS—without fear of any problem with school administration or outside groups."

One teacher said he belongs to the Republican Party, the Americans for Democratic Action, and the American Civil Liberties Union.

"I'm extremely circumspect about my opinions," chers Afraid to Teach?

e misin-oted and the mes-king and ve reached y consider fess there ents to be

"

her wrote:
ntroversial nd frankly fall where he handles as the New using but ion of Mc-sm."

dent at the mmented.
sagrees:
uss — and ut fear of hool admin-groups."
he belongs
Party, the ocratic Ac-rican Civil circum-

pinions."

them up deliberately. Some students will approach the teacher and shyly ask if they may do a term paper on one of these 'controversial subjects.' This always gives the teacher the opportunity to ask, 'How else can you combat something if you do not know about it?' One boy didn't want the class to discuss anything about Communism he was so afraid of the subject."

A teacher wrote that only "fearful" instructors consider the Constitution and the Bill of Rights too dangerous to discuss.

"All history can be controversial," he wrote. "I teach about them quite frankly but am extremely careful that all sides are presented. I can remember losing a night's sleep because a father demanded to see me. In trying to decide what he was so irate about I decided it might be the statement in a recent exam which the boy had argued about. The statement was that 'Our colonial ancestors were somewhat radical.'

"As it happened, this was not what the father wanted, but I feared the situation due to misinterpretation of the word 'radical.'"

One last comment from a political science teacher:

"We still have permission in writing to handle these topics as long as we do not present one-sided (so it says) education. But frankly, the teachers who will not allow progressive points of view (criticism of the administration is an example) to be voiced in their classrooms are breaking the rules of the Course of Study, which still pays at least lip service to the idea of presenting all sides."

(Editor's Note: The Mirror polled 250 high school political science and history teachers to find out if Los Angeles teachers are afraid to teach. Here is the third report on results of this poll.

(In previous reports it was indicated more than half the teachers polled were convinced students are being cheated of essential knowledge by their teachers' fear of becoming the center of one of the recurrent community "storms" over controversial subjects.

(Today we tackle loyalty oaths, fear of school spies and the so-called "atmosphere of inquisition.") loyal to the United States and are glad to make public their declaration of loyalty. There is somewhat more concern about the legality of the Dilworth Act. This kind of legislation is felt by many to be a possible forerunner of complete academic dictation."

Here is another view:

"My opinion is that if one has a skeleton in his closet that he doesn't want exposed that person will fear loyalty oaths and the Dilworth Act."

A final opinion on loyalty oaths:

"I know a great many teachers. I know of none who is disloyal to the nation, the Constitution or the country in any sense. I know no Communists, although I have listened carefully in order to find one.

"I don't believe there is a Communist movement of any power whatever in America, and am not afraid of the few that exist. I affirm my belief in America and believe that it did not become the great nation it is by being afraid of its own —or any other—shadow. The hysteria is entirely uncalled for and has no basis in fact."

These are some typical comments on Question No. 8, asking if teachers fear being spied upon:

"No. Except those who fear being exposed because of their relations with subversive groups."

Another:

"I don't think so. I have never heard this said."

And:

"I don't know. But I suppose we ought to, for when we are called up before a committee we are given no chance to defend ourselves because we are not actually accused of any 'acts.' It is only that they (the committee) do not like what they think we are thinking."

And again:

"They definitely are spied upon. I know of one teacher who was taken to task because she read the interview between Thomas Paine and Benjamin Franklin to her class. This interview was in 1774 or 1775."

This teacher hints he fears spies among other teachers:

"Certainly it is not wise to speak frankly about controversial subjects in the

The School Board's policy on classroom presentation of controversial subjects is in urgent need of restatement.

That's the most important single conclusion from The Mirror poll of Los Angeles high school political science and history teachers.

Results of the poll's 10 questions are summarized in another story today.

Many teachers who tried to assess the blame for the atmosphere of fear disclosed by the poll said it was the fault of the Board of Education for not making its policies clear.

They said the board should restate its policies so that every teacher will understand the board has not tried to limit or ban discussion of controversial subjects but merely to make sure those subjects are presented "factually and impartially."

Others who blamed misunderstanding of official policy included two members of the School Board itself.

Harry Hillman, the member of the board who is known as its "economy watchdog," had this to say:

"It is shocking that 21% of the teachers polled consider the Bill of Rights, the Constitution and the 5th Amendment dangerous subjects for classroom discussion.

"If these teachers answered candidly it is an indictment of principals and vice-principals who have failed to make the teachers understand the board's policy, which is to permit factual presentation and to discourage extremist teachers from indoctrinating students' minds with their own viewpoints.

"I wouldn't mind if Malenkov taught my children about Communism," Hillman said, "because they'd know who he was and what he stood for. But I'd be afraid to have them taught by an American teacher who was a Communist."

Paul Burke, another member of the board and its former president, said The Mirror poll was a "startling vote of lack of confidence in the board."

Burke said he will move at tonight's School Board meeting press only for their own point of view.

"The teacher is on the firing line and receives much of this pressure," she said.

"The majority of the PTA membership, along with other responsible community groups, believes that teachers should be free and duty-bound to present all sides of an issue."

Booth Woodruff, East Los Angeles Junior College teacher and president of the Affiliated Teachers Organizations of Los Angeles, agreed that the Board of Education policies have been misinterpreted.

"It would be a good thing if the board would restate its policy on controversial subjects, reassuring teachers that it does not intend to curb free classroom discussion," he said.

"If The Mirror poll makes the board conscious of this need it is to be commended," he added.

Mrs. David Menkin, president of the League of Women Voters, said:

"We're concerned that there are indications that the board's policies are not understood.

"The Mirror has done a fine public service in bringing to the citizens of the community the facts on existing attitudes and the need for understanding of the board's policies."

Joseph Scott, prominent Catholic layman, said:

"I am sorry if there is any such thing as timidity and cowardice in the faculties of our schools. I have no hesitation in saying that if there is any feeling of alien philosophy and contempt for American independence among shool-teachers we had better clean house."

The Mirror asked Dr. Hugh C. Willett, president of the board, and Dr. Alexander Stoddard, Superintendent of Schools, for comment.

In publishing these comments, The Mirror has been careful to present a balanced view, with both sides of every question receiving fair representation.

Ten questions were asked, ranging from inquiries concerning teachers' fear of losing their jobs to whether they feel spied upon by loyalty investigators.

The answers received were illuminating, especially in view of charges by Robert Hutchins, former chancellor of the University of Chicago, that American teachers are afraid to discuss the political facts of life.

Whether you're Republican or Democrat, anti-McCarthy or pro-McCarthy, for public housing or against it, there are certain political facts of life to which you can agree.

They are the facts that confront all of us who live in the Atomic Age.

There's the frightening but undeniable fact, for example, that the United States and Russia each have the atomic power to destroy the other.

There's the sobering fact that a way must be found to make the present precarious peace a stable and lasting one if many of us are not to die in atomic dust and flames.

And there's the inescapable fact that how these problems are resolved depends a great deal on the attitudes of Americans who are still in school.

Nobody can argue with those political facts.

That's why charges that our children are being educated in a political vacuum in which they learn little or nothing about these facts are so important.

It was those charges The Mirror set out to disprove or prove by questioning Los Angeles political science and history teachers.

Here are the first three questions and the percentage results:

1—Are Los Angeles pupils being deprived educationally as a result of the uproar locally about controversial issues or as a result of the Board of Education's policy on teaching about the United Nations and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization?

Yes	54½%
No	45½%

2—Do you feel as free as you did five or 10 years ago to discuss thoroughly and frankly in your classes all phases of social studies, history, geography, political science and international relations?

No	53%
Yes	47%

3—Does fear for their jobs or professional standings cause teachers to be cautious about or to shy away from complete classroom presentation of any subjects, including so-called "controversial subjects"?

Yes	55½%
No	44½%

The teachers who criticized or defended the way Los Angeles students are taught were nounced purpose is the free exchange of knowledge among the nations of the world.

Russia has never joined UNESCO, but despite that it has been accused of being a Communist-infiltrated organization.

Pressure was brought to bear on the school board, which after a year of committee meetings and discussion, instructed teachers they could discuss UNESCO and the United Nations in current affairs but banned any organized U.N. or UNESCO teaching program as such.

This is what one teacher wrote about that policy:

"As I understand it, we may no longer teach a unit of study on the United Nations, but we may give and discuss factual information on the United Nations as the occasion presents itself. This policy has resulted in students being nearly in complete ignorance of the United Nations and its agencies. So long as we are in it, we should study it."

Another teacher wrote of that policy:

"A lot of hogwash! The students are deprived of everything but how to prepare for power politics and war."

Still another who answered "No," declared:

"Students may be deprived of the left-wing emphasis on UNESCO. The United Nations themselves are as foreign to the American way of life as can be. It is anti-Christian, conceived by Russian agents, and midwifed by extreme Socialists."

One teacher said he definitely was not afraid of losing his job.

"I think the only fear or hysteria to be found in local educational circles is among the 'pinkos,' crypto-Communists, and their friends."

According to this particular teacher, half the political science and history teachers in the Los Angeles schools are pinkos, crypto-Communists and fellow travelers.

Another teacher is brave: "When a controversial question arises in the classroom I discuss it even though I am aware of the possible consequences. If the teacher fears to lose his job he will have little to offer in the way of constructive thinking."

This teacher evidently takes seriously a statement in Point of View, a pamphlet issued by the Board of Education, telling what city schools stand for.

On Page 33, under "Factors That Promote Learning," the school board-sponsored booklet says:

"A varied, healthful, and thought-provoking classroom environment is provided."

And there's this opinion, from a teacher who apparently believes the school board doesn't mean what it says:

"Any young person who chooses to teach under conditions obtaining in Los Angeles, or under any system that may be run according to the policies of the present board, is either ignorant, devoid of dignity, or a willing slave."

Forty per cent of Los Angeles high school political science and history teachers polled by The Mirror say they are afraid to discuss frankly wary of joining organizations.

"Without question," one teacher wrote, "teachers feel they must be cautious about the books and magazines they subscribe to and the meetings or organizations they attend.

"Whether we like it or not, we are used as examples of conduct and we must keep this in mind. It is generally assumed that teachers do help direct mass thinking and we have been placed in the role of community leader. What we do, what we say, what books we read, where we go, are all made matters of public interest. This is not a new development. It is as old as our profession."

Many teachers felt that in asking whether the Constitution, the Bill of Rights and the 5th Amendment are considered dangerous topics for classroom discussion, distinction should be made among the three.

They felt that almost no teacher would hesitate to discuss the Constitution, a few would avoid discussing the Bill of Rights, but considerably more would steer discussion away from the 5th Amendment.

They also felt that only a few teachers would avoid classroom discussion of the New Deal or public housing, but that more would shy away from the subject of Sen. McCarthy and still more from Communism.

This opinion was expressed despite a school system directive that the study of current problems should be based on the understanding of "totalitarian ideas and methods that are contrary to American democracy."

Yesterday's answers to Questions 1, 2 and 3 indicated that more than half of the teachers polled were "afraid to teach" in general. But when we got down to specific examples in Questions 4, 5 and 6, a majority felt free to teach certain specified "controversial" subjects.

Here is the breakdown of answers to Questions 4, 5 and 6:

4—Do teachers feel they should be cautious about subscribing to certain books and magazines and about attending meetings or joining organizations?

Yes:	67%
No:	33%

5—Are the Bill of Rights, the Constitution, and the 5th Amendment considered dangerous classroom discussion topics because of teachers' fear that their opinions will be misinterpreted?

Yes:	21½%
No:	78½%

6—Do you avoid or handle frankly such topics as the New Deal, public housing, Sen. McCarthy, and Communism?

Handle such topics frankly: 60%.

Avoid such topics: 40%.

Here are some teachers' comments on these questions:

"I don't avoid such topics but I discuss them with fear and trepidation. It is unfortunate for the students who are being educated during this 'phase.' But I believe there is still a lot of good teaching going on by teachers who have a silent prayer in their hearts frankly such topics as the New Deal and public housing but "avoids any discussion of McCarthy or Communism."

"I feel this is prudent at the present time," he commented.

Another teacher disagrees:

"We can still discuss — and give FACTS—without fear of any problem with school administration or outside groups."

One teacher said he belongs to the Republican Party, the Americans for Democratic Action, and the American Civil Liberties Union.

"I'm extremely circumspect about my opinions," this teacher wrote. "I belong to the ADA and the ACLU mainly to support necessary dissident groups."

Far from considering the Constitution and the Bill of Rights "dangerous" topics, this teacher said he feels they are "must" topics for classroom discussion.

"Where else is an immature student going to get the chance to see both sides of an issue?" he commented.

Some teachers still "dare" to teach about the Bill of Rights and the 5th Amendment, one political science teacher wrote.

"Some still dare but most have become very guarded about them and would not discuss freely the use of the 5th Amendment in evading the answering of questions."

A history teacher thinks conditions have changed recently:

"Until the narrow-minded McCarthy began his use of the term '5th Amendment Communist,' I'd have said the Bill of Rights, the Constitution and the 5th Amendment were not dangerous subjects. I think McCarthy has hurt the Republican Party tremendously by failing to uphold the dignity of the Constitution."

This teacher said he is a Republican.

It was indicated in a couple of comments that teachers who consider themselves "conservative" feel "safer" than those who do not.

For instance, one teacher wrote she felt freer now than she had since 1932.

"For 20 years I did not dare even to question the validity, legality or wisdom of the activities of the administrations."

In answering Questions 4, 5 and 6, this teacher commented she was not careful of the magazines she subscribed to, of the organizations she joined, that she handled frankly such subjects as the New Deal, public housing, McCarthy and Communism, and that she did not consider the 5th Amendment, the Bill of Rights or the Constitution "dangerous" subjects.

Another teacher wrote:

"In my classes the topics you mention are handled. We meet them head on. I encourage students to give frank opinions. The pure light of truth is the best tonic for growing minds. Whenever we seem uncertain of our ground we end the discussion until we have more facts."

Here is an interesting comment:

"I handle these topics if they come up but I do not bring cs as the New housing but ussion of Mc-unism."

prudent at the commented.
r disagrees:
discuss — and ithout fear of school adminide groups."
id he belongs an Party, the Democratic Acmerican Civil ely circum-

y opinions."
rote. "I be-
DA and the
to support dissident

dering the Con-
Bill of Rights
cs, this teacher
ey are "must"
om discussion.
s an immature
get the chance s of an issue?"

still "dare" to Bill of Rights
mendment, one teacher wrote.
lare but most very guarded would not disuse of the 5th
vading the an-tions."

acher thinks ve changed

narrow-minded his use of the endment Come said the Bill
onstitution and ment were not ects. I think rt the Republimendously by ld the dignity
ion."
aid he is a Reed in a couple t teachers who lves "conserva-

r" than those one teacher freer now than 932.

I did not dare
n the validity,
dom of the ac-
dministrations."

ng Questions teacher com-
as not careful ines she sub-the organiza-
ned, that she kly such sub-ew Deal, pub-
McCarthy and and that she ider the 5th
the Bill of Constitution
ubjects.

er wrote:
s the topics you ndled. We meet encourage stu-
frank opinions.
of truth is the growing minds.
seem uncertain
we end the dis-
we have more nteresting com-

se topics if they do not bring

Angeles teachers are afraid to teach. Here is the third report on results of this poll.

(In previous reports it was indicated more than half the teachers polled were convinced students are being cheated of essential knowledge by their teachers' fear of becoming the center of one of the recurrent community "storms" over controversial subjects.

(Today we tackle loyalty oaths, fear of school spies and the so-called "atmosphere of inquisition.")

BY VERNON MACPHERSON AND GEORGE GETZE
Mirror Staff Writers

The overwhelming majority of Los Angeles political science and history teachers are willing to take loyalty oaths but resent teachers being singled out as an untrustworthy group.

The big majority also feels loyalty oaths are ineffective since Communists and other disloyal persons will swear to their undying loyalty to the United States "without blinking an eye."

All who took their stand against loyalty oaths did so because of these two objections, not because they are disloyal.

This is the breakdown for the last four questions in The Mirror's poll, Nos. 7, 8, 9 and 10:

7—How do teachers feel about loyalty oaths and the Dilworth Act? (The Dilworth Act empowers school boards to fire teachers who refuse to answer board questions about Communist Party membership.)

Accept loyalty oaths: 91%
Reject loyalty oaths: 9%

8—Do teachers fear being spied upon by loyalty investigators?

No: 83%
Yes: 17%

9—Do teachers feel there is presently an atmosphere of inquisition in the local school administration?

No: 62%
Yes: 38%

10—Are teachers in Los Angeles afraid to teach in the manner which they, as trained educators, feel they should teach to best educate our children?

Yes: 51%
No: 49%

Here are their comments on No. 7:

"I feel that no loyalty oath will make an American patriot. If I were a Communist I'd be among the first to sign up."

Another:

"Most teachers I talk to feel oaths are not necessary. If a person is a Commie he won't hesitate to swear."

Another:

"Some teachers resent their loyalty being questioned. Some feel that anyone not loyal would not hesitate to sign to cover his disloyalty. Some feel the oaths infringe on their civil liberties. Personally, I don't see why anyone should object. They are just opportunities of proudly reaffirming one's allegiance."

One political science teacher writes:

"Most teachers have no compunction about signing loyalty oaths. All teachers I have known are completely ly accused of any 'acts.' It is only that they (the committee) do not like what they think we are thinking."

And again:

"They definitely are spied upon. I know of one teacher who was taken to task because she read the interview between Thomas Paine and Benjamin Franklin to her class. This interview was in 1774 or 1775."

This teacher hints he fears spies among other teachers:

"Certainly it is not wise to speak frankly about controversial subjects in the classroom, outside with the pupils, or even outside with other teachers," he wrote.

Concerning Question No. 9, the "atmosphere of inquisition," there are these opinions:

"I can speak only for myself. I feel the present school administration is unfair to teachers. The independent teacher using her own judgment as a guide has no place in this school system."

Another:

"There is no such atmosphere in the administration but well-meaning pressure groups have certainly made life miserable for the administration and teachers by seizing on isolated events and blowing them up out of all proportion to their importance."

And another:

"No, but there is a feeling the board is not very courageous in facing the critics of our schools.

On Question 10, which asked if teachers are afraid to teach the way they have been trained, the poll brought forth these comments:

"Many are. Also we cannot do our best job under the constant strain of being misinterpreted."

Another:

"Poorly informed, one-sided teachers are NOT concerned. They are teaching just as they always have and no one is bothering them one minute! They are being promoted, getting praise, they're doing all right! The inquisition is not after them. It is after the teacher who believes that all sides of a question should be aired so that children can learn to think honestly."

Another comment:

"It is only within a few specific and controversial areas that definite restrictions are felt. I don't believe these restrictions are having the effect of interfering with the basic education of the children of our city to any degree."

And:

"I'd say yes. Since the ban on the teaching of UNESCO we don't know what's coming next."

This series of articles was published as a public service feature March 22-25, 1954

kov taught my children about Communism," Hillman said, "because they'd know who he was and what he stood for. But I'd be afraid to have them taught by an American teacher who was a Communist."

Paul Burke, another member of the board and its former president, said The Mirror poll was a "startling vote of lack of confidence in the board."

Burke said he will move at tonight's School Board meeting that the board's policy toward controversial subjects be clarified and restated.

Another member of the board, Mrs. Edith Stafford, accused The Mirror of "loading" the questions asked in the poll "to imply that fear results from the board's actions."

She defended the board's official policy statements, saying they were intended "to open up freedom in the classroom and not to stifle it."

Mrs. Robert Beasley, chairman of the School Relations Committee of the 10th District Parent-Teachers Association, pointed out that in these "anxious times" misunderstanding is "manipulated" by those who

Joseph Scott, prominent Catholic layman, said:

"I am sorry if there is any such thing as timidity and cowardice in the faculties of our schools. I have no hesitation in saying that if there is any feeling of alien philosophy and contempt for American independence among shoolteachers we had better clean house."

The Mirror asked Dr. Hugh C. Willett, president of the board, and Dr. Alexander Stoddard, Superintendent of Schools, for comment.

"I don't wish to comment," Willett said. "I'd appreciate it if you would leave the board out of this discussion."

Stoddard said: "It's very interesting."

Richard Graves, Democratic candidate for Governor, said he has been concerned for some time that the minds or tongues of "loyal, dedicated teachers are being fettered."

"The danger strikes at our children," Graves said. "Children who are deprived of open classroom discussion of important topics, just because someone thinks they are 'controversial,' are not being educated to become intelligent, reasoning adults in a free democracy."

Results of Mirror Poll: There IS Fear in Schools

Here are the results of the 10 questions The Mirror asked 250 Los Angeles high school political science and history teachers:

1—Are L.A. pupils being deprived educationally as a result of the uproar about controversial issues or as a result of the Board of Education's policy on teaching about the U.N. and UNESCO?

Yes: 54½%
No: 45½%

2—Do you feel as free as you did five or 10 years ago to discuss thoroughly and frankly in your classes all phases of social studies, history, geography, political science and international relations?

No: 53%
Yes: 47%

3—Does fear for their jobs cause teachers to be cautious about or to shy from complete classroom presentation of any subjects, including so-called "controversial issues"?

Yes: 55½%
No: 44½%

4—Do teachers feel they should be cautious about subscribing to certain books and magazines and about attending meetings or joining organizations?

Yes: 67%
No: 33%

5—Are the Bill of Rights, the Constitution, and the 5th Amendment considered dangerous classroom discussion topics because of teachers' fear that their opinions will be misinterpreted?

No: 78½%
Yes: 21½%

6—Do you avoid or handle frankly such topics as the New Deal, public housing, Sen. McCarthy and Communism?

Handle frankly: 60%
Avoid: 40%

7—How do teachers feel about loyalty oaths and the Dilworth Act?

Accept 91%
Reject 9%

8—Do teachers fear being spied upon by loyalty investigators?

No: 83%
Yes: 17%

9—Do teachers feel there is an atmosphere of inquistion in the local school administration?

No: 62%
Yes: 38%

10—Are teachers in Los Angeles afraid to teach in the manner which they feel will best educate our children?

Yes: 51%
No: 49%

Exclusively in THE MIRROR, Los Angeles

Education, Gen.

If We Fail the Schools . . .

Pamphlet No. 245—Reprinted from March 1954, Economic Outlook.

"If the schools fail because we fail the schools, none of us, rich or poor, will be able to buy our way out of the century we live in or out of the challenge it offers. That challenge is to make democracy work and to make democracy possible, not just in a privileged and barricaded corner of the world but in all the underdeveloped and underprivileged sectors—wherever, in short, democracy's promise has too far outrun its performance."

—CIO President Walter P. Reuther, in National Parent-Teacher, April, 1953

Who Pays When Public Schools Are Neglected? The answer is we all do. We can't put a price tag on the whole cost, but we pay it just the same. We pay it in the cost of crime, especially, juvenile crime; we pay it in wasted and unproductive lives of men and women whose talents might have been brought out by proper schooling; we pay it in Selective Service rejections for inability to read and write. Neglected public schools are like a neglected car which keeps on running, perhaps a little balky at times, but it runs. Sooner or later it quits running, and a major repair job becomes necessary. That's the way it is with our schools. They're staying open. Our kids are going to them, and in many cases they are getting a fine education, but in too, too many cases they are not. The situation is critical: classrooms are crowded beyond capacity; teachers are hard to get, and even harder to keep; building and teacher shortages attending classrooms supported at less than $2000 a year

Children Getting Poor Education—

Source: Expenditures for Education at the Mid-century that have plagued the elementary schools are now moving in on the high schools.

Economic Outlook, CIO.

Slowly, too slowly in fact, we are waking up to the needs of our schools. We are voting bond issues and school tax increases to pay for buildings and operating costs; but we are not catching up on the ground lost during the depression years and the war years that followed. Our children can't wait while the painful process of obtaining state and local funds for schools takes place. The effects of neglected schools spill over city lines and state lines. Shortages of school buildings and teachers are a national problem; and this calls for immediate action by the national government to close the gap between what states and communities can do and what must be done now to assure each child the school he deserves.

For a long time CIO groups have recognized this crisis in U. S. education and have worked with many other citizens' groups toward the goal of better schools for the nation's children. CIO has fought for general federal aid to education and for federal aid to school construction. And CIO has published many pamphlets on this problem which have been widely distributed. In its one-week summer schools, CIO and its affiliated unions have featured discussions on school problems led by such outstanding authorities as Willard Goslin.

CIO councils and unions have been active in their state legislatures, fighting for increases in state aid, higher minimum salaries for teachers, and state aid for school construction.

Local CIO groups have been taking an increased and active interest in school board elections and are concerned about unwarranted attacks on our public schools. Recently, in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where a member of the United Steelworkers is on the school board, the CIO led a fight for increased funds for schools, which was defeated.

Why Shortages? Right after World War II experts began telling us that our schools were going to be overcrowded within a few years when the children born during the war started making their way up through the elementary grades. Nobody paid much attention to them, but, sure enough, by 1949 the predictions began to come true. Nevertheless, many communities made little, if any, attempt to raise the money needed to build new school buildings or to hire additional teachers. In some cases, they couldn't have raised the money if they had wanted to, but in many other cases, school board elections or special tax levies were defeated by the argument that "this overcrowding is only temporary, and we shouldn't build a lot of school buildings which we won't need in a few years." How wrong they were! Even the experts were fooled, because the number of children born in this country did not decrease after World War II as had been expected. After making a slight dip in 1949, the number of children born surged upward until in 1952 we reached a peak of 3,889,000 children born in that year, an unprecedented record for this country. Even now, there is no sign of a downturn in population growth.

The children who were born in the early 1940's began pouring into our schools in September 1947. In 1951, an enrollment of 26,693,000 children surpassed, for the first time in almost two decades, the previous peak enrollment of 26,434,000 children in 1933. Our present public school enrollment is estimated at 29.6 million. By 1959 this will have jumped to 36.3 million, an increase of approximately one million children a year. High school enrollments, which have remained fairly steady in the last several years, are going to increase rapidly between now and 1960 as children born in the 1940's become teenagers.

The fact that there are more children in school now than there were five years ago and that millions more are scheduled to enroll between now and 1960 shows an obvious and imperative need for more teachers to take care of new classes as they are formed, and for more classrooms.

Teacher Shortage. Because of enrollment increases and overcrowding we need at least 40,000 new teachers a year. This is the number needed to provide one teacher for every 30 pupils coming into our schools. At present, most of these teachers are needed in elementary schools, but we are only graduating from our colleges 35,000 persons a year qualified to teach in elementary schools. Moreover, each year at least 75,000 teachers leave the profession, so that replacements for them must be found, in addition to hiring new teachers. The annual loss of persons from the teaching profession is between 8 and 10 percent of the total teaching force. Furthermore, there are at present teaching in our schools approximately 70,000 teachers who hold temporary or emergency certificates indicating that they are not fully qualified for their work. If an attempt were made to replace even half of these teachers with persons fully qualified the annual demand for teachers would be in the neighborhood of 150,000. Putting this against a maximum supply from our colleges of not over 90,000 persons qualified to teach in grade schools or high schools shows how serious the situation is.

School boards and superintendents, desperate for teachers, adopt a variety of shortcuts. One is to increase classroom loads so that an individual teacher handles, not 30 children in a classroom, but 40 or 50. Needless to say, overloading of teachers is one of the principal reasons why they leave the profession. If the stretchout system doesn't work then local school boards and superintendents resort to hiring persons not qualified to teach or only partly qualified to teach.

Guernsey-Montgomery for the Economic Outlook, CIO.

When we consider that the average salary of teachers for 1953-54 is $3,605 a year it is small wonder that we can't attract young people to teaching or keep them in the classroom for more than a few years. If we want teachers who are college graduates then we have to pay them salaries such as they might get in other jobs which are open to college graduates. Look at the table of teachers' salaries (column 3, page 20) and ask yourself if you would care to spend 6 hours a day with 40 lively youngsters plus another 6 hours of paper work, attending meetings, and other out of class duties, all for the magnificent sum of what the teachers in your state are paid.

Building Shortage. Early in 1954, in upper New York State 14 sixth graders burned to death in a frame "temporary" classroom attached to a permanent fire-proof building. The story made national headlines, but what didn't make the headlines is the fact that one out of every five children in the United States is housed in a building that doesn't meet minimum fire safety standards. Another 6 percent of our children are in buildings that are rated "possibly acceptable" for fire safety. This includes one-story buildings not otherwise fireproof. The building that snuffed out the lives of 14 children was such a building.

In 1949, CIO, with many other groups, supported Senator Hubert Humphrey's move for a real federal aid program for school construction which would have allocated $3 billion over a five-year period, partly on the basis of need, to help the states meet their school construction problems. Support for Title 1 of this bill resulted in Congress' appropriating $3 million for grants to the states through the U. S. Office of Education for a survey of school construction needs.[1]

The survey shows according to the U. S. Office of Education 47 percent of all school buildings in 1951 were over 30 years old. Also reported was the fact that 39 percent of all classrooms have more than 30 pupils in them. This same survey found that 33 percent of our school buildings are unsatisfactory in terms of structure or location, safety and sanitation. Approximately 1 out of 5 school children are housed in buildings rated as unsatisfactory.

Obviously we need school buildings to replace unsafe and unsatisfactory buildings. What's more we need additional classrooms and buildings to house the enrollment increase and to relieve overcrowding in otherwise satisfactory buildings. As of September 1952 the 43 states taking part in the national school facilities survey of the U. S. Office of Education reported that they needed to build 245,417 classrooms for these purposes:

73,421 to relieve overcrowding

45,816 to house the enrollment increase through September 1952

126,680 to replace obsolete buildings.

The cost for these 43 states alone would have been $8.3 billion. Actual school construction in all the states and territories in 1952-53 amounted to $2 billion. Obviously we didn't even begin to meet our school building needs that year. So while our states and localities try to find the money to build schools, often over the protests

[1] See Report of the Status Phase of the School Facilities Survey (70¢), U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C.

CHECK YOUR STATE ON THESE TABLES. HOW GOOD ARE YOUR SCHOOLS?

State	1 Current Expense Per Pupil 1953-54	2 Median Expenditure per Classroom Unit 1952-53	3 Teachers Average Salary 1953-54	4 Percent of Income Spent on Schools 1950-51	5 Income Per Capita 1952	6 Income per Child of School Age 1952	7 Percent of Aid from State Funds 1953-54	8 Amount Required To Raise All Classroom Expenditures to U. S. Median 1953-54	9 Number of Teachers Refusing Jobs 1952-53	10 Current School Construction Funds 1953-54	11 Amount (Est.) by States to Give Away in Oil Leases	12 Percent Inferior Schools Estimated
United States	$247	$4,391	$3,605	2.27%	$1,639	$7,712	37.3%	$633,384,946	.....	§ $10,566,213,639	.....	16.4%
Alabama	112	2,059	2,610	2.69	1,012	3,795	73.6	55,705,650	58.19%	289,529,007	$203,300,000	39.2
Arizona	292	5,246	3,850	3.39	1,498	6,071	29.6	731,648	11.87	44,188,396	45,200,000	15.2
Arkansas	115	2,029	*2,035	2.44	951	3,711	58.0	34,105,406	45.63	256,871,393	124,300,000	39.2
California	323	5,830	*4,800	2.36	2,032	10,801	49.1	3,268,052	29.58	1,169,362,000	.....	7.1
Colorado	292	4,380	3,500	2.37	1,618	7,669	18.9	4,166,910	18.36	124,824,500	71,000,000	8.1
Connecticut	265	5,643	4,000	1.89	2,080	10,883	16.4	256,594	22.10	134,237,734	94,400,000	9.1
Delaware	*315	4,936	4,213	1.92	2,260	10,914	*84.8	186,943	12.35	22,491,945	16,100,000	14.6
Florida	214	4,072	3,600	2.38	1,319	6,458	51.2	8,108,902	31.64	208,547,549	.....	28.3
Georgia	177	2,536	2,720	2.31	1,137	4,528	72.6	41,316,473	50.47	237,670,199	200,600,000	30.2
Idaho	*215	3,572	3,330	2.83	1,438	5,905	*24.2	3,595,952			37,900,000	3.3
Illinois	293	6,215	*4,015	1.92	1,983	10,304	12.1	11,098,381	33.33	412,773,095	422,800,000	5.2
Indiana	*252	4,626	*3,785	2.36	1,685	7,914	*38.0	10,024,220	29.60	257,353,000	210,600,000	7.0
Iowa	295	4,296	3,230	2.79	1,545	7,272	10.1	13,212,340	2.32	123,261,407	145,300,000	4.8
Kansas	255	4,424	3,190	2.66	1,698	8,293	20.7	7,557,367	12.12	168,745,000	101,700,000	5.2
Kentucky	*160	1,847	2,300	2.16	1,135	4,529	38.9	43,082,627	49.73	185,865,574	171,900,000	22.2
Louisiana	230	4,511	*3,225	3.30	1,206	5,016	62.3	2,528,452	35.37	208,048,500	.....	38.7
Maine	195	2,662	2,645	2.22	1,361	6,015	17.7	10,596,896	82.83	92,630,254	51,700,000	14.6
Maryland	233	4,601	4,187	1.87	1,761	8,539	35.5	2,456,105	32.24	219,628,507	118,600,000	13.9
Massachusetts	285	5,473	*4,000	1.80	1,749	9,265	19.2	2,135,779	‡	‡	225,100,000	3.7
Michigan	264	4,939	4,000	2.31	1,815	8,488	42.6	14,016,077	16.44	431,134,809	351,800,000	9.8
Minnesota	312	4,857	3,250	2.76	1,491	6,857	30.5	8,865,695	32.55	165,959,305	165,500,000	1.3
Mississippi	103	1,451	1,741	2.66	818	3,008	53.1	58,750,432	54.37	144,421,870	145,200,000	40.4
Missouri	232	3,553	3,100	1.86	1,583	7,995	25.0	23,863,583			200,100,000	14.5
Montana	316	5,080	3,435	2.72	1,697	7,375	29.4	1,436,084	25.11	39,237,723	33,900,000	5.2
Nebraska	245	3,693	2,510	2.37	1,566	7,587	4.9	12,343,905	65.35	136,922,943	71,800,000	7.6
Nevada	260	5,115	3,680	1.97	2,250	11,250	38.2	191,535	54.25	18,598,267	8,100,000	9.2
New Hampshire	266	4,608	3,225	2.16	1,530	7,550	4.0	847,853	39.41	43,873,408	28,200,000	4.8
New Jersey	338	6,323	4,170	2.12	1,959	10,668	16.7	1,435,345	‡	‡	223,500,000	10.6
New Mexico	250	4,543	4,059	3.70	1,331	4,949	84.1	721,334	63.69	58,336,318	44,400,000	25.7
New York	356	7,627	4,650	2.00	2,038	11,294	39.4	2,410,572			680,200,000	10.8
North Carolina	173	3,256	3,175	3.02	1,049	4,051	71.0	33,266,363	44.11	358,237,530	259,900,000	34.6
North Dakota	*250	3,338	*2,750	3.04	1,223	4,893	*24.1	7,274,280	8.89	22,532,717	38,700,000	10.7
Ohio	215	4,659	3,800	1.90	1,881	9,159	*40.0	14,104,442	17.26	342,426,447	406,800,000	11.8
Oklahoma	235	3,744	*3,340	3.34	1,285	5,575	48.6	11,572,608	11.39	103,470,500	135,600,000	17.2
Oregon	328	5,992	3,995	2.80	1,733	8,272	30.1	355,861	12.85	68,587,100	80,700,000	2.2
Pennsylvania	241	4,626	3,832	2.13	1,710	8,470	32.1	29,008,215	49.89	676,588,700	547,900,000	7.0
Rhode Island	240	5,337	3,825	1.75	1,655	8,895	11.6	299,855	38.32	51,846,020	36,300,000	5.1
South Carolina	168	2,234	2,765	2.83	1,099	3,882	74.4	35,804,147			142,900,000	56.0
South Dakota	273	3,557	2,800	3.00	1,258	5,567	11.9	6,676,940	13.10	30,440,675	37,900,000	6.4
Tennessee	145	2,599	*2,620	2.30	1,126	4,615	55.9	37,677,533	66.27	218,492,530	196,900,000	36.4
Texas	223	4,436	3,326	2.58	1,452	6,405	45.8	11,565,815	21.11	540,294,500	.....	21.1
Utah	210	4,419	3,400	2.94	1,450	5,597	31.6	566,363			46,000,000	1.9
Vermont	250	3,506	2,900	2.79	1,336	5,917	20.5	2,153,165	70.33	28,879,140	21,800,000	12.9
Virginia	185	2,749	2,925	2.21	1,322	5,831	39.7	30,999,239			185,600,000	28.9
Washington	287	5,497	4,247	2.37	1,810	8,826	56.4	228,578	38.08	280,359,792	120,200,000	3.8
West Virginia	175	3,093	2,960	2.84	1,232	4,705	49.9	20,483,207	28.41	84,091,543	129,200,000	21.8
Wisconsin	285	4,439	3,661	2.24	1,649	7,783	19.3	11,452,046	9.82	171,035,235	188,000,000	4.2
Wyoming	317	4,916	3,300	3.12	1,607	7,174	33.9	879,177			19,400,000	4.7

* Estimated by NEA Research Division
 State did not take part in survey
† Rejections because of educational deficiencies
‡ Not yet available
§ Estimated by U. S. Office of Education
¶ Estimates of royalties to states if Hill-Anderson Amendment had been passed

IF WE'VE COUNTED RIGHT, there are approximately 570 sets of figures on tables above so the reader may have a tendency to skip the whole page. Behind these tables, however, is the story of the crisis in American education. An "average" teacher in Kentucky is being paid $1847; some more—some less. In Alabama they're spending $112 educating a child; in California $323. Arkansas had $951 per capita income in 1952—Connecticut $2,080. Schools are better in Connecticut.

In South Carolina, 56% failed the educational requirements for the army. Illinois lost $422,800,000 when President Eisenhower signed the giveaway oil bill. Wisconsin needed $171,035,235 spent on school construction in 1952—it wasn't. In Pennsylvania, 49.89% of the school buildings were "unsatisfactory."

Check your own state through the 12 columns. How good are your schools? How good should they be? How good will you make them?

CIO Economic Outlook

of special interest groups, another million children each year are crowding into classrooms already bursting at the seams.

Why Isn't Something Done About It?

No parent wants his children housed in unsafe buildings, crammed into classrooms like sardines, going to school on half-day sessions. If he thinks about it a little, no parent wants his children taught by unqualified teachers any more than he wants them treated by unlicensed doctors. The fact is that we are not spending enough on schools either because we haven't made up our minds to, or, as is often the case, because the money isn't there to spend. Let's look for a minute at what we spend on our schools.

This year we are spending on our public elementary and secondary schools just over $8 billion. According to figures published by the Department of Justice the annual cost of crime in the United States is $20 billion. The total cost of public education is thus about $200 per family while the cost of crime is $495 per family.

The $8 billion we spend on our public schools must be broken down into what we spend for school construction and what we spend on actually running the school once it is built. Only in recent years has the school construction total approached $2 billion. It didn't even crack the $1 billion mark until 1950 after reaching a wartime low of $54 million in 1944. We can only estimate that we are going to spend $2 billion on school construction before the school year 1953-54 is out, but we know for a fact that in 1951-52 we spent one and three-quarter billion on construction of schools or about $64 per school child.

School construction is only a quarter of the total spent on public education in grade schools and high schools. In the school year 1953-54, we will have spent just over $6 billion to cover the cost of operating these schools—the cost of teachers' salaries, of books, equipment, lighting, heating and running school buses. This will come to $247 per pupil which is $12 more per child than we spent in 1952-53.

Column 1, page 20, shows the average amount spent per pupil in each of the 48 states during the school year 1953-54. Column 4 shows the percent of average income payments for school expenditure from state and local sources in 1950-51. This percentage is one of the best ways of measuring the effort of a state to educate its children.

In 1950-51 West Virginia could afford to spend only $150 per child but devoted 2.8 percent of its income to school operation. It ranks 10th from the top in effort and 9th from the bottom in

HOW GOOD ARE YOUR SCHOOLS?

Percent of School Buildings Rated Unsatisfactory 1952	Current School Construction Needs, September 1952	Amount Lost by States by Give-Away of Offshore Oil ¶	Percent of Selected Service Rejections, 1950-51 †
9	10	11	12
.....	§ $10,566,213,639	.....	16.4%
58.19%	289,529,007	$203,300,000	39.2
11.87	44,188,396	45,200,000	15.2
45.63	256,871,393	124,300,000	39.2
29.58	1,169,362,000	.....	7.1
18.36	124,824,500	71,000,000	8.1
22.10	134,237,734	94,400,000	9.1
12.35	22,491,945	16,100,000	14.6
31.64	208,547,549	.....	28.3
50.47	237,670,199	200,600,000	30.3
		37,900,000	3.3
33.33	412,773,095	422,800,000	5.2
29.60	257,353,000	210,600,000	7.0
2.32	123,261,407	145,300,000	4.8
12.12	168,745,000	101,700,000	5.2
49.73	185,865,574	171,900,000	22.2
35.37	208,048,500	.....	38.7
82.83	92,630,254	51,700,000	14.6
32.24	219,628,507	118,600,000	13.9
‡	‡	225,100,000	3.7
16.44	431,134,809	351,800,000	9.8
32.55	165,959,305	165,500,000	1.3
54.37	144,421,870	145,200,000	40.4
		200,100,000	14.5
25.11	39,237,723	33,900,000	5.2
65.35	136,922,943	71,800,000	7.6
54.25	18,598,267	8,100,000	9.2
39.41	43,873,408	28,200,000	4.8
‡	‡	223,500,000	10.6
63.69	58,336,318	44,400,000	25.7
		680,200,000	10.8
44.11	358,237,530	259,900,000	34.6
8.89	22,532,717	38,700,000	10.7
17.26	342,426,447	406,800,000	11.8
11.39	103,470,500	135,600,000	17.2
12.85	68,587,100	80,700,000	2.2
49.89	676,588,700	547,900,000	7.0
38.32	51,846,020	36,300,000	5.1
		142,900,000	56.0
13.10	30,440,675	37,900,000	6.4
66.27	218,492,530	196,900,000	36.4
21.11	540,294,500	.....	21.1
		46,000,000	1.9
70.33	28,879,140	21,800,000	12.9
		185,600,000	28.9
38.08	280,359,792	120,200,000	3.8
28.41	84,091,543	129,200,000	21.8
9.82	171,035,235	188,000,000	4.2
		19,400,000	4.7

‡ Estimated by U. S. Office of Education
¶ Estimates of royalties to states if Hill-Anderson Amendment had been passed hower signed the giveaway oil bill. Wisconsin needed $171,035,-235 spent on school construction in 1952—it wasn't. In Pennsylvania, 49.89% of the school buildings were "unsatisfactory."

Check your own state through the 12 columns. How good are your schools? How good should they be? How good will you make them?

CIO Economic Outlook

of special interest groups, another million children each year are crowding into classrooms already bursting at the seams.

Why Isn't Something Done About It?

No parent wants his children housed in unsafe buildings, crammed into classrooms like sardines, going to school on half-day sessions. If he thinks about it a little, no parent wants his children taught by unqualified teachers any more than he wants them treated by unlicensed doctors. The fact is that we are not spending enough on schools either because we haven't made up our minds to, or, as is often the case, because the money isn't there to spend. Let's look for a minute at what we spend on our schools.

This year we are spending on our public elementary and secondary schools just over $8 billion. According to figures published by the Department of Justice the annual cost of crime in the United States is $20 billion. The total cost of public education is thus about $200 per family while the cost of crime is $495 per family.

The $8 billion we spend on our public schools must be broken down into what we spend for school construction and what we spend on actually running the school once it is built. Only in recent years has the school construction total approached $2 billion. It didn't even crack the $1 billion mark until 1950 after reaching a wartime low of $54 million in 1944. We can only estimate that we are going to spend $2 billion on school construction before the school year 1953-54 is out, but we know for a fact that in 1951-52 we spent one and three-quarter billion on construction of schools or about $64 per school child.

School construction is only a quarter of the total spent on public education in grade schools and high schools. In the school year 1953-54, we will have spent just over $6 billion to cover the cost of operating these schools—the cost of teachers' salaries, of books, equipment, lighting, heating and running school buses. This will come to $247 per pupil which is $12 more per child than we spent in 1952-53.

Column 1, page 20, shows the average amount spent per pupil in each of the 48 states during the school year 1953-54. Column 4 shows the percent of average income payments for school expenditure from state and local sources in 1950-51. This percentage is one of the best ways of measuring the effort of a state to educate its children.

In 1950-51 West Virginia could afford to spend only $150 per child but devoted 2.8 percent of its income to school operation. It ranks 10th from the top in effort and 9th from the bottom in

West Virginia Tries Harder, but Illinois Gets More

1950-51 figures

Economic Outlook, CIO.

what it can spend. The fact that this situation is repeated in several states points to a basic inequality in terms of what is spent on our children's education. How much a state can afford depends largely on per capita income. Column 5 of the table on page 20 shows this for 1952.

The U. S. Office of Education published in early 1954 the results of a new study of the inequality of educational opportunity in the United States entitled "Expenditures for Education at the Mid-Century." This study found great differences in educational opportunity available to U. S. children. (See chart on page 17 and column 2 on page 20.) The study uses as its measure current expenditures per classroom unit. The average (median) for a classroom unit of 30 pupils in the United States for 1949-50 was $4,391, of which, it was estimated, approximately $3,000 represents the teacher's salary. The study includes a careful breakdown of the expenditure per classroom unit for each of the forty-eight states and includes a supplemental study of expenditures for segregated schools in twelve states where the information was available. Check page 20, column 8, to see how much additional money was needed in your state in 1949-50 to bring every classroom unit in the state up to the level of $4,391, thus establishing a minimum wage for teachers of approximately $3,000. In column 2 on the same page, you can check the average (median) classroom unit expenditure in your state.[2]

Let's take another look at school buildings. Here we find that many of the states that can't afford to spend as much as $200 per year per child can't afford to build the school buildings they need right now, much less the ones they will need in the future. The federal government spent $3 million between 1950 and 1953 to make a complete survey of school building needs in the Nation. The states were granted money to do the actual survey, and all but 7 took part in it. These 7 were left out either because they had just made a survey on their own or because reactionary state governments wanted no part of it. As a result of this survey, it is estimated that the nationwide need in September 1952 was for 312,000 classrooms to house 8,881,360 children at a cost of $10.6 billion. The local school districts in each state said that they could only raise $5.9 billion of this using every legal resource available to them, including state aid. This left a national deficit of $4.7 billion (or 44 percent of the need) at the beginning of the 1952 school year. We didn't make it up that year by a long shot. We aren't making it up this year either, even though the need has been increased by the 2 million more children we have enrolled since then. Column 10, page 20, shows the school construction which each state needs. Again the basic inequality exists not only in money to run the classrooms our children go to but the money to build the classrooms as well.

These inequalities in educational opportunity can only be corrected through a federal aid program. One valiant attempt in this direction was made by Senators Hill of Alabama and Anderson of New Mexico when they proposed that royalties from the development of offshore oil reserves go into a program of grants-in-aid to the states for education. Unfortunately, the 83rd Congress, Republican controlled, turned a portion of these national resources over to a few states. President Truman had vetoed this give-away twice while he was in office. President Eisenhower was photographed signing the bill in a smiling and jovial mood. The needs of America's school children were unimportant. Column 11 on page 20 shows what your state might have received for its schools through the Hill-Anderson program.

[2] For additional facts on the nation's schools, see Expenditures for Education at the Midcentury (65¢) and Supplement (35¢), U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C.; and Educational Differences Among the States (25¢), National Education Association, 1201 Sixteenth Street N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Results of Educational Inequalities

The fact that there is a vast difference between the state that spends the least on education and the state that spends the most is nothing new. For 20 years groups interested in the welfare of children have pointed out these facts and urged that the federal government help the states equalize educational opportunity.

During World War II we began to reap the consequences of neglected schools, but it has been in the post war period that the waste of human resources has become even more apparent.

In the Korean war we drafted young men who were school children in the late 30's and early 40's. Each young man drafted had to meet a minimum educational standard by passing the Armed Forces Qualification Test. Between July 1950 and June 1951 we rejected for military service 16 percent of these men because they couldn't pass this simple test. Look at Column 12, page 20, if you want to see whether or not your state was high or low in rejectees.

Economic Outlook, CIO.

Federal Action. It took Pearl Harbor to shock America into taking national defense seriously. Will it take a similar catastrophe in education to get action to save our schools? The trouble is that what will happen to our schools unless something is done will be more like dry rot rather than sudden collapse. What has actually happened to schools in defense affected areas shows how a sudden strain on local resources brings education to a near standstill. Yet in these instances the federal government moved in to help. Now, when not just a few areas here and there but whole regions are unable to provide a decent minimum standard of education, is the time for federal government to give the states and localities some help. One form of immediate assistance which would free state and local funds for running schools and paying teachers salaries is federal aid for school construction. Bills to do this have been introduced by Democratic Senator Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota and Republican Senators like John S. Cooper of Kentucky and Democratic Congressmen like Cleveland Bailey of West Virginia.

But these bills are a long way from passage. The Eisenhower Administration has spoken no word of approval for Senator Cooper's bill. It has proposed instead that we hold conferences to discover the needs of our schools and what should be done about them. It has ignored the fact that there is a great quantity of reliable data at hand from the U. S. Office of Education and others. Thus a first line of action is letters and messages to Senators and Congressmen asking them what they intend to do about our school building shortage. Even President Eisenhower himself admitted that "our school system needs some prompt, effective help", but conferences to talk about it are neither prompt nor effective particularly when several years will be spent gathering material which is already available. This is not only double work but double talk.

State and Local Action. Letters to Congressmen aren't enough. Schools are built and school budgets are passed on by local school boards and city and county councils. State legislatures vote on funds to aid localities build and operate schools. Column 7, page 20, shows the percent of school operating funds your state furnished to local school districts.

What we need are more citizens going to school

Guernsey-Montgomery for the Economic Outlook, CIO.

board meetings and to meetings of state legislative committees and demanding action.[3]

Our Public Schools—Watchtowers of Freedom

Much has been said about the needs of our schools. These needs are urgent and we must not delay further in meeting them. Yet for all the inequalities of educational opportunity that now exist in the United States the average school child in the U. S. has an opportunity that few nations of the world can parallel.

Today, our public schools are under fire in many communities. It is claimed that they aren't teaching the 3 R's or that they aren't keeping good discipline or that the textbooks are "socialistic". Others complain about "frills" in the school system and point to home economics classes or music and art classes as waste.

Some of these attacks are purely local, and represent nothing more than selfishness disguised as economy. But there are some well-organized efforts being made in this country to undermine public confidence in our schools. Such groups as the National Council for American Education would like to capture our schools for the super-patriots and economic reactionaries. They would like to censor textbooks and intimidate teachers (and they have succeeded in some places—Los Angeles and Houston, for example). Their method is to divide and conquer. Split the parent-teacher associations, sow doubt about the schools in the community, attack the state and local teacher associations—these are their tactics. But they can be stopped, and they have been stopped when citizens have taken the trouble to find out the facts and to stand solidly behind their teachers and school boards.[4]

The public schools are closer to each American family than any other tax supported institution. They are free, first because entrance to them does not depend on economic status; in a much deeper sense they are free because they are answerable to no special interest but to us, the free citizens in a free democracy. All citizens have the responsibility to use this freedom to defend and improve our public school systems.

[3] For groups interested in further background on the problem of the nation's schools, we suggest the following: Let's Talk Sense About Our Schools, by Paul Woodring, McGraw Hill Book Company; Working Together for Better Schools, by Menge and Faunce, American Book Company; and pamphlets published by the National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools, 2 West 45th Street, New York 36, N. Y., such as How Can We Get Enough Good Teachers?, How Have Our Schools Developed?, How Can Citizens Help Their Schools? (single copies free).

[4] For those interested in the problem of academic freedom and attacks on our schools, the following books and pamphlets will be of interest: On Education and Freedom, by Harold Taylor, Abelard-Schuman (a new book by one of America's courageous college presidents); Are Our Teachers Afraid to Teach? by Robert M. Hutchins in LOOK magazine, March 9, 1954; The Minute Women, reprint from the HOUSTON POST (a series of articles which won the reporter an award from the American Newspaper Guild); Keeping Our Schools Free, by H. Gordon Hullfish, Public Affairs Pamphlet No. 199; Time to Get Angry, CIO pamphlet reproducing a speech by Secretary-Treasurer James B. Carey on the need to defend our schools.

ECONOMIC OUTLOOK
Published Monthly by CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
WALTER P. REUTHER, Pres.
JAMES B. CAREY, Sec.-Treas. JOHN V. RIFFE, Exec. Vice-Pres.
DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION AND RESEARCH
718 JACKSON PLACE, N. W. WASHINGTON 6, D. C.
STANLEY H. RUTTENBERG, Director
Katherine Pollak Ellickson, Associate Director of Research
Everett Kassalow, Associate Director of Research
Nat Goldfinger, Associate Director of Research
Frank Fernbach, Associate Director of Research
George T. Guernsey, Associate Dir. in Charge of Education
Stuart P. Brock, Associate Director of Education
EXTRA COPIES
15c a copy—$1.50 a year 100 or more copies—4½c each
Up to 100—5c each 1,000 or more copies—3c each
Mats of "Outlook" illustrations are available on request.

Vegetables and People

ONCE UPON A TIME-

THERE WAS A BOY

NAMED BILL

WHO DIDN'T LIKE SPINACH...

He had never tasted spinach. All of his family just assumed that spinach didn't taste good, so it was never served in his home.

BILL

WAS

PREJUDICED

AGAINST SPINACH

WHY? HE DIDN'T KNOW.

HE JUST DIDN'T LIKE IT.

THAT'S WHAT Prejudice is -

AN ATTITUDE WITHOUT REASON
A JUDGMENT IN ADVANCE

Bill had built a wall around spinach.

He shut it out of his experience without knowing WHY.

As Bill grew older he became more fixed in his dislike of spinach.

He began to apply his prejudice to all green vegetables. He refused to eat

• LETTUCE

• and CABBAGE

• and PEAS

 • and BEANS

Bill's PREJUDICE against green vegetables didn't hurt the vegetables very much. They had no feelings.

It did deprive Bill of the pleasure of eating some of them, but there were plenty of others he could eat and enjoy.

PREJUDICE against certain kinds of food is relatively harmless. It can even be a bit humorous sometimes.

BUT-
People Are Not Vegetables

PREJUDICE AGAINST PEOPLE is neither humorous nor harmless.

UNITED STATES

AFRICA

PREJUDICE AGAINST PEOPLE

- Contradicts our faith and the words of God

- Hurts the persons who have it as well as those who receive it

- Builds walls around people instead of bridges between people

- Robs people of jobs, homes, human dignity, and fellowship in God

- Costs our citizens millions of dollars to provide separate facilities for colored and colorless people

- Deprives our nation of the respect of two-thirds of the world's people, who are colored.

ARE YOU PREJUDICED?

Do you	No	Yes
• Choose your friends only from among your "own" racial and religious group?
• Believe that God created different races so that some might be "inferior" to others?
• Believe that certain jobs should be denied to people because of race or religion regardless of their qualifications?
• Feel that people should be treated, spoken to, or thought of as being "different" because of their race or religion?
• Think that a family, because of its color or religion should be deprived of the right to buy or live in any home it can afford?
Total

Do you	No	Yes
• Believe that houses of worship should be divided into racially segregated congregations?
• Habitually speak of other racial and religious groups as "they" and your own as "we"?
• Believe that any racial or religious group can be characterized by such terms as happy, rhythmic, lazy, shrewd, dirty, clean, or prejudiced?
• Feel it necesary to praise members of other racial groups whenever you speak of them, and frequently refer to your own freedom from prejudice?
• Get more irritated (or less irritated) by an offense from a member of another race or religion than by one from a member of your own group?
Total

Do you	No	Yes
• Use derogatory terms such as "Chink," "Nigger," "Jig," "Kike," "Jap," "Ofay," etc.?
• Ever say, "So-and-so is a tribute to his race"?
• Believe that people are more or less talented, intelligent, ambitious, or athletic because of their race or religion?
• Frequently say, "Some of my best friends are ———"?
• Ever say, "I'm not prejudiced, but . . . "?
Total

RATE YOURSELF-

Two "Yeses" = some prejudice

Three "Yeses" = considerable prejudice

Four or more "Yeses" = a real problem

PREJUDICE is NOT usually caused by CONSCIOUS ILL-WILL

It is more frequently the result of

- Ignorance of any firsthand knowledge about members of other races, and religions

- Fear of economic or social loss

- Insecurity or a sense of inferiority and the need for a "scapegoat"

- Unawareness of any experiences or ways of thought other than those of one's "own" group.

Do you	No	Yes
• Use derogatory terms such as "Chink," "Nigger," "Jig," "Kike," "Jap," "Ofay," etc.?
• Ever say, "So-and-so is a tribute to his race"?
• Believe that people are more or less talented, intelligent, ambitious, or athletic because of their race or religion?
• Frequently say, "Some of my best friends are ———"?
• Ever say, "I'm not prejudiced, but . . . "?
Total

RATE YOURSELF-

Two "Yeses" = some prejudice

Three "Yeses" = considerable prejudice

Four or more "Yeses" = a real problem

PREJUDICE is NOT usually caused by CONSCIOUS ILL-WILL

It is more frequently the result of

- Ignorance of any firsthand knowledge about members of other races, and religions

- Fear of economic or social loss

- Insecurity or a sense of inferiority and the need for a "scapegoat"

- Unawareness of any experiences or ways of thought other than those of one's "own" group.

ARE YOU PREJUDICED?

Most of us are, in one degree or another, and we need to get rid of our prejudice, for our own sake, if for no one else's.

Ridding ourselves of Prejudice is like:

- Taking a refreshing bath

- Throwing up the shade to let the light in

- Breaking down the walls we have built around ourselves and others

- Discovering a wonderful, new world of PERSONS for the first time.

How Do We Do This?

- We examine ourselves and our attitudes with the painful probe of searching and fearless honesty

- We study the teachings of our faith about human brotherhood

- We read what some great thinkers and writers have said about human relations

- We learn the scientific facts about what "race" is

- We discuss calmly and intelligently with our friends and our group what American attitudes should be

- We pray for God's help in becoming more understanding in all our thoughts and words and relationships with all people.

... AND ABOVE EVERYTHING ELSE

We seek to establish personal and democratic friendships with members of other races and religions.

BOTH AS INDIVIDUALS

AND IN GROUPS

As human beings, created in the image of God, we are all members of one human family, "of one blood . . ."

As Christians and Jews, we are especially called to witness by thought, word, and deed to the brotherhood of all men.

MAKE BROTHERHOOD

A REALITY IN OUR WORLD

Published by

The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith

212 Fifth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

Adapted from a pamphlet of the same title published by

The Department of Social Education and Action Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.

167

Education ~~Gen~~ General

CRUSADE FOR PUBLIC SCHOOLS

By John D. Connors

The Story of The American Federation of Labor's Long and Continuing Fight for Better Education for America's Children

By John D. Connors

Director of Education

The American Federation of Labor

Mr. Connors

"WE are in favor of the passage of such legislative enactments as will enforce by compulsion the education of children; that if the state has the right to exact certain compliance with its demands, then it is also the right of the state to educate its people to the proper understanding of such demands."

—From the proceedings of the first convention of the Federation of Organized Trades and Labor Unions of the United States and Canada (later renamed the American Federation of Labor), held in 1881 in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

TODAY, as at the moment of its founding in 1881, the American Federation of Labor is the prime supporter of free public education in the United States. In this it follows the traditional policy of organized American workers.

At the time of our Revolution and the signing of the Declaration of Independence in 1776, and even at the formation of our nation with the execution of the Constitution in 1789, few people received any formal education. On the Hamiltonian hypothesis that only the propertied and the "accomplished" should govern—which view commanded wide acceptance in high circles during the first two presidencies—it could be argued that "the people" did not really need a formal education. However, with the victory of republicanism in Jefferson's election as our third president, the country assumed the content as well as the form of democracy.

It became apparent to an objective observer that a nation dedicated, as ours is in the Declaration, to the proposition that man has inalienable, God-given rights and that government's function is "to protect these rights"—that such a government must allow, then encourage, then promote the free and informed discussion of government policy. It became clear that a nation dedicated, as ours is in the Constitution's preamble, to "promote the general welfare" must determine and promote it through a universal and informed electorate. It is axiomatic that for self-rule people must have at least the opportunity for a full education. This ideal—while not yet fully realized—has now been recognized as a prerequisite to America's attainment of the position of world leader.

As noted, organized labor was one of the first to recognize these facts. Almost from the founding of this country, union groups began agitation for free public education. In Philadelphia, when the first voluntary association of workmen was formed in 1828, the spreading of public education was a prime topic for study. In 1829 a committee of workers was formed to study the state's school system. This committee recommended free, public schools open to all children, in every part of the state. As early as 1834 the nation's trade unions met in New York on the need for education and noted the necessity of an "equal, universal republican system of education."

EVEN AT THIS TIME some areas had so-called free schools. Unfortunately, the students bore the stigma of having passed a "needs" test, in that only children of the very poor were admitted. The workingmen stated that such "pauper schools," teaching only the basic subjects, could "never secure the common prosperity of a nation, nor confer intellectual as well as political equality on a people."

Gradually, by supporting progressive candidates for school board and legislative office, labor and its liberal supporters in this field won the establishment of the public school system.

A vital element in the realization of the hope for at least a primary education for all was the limitation of child labor, achieved bv organized labor after decades of struggle. Today's federal and state laws limiting child labor—inadequate as they are in so many respects—at least assure most children freedom from exploitation in the shop so that they may study during their early years.

From providing, through local government, the opportunity for free education the labor movement moved for compulsory school attendance laws during the 1860's and thereafter.

By increasing our national wealth, and thus the ability to support a public school system, and by bringing a degree of economic stability to working people, the labor movement has constantly enhanced the opportunity of American youth for a better and better education.

The formation of the American Federation of Labor in 1881 provided the coordinated and continuing effort needed to make popular education a reality.

In 1885 the A.F. of L. demanded compulsory education of children up to 14 years of age—a goal reached only recently in many states. In 1887 it recommended the teaching of government in the public schools.

The A.F. of L.'s consistent position on financing public schools was established in its convention resolution of 1889 when it stated: "The American Federation of Labor . . . favors the greatest liberality . . . by the United States and the state Governments to further and advance the cause of the education of the masses."

IN A MULTITUDE OF WAYS America's leading labor organization, through convention action, has set the pattern and the tone for the school system we know today. Down through the years the American Federation of Labor has taken action as follows:

1895 Encouraged municipalities to establish institutions with lecture courses, reading rooms, and gymnasiums;

1900 Urged that laws provide for free schoolbooks;

1902 Appointed a Committee on Education in the Public Schools, Colleges, and Universities;

1903 Provided for a permanent Committee on Education; insisted that the necessity for school teachers to use political influence to secure or retain positions be eliminated;

1908 Appointed a committee to study methods and means of industrial education in the United States;

1910 Obtained federal government cooperation in a study of the entire problem of vocational and industrial education throughout the nation, and at the same time urged higher wages and salaries for school teachers;

1911 Again urged the provision of free textbooks by state governments to all students and recommended the opening of public night schools for children over 16;

1912 Had to call attention to "the 25,000,000 children of school age in the United States, 50% of whom leave school by the end of the sixth grade, at approximately fourteen years of age . . ."

1914 Noted success in the passage of legislation for vocational education; applauded gains in the realization of teachers' right to organize and in the struggle for free schoolbooks;

1915 Established the policy of supporting free state universities where textbooks, tuition, and laboratory work would be free;

1917 Endorsed the idea of free junior colleges for men and women and called for the establishment of self-governing schools and district councils of teachers to utilize their knowledge in the conduct of the schools; urged that teachers have tenure rights so long as they are efficient and that full and fair hearings precede any discharge;

1919 Restated the organization's basic position by saying: "It is impossible to estimate the influence of education upon the world's civilization. Education must not stifle thought and inquiry but must awaken the mind concerning the application of natural laws and to a conception of independence and progress";

1920 Stood for academic freedom in supporting veto of a New York state bill which would have given the Board of Regents undue control of subject matter; called for a school-leaving age of 16 years; and urged the affiliation of teachers with the labor movement;

1923 Urged that members of organized labor serve on school boards and the boards of institutions of higher learning;

1928 Opposed the use of private or public schools to spread the propaganda of special interests;

1930 Noted and reaffirmed its previous position urging State Federations and Central Labor Unions to maintain Committees on Education, including on them members of the teachers' union; endorsed the efforts of the American Federation of Teachers to provide the benefits of organization to American teachers;

1931 Denounced discrimination in employment of teachers on grounds of sex, race, creed, and other extraneous considerations;

1932 Defended the kindergarten against "economy" drives during the Depression, and urged federal aid to education during the emergency;

1938 Approved federal grants-in-aid for vocational education . . . .

THE A.F. OF L. urged reconstruction of the educational system after World War II. The Federation has continued its policy of urging needed federal aid for education, coupled with local control of the school system. It has protected the academic freedom of our teachers and pointed out the incompatibility of freedom with membership in Communist or other totalitarian organizations. The A.F. of L. has hailed the 1955 decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in denying that American children of various colors or races can have "separate but equal" school facilities, and it has urged its affiliated organizations—as always—to assist communities in complying with the law of the land.

The American Federation of Labor has been very active over recent months in helping plan the White House Conference on Education to be held from Nov. 28 to Dec. 1, 1955, in Washington, D.C. Through its Department of Education the A.F. of L. has urged the participation of its members in the hundreds of state, area, and community conferences held in preparation for the White House conference, because it feels it highly important that organized labor should take part in drawing up in a preliminary way a list of school needs and methods of meeting them.

Unfortunately, the listing of these few items tells only the outline of the story. Volumes have been written on the subject. The important thing, however, is the wisdom of A.F. of L. policy over the years and the degree to which the goals have been reached.

Labor's support of free, universal, public educational opportunity has been weighed by eminent authorities. George Counts of Columbia University's Teachers College, a former president of the American Federation of Teachers, has said that the A.F. of L.'s support of public schools "is incomparably more enlightened and consistent than that of any other important organization of educational laymen."

John Dewey has commented that: "The educational record of the American Federation of Labor is conspicuous . . . I say without any fear of contradiction that there is no organization in the United States—I do not care what its nature is—that has such a fine record in the program of liberal progressive public education as will be found in the printed records of the American Federation of Labor."

As Dr. Floyd Reeves, chairman of President Franklin D. Roosevelt's Advisory Committee on Education, has stated: "The American Federation of Labor has done more than any other group in implementing federal aid to education."

One of the chief contributions by labor to public education has been its support of its teachers' organization, the American Federation of Teachers. Organized in April, 1916, and affiliated with the A.F. of L. within a month, the A.F. of T. has provided the means for the professional and economic advancement of classroom teachers. It is growing constantly.

This proud record of achievement by U.S. organized workers is not used, however, as a laurel upon which to rest. Instead it is the starting place for further gains.

TODAY'S RAPIDLY INCREASING SCHOOL POPULATION is faced by a selfish minority who would "save" on taxes by denying our children the means for a good education. These forces, with great political power, would deny society the money needed to pay fair salaries to obtain qualified teachers. They would permit thousands of our children to attend "school" in dirty and dilapidated firetraps. We must now fight, just as in the past, to overcome this shortsighted selfishness. Much remains to be done, promptly, if our critical school situation of today is to be improved. Much must be done, indeed, if we are to stay at even our present inadequate level.

Not only are more and better teachers and classrooms needed but more opportunities are essential. Shall we continue to waste ability because some young people cannot take advanced education just because they do not have the money to do so? Can our society be so prodigal?

The A.F. of L.'s interest in education is basic. As President George Meany has stated:

"The provision of educational opportunities for every American child was one of the first objectives of the A.F.L. . . . The efforts of the A.F.L. to bring education within the reach of all have tremendously bolstered our democratic society."

The A.F. of L.'s support of public education and other community activity is not selfish; it is based on community loyalty. As Secretary-Treasurer William Schnitzler has said:

". . . We are eager to join with public-spirited groups in every locality to promote the fullest possible development of services and facilities essential to a wholesome community life—better housing, better education and recreation, better welfare and health services, better government—in short, a better life—not just for trade union members but for every man, woman and child."

Just as our advances in the past have made America free and strong, as a nation among nations, so great new advances must now be made if we are to meet the challenge of world leadership and, as people among peoples, work toward a world of law and peace and plenty.

Reprinted from

The AMERICAN TEACHER magazine

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION OF

The American Federation of Teachers an Affiliate of the American Federation of Labor

October, 1955

Additional Copies

MAY BE OBTAINED FROM

The American Federation of Labor

Department of Education

JOHN D. CONNORS, Director

1625 Eye Street N.W., Suite 914

Washington 6, D.C.

MAT-EP.

Democracy in the Classroom

A Guide for Teachers on How to Use Intergroup Relations Materials

- Schoolbook Covers
- Posters
- Book-marks
- Blotters

HOW the graphics and visual aids prepared by the Institute for American Democracy, Inc. can be used to help interpret and analyze basic problems in good human relations . . . WHERE helpful reference materials (books, pamphlets, recordings, films) on this subject for teachers and pupils can be obtained . . . WHAT the school and community can do—i.e., hobby fairs, field trips, dramatizations, role playing, etc.

National Stay-in-School Campaign

HANDBOOK FOR COMMUNITIES

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH EDUCATION, AND WELFARE
Office of Education

in cooperation with
U. S. DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

Ed. Gn.

NAPSAE

ORGANIZED 1952

SERVES

GENERAL ADULT EDUCATION

. . . the key to

A BOX OF BOOKS

TO HELP CHILDREN GROW

75¢ PER BOX

A MUST FOR CHILDREN'S

LITTLE ST

No. 1

LITTLE STORIES ON BIG SUBJECTS

ON YOUR MARK

BY GLADYS BAKER BOND

PERSONALITY GROWTH

ORIES ON

LITTLE STORIES ON BIG SUBJECTS

No. 2

JACOB'S FRIENDLIEST TOWN

BY GLADYS BAKER BOND

BIG SUBJEC

LITTLE STORIES ON BIG SUBJECTS

No. 3

The Crankiest Man On Main Street

BY GLADYS BAKER BOND

LITTLE STORIES ON BIG SUBJECTS

No. 4

DOWN THE OLD BEAR TRAIL

BY GLADYS BAKER BOND

Individually bound—beautifully boxed—inexpensively priced, Little Stories on Big Subjects is a new and exciting publishing venture. The stories are designed to help children grow into healthy, democratic individuals. Carefully graded for 7-12 year olds, they were written by Gladys Baker Bond, a well-known children's author. The illustrations that sparkle the books were done by Maurice Sendak, winner of the Newberry Award, the most highly coveted award in children's illustrations.

LITTLE STORIES ON BIG SUBJECTS

No. 5

JOHNNY

RED FEATHER

BY GLADYS BAKER BOND

For young people of all faiths, Little Stories on Big Subjects offer unique and stimulating experiences in intergroup understanding. There is Cadwalader Brown, the meanest man on Main Street, who discovers that his son's baseball team, in spite of its diverse background, is truly all-American. In another story, Sammy Singer, a young newcomer to the community, learns from a blind man how to see that people are friendly. In "On Your Mark" youngsters learn that it is more fun to

No. 6

LITTLE STORIES ON BIG SUBJECTS

LONESOME FEET

BY GLADYS BAKER BOND

win a game through using wits rather than fists. Few adolescents will fail to sympathize with Stephan Dapa as he earns his right to hunt bear tracks in the forest. They will also meet Johnny Red Feather, an Indian boy who does not believe in fighting, and Nino, an immigrant boy from Italy who learns how to be an American. Children will particularly enjoy reading about the mining town of Silver Dollar and the adventures of such interesting people as Joe Jeff, Rene, Bill and Mrs. Rosetti.

LITTLE STORIES ON BIG SUBJECTS No. 7

The Secret

BY GLADYS BAKER BOND

Little Stories on Big Subjects will make an excellent gift, for all occasions. Orders can be placed with the Anti-Defamation League, 515 Madison Avenue, New York 22, N. Y. or from the nearest ADL regional office.

75¢ per Box.

Ed - Intergroup

...to clarify our problems:

a guide to ROLE-PLAYING

Ed. Intergroup

THE ODD MAN

A PLAY IN ONE ACT

Prepared by the Staff of Southern Office

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE of B'nai B'rith

11 Pryor Street, S. W. • Atlanta 3, Georgia

H E L P F U L S U G G E S T I O N S

for using

"T H E O D D M A N"

There are so many valuable lessons of effective citizenship to be derived from THE ODD MAN that you will doubtlessly wish to emphasize further these democratic concepts to your group. In many classrooms, this play has served as a point of departure for discussions and activity programs. Here are several suggestions which have been employed.....

Prepared by the Staff of the Southern Office
ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE of B'nai B'rith
11 Pryor Street, S.W. Atlanta, Ga.

ITEMS FOR DISCUSSION:

Recognizing the dangers of stereotyping. The democratic way is to judge each individual on the basis of personal worth, regardless of religion, national origin, race, economic or social status.

1. Why did Vincent reject Mark because he comes from the East Side?

2. Can it possibly be true that all members of any group have the same or certain fixed personal traits?

3. Vincent, who lived on the North Side, was bossy and a snob. Does that mean all North Siders are bossy and snobs?

4. In your everyday contacts, do you hear groups of people being classed as dirty, or lazy, or bad-tempered, or thrifty, or greedy? Why is it wrong to do so?

Cooperation is the spirit of democracy. The strength of a democracy lies in the cooperation of all different kinds of people united in the common belief of equal rights and opportunities for all. A truly democratic citizen respects the right of others to be different.

1. What makes people become friends?

2. Is it possible to know what a person is like before you even get acquainted?

3. What factors should enter into the choice of a friend? What factors should NOT enter into the choice of a friend?

4. Even if the team needed a good end, should they have kept Mark off the team because he was "different"?

5. What makes good teamwork, and a good team?

6. Have you ever been in a situation like Mark's, of being a newcomer in a school or social group? What are the difficulties a newcomer encounters?

7. How can we welcome new arrivals into our group?

Personal responsibilities in a democracy. Each citizen in a democratic society must be willing to assume personal responsibility in correcting unfair treatment of other individuals and groups.

1. Do you know of a situation similar to THE ODD MAN? If you experienced a situation where someone was treated unfairly, what would you do?

2. If the boys had shown an interest in getting acquainted with Mark and learning what he was like, do you believe he would have received fairer treatment?

3. If Vincent didn't like Mark for some reason and kept him off the team, isn't it possible that he might get to dislike another one of the boys and keep him from playing too?

4. How was Van a better teammate and citizen than Vincent?

5. How did the other boys finally reach a decision that was good for the team?

THINGS TO DO:

1. Write compositions related to the subject of friendship or teamwork -- for example, "My Best Friend," "What We Expect of Our Friends," "What Makes a Winning Team," etc.

2. Work out on the blackboard a check list of characteristics or personal traits which make for the kind of person to be chosen as a friend or teammate.

3. Choose a champion football or baseball or basketball team, learn as much as possible about the background of each player, and discuss their similarities and differences and why the team won the championship.

4. Discuss short stories and books that show the effects on young people of not being wanted.

5. Listen to or report on radio programs and discuss whether the characters were stereotyped.

6. Report on radio programs with which you are familiar which attempt to build better understanding among different groups.

7. Prepare short talks on the subject, "The Kind of Citizen I Want To Be."

8. Discuss instances in American history to illustrate how this nation grew strong through the teamwork of its many different kinds of people, such as the American Revolution, the expansion of the West, industrial development, etc.

9. Design posters on the theme of "Teamwork" (perhaps as a contest).

THE ODD MAN

Fair Play Wins
On the Football Field

★

For additional copies of this play, write to:

SOUTHERN OFFICE
ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE
11 Pryor St., S.W., Atlanta 3, Georgia

THE ODD MAN

★

CHARACTERS

VAN

VINCENT

DICK

AL

PEEWEE

MAC

MARK O'DONALD

INDEFINITE NUMBER OF BOYS BETWEEN AGES OF 13-17

★

SCENE

Edge of a neighborhood playground, which is the sideline of a football field. An odd number of young boys (no more than 23), all dressed in old clothes and some of them in incomplete football uniforms (helmets, knee pads, shoulder pads, jerseys, etc.), are lying or sitting on stage, apparently waiting for somebody. Downstage (farthest from audience) two boys stand about 20 feet apart, passing football back and forth. Downstage left is a pile of sweatshirts, sweaters and assorted coats that the boys have discarded preparatory to play. In the foreground are Dick, Al, Vincent, Peewee and Mac. Upstage left sits Mark O'Donald, observing the conversation and horseplay of the other boys but not participating.

Peewee, the smallest and youngest in the group (he's about 10 or 11), speaks first. He is a very animated little boy, who regards himself as something of a comedian and who is regarded with considerable affection by the others. He is lying on his back, his head resting on a helmet.

PEEWEE: Say, Mac.

MAC: Un-huh?

PEEWEE: You know why the moron put a chair in the hearse?

MAC: I can't imagine, Peewee. Why?

PEEWEE: To let rigor mortis set in. (BRIGHTLY) Get it?
(MAC LAUGHS AND JERKS THE HELMET OUT FROM UNDER PEEWEE'S HEAD. PEEWEE'S HEAD HITS THE GROUND WITH A THUMP. GENERAL LAUGHTER)

AL: I wish Van would come on. He said he'd be here at three, and it's three-fifteen now.

DICK: Oh, he probably had to run to the store for his mother, or something, He'll be along in a minute.

PEEWEE: (LAUGHING, WITH MOCK BOASTFULNESS) You got nothing to worry about, Al. If Van doesn't show up, I'll take his place.

MAC: (TEASING) Yeah, you take his place! You'll take Van's place the day I sub for Charlie Trippi!

AL: The trouble is, nobody can take Van's place. I'd hate to think where we'd have been without him last week.

DICK: Yeah, the Pelicans would have sure beat us if Van hadn't intercepted that pass.

VINCENT: Aw, I don't think Van's that hot. He's just lucky, that's all.

AL: (INDIGNANTLY) Lucky! Luck hasn't got anything to do with the way he runs or the way he kicks. He can outrun and outkick anybody in the League. I hope nothing's held him up this afternoon. I've got a new play I want him to run through.

DICK: Oh, stop worrying, Al. If Van said he'll be here, he'll be here all right.

MAC: (PUNCHING PEEWEE) Say, Peewee. Who's the new boy?

PEEWEE: (LIFTING HIS HEAD) What new boy? (TURNS ON SIDE, PROPS HEAD ON ARM)

MAC: (GESTURING WITH HEAD TOWARDS MARK) That one. The one in the green sweater, sittin' by himself over there.

PEEWEE: Oh, he just moved here. Name's O'Donald. Van told him to come by for a tryout.

MAC: (RISING TO HIS FEET) Well, that's no way to treat a new fellow, leavin' him off there by himself. Let's go talk to him.

VINCENT: (WAVING HIM BACK DOWN) Aw, keep your seat, Mac. You don't wanta make friends with that guy. (MAC REGARDS VINCENT UNCERTAINLY FOR A MOMENT, THEN SHRUGS, RESUMES HIS SEAT)

AL: (TO THE GROUP) Look, y'all. There's no use waiting for Van before we get started. We've got more than enough men here for a good scrimmage. And we need all the practice we can get before that game with the Indians Saturday.

VINCENT: Why scrimmage, Al? We've got enough here to choose up sides and play a regular game. Why don't we do that?

DICK: Sure, Al. It's more fun playing a regular game.

AL: OK. Suppose you and Vincent choose up sides... (TO OTHERS) Come on, everybody. Dick and Vincent are gonna choose up sides. (BOYS RISE, COME FORWARD, FORM SEMI-CIRCLE IN BACK OF DICK AND VINCENT.)

DICK: Who's gotta coin? (AL PULLS OUT A COIN) OK, call it, Vincent.

VINCENT: Heads.

(AL FLIPS THE COIN.)

AL: Tails. Your first choice, Dick.

DICK: (LOOKING OVER GANG INTENTLY) All right, I'll take Al.

(FROM HERE ON, EACH BOY COMES FORWARD AS HIS NAME IS CALLED AND TAKES A STAND NEXT TO DICK OR VINCENT, WHICHEVER ONE OF THE TWO HAS CHOSEN HIM.)

VINCENT: Ralph.

DICK: Roger.

VINCENT: Billy.

DICK: Les.

VINCENT: Carrroll.

DICK: Jerry.

VINCENT: Frank.

DICK: Ed.

VINCENT: John.

DICK: Jim.

VINCENT: Art.

DICK: George.

(VINCENT PAUSES, TRYING TO DECIDE WHOM TO CHOOSE OF THOSE REMAINING. HIS EYES LIGHT ON MARK O'DONALD. HE REFLECTS A MOMENT, THEN BECKONS TO DICK, MOVING FORWARD TO MEET HIM IN CENTER OF STAGE.)

VINCENT: (IN STAGE WHISPER) We don't want this new kid on our team, do we?

DICK: (CURIOUS) Why not? He's a friend of Van's, isn't he?

VINCENT: (SCOFFING) Naw. You know how Van is. Always a sucker for strangers. I tell you this guy's no good.

DICK: (SUSPICIOUS) Why? What's wrong with him, Vincent?

VINCENT: (SNEERING) He lives in East Side!

DICK: (INCREDULOUS) What's wrong with that?

VINCENT: You know the type — those people over there. Never saw a one of them who didn't try to run things. We let this guy on our team and pretty soon he'll be telling everybody what to do.

DICK: (TAKING A QUICK GLANCE AT O'DONALD) I dunno.

DICK: He looks like he might make a pretty good end. He's plenty tall and Van says he's pretty fast.

VINCENT: I'm telling you, Dick, we'd be making a mistake. I know his kind. You can't trust 'em.

DICK: Can't trust 'em?

VINCENT: That's right, you can't trust 'em. Give 'em an inch and they take a mile. Those guys in East Side — (SHAKES HIS HEAD) — they're nothin' but a bunch of trouble-makers. Look — who was it started that fight in the yard yesterday? Joe Saunders, wasn't it? And where does Joe Saunders live? — East Side. See?

DICK: (WEAKENING) Well, maybe you're right.

VINCENT: Sure I'm right. Besides that, his father wasn't even born in this country. We don't want an East Side foreigner playin' with us. He's not our kind.

DICK: (SHRUGGING) OK. But what'll we tell him?

VINCENT: Oh, tell him we already got an even number of men on each side, that he's the odd man. He'll take the hint.

DICK: All right. (THEY SEPARATE AND RESUME THEIR FORMER POSITIONS.) It's your go.

VINCENT: Mac.

DICK: Bob. (THEY CONTINUE TO CHOOSE MEN FOR THEIR SIDES, UNTIL ALL HAVE BEEN CHOSEN BUT PEEWEE AND MARK O'DONALD. PEEWEE, BEING LITTLE MORE THAN A MASCOT, DOESN'T EXPECT TO BE CHOSEN; O'DONALD STANDS ILL AT EASE.)

VINCENT: (IN TONE OF FINALITY) All right — Peewee.

PEEWEE: (SURPRISED AND HAPPY) Me? You mean me?

VINCENT: Yeah, you can fill in the backfield till Van shows up.

DICK: All right, gang. That does it. Everybody out. (GROUP STARTS TROTTING OFF STAGE, LEFT, LAUGHING AND TALKING) Since I got to choose sides first, Vincent, you can choose the kickoff.

VINCENT: All right, I think I'll —

MARK: Hey!

(DICK AND VINCENT PAUSE, TURN TO MARK, WHO COMES UP TO THEM.)

VINCENT: (UNFRIENDLY) Yeah? Whatta you want?

MARK: (EMBARRASSED TO HAVE TO ASK) What about me?

VINCENT: (UNFRIENDLY) What about you?

MARK: I mean . . . I'd like to play, too.

VINCENT: (SHAKING HIS HEAD) We have all the men we need. Sorry. (TURNS AND STARTS TO WALK AWAY.)

MARK: But what about later? You might need a substitute later on.

VINCENT: (STOPPING AND REGARDING MARK COLDLY) We've got to do some serious practice this afternoon. We haven't time to break in a new man.

MARK: (PROTESTING) But Van said you were looking for a new man — a new man to play end. He said. . . .

VINCENT: (CUTTING HIM SHORT, STERNLY) We don't have any place for you on our team — this afternoon or any afternoon. You might as well go on home. (WITH A SNEER) Go on back to East Side, where you belong. (TURNS, STARTS TO WALK AWAY AGAIN) Come on, Dick. (EXIT DICK AND VINCENT, STAGE LEFT)

MARK: (CLENCHING HIS FISTS IN ANGER, STEPPING FORWARD IMPULSIVELY AS IF TO RUN AFTER VINCENT AND PULL HIM BACK) Why, you — (HALTS, STANDS RIGID A MOMENT, SLOWLY UNCLENCHES HIS FIST, SHRUGS) Oh, what's the use? (HE SITS DOWN ON THE STAGE, FACES THE FOOTBALL FIELD, AND HALF-HEARTEDLY WATCHES THE BOYS PLAYING. OFFSTAGE SOUND OF RUNNING, PUNTING, EXCITED VOICES, ETC. IN A FEW SECONDS VAN ENTERS, STAGE RIGHT. HE IS DRESSED IN CORDUROY TROUSERS, A RED STRIPED JERSEY, AND WEARS SHOULDER PADS. HE CARRIES A FOOTBALL HELMET IN HIS RIGHT HAND. HE HAS BEEN RUNNING AND HE IS PANTING SLIGHTLY.)

VAN: (WAVING TO GANG OFFSTAGE) Hey, y'all! Wait a minute, hear? Be there in a second. (HE KNEELS TO TIE A SHOESTRING, THEN NOTICES MARK.) Oh, hello. Why aren't you out there?

MARK: (SHRUGGING) They said they didn't need me.

VAN: We don't need you! The dickens we don't! What's the matter with those guys, anyway? Did you tell 'em I told you to come?

MARK: (RISING TO HIS FEET, DISCONSOLATELY) They knew that.

VAN: Who was it? Who told you we didn't need you?

MARK: I dunno. One of the guys who was choosing up sides. Either Dick or Vincent. I think that's what they said their names were.

VAN: (NODDING) I thought so. It's just like Vincent. What else did he tell you?

MARK: Not much. He said that they wouldn't have any place on their team for me — not this afternoon or any afternoon.

VAN: That doesn't make sense. Surely there must have been another reason.

MARK: Sure. (WRYLY) There was another reason — well, a sort of a reason.

VAN: What sort of a reason?

MARK: I live on the wrong side of the tracks. He said I ought to get back to East Side where I belong.

VAN: (DUMBFOUNDED) Of all the — (GETTING MAD) What in the world has that got to do with it? What difference does it make where you live?

MARK: Well, maybe you oughta tell Vincent that. (BEGINS TO MOVE TOWARD EXIT AT STAGE RIGHT) I'll see you in school tomorrow, Van.

VAN: (DISTRESSED) Wait a minute. Don't go, Mark, I'll —

MARK: (SMILING SADLY) I'll be around, Van. (TURNS, WALKS QUICKLY OFF STAGE RIGHT.)

(VAN STANDS, STARING MOODILY AT MARK'S RETREATING BACK. OFFSTAGE COMES A CRY: "HEY, VAN, COME ON. WE'RE WAITING FOR YOU, VAN." HE IGNORES IT. HE RUNS HIS FINGERS THROUGH HIS HAIR, SCRATCHES HIS HEAD. RUNNING FOOTSTEPS SOUND CLOSE OFF STAGE. ENTER AL, STAGE LEFT, SPEAKING AS HE RUNS.)

AL: What's the matter with you, Van? Didn't you hear me call you? We're waiting for you.

(VAN TURNS SLOWLY, SPEAKS SERIOUSLY.)

VAN: I heard you, Al.

AL: Then come on. Let's get started.

VAN: I'm not sure I want to play on this team anymore, Al.

AL: (ASTONISHED) Not play anymore! You gone crazy?

VAN: (GRIMLY) Why didn't you all let Mark O'Donald play this afternoon?

AL: Mark O'Donald?

VAN: You know O'Donald. The new boy.

AL: Oh, sure I know him. Why? Isn't he playing? I though he was. He was here a while ago.

VAN: No, he's not playing. Somebody — Vincent, I think — told him we didn't need him, that we had too many people already.

AL: Well, gosh, Van, I don't know. I guess in the excitement I just didn't pay any attention. Dick and Vincent chose sides, and when they finished, I figured everybody had been chosen, one side or the other . . . Come on now, I got a new play I want you to run through.

VAN: I want to talk to Vincent, first. (CUPS HIS HANDS, YELLS) Hey, Vincent! Will you and Dick come here a minute, please? (TO AL) I want to get this thing settled now, Al. Right now.

AL: (CURIOUS) Get what settled?

VAN: You'll see. (ENTER STAGE LEFT, DICK AND VINCENT.)

DICK: What's up, Van?

VINCENT: Something wrong?

(THEY ARE FOLLOWED DOWNSTAGE BY PEEWEE AND MAC. BEFORE VAN HAS FINISHED THE NEXT SPEECH, MOST OF THE GANG HAS REASSEMBLED AROUND HIM.)

VAN: (WITH RESTRAINED EXCITEMENT) There's a new boy in town named Mark O'Donald. He's in my history class. He told me the other day he's played football at whatever school it was he went to before, so I asked him down here this afternoon to try out for the team. Now Mark's our age, and he doesn't weigh more than 135 pounds, so according to the rules we all set up when we started this team, he's eligible to try out. He ought to be given a chance. But somebody told Mark we didn't need him. Somebody told him we had all the players we need, and that we wouldn't need him this afternoon, or any afternoon. (PAUSE) . . . Now you all know that's silly. We've been begging for a good end all season, and Mark might make a fine one.

CROWD: (AD LIB) Sure . . . We sure do need a decent end . . . What happened to O'Donald anyway? . . . He was here ten minutes ago. Who told him that?

VAN: Vincent, was it you who told Mark we didn't want him?

VINCENT: (SWAGGERING) Sure, I told him. I don't want to play with any dirty little — (HE SEES VAN CLENCHING HIS FIST AND ADVANCING TOWARD HIM. ALARMED, HE DROPS HIS SWAGGER, STEPS BACK, DOES NOT FINISH HIS SENTENCE. VAN STOPS, STARES AT HIM LOATHINGLY FOR A MOMENT, SLOWLY UNCLENCHES HIS FIST, THEN QUIETLY BUT FIRMLY RESUMES TALKING.)

VAN: (TO GROUP) That's brains for you, fellows! Have you ever heard of a coach picking an All-American team because every player lived on the same side of town or went to the same church, or spoke with the same accent? Look at the All-Star line-up — Sid Luckman, a Jew, quarterback; Charlie Trippi, an immigrant's son, and Buddy Young, a Negro, halfbacks; Frank Sinkwich, fullback — just to name a few.

If we left it to Vincent we'd have the worst team in the League. When Vincent took it on himself to tell Mark O'Donald we didn't want him playing with us, did he take a vote? Did he ask for anybody else's opinion?

GROUP: (AD LIB) I didn't know anything about it... He didn't take any vote... He didn't ask me.

DICK: He asked me, Van.

VAN: (STUDYING HIM) And you agreed?

DICK: (HANGING HEAD) Un-huh. Vincent said he'd make a lot of trouble for us, that —

VINCENT: (INTERRUPTING) Oh, you know how those people are, Van. Always think they're so smart — bossing everybody all the time. You know how they are.

VAN: (TO VINCENT) Those people? What do you mean, Vincent — those people?

VINCENT: Oh, you know. Those people over in East Side.

VAN: (WITH FEELING) No, Vincent, I don't know about those people. I know about people. I know that some people are loud and noisy, that some are quiet; that some are smart, and others not so smart; that some are kind and generous, that others are selfish. I know that there are all kinds of people, and that no two people are alike. I know, too, that you can't tell about a person 'til you get to know him, and that what section of town he lives in, or what church he goes to, or the race he belongs to, or where he was born, or what his father does for a living — I know that those things don't have anything at all to do with whether he's a good guy or a bad egg — whether he's a good football player or not. (WALKS NEARER VINCENT, WITH FISTS CLENCHED AGAIN, MENACINGLY) I know something else, too.

VINCENT: (RETREATING) Yeah?

VAN: I know that you're a snob. You've been a snob as long as I can remember. You're the one who's always bringing up this East Side business, or whispering about a person's religion or where his father was born. If it weren't for you, and a few others like you, we'd soon forget about such things. (PAUSE) Where do you live, Vincent?

VINCENT: You know where I live, Van.

VAN: In North Side, don't you? And you're a snob, aren't you? (SEVERAL IN THE GROUP NOD IN AGREEMENT.) Okay, therefore all North Siders are snobs. (SNORTING) That doesn't make sense, does it?

VINCENT: No-oo-oo-oo.

VAN: Then it doesn't make any sense that all the people who live in East Side are whatever it is you think they are, does it?

VINCENT: But, Van —

VAN: You're a bully, Vincent. The way you treated Mark O'Donald this afternoon — you condemned him before you even knew him. You acted like a great big bully. If I were you, I'd —

VINCENT: But, Van —

VAN: (GESTURING IMPATIENTLY) You've got a lot of nerve, saying East Siders are bossy. Who do you think was bossy this afternoon? . . . (TO OTHERS) This guy (JERKING HIS THUMB AT VINCENT) bossed all of you this afternoon. He made up your minds for you, and then told Mark you didn't want him. . . . Who do you think was being bossy this afternoon?

VINCENT: But he's a —

VAN: (DISGUSTED) Aw, you make me sick . . . (PACES EXCITEDLY BACK AND FORTH) All right, gang. I think we oughta put this to a vote. How many of us are in favor of asking Mark O'Donald back here this afternoon, and letting him try out for end?

(THE GROUP IS SILENT FOR A MOMENT, THEN BEGINS A QUIET MURMUR. AD LIB OVERTONES: "After all, he does live over there." . . . "Golly, I don't know." . . . "I never liked those East Siders. Take too much for granted," etc., etc.)

VAN: (IMPATIENTLY) Well, what are you waiting for?

PEEWEE: I'm with you, Van. If O'Donald wants to play with us, I think we ought to give him a chance. I don't know him very well, and he may turn out to be a no-good guy. But if he does, it won't be because he lives in East Side. People over there have less money than people in North Side, and I guess if there's any difference at all between us and them, that's the reason . . . (LAUGHS) Suppose he does turn out to be a lemon? What'll that prove? East Siders have just as much right to have lemons as we have. After all, we got Vincent.

(LAUGHTER. GROUP AD LIBS: "Peewee's right." "Count on me, too, Van." "You can count on Van to stick up for what's right" . . . etc . . . (GENERAL CHORUS OF ASSENT.)

VAN: Good! Peewee, will you see if you can catch Mark and tell him we want him to come back and play with us?

PEEWEE: (STARTING TO EXIT STAGE RIGHT) I'll have him back in a flash.

VINCENT: (ANGRILY) Just a minute, Peewee.

(PEEWEE STOPS, OBSERVES VINCENT CURIOUSLY.)

VINCENT: (TO VAN AND GROUP) I just want you to know that if you let this O'Donald play on our team, then I'm quitting. You can just find yourselves another halfback, that's what.

VAN: (VERY QUICKLY, STERNLY) And if you don't give him a chance to play on our team, I'm quitting . . . (TO GROUP) I don't know, maybe I had this team wrong. I thought, the kind of team it was, anybody who's eligible would be given a chance to try out. Anybody who was good enough to make the team and turned out to be a right guy — I mean right guy, period — could play with us. That's the kind of team I thought we had, and if it isn't, then I don't care about playing on it anymore . . . . Now, how about it? Are we going to play fair and give this new guy a chance?

GROUP: (AD LIB) "If that's the way Vincent feels, let him go." "Let's be fair about it." . . . "For gosh sakes, Vincent, what you wanta act like this for?" . . . etc.

VAN: (SMILING) Go ahead, Peewee. We'll show Mark democracy isn't just something you read about in history books; it's a spirit of fair play that makes players work together to be the winning team!

(PEEWEE TROTS OFF STAGE RIGHT.)

AL: Come on, gang. Let's pick up where we left off. (RUNS OFF STAGE LEFT, FOLLOWED BY EVERYBODY BUT VINCENT AND VAN. VAN HAS MOVED TO FOLLOW HIM, BUT PAUSES JUST AT EXIT. HE TURNS AND SPEAKS TO VINCENT.)

VAN: Nobody's asking you to quit, you know, Vincent. It's up to you.

VINCENT: (WAVING HIM AWAY. HIS VOICE IS BITTER, BUT IT IS A BITTERNESS THAT COMES FROM BEING ON THE DEFENSIVE) Go on and leave me alone. I don't wanta hear any more sermons from you.

(VAN SHRUGS, TROTS OFFSTAGE LEFT, ADJUSTING HIS HELMET AS HE RUNS. ALONE, VINCENT POUNDS HIS RIGHT FIST INTO THE PALM OF HIS LEFT HAND ANGRILY, MUTTERS SOMETHING TO HIMSELF. WORRIED AND FEELING REJECTED, HE KEEPS SHAKING HIS HEAD AND MUMBLING TO HIMSELF AS HE GOES SLOWLY DOWNSTAGE, STOOPS AND PICKS UP A SWEATSHIRT, WHICH HE PROCEEDS TO PULL ON OVER HIS HEAD. THE EXCITED SOUNDS OF THE BOYS AT PLAY COME TO HIM FROM OFFSTAGE: "Throw it to me, Dick. Here, Dick . . . to me." . . . "Oh, you muffed it." . . . "All right, gang, let's let 'em have it this time . . . hut, two, three, hip." SOUND OF HANDS SLAPPING AGAINST BALL, RUNNING FEET, ETC. . . . VINCENT LOOKS WISTFULLY OFFSTAGE, IN THE DIRECTION OF THESE SOUNDS, FOR A MOMENT. HIS HANDS GO DOWN TO HIS WAIST, AS IF HE IS ABOUT TO PULL OFF THE SWEATSHIRT; HE TAKES AN IMPULSIVE STEP FORWARD, AS IF HE INTENDS TO RUN ONTO THE FIELD AND JOIN THE GANG. BUT HE CHANGES HIS MIND, WHEELS AROUND, AND WALKS QUICKLY ACROSS THE STAGE. JUST BEFORE EXIT AT STAGE RIGHT, HE STOPS ABRUPTLY, STANDS MOTIONLESS IN INDECISION. THEN HE KICKS THE EARTH WITH HIS RIGHT FOOT, TURNS HIMSELF AROUND, AND AS HE BEGINS TO TROT BACK ACROSS THE STAGE, HE PULLS OFF HIS SWEATSHIRT IN ONE QUICK MOVEMENT. THEN HE PICKS UP SPEED AND YELLS, HIS VOICE CONTINUING OFFSTAGE LEFT: Hey, y'all! Wait for me. Wait for me, y'all. I wanta play, too.

(CURTAIN)

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE

ADL, the educational arm of B'nai B'rith (America's oldest and largest Jewish Service organization) is a creative organization seeking to build in the lives of all Americans those basic attitudes on which good human relations are founded. It is an action organization aiming for the continual expansion of the democratic way of life. Its program is based on the realization that bigotry directed against any single group in this country hurts all Americans.

In furtherance of such a program, the Anti-Defamation League cooperates with all groups working toward this ideal of bettering human relations. Among these are church people of all denominations, educators, civic clubs, youth groups, veterans, businessmen and labor groups and many other organizations and individuals. A broad, educational program has been developed utilizing:

• Films • Radio Programming • Aids to Educators • Recordings • Speakers • Books • Advertising • Posters • Leaflets • Cartoons

All of which is available on request to those who find such material of aid in their effort to preserve human worth and the dignity of the individual.

SOUTHERN OFFICE

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE

11 Pryor St., S. W. Atlanta 3, Ga.

MARY SMITH

MEETS

MR. PEOPLE

AN ORIGINAL PLAY

Prepared by the Staff of Southern Regional Office

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE of B'nai B'rith

11 Pryor Street • Atlanta 3, Georgia

HELPFUL SUGGESTIONS

for using

"MARY SMITH MEETS MR. PEOPLE"

There are so many valuable lessons of effective citizenship to be derived from MARY SMITH MEETS MR. PEOPLE that you will doubtlessly wish to emphasize further these democratic concepts to your group. In many classrooms, this play has served as a point of departure for discussion and activity programs. Here are several suggestions which have been employed.....

Prepared by the Staff of the Southern Regional Office
ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE of B'nai B'rith
11 Pryor Street, S.W. . Atlanta, Ga.

ITEMS FOR DISCUSSION:

1. The significance of Mr. People. Implied in this can be the universal brotherhood of man; man's common ancestry; the anthropological explanation for physical and racial differences.

   Younger children will enjoy identifying the national origin of items of his costume, suggesting which of these are today incorporated in American dress.

2. Our American concept which Mr. People makes so implicit: That each person is a distinct individual and should be accepted or rejected on his own merit without regard to religion, race, or national origin.

   The students may be guided to enlarge upon the qualities that should be sought in establishing personal friendships.

3. The essential likeness of all children the world over, such as physical characteristics (losing teeth at about the same age, general structure of the body); recreation patterns (playing the same kind of games, marbles, dolls, ball, tag, flying kites); holiday celebrations (religious observances, birthdays).

4. The universal character of our Thanksgiving Day celebration. In a discussion of the first Thanksgiving Day celebrated on American shores, the class may be guided to discuss and explore the similarities of harvest festivals in other lands and of other cultural origins.

5. The significance of "Americans All - Immigrants All." This topic may point up Chief Tamiami's assertion that the Indians were the first Americans and that if we all went back to where we came from, the only people that would be left in America would be the Indians, waving goodbye to the last departing ships.

The class will very likely be interested in discussing the national origin of their own forebears; in gathering and sharing information as to why they came to America, where they settled, their early means of livelihood. This background material can be used to emphasize that people of all religions, races, and national origins have worked together to make America great.

Particular attention may be directed toward the class's having an understanding of American naturalized citizens (such as Anna Polowski's father).

6. The meaning of "America is a land of opportunity."

7. The discussion unit may conclude with a summary of the important lessons taught Mary by Mr. People. The class will wish to give special consideration to how these lessons may become a part of each student's everyday living. These precepts may emphasize:

   (1) The importance and dignity of each individual person.

   (2) The American concept that each person should be accepted or rejected according to his own personal worth.

   (3) The application of the Golden Rule -- that each person must be willing to accord to others the rights and respects he wishes for himself.

THINGS TO DO:

1. Write a short paper: "All children are different but alike."

2. Prepare skits on how and why the students' ancestors came to America.

3. Indicate on a world map the national origins of the students in the class.

4. Tie in with music--folk songs of various national origins.

5. See how much the class knows about the great men of music--composers, performers, conductors, of different national origins, religions and races, who have contributed to our enjoyment of music.

6. In physical education learn folk dances of different cultural origins.

7. Write letters to the director of the National Art Museum in Washington and to other art museums requesting prints of paintings by great artists of many different nations.

8. Build up a mural showing how people of many national backgrounds have worked together to make America great.

9. Make a mural showing how much fun and the many different friends Mary could have if she followed Mr. People's teachings.

10. Find as many English words as you can with different national origins.

MARY SMITH MEETS MR. PEOPLE

TIME: 20 minutes

CAST: Six characters

Mary Smith, through the exciting visit of Mr. People, learns the important lesson of the Golden Rule.

★

For additional copies of this play, write to:

SOUTHERN REGIONAL OFFICE
ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE
11 Pryor St., S. W., Atlanta 3, Georgia

MARY SMITH MEETS MR. PEOPLE

★

CHARACTERS

MARY SMITH, a schoolgirl

MR. PEOPLE, a mythical character representing the peoples of the world

ANNA POLOWSKI, Mary's friend

SARA FRANKLIN, Mary's friend

CHIEF TAMIAMI, an Indian

MARCEL, a 17th century American carpenter, indentured servant

★

STAGE DIRECTIONS

The scene is Mary's room at home and it can be as simple or as elaborate as staging facilities will allow. All that's needed for the action of the play is a child's desk, a chair for Mary to sit in, and a vacant chair for Mr. People, who enters shortly after the scene opens. A few other properties might be added to suggest a little girl's bedroom — a small bureau, a flossy little bed, dolls, pink curtains, etc. — but even these can be eliminated without damaging the action of the play. In fact, the play can be presented just as easily in front of a normal-sized classroom as it can on a full stage. For this reason, no exact positions for doors, which might provide entrances and exits, are given here. If the front of a classroom is used as the staging area, the door into the classroom from the corridor will serve excellently.

Mary is not a bad child, but a spoiled one. It is important to the dramatic integrity of the play that in the opening scene, and in her initial reactions to Mr. People's criticism, she be represented as vain, wilful, or beguiling as the script demands.

(As the scene opens Mary is seated at her desk, her face toward the audience. She is studying geography. It is obvious that she doesn't like it. She has her head close to the pages of her book and she is grumbling to herself. She frowns and sighs and makes noisy little grunts. Finally she starts turning the pages, one fast after the other, looking at the pictures.)

MARY: Oh, Eskimos! Who cares about Eskimos! I'll never see an Eskimo in my life . . . (TURNS ANOTHER PAGE) . . . and Greeks! Uh! . . . (TURNS ANOTHER PAGE) . . . Italians! Look at 'em, picking grapes. Huh! Lot I care about Italians. I've seen enough picture shows to know that most of 'em are nothing but gangsters . . . (TURNS ANOTHER PAGE) I'm sure glad I don't live in China. Look at this silly picture. Wouldn't I look funny in a dress like that? (SHE PAUSES AND LOOKS AT HER OWN DRESS, PATS HER SHOULDERS AND SMILES, VERY PLEASED WITH HERSELF.)

(As Mary is talking, a strange little man appears quietly behind her. He is brown-skinned and he wears a ring in his nose. He wears a turban on his head and a slip-over shirt with a high ruffled collar, and no tie. His coat looks as if it might belong to the suit of an American businessman. Instead of trousers, he wears wide, full silk knee pants, after the fashion of Russian men. Bright red leggings cover his calves, and on his feet are soft felt slippers. He is Mr. People and he dresses in a costume that is the combination of the traditional national costumes of all the earth's people. The class may make suggestions for and bring to school suitable items of clothing. He carries a magic stick — an ordinary branch cut from a tree. He stands softly, listening to Mary with an expression of half-shock, half-amusement. Every now and then he shakes his head, as if distressed to hear her talk like this.)

MARY: (TURNING ANOTHER PAGE) . . . Indians again! I already know everything there is to know about Indians. I don't see why they want to teach me all about these foreigners anyway! . . . (SHE FLIPS OVER THREE MORE PAGES QUICKLY) . . . Ten pages in all. And all this reading! Why can't they use pictures and not make you read all this stuff? (IN A FIT OF TEMPER SHE SLAMS THE BOOK SHUT AND WHIRLS AROUND IN HER CHAIR) I could have learned more at the picture show! I ——

(She starts at the sight of Mr. People; her jaw drops and she tries to scream but can't. As she is struggling to say something, Mr. People smiles, bows, and moves softly toward her.)

MR. PEOPLE: (HE SPEAKS VERY GOOD ENGLISH). Don't be frightened, Mary, I know it's rude to pop in on you like this, but I received an emergency call from one of my workers this afternoon telling me I had better pay you a little visit before it's too late.

MARY: (FINDING HER VOICE, BUT STILL FRIGHTENED) Before it's too late! Too late for what? . . . Who . . . Who are you?

MR. PEOPLE: Do you mind if I sit down? I've had a long journey. (HE PULLS UP A CHAIR AND SITS DOWN. HE CROSSES HIS LEGS, PULLS OUT AN IMMENSE HANDKERCHIEF, AND WIPES HIS FOREHEAD. WHEN HE WIPES, HE WIPES OFF PART OF THE BROWN COLOR ON HIS FOREHEAD, SHOWING THE WHITE.)

MARY: (AGAIN STARTING) Are you an actor? Look, some of your make-up just came off.

MR. PEOPLE: (LAUGHING HEARTILY) Oh, no, indeed, I'm no actor. You see, I've just come from India where most of the people have brown skin, and now that I'm in your country where most of the people are white — why, it's only natural that my skin should turn white, isn't it?

MARY: (NODDING DESPITE HERSELF) Yes, I guess so.

MR. PEOPLE: After all, color is only skin deep.

MARY: (ALMOST CRYING) You mean if I were to go to India I'd turn brown?

MR. PEOPLE: (LAUGHING AGAIN) Oh, no, my dear. You might turn a little brown. (PAUSE) From the sun, you know. But if you were to stay in India, where the climate is so different, in a million years or so your great-great-great-great-goodness knows how many great-grandchildren might be brown.

MARY: (RECOILING) Oh, no!

MR. PEOPLE: Oh, yes. It's a fact. A scientific fact. At least that's what did happen. A million years ago people were all pretty much alike. Only some of them went to Africa, where for some reason they began to turn black. And some of them went to Europe, where they began to turn white. And still others went to the far east where after many, many years they began to turn yellow and their eyes began to draw tight at the corners. Oh, yes. Didn't you know that?

MARY: (SHAKING HER HEAD) But you? I don't understand about you. You've only been here a few minutes, and already your skin has begun to turn.

MR. PEOPLE: (SIGHING) Well, my dear, I'm somebody special. That is, I'm everybody special.

MARY: Everybody?

MR. PEOPLE: That's right. I'm all the people in the world. I'm Chinese, Japanese, Siamese, and Balinese. Italian, Greek and Eskimo. English, Dutch, Irish and Scotch. (RECITE WITH INCREASING SPEED) Welsh, French, Russian, Danish, Swiss, German, Mexican, Indian, Turk, and goodness knows what else. I'm Protestant, Catholic, Jewish, Hindu, Moslem — and yes, Buddhist. I'm all the nationalities, all the races, all the religions in the world rolled into one. I'm people. I'm called Mr. People.

MARY: Mr. People?

MR. PEOPLE: Yes. All the things that people do, I do, too. And all the things that happen to people also happen to me. Sometimes it gets pretty unpleasant. Very unpleasant indeed. (HE PULLS OUT HIS HANDKERCHIEF AGAIN AND WIPES OFF ALL THE BROWN FROM HIS FACE.) Some things it's taken a million years to do, I can do in the bat of a cat's eye — like changing the color of my skin, for instance, or talking a new language.

MARY: Oh, my, that must be exciting.

MR. PEOPLE: But it's sort of tiring. My job keeps me jumping, you know. Traveling all the time. (SMILE HAPPILY) It's worth it, though. I get to know so many different people. And I like people. People are pretty wonderful. They are the most important thing in the world, really. They are much more important than fine houses and good clothes and spending money.

MARY: Even more important than dolls or bicycles or ice cream sodas?

MR. PEOPLE: Even more important than movies!

MARY: (BLUSHING) Oh!

MARY: And the funny thing is that all the people in the world are kin to each other. Did you know that?

MARY: You mean I'm kin to Susie Little?

MR. PEOPLE: Yes, and to Johnny Brown, and to Joe Borneo, and Mee-Ling China, and to Jose Mexico, and millions more. You see, people began with the first men and women a million years ago.

MARY: My goodness! (PUZZLED) But why did you come here?

MR. PEOPLE: Well, now, Mary. (HE REACHES INTO HIS COAT POCKET AND TAKES OUT A LITTLE BLACK BOOK) I've had a report on you, my dear, and it's not so good. (HE STUDIES A PAGE IN THE BOOK, SHAKES HIS HEAD SADLY, AND GOES TSK TSK TSK WITH HIS TONGUE.)

MARY: A report on me, Mr. People? What kind of report?

MR. PEOPLE: One written by my personal representative in the western hemisphere. "Mary Smith," it says. That's your name, isn't it?

MARY: (NODDING) Yes.

MR. PEOPLE: Well, Mary, listen to this. "Disposition: Mary Smith used to be a sweet-tempered child, bnt when she entered the —— grade, she started being snooty. She demands to have her own way too much of the time, and she seems to think she's too good to play with some of her classmates."

MARY: (BEGUILINGLY) Oh, that can't be me, Mr. People. I play with Alice Green and Margaret Webb and ——

MR. PEOPLE: Yes, Mary, but what happened with Anna Polowski? Let's use my magic stick and take you back to that afternoon in October. (WAVES STICK. MARY MOVES FORWARD TO JOIN ANNA POLOWSKI, WHO, SKIPPING ROPE, HAS APPEARED THROUGH DOOR.)

MARY: (REACHING FOR JUMP ROPE) It's my turn, now.

ANNA: (STILL SKIPPING) But Mary! I've just begun.

MARY: I wanna jump. Gimme that rope!

ANNA: (STOPS, CLUTCHES ROPE BEHIND HER BACK) No. This is my rope and I want to jump some more.

MARY: (TRIES TO GRAB ROPE. SLIGHT TUSSLE) You give me that rope, Anna Polowski. (WHEN MARY IS UNABLE TO TAKE ROPE AWAY FROM ANNA, GETS IN A TEMPER, SHOVES HER AWAY, AND STAMPS HER FOOT) All right for you, Anna Polowski. (IN UGLIER TONE) Just get out of my yard and don't ever come back, hear? I don't want to play with you anyway. I don't wanta play with any little old foreigner.

ANNA: (ON THE VERGE OF TEARS, RUNS OFF STAGE, AND MARY RETURNS TO ORIGINAL POSITION.)

MR. PEOPLE: My, my, Mary, was that a way to act with a playmate?

MARY: (POUTING) Well, Anna is a little old foreigner!

MR. PEOPLE: (SHAKING HIS HEAD) No, Mary. Anna was born right here in (NAME OF TOWN), just as you were. Her father is a naturalized citizen, and they're both just as American as you are. (RETURNS TO THE REPORT ON MARY) Now, my representative next reports that he overheard you arguing with Sara Franklin last Thanksgiving Day, like this: (WAVES STICK AGAIN AND MARY MOVES TOWARD SARA FRANKLIN WHO ENTERS STAGE RIGHT.)

SARA: (EXCITEDLY) Mary, I just saw the turkey we're going to have for dinner. It's all brown and this big! (MEASURING WITH HANDS)

MARY: (DISDAINFULLY) Your turkey, huh! Our turkey's twice that big. (GESTURING EXAGGERATEDLY WITH HER HANDS TO MEASURE ENORMOUS TURKEY. LIFTING HER HEAD AND POSING PROUDLY) Whatta you know about Thanksgiving, anyway? After all, my great-great-great-grandfather came over on the Mayflower! My family's been celebrating Thanksgiving for over a hundred years. Has yours? We're better Americans than you are, that's what! (SARA MOVES OFF STAGE, RATHER DOWNCAST, AND MARY MOVES BACK TO DESK.)

MR. PEOPLE: (SHAKING HIS HEAD AND LOOKING AT MARY SADLY) Mary, you know that isn't true!

MARY: (POUTING) Well, that was a fib, I guess, but my family's been here a long, long time. Longer than Sara Franklin's. Mother says so.

MR. PEOPLE: But, Mary, all Americans share equally in celebrating Thanksgiving Day. Besides, if you like only the children whose grandfathers have been in America for hundreds of years, why didn't you invite little Isaac Levin to your birthday party the other day? Do you know that his great-great-great grandfather came to America with General Oglethorpe to help settle and build Georgia? My report (TURNING THE PAGES) says that Isaac was very hurt when he was the only boy on your street not asked to your party.

MARY: Well, uh . . . you see, Mr. People, he doesn't go to the same church as we do.

MR. PEOPLE: In your country, Mary, it is a very dear right for each man to worship God as he chooses. The founders of the United States were so concerned about guarding this right that it is part of your Constitution. (TURNS PAGE IN LITTLE BOOK — CONTINUES TO READ SHAKING HIS HEAD SADLY) This next report is quite bad. (CONTINUES READING) "Thelma Jones, the maid in Mary's house is very fond of Mary. She likes to make fudge and cookies to please Mary and always takes real pride in Mary's clothes being neat and fresh and pretty. But occasionally Thelma has to scold Mary when she has been particularly naughty. Just the other day, when Thelma repeatedly urged Mary, 'Drink your milk, it's good for you,' Mary answered angrily, 'Don't you tell me what to do. I'm a white lady and you're nothing but a nigger. Your ancestors were slaves.' " (PAUSES, AGAIN SHAKING HIS HEAD SADLY) Oh, Mary, how you hurt Thelma! My report states, too, that your mother has told you many times how wrong it is to speak that way to Thelma.

MARY: (ANGRILY) But she is a nigger.

MR. PEOPLE: (VERY FIRMLY) Negro, Mary, Negro.

MARY: (MOCKING MR. PEOPLE) Negro, Mary, Negro. (MEAN AND NASTY) Who do you think you are, telling me what to say?

MR. PEOPLE: (RAISING HIS MAGIC STICK MENACINGLY OVER MARY'S HEAD. SPEAKING FORCEFULLY) Mary, I have much magic in this stick. With a few twists of my wrist I can turn you into the person to whom you've been ugly just long enough for you to learn how she feels. Sometimes, with very stubborn pupils, I have to do that. (PAUSE) Now, are you going to continue to be stubborn? (WAVING HIS STICK)

MARY: (DRAWING BACK IN FRIGHT) No! No! No! Don't! Please don't... I'll do anything you say.

MR. PEOPLE: (LOWERING HIS STICK) Well, that's better. You're not really a bad girl, are you, Mary? I believe you just haven't stopped to consider how Anna and Sara and Isaac and Thelma feel.

MARY: (HALTINGLY) I guess — I guess so. I just haven't shown them the friendship I would want them to show me.

MR. PEOPLE: (WALKING BACK AND FORTH ACROSS THE ROOM, SCRATCHING THE BACK OF HIS NECK IN THOUGHT) Mary, I don't know exactly what to do with you. You must be taught that each one of us is a person just as you are. In your country, it is traditional to like each person for himself, without regard for race, color or religion or the country he may be born in.

MARY: You use such big words. Say that again, please.

MR. PEOPLE: Well, think of it this way. Anna Polowski is a girl. She may be pretty or ugly, smart or stupid, mean or sweet natured. Or maybe she's just in-between. You must think of Anna as what she is or isn't and then decide for yourself if you like to play with her. You're losing a good playmate when you decide right off that because her daddy came from Poland you won't have anything to do with her. Why, if you leave your mind open, you might find that Anna is the nicest of all the girls you know.

MARY: Really? (PAUSE) (REFLECTIVELY) She is a lot of fun . . .

MR. PEOPLE: Let's see now. What's the best way I can teach you the importance of liking people for themselves? I could take you on a trip around the world, but I don't want to worry your mother and daddy and I might not be able to get you back by breakfast.

MARY: I wouldn't like that. Couldn't you just talk to me?

MR. PEOPLE: No, that's the least best way. (PACES AND THINKS SOME MORE) It seems to me, Mary, that you just need a little information. Somehow or other, you have some fancy ideas about your own importance and the importance of your ancestors. You think you're more American than anyone else because your ancestors came here when there were very few people here, do you? Let's see about that. (GOES TO RIGHT STAGE WING, IF PLAY IS BEING PRODUCED ON STAGE, OR TO RIGHT EDGE OF PLAYING AREA IF PLAY IS BEING PRODUCED IN CLASSROOM, AND CALLS) Chief Tamiami! Oh, Chief Tamiami! Would you come here for a moment, please? (CHIEF TAMIAMI, IN FULL INDIAN DRESS, APPEARS, ARMS CROSSED, AND STANDS SILENTLY LOOKING AT MARY.)

MARY: (SURPRISED) Oh, where did you come from?

MR. PEOPLE: He's just one of my helpers, Mary. (TURNS TO CHIEF TAMIAMI) Chief, Mary here believes she's more American than anybody else because her great-great-great-great-grandparents came to America among the first settlers.

CHIEF TAMIAMI: (DISPLEASED) Ugh. (TURNS TO MR. PEOPLE) May I talk English, please?

MR. PEOPLE: Please.

CHIEF TAMIAMI: My people, Mary, were the first Americans. My ancestors came to this country so long ago, nobody remembers when. It was a long, long time ago, when there were no men at all on this whole continent. Nobody knows exactly how they came, either. Most of them, we think, came from the northeastern part of Asia, now known as Siberia. You can look that up in your geography book there. They came over to Alaska and then spread out. Some of them went north, and made their homes there. They're what you call Eskimos. Some of them came on down into what is now the United States. Others wandered further south down into Central and South America. They became what Columbus called the Indians. (PAUSES) They were the first Americans. Your great-great-grandmother and grandfather came here much, much later.

MARY: You mean it was your country first? Before it was ours?

CHIEF TAMIAMI: That's just what I mean. If I want to call names as you do — I could call you a foreigner. You're a foreigner, Mary, and so is everybody in America except us Indians. We Americans are proud that our country has always been looked upon as a land of opportunity, and that people from many foreign countries have come here to live and have contributed to the greatness of America.

MARY: Oh, dear, I wonder if my mother knows about this.

CHIEF TAMIAMI: May I go now, Mr. People?

MR. PEOPLE: Yes, but on your way out, send in Marcel. (EXIT CHIEF TAMIAMI, ENTER MARCEL. MARCEL IS A BIG, HANDSOME YOUNG MAN WHO COMES IN SMILING AND STANDS AWKWARDLY, LOOKING FIRST AT MARY, THEN AT MR. PEOPLE, WAITING FOR INSTRUCTIONS. HE IS DRESSED AS AN AMERICAN COLONIAL OF THE EARLY 1700's) Mary, I want you to meet Marcel. What do you think of him, Mary?

MARY: He's nice looking all right.

MR. PEOPLE: Think he looks anything like you?

MARY: No-oooo. (QUESTIONINGLY) He does look a little like my daddy.

MR. PEOPLE: Marcel is your great-great-great-great grandfather, Mary. He came to America in 1690 from France. Landed in South Carolina, didn't you, Marcel? Tell Mary about yourself.

MARCEL: (TO MARY) I came to this country as a slave, you know.

MARY: (ASTOUNDED) A slave? Oh, no.

MARCEL: Yes, I came to America as a slave. I met some Englishmen and gave myself to them if they would bring me to America, just so I could get enough food to eat and a place to live. I was known as an indentured servant and had to do whatever my English masters told me to do. Twice I was sold to other men, and had to do what they said. Yes, (SHAKING HIS HEAD SADLY) Mary, I worked in the rice fields in South Carolina for many years as a slave.

MARY: But you're white! How could you have been a slave?

MARCEL: The first slaves in America were white. It was only when the big planters couldn't buy enough indentured servants that they started bringing in Negroes as slaves.

MARY: If you were a slave, were all your children slaves, too?

MARCEL: No, Mary, one day I ran away to Virginia and became a carpenter's helper and began to live as a free man. Men don't like to be slaves. A man wants to be free — free to choose whether he wants to be a farmer, a carpenter, a lawyer or a teacher.

MARY: Is that what we mean by American freedom?

MR. PEOPLE: That's exactly right. (TURNS TO MARCEL) You can run along now, Marcel. But hang around. I may want you on my next trip. (EXIT MARCEL) . . . Now, how's about it, Mary? Are you beginning to get the point?

MARY: I think so. If being a good American means just that your family's been over here longer than most people, then the Indians are the best Americans of all!

MR. PEOPLE: Well, that's partly it.

MARY: And ancestors don't count at all, do they?

MR. PEOPLE: Well, of course, they count for something. (LAUGHING) But everybody's got just as many ancestors as everybody else.

MARY: And I learned from Chief Tamiami that people coming from countries all over the world have worked together to make America a wonderful place to live.

MR. PEOPLE: Yes, my dear. And the most important thing to remember is that each of us is a person just as you are. In schools all over the world children are taught the Golden Rule — to love their neighbor and that all men are brothers. If all the people in the world practiced these lessons, what a happier place this would be!

MARY: (WITH GREAT FEELING) Thank you so much for coming to see me, Mr. People. I'll remember all the lessons you've taught me.

MR. PEOPLE: Well, I must be running along. I'll be watching the reports on you, Mary. Won't you make them good ones?

MARY: Oh, I will make them good, Mr. People. Just watch me. (MR. PEOPLE STARTS TO MOVE AWAY, STOPS JUST AT THE EXIT WHEN MARY CALLS) Where are you going now?

MR. PEOPLE: (SMILING) To China. There's a little boy over there who's being naughty to Americans. He thinks he's better than you are because his country is so much older than yours. (LAUGHS AND SHAKES HIS HEAD) He was very naughty this afternoon to the son of a missionary. (PAUSE) You see, my little Chinese friend thinks all white people smell bad.

(CURTAIN)

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE

ADL, the educational arm of B'nai B'rith (America's oldest and largest Jewish Service organization) is a creative organization seeking to build in the lives of all Americans those basic attitudes on which good human relations are founded. It is an action organization aiming for the continual expansion of the democratic way of life. Its program is based on the realization that bigotry directed against any single group in this country hurts all Americans.

In furtherance of such a program, the Anti-Defamation League cooperates with all groups working toward this ideal of bettering human relations. Among these are church people of all denominations, educators, civic clubs, youth groups, veterans, businessmen and labor groups and many other organizations and individuals.

A broad, educational program has been developed utilizing:

• Films • Radio Programming • Aids to Educators
• Recordings • Speakers • Books • Advertising
• Posters • Leaflets • Cartoons

All of which is available on request to those who find such material of aid in their effort to preserve human worth and the dignity of the individual.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL OFFICE
ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE
11 Pryor St. Atlanta 3, Ga.

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE

ADL, the educational arm of B'nai B'rith (America's oldest and largest Jewish Service organization) is a creative organization seeking to build in the lives of all Americans those basic attitudes on which good human relations are founded. It is an action organization aiming for the continual expansion of the democratic way of life. Its program is based on the realization that bigotry directed against any single group in this country hurts all Americans.

In furtherance of such a program, the Anti-Defamation League cooperates with all groups working toward this ideal of bettering human relations. Among these are church people of all denominations, educators, civic clubs, youth groups, veterans, businessmen and labor groups and many other organizations and individuals.

A broad, educational program has been developed utilizing:

• Films • Radio Programming • Aids to Educators • Recordings • Speakers • Books • Advertising • Posters • Leaflets • Cartoons

All of which is available on request to those who find such material of aid in their effort to preserve human worth and the dignity of the individual.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL OFFICE
ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE
11 Pryor St. Atlanta 3, Ga.

ADL

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH

SOUTHERN OFFICE - 11 PRYOR STREET, S. W. - ATLANTA 3, GEORGIA

Chairman of Board
JUDGE EMANUEL LEWIS

Director
ALEXANDER F. MILLER

NATIONAL COMMISSION

Hon. Meier Steinbrink
Chairman

Barney Balaban
Phillip W. Haberman
A. C. Horn
Hon. Herbert H. Lehman

Charles W. Morris
Donald Oberdorfer
Honorary Vice-Chairmen

A. G. Ballenger
I. B. Benjamin
Max J. Schneider
Vice-Chairmen

Richard E. Gutstadt
Executive Vice-Chairman

Jacob Alson
Treasurer

Benjamin R. Epstein
National Director

COMMISSIONERS, Southern Area

Frank Garson
Atlanta, Ga.

Maurice Danenbaum
Houston, Tex.

William P. Bloom
Tuscaloosa, Ala.

Leonard Abess
Miami, Fla.

Mrs. M. E. Temerson
Tuscaloosa, Ala.

Dr. Maurice Goldberg
Washington, D. C.

ATLANTA REGIONAL OFFICE, 11 Pryor Street, S.W., Suite 305, Atlanta 3, Georgia
Arthur J. Levin, Director

FLORIDA REGIONAL OFFICE, 330 Seybold Building, Miami 32, Florida, Gilbert J. Balkin, Director

NORTH CAROLINA-VIRGINIA REGIONAL OFFICE, 403 East Franklin Street, Room 307, Richmond 19, Virginia, Theodore Freedman, Director

NEW ORLEANS REGIONAL OFFICE, 5342 St. Charles Ave., New Orleans 15, Louisiana, Brant Coopersmith, Director

Pa— Relations

THE TROUBLE WITH JOHNNY

A PLAY IN TWO SCENES

Prepared by the Staff of Southern Office

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE of B'nai B'rith

11 Pryor Street, S. W. • Atlanta 3, Georgia

THE TROUBLE WITH JOHNNY

TIME: 20 minutes
CAST: 6 or more characters

★

Through Johnny's bitter experience, a school group learns that it is each student's responsibility to practice democracy in daily living.

★

For additional copies of this play, write to:

SOUTHERN REGIONAL OFFICE
ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE
11 Pryor St., S. W., Atlanta 3, Georgia

"THE TROUBLE WITH JOHNNY"

★

A Play in Two Scenes

CAST:

JOHNNY

JOAN

BOB

GEORGE

MISS REYNOLDS
the principal

MISS SMITH
Miss Reynolds' secretary

FOUR GIRLS

FOUR BOYS

This play is designed for presentation either in an auditorium or in a classroom. Though two scenes are called for, they require only the simplest of properties and may be adapted easily for performance with the most limited stage facilities. A change of scene will, of course, offer no problem at all if the play is produced on the stage of the school auditorium. If presented in an ordinary classroom, however, the absence of a curtain may make the change an awkward business; continuity of the play will undoubtedly suffer if scenery has to be moved about in full view of the audience. To avoid this, it is suggested that, space permitting, both the front and rear of the classroom be utilized for playing space. The first scene can be played in the front of the classroom; when the scene changes, the audience can simply turn around in their desks and watch scene two enacted in the rear.

Scene One

A corner of the school lunchroom. Three tables, each designed to accommodate four persons. The two tables upstage (farthest from the audience) are occupied, each with two boys and two girls, all of whom are eating quietly. At the table downstage Bob and Joan are seated opposite each other. They are eating slowly and do not appear to be very happy. Offstage is the babble of voices and the clatter of dishes. The noise dies away as Joan speaks.

JOAN: (BANGING MILK GLASS DOWN ON TABLE; PEEVED) Well, I don't care what they say, Bob. George Kennedy couldn't help it if we lost the game!

(JOHNNY ENTERS STAGE RIGHT. HIS CLOTHES ARE CLEAN BUT SHABBY, AND THEY IMMEDIATELY STAMP HIM AS A BOY WHO COMES FROM A FAMILY WHERE EVERY PENNY COUNTS. THE CONTRAST BETWEEN HIS CLOTHES AND THOSE OF BOB'S IS NOTICEABLE. JOHNNY IS CARRYING A TRAY OF FOOD, A BOWL OF SOUP, A SANDWICH, AND A GLASS OF MILK. HE LOOKS AROUND, SPIES BOB AND JOAN UP FRONT, CROSSES STAGE TO JOIN THEM.)

BOB: Of course he couldn't, Joan. And I don't think anybody blames him, really. We were just up against a tough team, that's all. Even the coach admitted that.

JOHNNY: (STANDING BESIDE TABLE, STILL HOLDING TRAY) Aw, what does that guy know. He's as dumb as the team.

BOB: (SARCASTICALLY) Well, well, look who's here. Big-mouth Canetto!

JOHNNY: Yeah. Mind if I sit here? (NOT WAITING FOR AN ANSWER, HE PUTS TRAY ON TABLE, TAKES SEAT BETWEEN THE TWO, HIS FACE TOWARD AUDIENCE.)

JOAN: (INDIGNANTLY) If I were you, Johnny Canetto, I'd be careful what I said about Coach Watson!

JOHNNY: (ABOUT TO PUT SPOONFUL OF SOUP IN MOUTH, CONTEMPTUOUSLY) Why should I? He's nothing to me! I don't run around licking his boots like mosta these fellows. I don't play on his team.

BOB: I'll say you don't. He wouldn't have ya.

JOAN: (NODDING HER HEAD EMPHATICALLY) You said it, Bob. The coach wouldn't stand for him.

JOHNNY: Oh, yeah? Why wouldn't he stand for me?

JOAN: Because you're a trouble-maker, that's why. Always getting into fights. Everybody in school knows what you are.

JOHNNY: (LAUGHING DISDAINFULLY) But I win the fights I get into. That's more than you can say for George Kennedy. The way he blew up yesterday and lost that game for us —

JOAN: (VERY ANGRY, SHAKING FORK AT JOHNNY) That's not true, and you know it. George did not blow up. He did his very best, and it was no fault of his we got beat.

JOHNNY: (SARCASTICALLY) Look who's talking. Of course you'd say that. You think everything George Kennedy does is wonderful — perfect.

JOAN: George Kennedy is a gentleman! That's more than I can say for you!

JOHNNY: Oh, so you think George Kennedy's better than I am. I'm not as good as George, huh? Is that what you think?

JOAN: I don't think it. I know it. You prove it every time you open your mouth!

JOHNNY: (DETERMINEDLY) Well, maybe I'll show you how good I am.

JOAN: (SUSPICIOUSLY) What do you mean?

JOHNNY: (VAGUELY, WITH A SWAGGERING GESTURE OF THE SHOULDERS) Oh . . . you'll find out.

BOB: (IMPATIENTLY) Oh, don't pay any attention to him, Joan. He just likes to hear himself talk!

JOAN: (TURNING BACK TO HER FOOD) I guess you're right. But Johnny makes me mad! (TO JOHNNY) Who do you think you are, anyway, talking about George Kennedy like that?

BOB: (HALF-RISING IN HIS CHAIR AND LOOKING OFFSTAGE RIGHT, AND LEFT) I wonder what's keeping George. He said he would join us for lunch.

JOAN: He will. He had to see Coach Watson first. Something about next week's game.

BOB: (SITTING DOWN AGAIN) Well, anyway, Joan, we certainly had a turnout yesterday. Can't say the team doesn't have the school behind it.

JOAN: How many you suppose were there?

BOB: Oh, 500 or more, all told.

JOHNNY: (DISDAINFULLY) I wasn't there. You didn't catch me there.

JOAN: You're never there! Don't you ever want to see the team play?

JOHNNY: (DISDAINFULLY) Those guys? Naw . . . I've got better things to do.

JOAN: (SHRUGGING, TO BOB) Miss Reynolds never misses a game. Have you noticed?

BOB: Yeah. Boy, she's always there, cheering with the rest of us.

JOAN: I think we're real lucky, having a person like Miss Reynolds for principal.

BOB: Yeah . . . (HE RISES IN HIS SEAT AGAIN AND LOOKS OFF-STAGE RIGHT, SEARCHING. SUDDENLY HIS FACE SMILES IN RECOGNITION. HE WAVES) There's George now. (CALLS) Oh, George!

GEORGE: (OFFSTAGE RIGHT) Be with you in a minute.

BOB: (SITTING BACK DOWN AND TURNING TO JOHNNY) Since you dislike George Kennedy so much, I don't suppose you'll be wanting to sit at the same table with him. Why don't you go eat someplace else?

JOHNNY: (RESENTFULLY) I know you want to get rid of me! But I'm staying, see?

JOAN: (SHRUGGING) Here comes George now.

BOB: (FOLLOWING HER GAZE) Golly, he's got enough food on that tray to feed an army.

GEORGE: (CLOSE OFFSTAGE) Gangway everybody! This tray is heavy. (ENTER GEORGE STAGE RIGHT. NEAT, WELL DRESSED BOY — THE SON OF A WELL-TO-DO, PRIVILEGED FAMILY. SMILING. HE COMES ON STAGE IN BACK OF JOHNNY, MOVING TOWARD TABLE)

BOB: Here, George, come around here. (GESTURING FOR GEORGE TO COME AROUND JOHNNY AND JOAN AND TAKE SEAT OPPOSITE JOHNNY. GEORGE STARTS TO DO AS BOB SUGGESTS, GETS HALFWAY AROUND THE TABLE WHEN HE TRIPS AND FALLS TO THE FLOOR. THERE IS THE CRASH OF BREAKING DISHES, ETC. BOYS AND GIRLS AT OTHER TABLES TURN AROUND IN THEIR CHAIRS, COMMENT EXCITEDLY.)

BOYS AND GIRLS: (AD-LIBBING) What happened? Did you see that? He was tripped. I know he was. I saw him fall. Who is it? Who? George Kennedy? — etc., etc.

JOAN: (AS GEORGE RISES TO HIS FEET, DISTRESSED) Oh, George, did you hurt yourself? And just look at your shirt! (FOOD HAS SPILLED ALL OVER GEORGE'S SHIRT FRONT) It's ruined!

BOB: (HELPING GEORGE UP) What made you trip, George?

GEORGE: (BREATHLESS BUT ANGRY) You . . . wanta know . . . what made me trip? Well, I'll tell you. (POINTS TO JOHNNY) He . . . Johnny . . . that dirty rat tripped me. He deliberately stuck out his foot so I'd fall over it!

CROWD: (AD-LIB REMARKS) Johnny Canetto! That guy again! Won't he ever learn! What a dirty trick! Etc., etc.

JOHNNY: Could I help it if you don't know how to put one foot after the other?

GEORGE: (FURIOUS) Are you gonna sit there and tell me you didn't trip me? Why, you sorry . . . (MOVES MENACINGLY TOWARD JOHNNY. JOHNNY RISES) I'll knock your ugly teeth in — JOHNNY PUSHES BACK HIS CHAIR, COMES AROUND TO MEET GEORGE. GEORGE SWINGS, JOHNNY DUCKS. THEY TUSSLE, FALL TO THE FLOOR TOGETHER. CROWD FORMS AROUND THEM.)

JOAN: (ALARMED) Oh, Bob, make them stop!

BOB: Not yet. Let George get a good sock at him first.

JOAN: But I'm afraid George'll get hurt.

BOB: Don't worry. George can take care of himself. (SUDDENLY LOOKS OFFSTAGE LEFT, GROWS PANICKY, SUCKS IN BREATH QUICKLY) Uh-oh! Here comes Miss Reynolds.

MISS REYNOLDS: (AS SHE ENTERS STAGE LEFT) What in the world is going on here? (CROSSING STAGE QUICKLY) Get up off that floor this instant. The idea! (GEORGE AND JOHNNY GET TO THEIR FEET, PANTING AND SOMEWHAT SHAMEFACED)

JOHNNY: (DEFENSIVELY) George hit me first!

MISS R: (DISAPPOINTEDLY) Oh, Johnny Canetto! Again, Johnny? I thought, after the last time. . . .

JOHNNY: But I didn't start the fight, Miss Reynolds. George did!

GEORGE: Yes, Miss Reynolds. I started the fight . . . after he'd upset me with a tray full of food.

JOAN: That's right, Miss Reynolds! We saw it. George is right.

MISS R: Well, we'll get to the bottom of this in my office. Come along with me, Johnny! (MOVING OFFSTAGE RIGHT) I want you too, George.

And Joan . . . you and Bob better come along. I'll want to hear your side of the story, too. (SHE EXITS, FOLLOWED BY JOHNNY, GEORGE, BOB, AND JOAN. BOYS AND GIRLS RESUME SEATS AT LUNCHROOM TABLES, EXCITEDLY DISCUSSING INCIDENT, AS CURTAIN FALLS.)

★

SCENE TWO

Office of the principal, Miss Reynolds, a few moments later. A desk is just offstage center. Behind it is a chair, and beside it, to stage right, another chair. Three more chairs are arranged close to the desk, or against the wall, at stage left. On the desk are a 3 x 5 card file, assorted books, papers, etc. As curtain rises, door at stage right opens, enter Joan, followed by George, Bob, and Johnny. Miss Reynolds speaks behind them.

MISS R: You all find seats, please. (SHE ENTERS, CLOSES DOOR BEHIND HER, SITS IN CHAIR BEHIND DESK. JOAN, BOB, AND GEORGE CROSS TO STAGE LEFT, MOVE CHAIRS ABOUT TO SUIT THEMSELVES, TAKE SEATS TO STAGE LEFT OF MISS REYNOLDS' DESK. AFTER THEY'RE SEATED, JOHNNY SITS IN THE LONE CHAIR AT STAGE RIGHT. IMPRESSION FROM STAGING IS THAT THE GROUP HAS CHOSEN UP SIDES—JOHNNY AGAINST THE OTHER THREE. MISS REYNOLDS' DESK SHOULD BE SLIGHTLY TO STAGE RIGHT SO AS TO PRESERVE BALANCE IN STAGE COMPOSITION. BEFORE SPEAKING, MISS REYNOLDS LOOKS FROM JOAN, BOB, AND GEORGE ON HER LEFT, TO JOHNNY ON HER RIGHT. SHE REFLECTS A MOMENT, THEN SPEAKS)

MISS R: I don't do this very often. I usually like to talk to my bad (SMILES) boys individually. (TO JOHNNY) But I've talked to Johnny by himself before — several times. (SHE SHAKES HER HEAD DESPAIRINGLY) I thought it might be good this time for a few of us to talk it out together.

JOAN: (POUTING) I don't see why, Miss Reynolds. It wasn't our fault.

MISS R: (POINTEDLY) No? (PAUSE) Well, it's certainly no secret what a problem we've got here. Johnny, how many times have you been sent to my office since you entered this school?

JOHNNY: (SULLENLY) I dunno. A good many times I s'pose.

BOB: He's been nothing but a trouble-maker ever since he came here.

JOHNNY: (QUICKLY. TO BOB) Nobody has to make trouble around this school. Not with guys like you asking for trouble all the time.

MISS R: (SEVERELY) Let's not have that kind of talk. (SILENCING THEM WITH A LOOK. PAUSE) Now how shall we begin? First thing, maybe a look at the record would be of help. (SHE PULLS OPEN 3 x 5 CARD FILE, THUMBS THROUGH A NUMBER OF CARDS, PULLS OUT ONE AND EXAMINES IT) According to this, Johnny, you came here last September from New Orleans.

JOHNNY: That's right. We moved here when daddy got a job in the new mill.

MISS R: (STILL STUDYING CARD) Since you enrolled here, you've been reported for bad conduct on an average of twice a month. (READS) September 27 — starting fight in locker room — Octob —

GEORGE: (INTERRUPTING) I remember that fight. (TO MISS REYNOLDS) Some of the boys were getting dressed. Just talking together and minding their own business. When all of a sudden Johnny comes tearing out from the next row of lockers and lights into the whole pack of 'em.

JOHNNY: (ANGRILY) That's not true. Maybe if you'd been there, you'd know it's not true.

MISS R: What do you mean it's not true? You did have a fight in the locker room, didn't you?

JOHNNY: Sure, there was a fight, but — (SHRUGGING, SITTING BACK DISGUSTEDLY IN CHAIR) Oh, what's the use!

MISS R: (RESUMES READING) October 9 — breaking window in Miss Blake's room — October 24 — disturbance in assembly — November 4 — disorderly conduct at football game — November 20 — damaging apparatus in science room — December 6 — starting fight at club meeting — January 13 — (PAUSES, REGARDS JOHNNY REFLECTIVELY) Shall I go on?

JOHNNY: That's enough.

MISS R: Well, Johnny, if the record means anything, that makes you the worst boy in school.

JOHNNY: (DEFIANTLY) All right! So I'm the worst boy in school!

MISS R: It's nothing to brag about, Johnny. In some schools you'd be expelled for a record like that.

JOHNNY: Go on and expel me, why don't you? I hate this school anyway.

MISS R: (QUIETLY, WITH GREAT EFFORT TO BE PATIENT) I'm not going to expel you, Johnny. The other boys and girls get along in this school. You can too. Now, I think it's time we found out what the matter is. (PAUSE) Why do you think you get in so much trouble?

JOHNNY: (PROMPTLY) I lose my temper.

MISS R: Why, Johnny?

JOHNNY: They just make me mad, that's all.

MISS R: The other students make you mad? Do the other students say things you don't like?

JOHNNY: Sometimes they do.

MISS R: What sort of things, Johnny?

JOHNNY: Oh . . . lots of things. They call me names. (GETTING ANGRY; GESTURING TOWARD BOB, JOAN AND GEORGE) Well, just look at 'em. They think they're better than I am. They say I'm not good enough for 'em.

JOAN: (INDIGNANT) Why, I've never said anything like that in my life!

JOHNNY: Oh, no? Well, you might as well have, the way you talk. It's very clear what you think of me.

BOB: Well, suppose it is! It's true. You're not as good as we are.

JOHNNY: (RISING MENACINGLY) I am, see. I'm as good as any of you. (CLENCHING FISTS AND TAKING STEP FORWARD) And I'll fight anybody who says I'm not!

MISS R: (RAPPING DESK LOUDLY WITH RULER) Boys! Boys! (THEY QUIET DOWN. SHE REGARDS THEM ATTENTIVELY FOR A MOMENT, AND THEN SPEAKS AFTER SOME DELIBERATION) Tell me, Johnny. How did you get along in school before you moved here?

JOHNNY: Fine. I got along swell. I had lots of friends in New Orleans. Mike Frazetti for instance. Mike and I used t'play on the baseball team together. He played second base and I played shortstop.

GEORGE: (INCREDULOUS) You played baseball? Why didn't you come out for the team here, then?

JOHNNY: (COLDLY) I did try out — (PAUSE) — once.

GEORGE: But why — ? (GIVES IT UP, SHAKES HIS HEAD, LOOKS TO MISS REYNOLDS)

MISS R: Excuse me a moment. (SPEAKS IN DIRECTION OF DOOR) Oh, Miss Smith.

(ENTER MISS SMITH STAGE RIGHT. SHE STANDS WITH DOOR AJAR.)

MISS SMITH: Yes, Miss Reynolds?

MISS R: Bring me the transfer record on Johnny Canetto, will you, please?

MISS SMITH: Just a minute. (SHE EXITS, CLOSING DOOR AFTER HER)

JOHNNY: (MORE TO HIMSELF THAN TO ANYBODY IN THE ROOM) I had lots of friends in New Orleans.

MISS R: I seem to remember that you made fairly good grades in New Orleans, too.

JOHNNY: (SUDDENLY IMPATIENT) Oh, Miss Reynolds, this isn't doing us any good. Why don't you go ahead and do what you're going to do and get it over with?

MISS R: (WITH A FRIENDLY SMILE) It won't take long, Johnny . . . Tell me about your friends in New Orleans.

JOHNNY: There's not much to tell. We went to school together. Went to the same church, most of us. And we used to play together almost every afternoon.

MISS R: I suppose you miss them very much.

JOHNNY: I'll say I do.

(ENTER MISS SMITH)

MISS SMITH: (CROSSING STAGE TO PUT FILE FOLDER ON MISS REYNOLDS' DESK.) Here's the record on Canetto. Will that be all?

MISS R: (OPENING FOLDER AND BEGINNING TO SCAN CONTENTS) Yes, thank you.

(EXIT MISS SMITH. MISS REYNOLDS READS SILENTLY FOR A MOMENT, HER FACE GRADUALLY ASSUMING AN EXPRESSION OF SURPRISE AND INCREDULITY. AS SHE READS FURTHER, SHE SAYS "MY, MY" TO HERSELF EVERY NOW AND THEN. FINALLY, SHE LOOKS UP AND SHAKES HER HEAD IN WONDER. WHILE THIS IS GOING ON, JOHNNY SITS RESENTFULLY IN HIS CHAIR; JOAN, BOB, AND GEORGE EXCHANGE EXPRESSIONS OF CURIOSITY.)

MISS R: I think you'll be interested in this. It's the report the school in New Orleans sent on Johnny when he transferred here last fall.

JOAN: (SARCASTICALLY) Does that include a report on his manners?

MISS R: No, Joan. But if I were keeping a record on your manners, you wouldn't look very good today.

JOAN: (BLUSHING) Excuse me.

MISS R: (DROPS HER EYES TO THE FILE FOLDER, BEGINS TO READ FROM RECORD) Johnny averaged excellent in all his studies. Excellent in general science, excellent in Latin, excellent in French, excellent in algebra, very good in English —

JOAN: (TAKEN ABACK) Why, Miss Reynolds, Johnny's hardly passing those same subjects here.

BOB: I bet that school in New Orleans was easier.

MISS R: (SHAKING HER HEAD) No. If anything, the schools in New Orleans are harder.

GEORGE: I don't understand. (TO JOHNNY) Why were you so smart in New Orleans but so — so dumb here?

MISS R: Johnny not only made good grades, George. Listen to this. (RESUMES READING) "He was president of the chemistry club, secretary of the student body, shortstop on the baseball team, and he won a gold medal for debating. His home room teacher has written this comment, "Johnny has been a splendid student and a most cooperative citizen of our school." (LOOKS UP FROM JOHNNY'S TRANSFER RECORD, STUDIES THE THREE BEFORE HER. PAUSE) . . . Well, what do you think of that?

GEORGE: (ASTONISHED) I don't know what to think. That doesn't sound like the Johnny Canetto who tripped me a half hour ago.

JOAN: (WONDERING) I can't believe it.

GEORGE: It's not the same boy, that's all. (TO JOHNNY) What's happened to you, Johnny? Why've you changed so?

JOAN: Are you sick, Johnny? Have you been sick since you moved here? Sometimes people get sick and —

GEORGE: (RUBBING HIS JAW AND SMILING RUEFULLY) He doesn't fight like a sick man.

JOHNNY: (ANGRY AGAIN) There's nothing wrong with me. It's y'all. (SNEER) You all think you're so smart.

MISS R: Well, obviously, Johnny, you're not very happy here. You were happy in New Orleans, though, and that must account for your excellent record there. Johnny, I really want to help. (PAUSE) Try to tell me why you're not happy here.

JOHNNY: (EMBARRASSED SLIGHTLY) I don't know. I guess I just don't feel like I belong here. They treat me like dirt.

MISS R: How, Johnny? What do you mean?

JOHNNY: It's the way they talk about me. (TURNING TO JOAN, BOB, AND GEORGE) Don't think I haven't heard you.

MISS R: What do they say about you, Johnny?

JOHNNY: Oh, they say I'm not worth bothering with. They say my father is a dirty, sneaking foreigner and we oughta go back where we came from.

MISS R: (ASTONISHED) They do! (TO BOB, JOAN, AND GEORGE) Is this true?

GEORGE: (EMBARRASSED) You know how people talk, Miss Reynolds. Sure, some of 'em have been talking like that about him.

MISS R: (FIRMLY) Have you?

GEORGE: Well —

MISS R: (SADLY) How terrible! George, how could you —

BOB: But golly, Miss Reynolds. What'd you expect us to say after the way Johnny's been acting?

JOHNNY: Whatta you mean — after? Miss Reynolds, they started talking about me like that the first week I came here. I didn't do a thing. I wanted to be friends but they wouldn't let me. . . Look . . . I, oh what's the use. I'll never get along in this school.

MISS R: (WITH GREAT SYMPATHY) What were you going to tell us, Johnny? Something happened during the first week you were here?

JOHNNY: That's right. That fight in the locker room. (TO GEORGE) Just listen now; this is how it really happened, if you want to know. (TO MISS REYNOLDS) It was about me joining the Science Club. I wanted to join, but the members had to vote on me. They were talking about me one afternoon in the locker room. They couldn't see me — I was over dressing in the next row of lockers — but I could hear everything they said. One guy was repeating my name . . . (SNEERINGLY) "Johnny Canetto" — like that. "Johnny Canetto," he says. "Sounds like a foreigner to me. Where'd he come from anyway?" And then another boy says, "Out of some gutter. Have you seen the kind of clothes he wears? They look like he picked 'em up off some garbage heap." And then this third boy says, "Oh, I — "

JOAN: (INTERRUPTING) Your clothes never made any difference to me. The reason I didn't like you was you were always getting in fights, and it looked to me as if they were all your fault.

JOHNNY: Well, that's what these guys were saying about me. This third boy, he —

MISS R: (INTERRUPTING) Just a minute Johnny. Who were these boys?

JOHNNY: (EMBARRASSED) Oh, just some of the crowd. . . Nobody in this room. You don't want me to tattle, do you, Miss Reynolds?

MISS R: No, Johnny. Never mind. Go on.

JOHNNY: Well, then, another guy said, "Oh, I know about him. His old man works in the thread mill. My daddy hired him last week. Runs a loom or something." "Well," says this first boy, "I don't know what you think, but I'm not voting him into our club. I don't like greasy foreigners." "Me neither," says another one. "There's something sort of sneaky about 'em. Besides, whatta we know about Johnny Canetto? Anybody with a name like that!"

MISS R: (TOUCHED) That was the way that they were talking about you, was it?

JOHNNY: Almost word for word. I stood there listening to them, getting madder all the time, and finally I couldn't stand it any longer. I went over and told 'em what I thought. That's how the fight started.

GEORGE: (CONTRITE) Gee, I didn't know that, Johnny.

BOB: Me either. I always thought —

JOHNNY: Well, that's how it was, Miss Reynolds — right from the beginning. Even before they knew me, they were saying I was no good. I had a foreign sounding name, I had just moved to town, and my daddy works in a factory. So right off the bat, they decided I was beneath them.

MISS R: I'm ashamed, really ashamed. I didn't think my children could behave like that.

JOAN: It doesn't make sense, when you come to think of it. To judge a person by the sound of his name, or by what his father does for a living. Oh Johnny, I'm so sorry.

BOB: I'm sorry, too. Maybe if we hadn't fallen for all that junk about your being a foreigner — maybe if we'd given you a chance — we'd have a decent shortstop.

GEORGE: (TO JOHNNY) Is that why you never came back for another tryout?

JOHNNY: Sure. They made it pretty clear I wasn't wanted. You think I wanted to hang around and be insulted?

MISS R: About today, Johnny. Did you trip George? Or did he merely stumble over your feet?

JOHNNY: I tripped him.

MISS R: Why?

JOHNNY: The same old business. Joan and Bob kept talking about how wonderful George was, and how no account I was. George is so handsome, George is so perfect. Joan kept saying how wonderful George is till I couldn't take it any more.

JOAN: I never realized —

MISS R: So you decided to show George up? Make him look silly?

JOHNNY: (NODDING) Something like that.

MISS R: I know how you must have felt, Johnny. But do you think you were helping the situation by acting like that?

JOHNNY: How do you think I should have acted?

MISS R: Johnny, they have treated you very badly. There's no doubt about that. But fights don't help. That one in the locker room — that fight didn't make you feel any better, did it? You've gone around with a chip on your shoulder ever since — daring people to knock it off. You got into more and more fights and made more and more enemies.

JOHNNY: (BITTERLY) It's easy for you to talk, Miss Reynolds. You don't know what it is to move to a new town and be lonesome and want to make friends in school. You can't understand how it feels not even to be given a chance — to have people call you names and say you're no good.

MISS R: I know. I know. But don't you see — you made things worse instead of better by getting into trouble all the time? You made people believe you really were good-for-nothing by the way you acted.

JOHNNY: What would you have done, Miss Reynolds?

MISS R: Well, I hope I'd have said to myself, "These people are being stupid and unfair. But I'll show them I'm just as good as they are. I'll prove it by getting good marks and volunteering for school activities and by keeping a good conduct record." . . . If you'd done that, actually you would have proved yourself better than they. Because you'd have been behaving like an intelligent adult while they were acting like bad-mannered, not-too-bright children.

JOHNNY: You think if I'd have done that, they would've learned to like me?

MISS R: I'm sure of it.

JOHNNY: (DOWNCAST) Well, I guess it's too late now.

GEORGE: (RISING AND WALKING ACROSS STAGE TO THE RIGHT OF JOHNNY'S CHAIR. ADDRESSING JOHNNY) No it isn't, Johnny. Not for you, it isn't. . . Look, I'm sorry those guys in the locker room gave you such a raw deal, and got you started off here that way. I'm sorry I didn't have any better sense than to go along with the things they said about you. I'm just as sorry as I can be.

JOHNNY: I'm sorry, too. I'm sorry I tripped you.

GEORGE: Look Johnny — I know I don't deserve it, but will you forgive me? Will you forgive us all? Will you give us another chance?

JOHNNY: What do you mean?

GEORGE: I mean another chance to be friends with you.

JOHNNY: (BEWILDERED) Sure, I —

GEORGE: I know you have every good reason not to want to be friends with us now, but — John, Bob, and I — we know how silly and unfair we've been — and we're going to see to it that everybody else in this school realizes what a bad mistake they've made. . . I'll, I'll — I know what I'll do. I'll see that you're elected to the Science Club. I'll submit your name at the next meeting and tell everybody how awful we've behaved, and if they won't let you in then, I'll resign. I don't want to be in any Science Club that judges people so unscientifically.

BOB: And I'll resign with you, George.

JOHNNY: No . . . don't do that. I don't want the guys to think I'm a — (PAUSES, CONSIDERING) On the other hand, Miss Reynolds, maybe that would be a good place to start, huh? If I got in the Science Club and worked hard, maybe I could begin to make people change their minds about me.

MISS R: (SMILING) That's an excellent idea.

JOHNNY: (SMILING) Gee, thanks, George. Thanks a lot.

JOAN: (CALLING QUIETLY) Johnny?

JOHNNY: Yes?

JOAN: The girls' Home Ec Club is having a party next week. You'll come, won't you, Johnny?

JOHNNY: You want me to come? (JOAN NODS; JOHNNY BLUSHES) Sure, I'll be there. (SMILES HAPPILY)

MISS R: (LOOKING AT WRIST WATCH) It's almost time for your next class, you all. . . I think we know what's been causing Johnny's trouble — and I think we know what to do about it. . . You can go now. (JOHNNY, BOB, AND JOAN RISE, MOVE TOWARD THE DOOR WITH GEORGE)

JOHNNY: Thank you, Miss Reynolds.

BOB: Thank you, Miss Reynolds.

GEORGE: Thank you, Miss Reynolds.

(MISS REYNOLDS NODS TO EACH AS HE EXITS. JOAN PAUSES AT DOOR, TURNS, COMES BACK HALFWAY TO MISS REYNOLDS' DESK)

JOAN: Miss Reynolds?

MISS R: Yes, Joan.

JOAN: (HALTINGLY) This taught me a lesson — all this. I feel so awfully ashamed. . . You know, I really didn't know how Johnny's trouble got started. . . I didn't realize how mean we were being to him — (SHUDDERS) We've been dreadful! Why, we condemned him even before we got a chance to know him — all because his skin was dark and he has a foreign-sounding name. . . What silly reasons!

MISS R: Yes, they are silly, Joan. But some people are judging other people in just that fashion all the time. Nobody knows how much heartsickness — how much hatred — they must cause.

JOAN: (WITH DECISION) Well, I've learned my lesson. Hereafter, I'm going to take people one by one, just as they come. And I'm going to judge 'em for themselves. I'm going to like 'em or dislike 'em for what they are — not for what their parents might be, or what their religion is, or anything like that. (PAUSE) I'm going to remember that each human being is a very special individual.

MISS R: (SMILING VERY WARMLY) You've got the right idea. Just remember that part of our American heritage is respect for individual worth.

JOAN: What about Johnny, Miss Reynolds? Do you think he will change for the better now?

MISS R: Change, Joan? I'm sure of it. He'll change — and he'll change faster as the group warms up toward him. . . I think in no time at all Johnny Canetto will be the same splendid, cooperative person he was in New Orleans — especially if you and Bob and George do all you say you're going to do. (PAUSE) I think years from now, when people ask me about Johnny, I'll be able to say, "Johnny Canetto? Why, he was one of the best boys in school."

(CURTAIN)

ADL

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH

SOUTHERN OFFICE - 11 PRYOR STREET, S. W. - ATLANTA 3, GEORGIA

Chairman of Board
JUDGE EMANUEL LEWIS

Director
ALEXANDER F. MILLER

NATIONAL COMMISSION

Hon. Meier Steinbrink
Chairman

Charles W. Morris
Donald Oberdorfer
Honorary Vice-Chairmen

Richard E. Gutstadt
Executive Vice-Chairman

Barney Balaban
Phillip W. Haberman
A. C. Horn
Hon. Herbert H. Lehman

A. G. Ballenger
I. B. Benjamin
Max J. Schneider
Vice-Chairmen

Jacob Alson
Treasurer

Benjamin R. Epstein
National Director

COMMISSIONERS, Southern Area

Frank Garson
Atlanta, Ga.

John Horwitz
Oklahoma City, Okla.

Maurice Danenbaum
Houston, Tex.

Leonard Abess
Miami, Fla.

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE

ADL, the educational arm of B'nai B'rith (America's oldest and largest Jewish Service organization) is a creative organization seeking to build in the lives of all Americans those basic attitudes on which good human relations are founded. It is an action organization aiming for the continual expansion of the democratic way of life. Its program is based on the realization that bigotry directed against any single group in this country hurts all Americans.

In furtherance of such a program, the Anti-Defamation League cooperates with all groups working toward this ideal of bettering human relations. Among these are church people of all denominations, educators, civic clubs, youth groups, veterans, businessmen and labor groups and many other organizations and individuals. A broad, educational program has been developed utilizing:

• Films • Radio Programming • Aids to Educators
• Recordings • Speakers • Books • Advertising
• Posters • Leaflets • Cartoons

All of which is available on request to those who find such material of aid in their effort to preserve human worth and the dignity of the individual.

SOUTHERN OFFICE
ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE
11 Pryor St., S. W. Atlanta 3, Ga.

MISSION ACCOMPLISHED

A PLAY FOR YOUNG TEEN-AGERS

BY GLADYS BAKER BOND

LITTLE PLAYS ON BIG SUBJECTS

MISSION ACCOMPLISHED

A PLAY FOR YOUNG TEEN-AGERS

BY GLADYS BAKER BOND

published by the

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH

212 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

(This play may be produced without fee. The publisher requests notification, however, of the time and place of performance).

CHARACTERS:

Beth	Mary	Lois
Ann	Helen	Peggy
Mother	Florence	Alice
Barbara	Ruth	Laura
Dotty	Olive

(This is a typical group of 14-year-old girls, plus Beth's mother)

SCENE I: Beth Burns' living room, simple and in good taste, with doors at left and right. A davenport grouping with coffee table on right towards front stage; center stage, near back wall, a large chair, an end table and a telephone.

TIME: After school

SCENE II: Same room, that night

SCENE III: Same room, Saturday afternoon

NOTE: For school or club production, a much simpler setting can be arranged by lining up chairs for davenport, etc. The telephone is the only essential, and it can be a toy telephone, or one contrived by any capable child.

PROPERTIES: Scene I — eleven addressed envelopes, 1 invitation, 1 invitation's envelope, list of names, pencil. Scene II — the same unfinished invitation and envelope and telephone. Scene III — the same unfinished invitation and envelope, telephone and 3 costume boxes (these need not contain complete costumes).

COSTUMES: Indicated where necessary.

NOTE: This One Act play in three scenes in the same living room setting is gay enough to engage the attention of girls from the sixth through the ninth grades for assembly or Service Club use. At the same time, it carries a worthwhile message without overloading.

Since boys of this age group are stage shy, this play makes use of 14 girls. It gives leeway for amusing antics and costumes. Should some change of costume from the gymnasium outfits indicated be preferred, it is a simple matter to change script reading to fit. The "punch" of the play depends upon exaggeration of the sameness of both movement and costuming in the 3rd scene. This is a type of pageantry sub-teens enjoy.

NOTE: Any other minority group member can be substituted for Rachel, who is here indicated to be a Jew.

SCENE I

AS CURTAIN RISES: (Beth and Alice are seated on davenport. The coffee table is littered with envelopes and writing materials. One invitation remains to be placed in an envelope)

Beth is discovered gathering envelopes into a neat stack, while Ann lounges with hands behind head, with feet stretched into room.

ANN: Whillikers, Bethie. You're a pal to help me out. I never would have finished all those invitations in time to put them into the mail.

BETH: (taps stack on coffee table to even edges) You're welcome, Ann. (flourishes hands) Oh! (sits erect with a jerk) Where's your list? We forgot somebody!

ANN: We couldn't have.

BETH: But we must have. See? (snatches the open invitation from the coffee table and flutters it towards Ann) Here it is!

ANN: (groans) Ohhhhh! Now we'll have to check everybody. Just when I thought we had finished the job.

BETH: Well, let's get busy. I'm on kitchen duty tonight. Mother will show up any minute with a panful of potatoes for me to peel.

ANN: (curls feet under herself) Do you PEEL POTATOES?

BETH: Naturally. Don't you? I like to eat.

ANN: Whillikers, no! My mother would die of surprise if I stepped inside the kitchen.

BETH: Oh, well, maybe you set the table, or wash dishes. I have a younger sister who does that while I do home work.

ANN: Nope! Don't do that either. I don't even do home work!

BETH: (soberly looking Ann up and down) Don't you do ANYTHING by yourself?

ANN: (flippantly) Not if I can help it!

BETH: (shrugs) I'd go crazy if I weren't busy. Where's your list?

ANN: Oh, what's your hurry?

BETH: It's YOUR birthday party, you know. If you want to hurt somebody's feelings, that's up to you. But everybody knows I am helping you. If somebody gets left out they will think I had something to do with it. And I DON'T like to hurt people.

ANN: Oh, all right. (tosses her head) All we have to do is read the roll of the girls in our room. Huh! Guess what — I'll be fourteen years old and there are fourteen girls.

BETH: Well, check! (She picks up envelopes, shuffles through, calling off names quickly in a sing-song voice) Alice, Dotty, Peg, Lois —

ANN: (checking off names on list with pencil as Beth reads each name) Hey, what's your hurry? I haven't even found Alice's name yet!

BETH: (impatiently pushes envelopes forward) Here! You read envelopes and I'll check.

ANN: Well, sure, if you want to be like that. (takes stack) Alice, Dotty, Peg, Lois — (waits)

BETH: (looks up impatiently) I have them. Go ahead!

ANN: Well, you don't have to get cross about it! (reads) Olive, Barbara — (finishes with a rush) Florence, Ruth, Helen, Laura AND Mary. There!

BETH: (puzzled) That's the whole list, and there is still an (points at invitation) extra invitation. I KNOW there are fourteen girls in our room. I'll count. One, two, three (mumbles and moves her pencil rapidly down the list) — twelve, thirteen! That can't be right!

ANN: Oh, why be an old fuss budget?

BETH: There's somebody else, I know there is! (clasps hands over ears and concentrates) I have it! You left RACHEL off your list.

ANN: Well, sure. I knew THAT all the time.

BETH: (gasping) You did? But why did you leave her off?

ANN: (surprised) She's a Jew, isn't she?

BETH: (shocked) What on earth does that have to do with inviting Rachel to a birthday party?

ANN: (shrugs and reaches for the pack of envelopes) Everything. She's different. She doesn't belong. I want a good old red-white-and-blue American birthday party — soooo — (tips chin pertly) she's out!

BETH: Ann, how can you be such a snob?

ANN: Who says I'm snobbish? (flicks aside unfinished invitation) Thanks for helping me.

BETH: (bitterly) Helping you! I did most of the work, and you know it, Ann Taylor!

ANN: (pouting) Whillikers, Bethie, I don't know why you're so cross.

BETH: (flaring) You never do anything by yourself! You don't even THINK FOR YOURSELF. I can just hear your father saying 'good old red-white-and-blue-American.'

ANN: (angrily) You just leave my father out of this. If I want to use his words, I can. And what's WRONG with being American, even if you're sky-blue-pink and polka-dotted?

(both girls jump to feet and stand in center stage, with faces close together, facing)

BETH: NOTHING is wrong with being American, no matter what color you are. But leaving people out for no good reason isn't American!

ANN: Whose birthday is this? (stamps foot) Tell me that?

BETH: (stands silently for a brief moment, then pleads) But, Ann, just think how left out you would feel if the tables were turned and you were the one left out.

ANN: But they're not.

BETH: The girls will talk about their invitations. Rachel will know she is left out.

ANN: What of it? (moves towards door at right)

BETH: You won't change your mind? (follows)

ANN: (stiffly) I'm no missionary. I'm just a girl having a birthday party. That's one time in the year when I should be allowed to do as I please, and I DON'T PLEASE to have a Jew at my birthday party. Goodbye, Beth. Just go — go peel your potatoes! (flounces out the door, carrying sealed invitations. Leaves unfinished one on the coffee table, in view of audience)

BETH: (moves slowly across the room, picks up the invitation and stares at it)

MOTHER: (left, off-stage) Bethie? Did I hear the door slam?

BETH: You probably did, Mother. Ann just left, cross as an old bear.

MOTHER: (entering left door, wiping hands on a towel. She wears an apron) Oh, dear. What was wrong?

BETH: Oh, I was helping address her birthday party invitations, and there was one left over.

Mother, Ann left Rachel's name off the list on purpose. Every other girl in the room is invited — but not Rachel.

MOTHER: Oh? (moves about room, putting small things in better order)

BETH: Mother, it isn't fair! What's wrong with being born a Jew?

MOTHER: (quietly) So that's it.

BETH: Yes, that's it. Ann doesn't want her because she's different.

MOTHER: Rachel eats three meals a day, sleeps at night, and has a healthy, inquiring mind, hasn't she?

BETH: Yes.

MOTHER: Then how is she different?

BETH: (wails) Religion. Race. Oh, I don't know, Mother. That is Ann's idea, and I think she got it from her father. She doesn't do anything for herself. She can't even think for herself.

MOTHER: Discrimination is a serious matter, Bethie.

BETH: I know it is, Mother, but what can I do about it? Like Ann says, it's HER birthday party, and if she doesn't want to invite Rachel, she doesn't have to.

MOTHER: I think you have the clue, dear, if you would just give it some thought.

BETH: (surprised) I have?

MOTHER: If she lets somebody else think for her, suppose you find some way to make her think for herself!

BETH: Mother! (smiling, then sober) That's a wonderful idea, but how do I make it work?

MOTHER: (laying arm across Beth's shoulder and squeezing) If I know my Bethie, and I'm sure I do, there will be an answer. Come, dear. The potatoes aren't peeled and the salad isn't chopped. We have work to do! (they move across stage towards door at left)

CURTAIN

SCENE II

Same room: after dinner.

AS CURTAIN RISES: (Beth is discovered at the telephone. She lounges in the big chair and plays with the telephone cord while she talks)

BETH: (eagerly) I need you, Barbara! We have a real problem to work out. It's an emergency. (listens briefly) That's right. You ask Olive to come with you and get here as fast as you can. (turns head)

(OFF-STAGE: knock is heard at right door)

BETH: Oh, oh, Barbara! Somebody is here already. I have to answer the door. Be seeing you! (replaces phone in cradle and rushes across stage to answer door) Mary! Laura! Ruth. Come on in. We've got a lot to do. (Leads way in to room as she talks)

(The three newcomers remove wraps and toss them on the backs of chairs and davenport, making themselves at home)

MARY: Now, what's this about, Bethie? We have homework to do, so we can't stay very long.

BETH: This is more important than homework. We can always make up school work — but we can't mend a broken heart.

LAURA: (near center stage, turns towards Beth with surprise) Whose heart is broken?

RUTH: Yes, Beth, what's wrong?

BETH: I'll tell you when everybody gets here. (knock is heard) There's the door again. (rushes to right door.) Hurry, everybody!

(ENTER: Florence, Helen, Alice and Dotty, removing jackets and sweaters as they cross the stage. There is a flurry of "Hi, there!" "Hello!" "Hurry, slowpokes!" etc. from the girls already present)

BETH: Sit down, girls. And if there isn't room on the furniture, there is always space on the floor! (girls laugh, settle themselves. Another knock, Beth starts towards the door, the telephone rings, and she turns back toward it) You answer the door, please, Mary, and I'll get the 'phone.

MARY: Gee, is it Grand Central Station here? (lets in Peg and Lois. Helps Lois with wraps and motions for them to be seated, with exaggeration of gestures indicating Beth at telephone)

BETH: (into 'phone) Barbara? What's the matter? (listens) Well, never mind. I'll talk to you and to the girls at the same time, so you can pretend you're here. (turns back to girls in room, still holding receiver, but loosely, naturally) It's Barbara, girls. She says she can't come. Olive is at her house, and whatever we decide is all right with them.

MARY: Decide about what?

RUTH: What's the mystery, Bethie?

LOIS: (quickly, leaning forward) We're dying of curiosity.

BETH: (holding 'phone in front of her and speaking to girls in room) It's about Ann's birthday party.

PEGGY: Isn't she going to have one?

FLORENCE: Aren't we invited?

BETH: Sure, we're invited. But it's about somebody else who's left out. (into 'phone) NO, Barbara. You're not left out. Neither is Olive.

DOTTY: Then tell us who is.

(whole group leans forward in varying poses of interest)

BETH: It's Rachel!

(group is silent. Girls look at each other, move uncertainly)

BETH: Well, doesn't anybody have anything to say?

LAURA: What is there to say? If Ann doesn't want her —

BETH: (impatiently) Oh, I know! If Ann doesn't want her — what can we do about it? (into phone) NO, Barbara, I'm not mad at YOU. No. Not at OLIVE, either! (to girls) Can't you see, it isn't fair to leave Rachel out?

RUTH: (quietly) But, WHY is Rachel left out?

BETH: Knowing Ann, what do you think?

LOIS: Can't tell, but I'll bet she didn't think it up for herself!

BETH: That's just it, girls. Ann thinks because Rachel is a Jew, she isn't like the rest of us. (into 'phone) That's it, Barbara. It's Rachel we're worried about. She's going to have her feelings hurt.

DOTTY: We can't invite Ann's birthday party guests for her.

BETH: (leaning forward) No. BUT we can CHANGE HER THINKING.

CHORUS: (Helen, Lois and Peg speak together from different parts of room) How?

BETH: I don't just know. We'll have to put our ideas together. You see, she thinks Rachel is different. She doesn't seem to know or care how much Rachel is going to be hurt.

FLORENCE: (thoughtfully) There ought to be some way to make Ann see —

BETH: (eagerly) Yes?

FLORENCE: Well, it's just a glimmer of an idea. But if we can figure out some way to put Ann in the position of being the one who is different, she might change her mind.

ALICE: It will have to really be good to wake Ann up.

MARY: I don't know —

FLORENCE: (suspiciously) Mary, do you agree with Ann?

MARY: A lot of people say —

ALICE: What do you care what a lot of people say? What do YOU say?

MARY: Well, I LIKE Rachel, but I've never invited her to my house. (defensively) She's never invited me to her house either!

DOTTY: We do our Arithmetic together.

BETH: (into 'phone) We're still here, Barbara. We're just trying to decide if Rachel is human!

MARY: Oh, now, Bethie! That isn't fair! I didn't say anything like that.

BETH: (into 'phone) Barbara, ask Olive where Rachel was born. (waits momentarily, turns to group with air of triumph) Rachel was born in Kansas City, right in the middle of the United States, so she has as much right to be here as any of us!

MARY: Oh, sure, but —

HELEN: My dad says Rachel's father is a pretty shrewd business man. He has a lot of power in this little town. He kind of worries about that, sometimes.

DOTTY: Your dad and Rachel's dad both have shoe stores, haven't they, Helen?

HELEN: Dotty, everybody knows that! But my dad says this town is too small to support two shoe stores.

DOTTY: So, I suppose YOUR dad is going to move?

HELEN: (shocked) Of course not! We BELONG here.

PEGGY: If MY DAD bought a shoe store and was your father's competitor, would WE have to move?

HELEN: No. — (claps hands over ears) You're getting me confused, but I certainly see what you mean. What our fathers do to make a living for us hasn't anything to do with belonging, not if it's honest work.

MARY: But RACHEL IS DIFFERENT. She went to a Jewish retreat during the summer.

LAURA: And I went to a Catholic camp, so I suppose that makes me different?

FLORENCE: My camp was Methodist!

RUTH: I went to Camp Fire Girls camp. We sang Indian songs. Does that make ME different?

MARY: I give up! In this town there are so many churches, and people have so many different NATIONALITY backgrounds, EVERYBODY is different!

BETH: Then, what have we decided about Rachel? How many think she should be invited? Hold up your hands! (all hands are raised, Mary is first to put hers up) How (into 'phone) do you and Olive vote, Barbara? You vote for Rachel? Swell! So does everybody here! I'll call you back when we decide what we're going to do! (hangs up)

PEGGY: Now what?

FLORENCE: While everybody has been talking, I've been thinking. To break through Ann's shell, we will have to find a weak spot.

CHORUS: She's lazy!

FLORENCE: There's something else. She's a follower, not a leader. Now, if we could just put her in the spotlight —

LAURA: We can't hurt her feelings. If we're trying to keep from hurting Rachel, we can't do it by hurting Ann. We can make her UNCOMFORTABLE.

PEGGY: That's right. (stir among girls, agreeing)

FLORENCE: Could we make it look like a joke?

BETH: (clapping hands together) I have it! She likes red-white-and-blue Americans. She SAID so. So, that's what we will be!

PEGGY: How?

BETH: (planning) What do we all have that is exactly alike? (girls examine each other)

DOTTY: (giggling) Ten toes, ten fingers —

BETH: Silly! I mean clothes!

PEGGY: That's a tough one.

RUTH: We're all different sizes —

LOIS: And shapes! (laughter)

BETH: I have it! Our gym suits!

CHORUS: Why didn't we think of that? Sure! etc.

DOTTY: We don't really look alike, even in our gym suits.

BETH: But we can if we try. We'll all comb our hair the same. I know! We'll part it in the middle.

LOIS: I'll look like a freak.

BETH: Nobody will notice how we look. We'll all look alike.

PEGGY: We can wear one red sock, and one blue one!

BETH: We ought to have one crowning touch. Something really silly.

DOTTY: What about mittens on our left hands? Nobody could miss that!

CHORUS: That's silly enough. This is fun! etc.

BETH: All in favor hold up your hands! (all hands raised, waved, etc.) Good! Now when can we pull this stunt?

PEGGY: How about tomorrow afternoon? That will give us time to get ready.

LOIS: But not enough time to let the cat out of the bag. (several girls giggle)

RUTH: But what about Ann? How is she going to dress?

BETH: (with a look of exaggerated innocence) In her very best clothes, of course. I'll see to that. Shall I 'phone her? (girls giggle and agree, noisily)

BETH: (dials, or gives number, depending on type of telephone used) May I speak to Ann? Oh, hello, Ann! I thought I had your mother on the 'phone. Ann, some of the girls are here (giggles are heard from girls, and Beth waves hand for silence) and we have decided to have a party tomorrow afternoon. Yes. Tomorrow afternoon, here at my house. To meet someone I think you would like if you knew her. (puts hand over receiver and says to group) She wants to know what you're going to wear?

DOTTY: Tell her I'm wearing something VERY SPECIAL.

PEGGY: And I'm having my hair done in a new way!

BETH: (straightening face with effort) Ann, Dotty is wearing something unusual, I think, and I don't know how Peg is going to look. She is changing her hairdo! (listens) Your best dress? The one like Barbara's? I think that's perfect. I'll ask Peg. (pretends to turn and Peg nods head violently, clapping hand over mouth to smother giggles) Peg says you will be a sensation. Now remember, tomorrow afternoon, and be on time! (turns to group) Now I'll call Barbara! Ann just gave me an idea, and Barbara will really go for it!

PEGGY: I'd hate to be in Ann's shoes!

CURTAIN

SCENE III

Same room, Saturday afternoon.

AS CURTAIN RISES: (Mother is discovered letting Ann in door at right)

ANN: (looking around room) Oh, am I early, Mrs. Burns? I thought Beth said —

MOTHER: You're not early, Ann. The other girls are late. I wonder what can be keeping them?

ANN: But where's Beth?

MOTHER: She ran next door to help Laura with her hair. Laura wanted it to be just right.

ANN: That's strange. (follows Mother's gesture towards the chair at the telephone)

MOTHER: (standing near center stage) Oh?

ANN: I mean, usually it is Laura who helps with Beth's hair.

MOTHER: I know, Ann. But this time Laura had some strange idea about being afraid she would be DIFFERENT in some way from the other girls. (reseats herself on davenport)

ANN: (flouncing her skirts and rearranging them for effect) Barbara said that very SAME thing, just this morning, Mrs. Burns.

MOTHER: Really, Ann?

ANN: She came over to see what I was going to wear this afternoon. She wanted to know EXACTLY — even about my shoes, and the color of my stockings, and my necklace. (leans forward towards Mrs. Burns) Now isn't that ODD? Barbara doesn't usually pay much attention to clothes.

MOTHER: Are you sure she was really interested in clothing?

ANN: (moving uncomfortably) Wellllll — she did say something about wanting to be sure she was on the right side. Now, what do you suppose she meant?

(ENTER: Beth through door at right, rushing forward, wearing costume planned in Scene II)

BETH: (panting) Oh, hello, Ann. Sorry I'm late!

ANN: (rising from chair to stare at Beth) Beth, for goodness sake, what do you have on?

MOTHER: (mildly, seeming not to notice Beth's costume) Is Laura happy about her hair?

BETH: (patting her hair, parted in middle) Oh, not exactly. She looks like a clown, but it is exactly like mine, so she doesn't mind.

ANN: (choking and pointing) That's — THAT'S what I mean, Beth. Your hair! Your clothes! Are you going to let everybody see you like that?

(knock on door at right: Beth jumps up to let Barbara in and Barbara is dressed in every detail exactly like Ann. From this point she apes Ann's actions, wherever possible)

BETH: Come in, Barbara. Ann is already here, so you don't have to break the ice. (draws Barbara to center of stage)

BARBARA: (pretending uneasiness) Oh, dear! What kind of a party is this, Beth? Shall I go home and change? I have a gym suit, too. (turns towards Ann) Oh, Ann! I'm so relieved. As long as there are only three of us and I am in step with one of you, I guess I won't feel too much out of place. (crosses stage to squeeze Ann's arm, flouncing her skirts to show audience the duplication of costume)

ANN: (coldly) You're not in step with me, Barbara. You're practically stepping on my heels! You didn't have to dress EXACTLY the same.

BARBARA: (winking at Beth in full view of audience) No? But I thought — (flutters hands towards Beth) Wherever did I get the idea that ANN was doing the thinking for the rest of us?

(knock is heard: Ann snubs Barbara, with her nose in the air, but Barbara is careful to duplicate Ann's actions, smilingly, with a look of innocence)

(ENTER: all the girls, dressed exactly alike and walking Indian file, with similar motions and expressions. The last three girls carry costume boxes and stack them on the davenport as they pass. They arrange themselves in blocks, like a chorus, on either side of the stage, so that Ann, Barbara and Beth make a central grouping near the telephone. Mother leaves room, left door)

CHORUS: How do you do?

ANN: (angrily, with hands on hips, stamps foot) What is this, Beth Burns? What kind of a silly stunt are you pulling? (turns furiously, facing Barbara, who is smilingly duplicating her motions) What do you think YOU'RE doing? Copycatting everything I do, even every teeny-tiny speck of clothes I have on! (to Beth, still angrily) And your company? Who's coming? What will she think of us? She will think we are a bunch of dopes who have never gone to a party before!

BETH: (cheerfully) You know, I think that is exactly what she will think. She'll be here as soon as I call her!

BARBARA: (throwing out hands) What shall I do? It looks like I guessed wrong about what to wear.

ANN: (moving nearer center stage) You can do exactly what I'm going to do. I'm going home!

BETH: (calmly, but forcefully) Then you don't LIKE to be different?

BARBARA: (quickly) But she isn't completely different, Bethie. She matches me.

ANN: (stamping foot) Oh, you!

BETH: (strongly) Then you don't APPROVE of Barbara's letting you do her thinking for her?

ANN: (loudly) No, I don't approve. I think it is the silliest thing I ever heard of.

OLIVE: (pointing at clock) Watch your time, Beth. Isn't it time to call our guest?

ANN: You can't do this to me! Let me out of here!

BETH: (reaching for telephone) Not 'til I call Rachel, please, Ann.

ANN: (raising hands to lips, startled) Rachel? Is SHE the guest we're all supposed to meet?

BETH: (calling number) The rest of us thought Rachel ought to be invited to at least one party.

ANN: (grabbing Beth's arm) Hang up, Bethie! Hang up right this minute! You're not going to let her see me like this, are you? You won't let her know you're pulling a prank on me?

BETH: Why not? You were willing to discriminate against HER.

ANN: But, honestly, Bethie — girls, (throws out hands in gesture of pleading) I didn't know it felt like this to be discriminated against. I mean — nobody smiles (wooden faces of group) or looks friendly, (group stares) and everybody looks at you. (throws hands over face) Stop looking at me!

(girls all dressed exactly alike continue in wooden poses, directing attention towards Ann)

BETH: (hesitating with telephone) Then you really think it is more fun when we are all ourselves? When we aren't carbon copies of each other?

ANN: Oh, I do, Beth, I do! and I'm not just saying this to get out of an uncomfortable spot.

BETH: Then you will admit it is uncomfortable to be put in a spot?

BARBARA: You're forgetting about me, Ann. I'm in this with you.

ANN: (turning on Barbara with impatience) Oh, you! You're just exactly like me! Letting somebody else do your thinking for you!

BETH: (putting down 'phone and throwing arms around Ann) Oh, Ann, we wanted you to say that. We're sorry we had to get a little rough with you, but we had to make you understand. Rachel is just another girl, like the rest of us. Of course, in some ways she is different — but none of us is exactly like any other person. It's variety that makes life interesting. Now — shall I call Rachel?

ANN: But she will know! (indicates costumed girls)

BETH: (laughing) Break it up, girls! Mission accomplished. Now we can have fun!

(immediately girls giggle, chatter, scramble for seating space, etc.)

OLIVE: (advancing) We're sorry, Ann, honestly we are! But it isn't going to be as bad as you think.

RUTH: Yes, guess what's in these boxes? (pats one of the costume boxes)

ANN: (excited about being socially acceptable again) A gym suit, maybe?

DOTTY: Good guess. (begins opening boxes, rustling tissue paper)

ANN: (reaching for socks, one red, one blue) Oh! (giggles) Who ever thought of anything so crazy? (pulls out mitten, looks to see which hand girls have covered, and draws it on)

BETH: (reaching for the 'phone, calls loudly over the chatter that is going on in all corners) Just a minute, girls, I can't hear myself think! (girls whisper)

(Ann and Barbara are letting other girls part their hair in the middle, put on mittens, etc., so they will be dressed like the rest of the group)

BETH: (speaking into telephone, but facing audience) Hello, Rachel? This is Beth. We're having a costume party at my house this afternoon, and we want you to come. (brief pause) Oh, it doesn't matter what you wear. We already have your costume here. Ann and Barbara are changing into theirs, right this minute, so hurry! We'll pop corn and make fudge and have a lot of fun. Be seeing you! (replaces receiver and turns towards group, smiling)

ANN: (expression of urgency) Bethie! Where is that invitation? I simply have to get that addressed before she gets here!

DOTTY: Here it is on the coffee table.

BETH: This is going to be a red-white-and-blue American birthday party without anybody left out!

(curtain drops as she stretches out her hand for the open invitation. Girls are in amusing poses in groups around the room, helping Ann and Barbara get ready for the party)

CURTAIN

THE END

Additional copies of this play
(at 10¢ a copy) can be purchased from the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith,
212 Fifth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.
or from your local ADL Regional Office.

Return

4-54

AMERICAN FRIENDS SERVICE COMMITTEE

INTEGRATION OF WASHINGTON SCHOOLS

Published April 1954
by the
American Friends Service Committee
(Quakers)
Community Relations Program
104 C Street, N. E.
Washington 2, D. C.

• Cover photo by Jules Schick

• No. 483—10M—4-54—L.-R.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL
RM. 432, 63 AUBURN AVE., N. E.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

Foreword

In the span of a few years, the city of Washington has begun to make itself over. Where once we set aside a place for white and a place for colored, we are now removing the signs of exclusion and opening doors to all to come in.

- Our neighborhoods are becoming increasingly interracial.
- Concert hall and legitimate stage, movie houses, and restaurants are welcoming patrons without regard to race.
- Playgrounds are being integrated.
- A recent order of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia declares a policy of non-discrimination for the city government.

As it takes such steps, Washington is becoming a more democratic city, reaching toward the quality of community living which befits the capital of a vigorous nation with high moral aspiration.

The next important step for Washington is that of changing from racially segregated schools to a single school system. The community is giving growing recognition to the rightness and the benefits of such a change. School officials and citizens are thinking and asking about how the transition should be carried out. What steps should be taken? What can we anticipate and plan for? What are the problems? How can we do the best job?

THESE PAGES are devoted to a consideration of the questions most often asked about the process of integration. They are offered to lend help in the job ahead, and could appropriately be dedicated to the children whose lives are shaped by the educational process.

Getting Started

Q. What has happened when schools have integrated in other communities?

A. There is a nation-wide trend toward integration of schools. A variety of patterns have been followed. The one indispensable element for success has been affirmative action with a clearly established policy by an administration seriously interested in doing the job.

The nation-wide trend toward school integration is particularly evident in border areas, where major policy changes have been made in school systems in Kansas, and the southern areas of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, and New Jersey. In southern states, integration has already begun in colleges and universities, parochial schools, Army schools, and in public schools in Arizona, New Mexico, and Delaware. Our neighboring city of Baltimore has taken the first step by integration of Baltimore Polytechnic Institute.

The story of what has happened when school systems have made the change is an interesting one. Different systems have been used to combine two schools, to make teacher assignments, to provide in-service training, or to confer with the public. The specific technique seems to make little difference, as integration is successfully achieved regardless of the specific. A field supervisor in New Jersey makes the following comment:

> "Numerous school officials, when asked, seemed to think that while the technique used in their community helped solve their problem, they were not positive that some other method or technique, or no device at all might have solved the situation just as well."
>
> BARNES, WILLIAM W.—"Eliminating Segregation in New Jersey Public Schools", p. 7.

Q. What are the steps in establishing integration?

A. Experience with school integration shows that clear definition and public announcement of policy is an essential first step. Establishment of policy and basic administrative reorganization are best accomplished as a single step, effective immediately, and applying equally to all levels of the school system. Following this, school personnel have responsibility in implementing the policy.

Citizens rightly look to the Board of Education to make the declaration of policy, one which removes doubt and confusion and lays a basis for constructive building by teachers, principals, and school officers all over the city who will be involved in the changes. With this sound basis of policy and administrative action, integration at deeper levels can be carried out as the whole community works together day-by-day to meet the challenges of its integrated school system.

3 Q. What is the basic working principle of an integrated school system?

A. The essential feature is the principle that school affairs should be conducted without regard to race. This principle should be the overriding consideration in all questions posed and should apply without exception.

A policy based on such a principle acts as a guarantee of fairness and impartiality for everyone concerned. It provides the best possible assurance that the individual will be judged on his own merits. Children can then be educated on the basis of individual needs; personnel handling can be on the basis of merit and fitness. The policy does not mean that all are treated alike, but that race is eliminated as a factor in the way people are treated.

4 Q. Has there been adequate preparation for integration?

A. School authorities have been studying the question of school integration since the school cases were first heard by the Supreme Court in December 1952. The Superintendent made clear that school authorities would not be unprepared for the decision of the Supreme Court.

The Board of Education has sought the advice of citizens and organized groups on the best means of establishing an integrated system. The Superintendent and his staff have met repeatedly to do the necessary administrative planning for school zoning and assignment of teachers. Administrative and educational specialists who have had experience in making the transition elsewhere have served as consultants for the administration and Board. Workshops in intergroup education have been provided for principals and other field officers. Teacher organizations and citizen groups have given serious study to the question of integration.

The constructive steps needed to implement a policy of non-discrimination can be taken without further delay. It is important that we do not prolong the period of confusion and doubt. It is recognized that a period of delay can have boomerang effects. The greatest fear, thus the greatest danger, lies in not knowing. The best reassurance we can give to everyone is a reality they can understand by living in it.

5 Q. How do school authorities meet parent complaints?

A. A careful explanation of the principle involved is the best possible answer an administrator can make to the parent who objects to the non-discrimination policy. Discussion can make clear the impartiality and fairness of the policy. A policy which is intrinsically moral and democratic can be stated without defensiveness or apology or equivocation.

If some complaints are made at first, it will be a mistake to think that they are the beginning of an avalanche. Experience shows otherwise. Both in school systems and in business and other institutions, complaints occur most often in the beginning, with opposition lessening as the new situation becomes established. The administration does best to expect a certain number of complaints, but not to overestimate them. It will be obvious that no child should be given special treatment or allowed exceptional assignment simply because his parents make complaint. Citizens can have a feeling of confidence in their school administration only if policies are given substantial and consistent backing.

There may be some complaints of violation of the non-discriminatory policy. Parents may complain that their children are victims of prejudice or discrimination. Such complaints should be given serious consideration and investigation. If the charge is without foundation the situation should be thoroughly discussed with the parent. If there is any basis for the charge, the situation should be remedied. Experience in other cities has shown that a demonstrated willingness to deal with violations convinces the public of the sincerity of school authorities in carrying out the non-discrimination policy. The effect is to increase morale and to guarantee a relatively small number of such complaints.

Children go to school

6 Q. On what basis should children be assigned to schools?

A. The simplest and most effective basis for assigning children to schools is that of residence, or geographic nearness to the school.

Washington schools have a long established guide that an elementary school child should travel no more than a half mile to school, a junior high school child a maximum of 1 mile, and a senior high school child a maximum of 1½ miles. With artificial restrictions often imposed under the dual system these standards have frequently not been met. Under the integrated system it will be possible to do a far better job in meeting standards of school zoning.

Since neighborhoods vary in density of population and adequacy of school housing, we often find some of our schools overcrowded while others have excess space. School assignments should aim toward class size as nearly equal as possible in different schools. We come nearest to meeting sound standards if no artificial criterion, such as race, is used as a basis of assignment.

Some cities have resorted to the practice of gerrymandering. This means drawing lines of school zones in such a way as to conform to the racial distribution in housing and so establish segregated schools by subterfuge. This practice fails to meet the best standards of school zoning and represents a gross breach of the non-discrimination policy. The school administration and the Board of Education should avoid gerrymandering and citizens will surely be alert to prevent such a system being established. Any attempt to by-pass the basic principle of integration leads to increased tension and friction and makes the policy meaningless.

Q. Should parents be allowed to choose the school their children attend?

A. The only fair and practical way to make school assignments is on the basis of city-wide planning and with consideration of the problems of space and availability of facilities. Voluntary selection would make such considerations impossible.

Some people believe that voluntary choice of school can be used as a device to avoid complaints and dissatisfaction. In practice, it has quite the opposite effect. All parents in an area may choose the only new and attractive building. Some schools may be overloaded while others are being under-used. Some people may use voluntary choice as a means to by-pass integration and set up segregated schools. Such confusions as these will lead to conflict among parent groups about the right to use the school. Then, no matter what the administration does to solve the situation, there will be controversy and feelings of abuse and resentment.

After a long history of neighborhood quarrels over school transfers under the dual system, Washington has need for an end of controversy. If competition for the school is permitted to continue under integration, the result can only be loss of respect for school authorities, cynicism regarding the new policy, and a lowering of public morale. The administration is on firm ground only if assignments are made for everyone at the outset.

Q. Will Washington schools remain segregated because of segregated housing patterns?

A. Looking at the city as a whole, we can expect to find wide variety in the composition of various schools. When assignments are made on a purely residential basis, most high schools and a large number of elementary schools will be mixed.

In recent years, Washington's neighborhoods have become increasingly interracial. There are now large areas, particularly in the central city, where both white and Negro families live. Interracial neighborhoods now make up most of southwest Washington and large areas of the southeast and northeast (extending outward to the border of the city) and are increasing in the central northwest. This trend has been accelerated by integration of housing projects under the National Capital Housing Authority, in which establishment of an open occupancy policy is virtually complete. In these many mixed areas, schools will surely have mixed student bodies.

There are, of course, some residential areas which remain all white or all Negro, and many where one race is a tiny minority. Schools in these areas will reflect the pattern of housing.

Those who teach

9 Q. Will teaching staffs be integrated?

A. Under an integrated system there should be no emphasis on the race of the teacher, just as there should be no emphasis on the race of the student. The best handling of school personnel is on the basis of the qualification of the individual teacher for a particular job, the same personnel principles already well established in Civil Service. When such a policy is followed, many schools will have mixed faculties.

A policy of employment on merit means that teachers and other personnel are to be hired, assigned, and promoted on the basis of qualification alone, without regard to race. Such a policy, emphasizing the right person for the right job, promotes efficiency of the total staff and provides the greatest opportunity for professional satisfaction for the individual.

There need be no limitation on the use of an interracial staff even where students may be of only one race. If a given teacher is properly placed in a job which she can do well, students and other teachers come to respect her for her personal and professional qualifications. Indeed, the school which remains all white or all Negro for residential reasons may profit greatly by having a mixed staff, since this gives an opportunity for participating in an interracial school which would otherwise be denied.

There may be instances where it would be helpful to make a deliberate plan for the use of an interracial staff, particularly during the transition period. For example, where Negro children enter as a minority in a formerly white school, a mixed staff will be important to help establish a relationship between the school and the community and to give a feeling of security to all children. Conversely, a school which was formerly a Negro school may still have a majority of Negro students. It will be important that this school not be racially labeled. A mixed staff will help everyone concerned think of the school without racial designation.

Q. What is the experience with interracial staffs in other areas?

A. When school administrators comment on their experience with interracial placing, they are universal in reporting success.

There are many cities over the country where teachers of both races are placed in the same school. An inquiry by the American Friends Service Committee located 55 cities, by no means an exhaustive list, where interracial staffs have been successfully used. The school situations in these cities vary greatly. There are mixed staffs serving interracial student bodies and there are interracial faculties serving all white or all Negro student bodies. There are instances in which a Negro teacher has been very happily placed in an all white neighborhood. There are Negro teachers serving under white principals and white teachers serving under Negro principals. Almost every conceivable situation is represented.

When objections are raised by some parents, the usual experience is that objection subsides when the policy is explained and given a chance for a try-out. One superintendent reports, "When we started staffing our schools interracially . . . there were some slight objections, but pupils and their parents have learned to accept the teachers upon evidence of ability and not because of racial background". A midwestern school superintendent makes a succinct statement regarding the interracial policy:

> "There are many superior individuals regardless of race, and given comparable education advantages, these individuals will naturally come to the top. So long as such individuals are recognized because of merit the position of a school administrator is entirely defensible. Any other position will lead to endless controversy in our opinion."

Q. Should the teachers who go to an interracial staff be selected on a volunteer basis?

A. Assignment of teachers is an administrative matter for which the school officers are solely responsible. The administration has both the right and the obligation to make selections for particular jobs on the basis of their best judgment of personnel.

Assignment to a mixed school should not be treated as in any way exceptional or in need of special personnel procedures. Administrators will take many factors into account in making placements, including the attitudes of the teachers. Certainly they will wish to make especially careful assignments in areas where some racial tension has been felt or where a school will experience a radical change in the character of its student body. Such considerations require no special rules; they are part and parcel of the essential job of finding the best person possible for a given assignment.

Q. Can we be sure of having good teachers?

A. Using race as a factor in the selection of employees has placed an inevitable limitation on employment of the best candidate. Well-qualified Negro and white teachers alike have suffered because of the dual system. The effect of integration will be to raise the level of personnel for the entire system.

For a number of years the white elementary schools have been unable to fill all positions with teachers who have passed the regular examination. Consequently, positions have been filled from time to time with people who fail in some respect to meet qualifications. The basic reason for this is a shortage of white teachers which is felt over the entire nation. At the same time there are qualified Negro teachers living in Washington who have not found employment in the dual system. Since these teachers will be available for jobs anywhere within the single system, we can do a better job of meeting established standards.

The dual system has also imposed artificial restrictions at the secondary school level. For several years, there have been no jobs available in the white schools. Consequently, well-qualified white teachers could not be employed even when a need existed in the Negro schools. In an integrated system, every available job will be open to the best qualified person.

Q. Should Negro teachers be fearful about their status in an integrated system?

A. Only under an integrated system can both white and Negro teachers obtain full dignity as professional people. In the last analysis, segregation always restricts the opportunities of Negroes; there is always a group of jobs "for whites only". No staff member can have genuine security about his own ability until he can compete for any job against any other candidate.

Teachers presently employed need have no fear of loss of jobs. Tenure of teachers is protected by law, and there is and will continue to be a need for at least as many teachers as are now employed. In Washington, Negro teachers as a group have the training and experience necessary to hold their own in a situation of unrestricted competition.

Some people wonder if Negroes will have less opportunity for advancement, or if some discrimination will be shown in future hiring. We can expect the community to be alert to any tendencies toward favoritism. Where basic policy establishes the principle of employment on merit, citizens' groups can be active in insuring its enforcement.

Q. Do Washington teachers have the necessary background for work with interracial classes?

14

A. Washington teachers, well qualified by training and experience, have many skills and resources already developed which will stand them in good stead in integrated classes. Essentially their job remains the same regardless of the racial composition of the classes.

A skilled teacher has developed techniques for helping children who may be rejected by the group, children who fight or quarrel with each other, and for dealing with the great variety of inter-personal situations which may arise in a group. They will continue to be able to perform their basic job, which is not fundamentally changed by integration.

Some teachers may need assistance in gaining perspective about the racial situation. If racial differences are a source of confusion or anxiety for the teacher herself, she may profit by some assistance in understanding herself and her role with the children. Most teachers can profit by learning more about materials in the field of intergroup education.

15

Q. How do teachers increase their effectiveness in the field of human relations?

A. The regular in-service training program within the school system affords opportunity for orientation to integrated classes. A number of teachers have had extensive experience with interracial situations; others have attended summer workshops at the university level or shorter conferences given by private agencies. Every effort should be made to expand such opportunities as these for growth in effectiveness.

During the past two years the American Friends Service Committee has conducted a regular program of seminars for Washington teachers, designed to help them understand their role in an integrated system. These seminars have been attended by school administrators, principals, supervisors, counselors, librarians, and classroom teachers, always on an interracial basis. Participants have been able to gain insight through group-shared discussion and assistance from consultants.

Making it work

Q. Will there be more tension in mixed schools than in separate schools?

16

A. Segregation does not prevent the formation of negative attitudes and consequent tension; on the contrary it fosters prejudice and hostility. Artificial barriers open the way for the formation of false and unrealistic views, with no chance to correct such errors. An interracial situation, on the other hand, will provide an opportunity for developing more realistic attitudes and gaining new understanding of others. Analysis of the geography of racial tensions casts some light on this question. Severe difficulties occur at the margin between segregated neighborhoods; mixed neighborhoods are not prone to racial troubles.

17

Q. Will parents of different races be able to work together?

A. Negro and white parents have a common interest in a good school program and in the welfare of their children. A particularly effective way to improve intergroup attitudes is through working together on projects of common interests which in themselves have nothing to do with race. Given the opportunity for cooperative work, parents will find that they have much in common in the constructive work of building a better school and establishing deep ties between school and community. Parent-Teacher Associations will provide a natural framework for these efforts.

Q. What will happen if some children have poorer educational preparation than others?

18

A. In any classroom, the teacher is dealing with a range of differences in ability and achievement. There is no reason to expect that integrated classes will present an unusual degree of variation. Levels of ability will not follow racial lines, since the superior, the average, and the slow are found in all groups. The school will have no need to deal with children as racial groups, but should deal with particular children on the basis of individual need. The responsibility of the school is the basic educational job of having flexibility of program and the resources for individual attention.

19

Q. Will integration be more difficult at some school levels than others?

A. There is no evidence that any school level is more easily integrated than another. Experience across the nation shows that integration is successful at all levels, with the age of the child in no way a limiting factor. Some people think of secondary schools as most difficult, but the facts do not support the belief. Indeed, there are many school systems which have maintained integrated high schools for many years while elementary schools remain segregated.

Q. Will there be ample opportunity for all children to participate in extra-curricular activities?

A. With the relief of administrative problems and shortages which result from a dual school system, Washington schools should be far better equipped than at present to meet the individual needs of their students. Furthermore teachers and counselors recognize that extra-curricular activities are an excellent opportunity for helping people adjust to a new school and each other and will make use of such activities to bring groups together. The school should protect open membership for every organization and selection on merit for special work. The children themselves will do the rest. Interest, leadership, and talent are independent of race, and young people will respond to individual achievement and the fun of sharing creative activity.

Q. Do children have prejudices toward each other?

A. Children have a willingness to relate to each other as people, often ignoring racial lines in their spontaneous play. At the same time, they often show stereotyped ideas and negative feelings at an early age, as a consequence of the community pattern in which they have lived. The school will have a job to do, but one which can be based on the children's positive qualities of spontaneity, curiosity, and flexibility.

Q. How can the school have a positive influence on children's attitudes?

A. The major responsibility of the school is to establish an atmosphere in which each child is secure in knowing that he will be judged on his merit as an individual. The teacher should be matter-of-fact about race and able to speak of it without fear when the subject arises naturally. At the same time, the teacher should avoid calling attention to race unduly or labelling as "racial" occurences which would be normal among any group of children. Care should be taken not to over-protect or place too many demands on children through over-concern with their racial identity. A healthy school environment will give children an opportunity to work out spontaneous, genuine relationships. They learn more by living and doing than through preachment or formal lessons.

23

Q. Are children's attitudes really so important?

A. Ours is not a provincial world in which small, restricted groups live only to themselves. Today's children will emerge as adults in a complex world made up of many national and cultural groups, diverse religions, and countless variations among people in background, interest and habit. Young people can make an adequate adjustment in such a world only if they have opportunity for understanding beyond the confines of the limited spheres into which they are born.

Adults have an obligation to refrain from imposing on children prejudices which render them unsuited to the world of today. White children who have been segregated have been injured. We have subtly taught them an unrealistic view of themselves. They have learned to expect and receive some special advantage irrespective of their own actions or of individual merit. Real security lies not in unearned superiority, but in social arrangements which are just.

Negro children who have been segregated have also been injured. Having learned that the world values them less, they tend to value themselves less. Having experienced rejection, they suffer feelings of humiliation, chronic defeat, and often persecution. Psychiatric evidence indicates that such feelings interfere with real personal development.

The statement of philosophy adopted by the District Board of Education in 1940 affirms the central value of the development of the individual.

> "We should hold as the ultimate aim an individual who is physically sound, with wholesome recreational interest; who is emotionally stable and spiritually conscious; who is capable of independent, discerning, and critical thinking; who is socially competent and economically sufficient; who as a responsible citizen is ready for the enjoyments and duties of home, family, and community life, with an understanding and an appreciation of American ideals, principles, and purposes that will promote the progress of our own democracy and carry over into world citizenship."

Q. Are we facing a lot of trouble in doing this job?

24

A. The evidence is overwhelming that integration is a feasible, practical and constructive step. The voices of doom which foretell of destruction or failure in the wake of change have been proven wrong so many times over that they can no longer be taken seriously. Collapse of the whole college system was predicted if southern institutions admitted Negroes; yet, southern colleges and universities have been opening their doors with every success and with no loss to any school involved. Chaos was predicted if Jim Crow seating should be abandoned in transportation, yet the court decisions prohibiting segregation in interstate travel were followed by no such dire consequences. Many warned that Washington restaurants and theaters would go out of business if they admitted Negroes; yet, the Thompson decision accomplished an open policy in restaurants in a single, simple step, while movie houses changed policy some months before the community even became aware of it.

No step is taken without a word from the viewers-with-alarm. In point of fact, people have capacities for rising to the occasion often unsuspected even by themselves. The transition in our schools will be made by the people of our city. Within the schools, it will be carried out by administrators and teachers who have been selected and employed because they are well qualified for their jobs. There is every reason for us to have confidence in them as professional people. Parents come into the school situation through their children; their real concern for those they love most makes a powerful appeal to the best that is in them. Ultimately, integration at the deepest levels will be accomplished by the children themselves. We may well have faith in them and in ourselves.

AFSC Programs in Washington, D. C.

The Community Relations Program works with the community toward the end of eliminating segregation in the nation's capital. Efforts have been directed to establishment of an integrated school system and interracial programs in public recreation and private child-serving agencies. AFSC has offered seminars for public school teachers on the role of the teacher in an integrated school system, and a human relations seminar for members of public and private Boards. The staff consults with officials and community leaders, serves as an information center, and gives aid to local groups in program planning. A special project in the field of public accommodations provided counselling for management to assist in establishing non-discriminatory policies in restaurants, theaters, and hotels.

Work Camps have brought young people for summer work in Washington for four years. Work camps have helped establish interracial programs on public playgrounds and have worked with tenants to repair homes in the southwest. The Joint Social Order Committee of Washington Friends Meetings has co-sponsored these camps and has carried on weekend work camps in cooperation with the Southwest Neighborhood Council.

International Student House is a student residence and an international center for young people from many nations.

Davis House is an international guest house to help visitors from out of the country feel at home in the United States.

Seminars for High School and College Age Young People have brought students from Washington, other parts of the country and the world together to discuss critical national and international problems.

The Washington Seminar on International Affairs brings together small groups of people in positions of public responsibility for mutual exploration of new knowledge and research in the social sciences and humanities and their application to United States international programs.

The American Friends Service Committee, representing The Religious Society of Friends, attempts to relieve human suffering wherever it is found and to ease tensions between individuals, groups, or nations. At the base of all the Service Committee's programs is the belief that God lives in every person and that love in action can overcome hatred, prejudice, and fear. The Committee works in Europe, Asia, Mexico, and the United States. All areas of its work are open to all people, regardless of race, religion, or nationality.

Reporter, v. 11 (Dec. 30, 1954), 12–15

Washington, 'A Model For the Rest of the Nation'

DOUGLASS CATER

SPOTTSWOOD THOMAS BOLLING, JR., a shy fifteen-year-old Negro boy, has been cast in the role of a modern Moses. His name will go down in history books as the plaintiff in Bolling vs. Sharpe, one of the school segregation cases decided last May by the Supreme Court. Young Bolling, by accident of residence, is this year attending an all-Negro high school in Washington, D. C. But all about him he can behold the promised land which, after a four-year journey through the Federal courts, his people have finally reached. Of Washington's eleven public high schools, only his and two others did not have students of both races when classes began in September. Ninety-eight of the District's elementary and junior high schools now have mixed enrollment. Already more than 54,000 of the 106,000 students in the public-school system are participating in an "integrated" school program.

Washington's experience in mass desegregation has confounded some of the pet dogmas of the race-relations experts. One, long held to be cardinal, is that the larger the proportion of the minority race involved, the greater the degree of difficulty in effecting desegregation. And yet, in Washington Negro students constitute a majority, approximately sixty per cent of the total public-school enrollment. A second dogma is that a gradual approach to desegregation creates less friction than an abrupt one. But the change-over in this Southern city is being accomplished in a swift series of giant steps to be completed by next September.

What is most astounding about the change-over—even provoking one member of the Board of Education to speak of "miracles"—is that it is being accomplished without a serious hitch so far. In early October there were a few days of trouble, but only four of the schools and a small fraction of their students were involved. Even then—and again contrary to expert theory—the trouble was concentrated mainly in a school with a small Negro enrollment, whereas schools with far heavier numbers were unaffected.

OF COURSE many explanations have been offered. "Shadow of the Capital, the President's leadership, and all that," one educator has put it. Washington, for all its Southern tradition, is a city apart. In a purely negative way, the absence of self-government in the District made the formal act of abolishing the dual school system considerably easier than it might have been otherwise, since local resistance groups could not generate effective pressures. But there is more to the story than that. As I made the rounds of various schools, I found not simply grudging acceptance of an edict handed down from on high; in instance after instance, I found a conviction that the new program was working. In some cases the conviction was expressed as a sense of relief that things weren't as bad as had been expected, in others as a genuine elation over the progress that was being made toward fulfilling the democratic ideals of public education.

> "The international reason for acting to secure our civil rights now is not to win the approval of our totalitarian critics. We would not expect it if our record were spotless; to them our civil rights record is only a convenient weapon with which to attack us. Certainly we would like to deprive them of that weapon. But we are more concerned with the good opinion of the peoples of the world. . . . We are convinced that our way of life —the free way of life — holds a promise of hope for all people. We have what is perhaps the greatest responsibility ever placed upon a people to keep this promise alive. Only still greater achievements will do it.
>
> "The United States is not so strong, the final triumph of the democratic ideal is not so inevitable that we can ignore what the world thinks of us or our record."
> —Report of President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights, 1947.

But despite the relevancy of Washington's experience, especially for other cities that still have the transition ahead of them, most of the press has been indifferent to the story. There were a few feature stories on the opening day of school. And there were quite a few sensational headlines during the October troubles. But except for Washington's own newspapers, the story of what was happening to the 54,000 youngsters, their parents, and their teachers has been largely ignored.

Ironically, even some of the participants, conditioned to the traditional concepts of news, don't seem to realize how big the story actually is. As Miss Mildred Green, principal of the Raymond Elementary School, with 390 Negro and 140 white students, has insisted, "There is no news—there's nothing to tell. From the very first day of school we have been so busy with education that we haven't had time to think of what has happened." She reports that the very young, as might be expected, have adapted to the change easily. They seem, in fact, to be almost unaware of racial differences. One teacher reports that one day a little Negro girl was chosen by her classmates to be Goldilocks in a classroom play.

The parents, too, have made their adjustments. Gilbert Adamson, credit manager for a jewelry store and president of the Raymond Parent-Teachers Association, has nothing but praise for the way things have gone. "As far as the hard work of running the PTA is concerned," he told me, "the Negro parents have participated just as actively as our white parents." Another white parent, more reserved, expressed herself as "neither elated nor anguished." Her only worry was that as a by-product of the change some classes might get too large for adequate teaching. Last year, the all-white Raymond was only partially filled, with six empty classrooms. This year, by relieving the nearby Park View School from overcrowding, it is approaching the District attendance norms, which this parent feels are too high. "Thirty or more kids to a class is more than one teacher can manage," she protested.

Jefferson Junior High

Jefferson Junior High, which is located in the heart of the southwest Washington slum area, now has 333 white and 230 Negro students. In a sense, being brought together was not a particularly novel experience for the youngsters, since they have been living in close proximity in many of the overcrowded blocks of that region. The neighborhood has produced more than its proportionate share of the so-called "atypical" students who have trouble keeping up with their school work. Yet despite the depressing day-to-day problems, Hugh S. Smith, Jefferson's enthusiastic, hard-working principal, has been systematically cultivating good "intercultural" understanding in the neighborhood for many years. Partly as a result of his efforts, Jefferson has made the transition easily.

At a school assembly I watched students of both races performing for the entertainment of their schoolmates. A thirteen-year-old Negro boy, with stilted diction, recited Emma Lazarus' "Give me your tired, your poor, Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free . . ." The applause was enthusiastic.

The first afternoon of the student strikes in October, a group from another school paraded over to Jefferson to urge its students to walk out. Mr. Smith calmly put on a Western movie in the school auditorium, and not a student left.

But this superficial success, he points out, should not blind anyone to the deeper problems that have been piled in Jefferson's lap. For one thing, he and his teachers had not anticipated the true extent of the educational gap between white and Negro schools in southwest Washington. Perennial overcrowding combined with teacher shortages in the Negro schools produced poor attendance and study habits that cannot be overcome in a hurry. Mr. Smith continues to maintain high standards for the more able students by his regular practice of grouping students according to ability within each school grade. It has resulted this year in practically all whites in the top sections and all Negroes in the bottom with varying mixtures in between. To compensate, Mr. Smith has deliberately mixed the students in their homerooms.

Even more basic to the problems at Jefferson are the welfare needs of the children. There are students in the school who do not have enough to eat or wear, and many also come from divided, problem-ridden homes. The school's ability to meet these needs is limited. The Police Boys' Club in the neighborhood continues to maintain the color bar. Welfare services are woefully inadequate.

McKinley High

McKinley High, which concentrates on technical courses, received a blanket transfer of Negro students from the nearby outmoded Armstrong School and now has 562 white students and 404 Negroes. Its progress was interrupted by a brief outbreak of rebellion last October. But Dr. Charles E. Bish, the astute and energetic principal, says that he feels better off than those school heads who have not had to come to grips with the inevitable change this year.

"It cannot be intellectualized," he argues. "You can talk about it in sociology class but you cannot fashion behavior pattern anew there. One's attitudes develop as he becomes involved in real experiences. Some of these schools are not going to solve their problems until they actually get Negroes in."

Dr. Bish has faced some of the same difficulties that Mr. Smith mentioned, although they have had to be handled differently in senior high. "I made the decision," Dr. Bish said, "that we can't have segregation within the school. We can't have two academic standards for students. If there are a greater number of failures at first, that's the price that must be paid."

A visitor to McKinley is impressed by the casualness of the students' acceptance of the new situation. In the labs and handicraft shops, Negro and white students work side by side. In the locker room after basketball practice, the usual horseplay goes on among the boys without regard to the color of their skins. In the cafeteria, one does notice that the small groups around the tables are usually of the same race, although the room as a whole is thoroughly intermixed. "It is possible to be friendly without necessarily being friends," one teacher commented.

After careful consideration, it was finally decided not to hold the traditional Christmas dance this year. Although the student leaders thought it would work out all right, the school authorities, including Principal Bish, concluded that the risk might be too great.

Trouble in October

McKinley was one of the four schools at which a student strike took place, after word of rebellion had come over from Milford, Delaware, and Baltimore, Maryland. Dr. Bish suspects systematic agitation by a group of troublemakers who spread rumors by telephone over the weekend following the outbreak of violence at Southern High School in Baltimore. Two or three minor incidents that had occurred at McKinley during the preceding week provided tinder.

On Monday, October 4, approximately 150 of McKinley's students went out on strike. There were certainly strong feelings involved, but it has been noted that unusually fine Indian summer weather contributed to the holiday spirit.

But the students were not immune to reason. Dr. Bish was quickly able to get them into a meeting for a discussion of their problems. By Wednesday, a large assembly was convened in the school auditorium, the problems were freely discussed, and a biracial student grievance committee was appointed. The storm had subsided, but there was still the problem of how to end the assembly without risking a further walkout. Dr. Bish was suddenly inspired to turn the meeting into a pep rally for the next weekend's football game. To the stirring strains of "On McKinley," the students marched singing from the auditorium and back to their classrooms. No order had been given.

Anacostia High

The most serious outbreak of trouble occurred at Anacostia High School, which is located on the flats across the Anacostia River from the main body of the District. Unlike other parts of the District, Anacostia has until recently isolated Negroes in tight little communities that have existed since the Civil War. Anacostia has been largely a middle-class, homeowning community, although in the past few years there has been a mushrooming of large-scale housing and apartment developments. Racial tension has been particularly strong, with a bad flare-up a few years ago when the local swimming pool was thrown open to both races.

In the high school itself resentment had already been expressed against the encroachment of Negroes. Four years ago Mrs. Opal Corkery, then the principal, refused to permit a performance of the Washington Sesquicentennial play, "Faith of Our Fathers," in the school auditorium because one of the cast was a Negro. She argued that her ruling was necessary to prevent a riot. After the new program was announced last June, she retired and is now teaching in a white Virginia school.

Only forty-four Negro students entered Anacostia High this September. To all outward appearances they were soon assimilated into the school life, joining the band, the cadet corps, and the basketball team. But on Monday, October 4, about five hundred white students—nearly half of the student body—staged a strike.

Surprisingly enough, there was not much racial animosity to be observed in the affair at Anacostia. Roving, shouting bands of youngsters blew off steam at educational authorities, not at the Negroes; one Negro student was found marching along enthusiastically with the rest. Unlike the situation at McKinley, however, appeals to reason were not successful. The acting principal tried in vain to set up a grievance procedure. An outdoor assembly to discuss the matter broke up in pandemonium. Police were obliged to prevent the picketers from marching across the bridge to seek recruits from other schools.

Late on Wednesday afternoon, the authorities cracked down. School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning announced that after Thursday absences would be marked as unexcused, thus disqualifying students from athletic, band, and other honor activities. Police Chief Robert V. Murray warned that disorderly students might be arrested and acquire a police record. All the responsible voices of the community—including even the Federation of Citizens Association, which has opposed the integration program—spoke out against the strike. By Friday, attendance was back to normal at Anacostia and elsewhere.

John Koontz, who has since been appointed principal at Anacostia, realizes the difficulty of the job that faces him. Having grown up in the neighborhood, he understands the deeply felt concern of many white parents who feel that their stake in the school is being taken away from them. But he is equally committed to the task of making the new program work. "My job is to assure the parents that this is going to continue to be a fine school academically—one which will prepare their children for college. They can feel security in the knowledge that their children are not going to suffer educationally because it is a mixed school."

A distressed representative of one of the neighborhood citizens' associations called on Mr. Koontz while I was in his office. "I'm trying to do everything I can to eliminate friction and you should help me," said Mr. Koontz. "You know as well as I do that kids don't learn as much when they are disturbed."

Perhaps the most substantial and widespread criticism of the integration program is that it has been operated with too little regard for particular conditions that are peculiar to certain neighborhoods. In its zeal to do away with all barriers, the Board of Education voted at first to keep no record of a student's race. The rule has been temporarily suspended so that there can be some record of the progress that is being made.

But this complete disregard of the racial factor has resulted in situations in which one or two white children were dropped into an all-Negro school, and vice versa. A biracial "review" committee set up by the Superintendent of Education to hear complaints was expressly instructed to refuse requests for transfers from one school to another made simply for racial reasons. Some, including members of the Board of Education, wonder if this isn't turning a sound principle into a fetish.

Is the environment of the so-called fringe school, in which one race overwhelmingly outnumbers the other, a healthy or necessary part of racial equality? So far the Washington experience furnishes arguments but no definite answer.

The review committee, however, has heard more than seven hundred requests and has been able to comply with a majority of them. Miss Margaret Pepper, the superintendent's executive assistant, feels that in this way the real cases of maladjustments have been taken care of adequately.

How They Got Ready

In assessing the factors that have made the program a success, its sponsors point proudly to their foresight. Two years ago, School Superintendent Corning, at the direction of the Board of Education, requested interested citizens' groups to suggest ways and means to knock down the racial barriers if ordered to by the Supreme Court. Seminars were held with outside experts to guide teachers and administrators. A handbook, "Intergroup Education," was prepared. Two days after the Supreme Court handed down its decision on May 17, the Board of Education set up a special committee to draft guiding principles for the change-over. Less than a week later, the Commission issued a sweeping mandate for merging both students and teaching staffs, and Superintendent Corning outlined a plan of action. Briefly, Dr. Corning's plan establishes new school boundaries without regard to race that will apply to successively broader categories of students until the program is completed in September, 1955.

In late June, Dr. Corning announced the list of schools that would be affected in the fall. There was none of the uncertainty and indecisiveness that aggravated the situation in Milford, Delaware. Families unwilling to face the prospect had time to make arrangements for private schooling or to move elsewhere.

Walter N. Tobriner, a member of the Board of Education who was chairman of the special committee to draft the desegregation principles, argues that speed and decisiveness were essential to success. "It was like taking a piece of adhesive plaster off," he says. "People adjust better to a situation in which they find themselves than toward a situation lying before them."

PERHAPS the most important factor of all, however, has been the unreserved co-operation of the teachers. No one has reported a single instance in which a teacher's behavior has undermined student confidence. When the teachers experienced qualms, as many of them undoubtedly did at times, they kept it to themselves.

This commitment to the program by those in responsible positions applied all the way up to the President, who on the day after the Supreme Court decision expressed his hope that Washington would move swiftly to carry out the verdict, serving as a model for the rest of the nation. Since then, he has publicly announced his pleasure at the way the program has succeeded. In contrast, an isolated instance of irresponsibility occurred last October when a few of the striking students called on Representative James C. Davis (D., Georgia), who will be a ranking member of the House District Committee next January. Representative Davis later announced, "I told them I regarded this Supreme Court decision as being rank usurpation of authority by the Court . . . I told them if they carry on their protest and stay out of school, school officials will have a hard time holding school without pupils. I said I was on their side and I hope they win."

OF COURSE there has been plenty of friction, and even tightly fought contests within the Board of Education itself. Its members range in attitude from Robert R. Faulkner, who has called for a three-school system—one white, one Negro, one mixed—to Dr. Margaret Just Butcher, who is also a representative of the N.A.A.C.P. and who has bitterly denounced Superintendent Corning's plan as "gradualism."

Though the overt attempts to interfere have subsided, there are still dire forebodings. Some white people point to the falling off of white registration in schools that were particularly affected last fall, and say gloomily that school desegregation will accelerate the migration of Negroes into the heart of Washington and whites into the outlying suburban areas of Maryland and Virginia.

But Mr. Tobriner has argued that these problems lie beyond the schools' responsibility. "We simply make it difficult for ourselves by diagnosing trends that we are powerless to prevent. The problem of who lives in Washington belongs to someone higher up than the Board of Education."

The Next Step

Integration is uncovering problems of health and welfare as well as those of direct educational shortages which were long half-concealed behind the curtain of segregation. It is bringing increased recognition of the needs for slum clearance, urban redevelopment, and other long-range city planning that must be attended to if Washington is not to share the destiny of other metropolitan centers where only the very poor and the very rich continue to live in the heart of the city.

Paradoxically, the very lack of self-government that speeded desegregation in the District is also making it difficult to meet these urgent conditions. It means that a man like Representative Davis has a strangle hold over the District's plans and purse strings even though District citizens have long paid their own way in taxes. It means that on the House District Committee, which has absolute control over local affairs, nine of the twelve members come from Southern states that are vigorously opposed to removal of any racial barriers.

Integration of Washington schools has so far been a notable success story, a true model for the nation. But unless the people of Washington win their long-sought home rule, the very success could bring on a gradual debasement of education, a general decline in civic conditions, and perhaps a form of continued segregation within the schools because of the further spreading of slum areas in the center of the city.

It would be tragic indeed if this major forward step in democracy should be frustrated by Federal restraints that prevent Washington's citizens from governing themselves democratically.

On the day the Adams School opened, mothers were requested to stay near their children for an hour or so till everyone felt comfortabl

The Washington Story: ONE

These Negro and white children take each other for granted as school opens in Washington, D. C.

BY ANNA W. M. WOLF

PHOTOGRAPHS BY SUZANNE SZASZ

THESE quiet pictures of children at school mark the beginni of a new chapter in American life. Last May the Supre Court of the United States declared that the segregation of Ne students in all-Negro schools is a violation of the right to eq opportunities. Though the Court postponed issuing a directive to when and how the change must be accomplished, the decision was clear that hereafter in public schools and colleges, Negro a white students would go to school together.

This fall, all over the country, thousands of colored and wh children sat down at their desks in the same classroom. In sp of varying feelings about the change, the usual doings of openi day in most places went off quietly. For the majority of youn sters this was just the beginning of another school year. Yet "n since Lincoln's proclamation which freed the slaves in 1863," s Dean Francis B. Sayre, Jr., of the National Cathedral in Washi

JOYCE'S FIRST DAY AT SCHOOL

Joyce Johnson enrolls as a first-grader in a school only a block from her home. Last year she would have had to go a long distance to a segregated school

Registration: Joyce sticks close to Mother, eyes the principal anxiously.

She tries to be good but when you f strange it's often hard to pay attenti e requested to st[illegible] s a kindergarten teacher who loves children and loves singing e felt comfortabl[illegible] qualities that break many old barriers to human fellowship.

At recess, scrimmages and roughhouse play are mostly friendly. There'll be the usual quota of quarrels too.

Elbow room at last. In this school crowding and tension has lessened, teachers can do a better job.

ONE MORE STEP

ark the beginni[illegible], "has the Negro's right to move ahead as a free and dignified [illegible]zen won such a victory. At the same time, the America we all [illegible]e took yet another step toward that greatest of mankind's [illegible]ams—the brotherhood of man."

May the Supre[illegible] Well in advance, the Washington School Board worked out a [illegible]n which they hoped would be a pilot project for other com-[illegible]nities. All children entering a Washington public school for [illegible] first time will now attend the school in the district where they [illegible] Since Washington housing is less segregated than in many [illegible]s, this means that the schools for the most part will eventually [illegible] both colored and white children. Those who are already in [illegible] upper grades could choose whether they wanted to continue in [illegible] old schools or go instead to an unsegregated one.

regation of Ne[illegible]

he right to eq[illegible]

ing a directive[illegible] shed, the decisi[illegible]

lleges, Negro a[illegible]

colored and wh[illegible]

assroom. In sp[illegible] doings of openi[illegible]

ajority of youn[illegible]

ol year. Yet "n[illegible] ves in 1863," s[illegible]

edral in Washi[illegible]

The best hope for peaceful integration, the Washington [illegible]ol Board believes, lies in a realistic appraisal of problems that [illegible] arise and cool-headed plans for handling them.

It's not all clear sailing; there are problems too. This little girl is the only white child in her class and it's not easy to be "different." Her home is in a district where families are nearly all colored. Authorities, aware that some hardship is the price of all social change, regret these defects, expect the problem to work out as lines between exclusively "white" and "colored" neighborhoods gradually disappear.

Two friends who love children; Bernice Brown, principal of the Morgan School, and Penelope Wright, president of the Adams School PTA. Awhile ago gang fights broke out between the then colored Morgan School and the then white Adams School. These two women conferred and took constructive steps toward improvement. They've worked together ever since for their common purpose—a democratic way of life for Washington's children.

but when you fe[illegible] "[illegible]nder if she'll like me," Joyce is thinking. Per-[illegible] to pay attentio[illegible] [illegible]her neighbor has the same thoughts about Joyce.

Joyce is limbering up. She has definite notions about Stevie's drawings, and she isn't backward about expressing them.

This morning's shyness seems a long time ago. Joyce feels at home. The teachers are nice. Best of all, she has a friend.

From Dallas Johnson
AD 4-8842, OL 5-4136

PRESS RELEASE FOR SATURDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 29th

Gerhard van Arkel, Chairman of the Washington Committee on the Public Schools, today released hitherto unpublished statistics submitted to his Committee by the Bureau of Social Science Research, which show, he said, that "despite the seeming efforts of the Davis Subcommittee to besmirch the D. C. school integration experience, the majority of Washington white adult citizens consider that desegregation is going well."

The Bureau's statistics, which were accumulated in August, 1955, after the first full year of school integration experience, reveal that 51% of the Washington area white adult population thought that desegregation is either going "very well" or "fairly well." Only 7% thought it was going "badly" and 14% thought it was going "not so well." Twenty-eight percent of Washington area citizens had no opinion.

Other statistics supplied by the Bureau indicate that those living within the boundaries of the District of Columbia registered a higher proportion than those in suburban areas in believing that integration was proceeding well. In addition, the data reveal that 65% of the white adult citizens of the District who have children under 18 years of age believe that desegregation was going well. Van Arkel commented that "the last two statistics show that those having a more direct experience with integration consider it in a far more favorable light than those having little experience with it."

Van Arkel further stated: "Since this data was accumulated at a time when integration was completing its initial year - a year of trying difficulties requiring great adjustments - it can be assumed that today, after two years' experience, an even higher proportion of the white population would subscribe to the view that desegregation is working well."

In releasing the statistics to the Washington Committee, Dr. Bower, sociologist and Director of the Bureau, stated that "the data are extremely significant in that an earlier survey had revealed that the majority of white citizens in the District of Columbia had looked with disfavor on the Supreme Court decision. In other words, although the white citizenry by and large was not originally sympathetic to the Court decision, having a respect for law and democratic institutions and after a year of experience with integrated schools, they came to regard the implementation of that decision favorably." Dr. Bower went on to say that the Negro population was overwhelmingly in favor of the Supreme Court decision and also felt that the integration process was going well.

In releasing the figures of the Bureau, van Arkel stated: "This opinion survey is important because the general impression being created by the school hearings is that Washington citizenry on the whole believes integration to be a failure. We believe that the information elicited from witnesses has been decidedly onesided, which is not unexpected in view of the fact that the Chairman of the Committee, Representative Davis, at the start of school integration in October, 1954, actually appealed to lawlessness by 'advising' some student demonstrators to disobey local authorities by staying out of schools."

"The Washington Committee on the Public Schools," he said, "will continue to release information to set the facts and record straight."

Education, Desegregation, 1956-57
File Wash D.C.

From Dallas Johnson
AD 4-8842, OL 5-4136

PRESS RELEASE FOR SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 30

The Washington Committee on the Public Schools yesterday called on President Eisenhower "to appoint an impartial and unprejudiced Commission of distinguished educators and social scientists to evaluate the situation before and after school integration in the District of Columbia." In a letter to the President, Gerhard van Arkel, Chairman of the newly formed committee of leading Washington citizens said:

"As you are aware, the Board of Education of the District of Columbia took prompt action in 1954, after the decision of the Supreme Court, to integrate local schools. It is the conviction of most thoughtful residents of the District that this step was long over-due, and that its consequences to date have been a more efficient and economical use of school facilities and personnel, a decided narrowing of the gap between the education offered white and Negro children, the elimination of a constant source of bickering concerning allocation of school buildings, and a good start toward the American goal of equal citizenship and opportunity. Integration has demonstrated that weaknesses existed in our school system, a fact previously concealed under the blanket of segregation.

"The Davis House District Subcommittee has been recently holding hearings, the tenor of which might make the unthinking believe that all school problems began with integration. School children were not all angels before 1954, and they have not become juvenile delinquents since. Rather clearly, the District is not going to return to a segregated system. But it is evident that the Davis Subcommittee will seize on every school failure, every playground ruckus, and every infraction by any school child to make it appear that integration here has been a failure in order to hamper similar efforts elsewhere and to forestall compliance with the Supreme Court decision.

"We think the country is entitled to the true facts about the Washington situation. We, therefore, propose that you appoint an impartial and unprejudiced Commission of distinguished educators and social scientists to evaluate the situation before and after integration in the District schools. Our experience here has a national importance, since it demonstrates that with good will, intelligence and determination this job can be done. Such an unbiased study would, we feel, point the way for other communities faced with similar problems, and would be an effective counter-check to the misleading propaganda concerning the District schools which is being, and almost certainly will continue to be, disseminated.

"Your administration has gone on record in urging the establishment in Washington of a model educational system, and, further, has taken steps to implement that advice. Undoubtedly, the administration cannot forego the responsibility of defending its objectives when efforts are being made to castigate unwarrantedly the significant progress accomplished."

In releasing the letter to the press, van Arkel commented: "In spite of this predisposition on the part of the Davis Subcommittee to make the Washington integration experience look as bad as possible, it is apparent that there is much to be said in terms of positive achievement in the past two years, that is not being said. Testimony to this effect is slipping through in spite of, not because of, the explorations of the Subcommittee and its Counsel. The statement that Assistant School Superintendent Carl F. Hansen insisted on making at the end of his testimony on Thursday never would have emerged as a result of the questions he was being asked. Yet Dr. Hansen, an important witness to the overall situation, blamed the District's previous system of segregation for the current ills, and described the achievements of the past two years "as a miracle of social adjustment." Dr. Hansen is to be commended for his courage in making his statement in the face of a hostile committee. Time and again, teachers testifying have tried, without any encouragement from the Committee, to evaluate the isolated data they were being asked to supply, in terms of the overall situation, and in the positive terms of growth and achievement. But the Committee's reaction has been negative."

Education, Desegregation
Wash., D.C. 1956-57

Dallas Johnson
ADams 4-8842, OL 4-6594

FOR RELEASE WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1956

In a statement made today, Gerhard van Arkel, Chairman of the Washington Committee for the Public Schools, composed of 32 civic, educational and church leaders in the District of Columbia, said:

"Our Committee is interested not only in the past but in the future of the Washington schools. If we have learned anything from the Davis Committee's hearings on school integration, it is that the District of Columbia needs to spend more, not less, on its schools.

"Today the District Commissioners start their hearings on the 1957-58 school budget. There is an obvious need for more instructors to meet the demands of increased enrollment. The reinforcement of teachers' efforts by the creation of more special remedial classes for children who are way behind in reading and arithmetic is clearly indicated. There is also a need for more assistant principals to give guidance on overall problems.

[redacted]

"We not only have the overall problem of equalizing and improving potentialities for attainment among the native white and Negro children of the District, but as Dr. Corning said in his testimony we have the added and tremendous burden of absorbing a continuing influx of several thousands of Negro students coming to us every year from the Southern states.

"Last week we heard from Mr. Gerber that his home town of Memphis had a 'pretty good school system' at a daily cost per pupil in attendance of 77¢. He did not break this down by white and Negro pupils, nor did he define what he meant by a 'pretty good school system.' Suffice it to say that of the 88 public school systems in cities with a population of 100,000 or more, the 26 southern school systems spent on the average of 44 cents less per child per day than the rest of the country. The city of Memphis was at the bottom of the list, spending more than 90¢ less. We suspect that the quality of instruction even in Memphis is strained by a salary range of from $2,795 to $4,435 for teachers with a Masters Degree, with even lower salaries for a Bachelor of Arts.

"One of our big problems, here in the District, is the kind of education being given in Memphis and other Southern communities. Last year there was an increase of nearly 5,000 Negro children in the Washington schools. It is estimated that more than half of these came from the Southeastern states. In the last six years Negro students in the D.C. school system have increased by nearly 21,000, bringing the total Negro school population up to 68,877 at the close of the last school year. It is estimated that at least 1 out of every 5 Negro students in the D. C. schools today has come to us from the South.

"Unfortunately, a 'pretty good school system' by Mr. Gerber's standards, is not up to par for the course of study in Washington, D. C. In 1948 when the impact of the swelling tide of new arrivals from the Southern states had already begun to be felt, a study made by the Research Division of the Board of Education revealed that the difference in the educational levels of the Southern children was so great that it would take on the average of 8 years in the Washington schools to bring them up even to the levels of the Washington segregated schools. This confirmed similar studies made earlier (1931-32) in the New York City schools. A study of 1,700 12-year old Negro school children in Harlem showed that Southern Negro children who had attended New York City schools one year or less made on the average of 20 points lower on I.Q. scores, and if they came from rural sections there was a 50 point difference. They were retarded on the average of two grades in school. The longer they stayed in New York the closer they came to the norm for New York children, until at the end of 7 years there was no difference in their I.Q., and after 9 years their grade level was the same. The study concluded that a large part, if not all, of the retardation of Negro children in New York City schools was due to the pressure among them of a large number of newcomers from the South.

"In the opinion of the Washington Committee on the Public Schools, 77¢ a day is a high price to pay for a quality of education that is from 7 to 9 years behind its Northern counterpart. It is the old story of the illiteracy tests given inductees in both World Wars. In World War II almost 60 per cent of the Negro inductees in the Fourth Service Command--the Southeastern part of the United States from which most of our Southern students are coming--were classed as Grade 5 or illiterate, as against 15 per cent of Negro inductees as classed illiterate from the First Service Command, which was New England. In fact, in such key Southeastern states as Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina the rejection rate for white inductees was higher than the rates for Negro inductees from a host of Northern states including Illinois, Indiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, Ohio, Pennsylvania, California - and 2 borderline states of Kentucky and West Virginia.

"The job the D. C. school system faces today is to offer all of its children, who were created equal, equal opportunity in education. This is something that is going to cost time and money, and a great deal of effort on the part of teachers as well as students.

"Last year the District of Columbia budgeted $308.46 for each child in average daily attendance. This was well below the median for communities with the big city problems inherent in populations of 500,000 or more. Of the 18 cities in this category, Washington was 13th on the list. Only 5 large cities spent less—including the newly integrated cities of Baltimore and St. Louis, and the only two large cities that still have segregated systems, New Orleans and Houston. The Washington Committee for the Public Schools believes that as the Nation's Capital, we can and should do better than this, and we urge the Commissioners to find the means of improving this situation in its coming hearings."

Education, Desegregation 1953-57
Wash. D.C.

F I

From Marjorie Ware
RE 7-0367

PRESS RELEASE FOR THURSDAY, OCTOBER 4th 1956

Gerhard van Arkel, Chairman of the Washington Committee on the Public Schools, a group of distinguished civic, education and church leaders, today released the following letter, sent by him to Dr. Hobart M. Corning, Superintendent of the Public Schools of Washington.

"Dear Dr. Corning:

The Washington Committee on the Public Schools was most heartened by the testimony you so ably gave before the Davis Subcommittee. We are certain that your appraisal of the past and present problems of our school system is shared by the great majority of District residents, and that many of our present problems are in large measure attributable to the many years of segregation in the District schools. With you, we look forward to a solution of these problems in the near future, and trust that the appropriate authorities will make available the means for overcoming them."

PAMPHLET TO AID IN D. C. PUBLIC SCHOOLS PUBLISHED

Star News 4-30-54

WASHINGTON, D. C. — A 16-page pamphlet designed to aid the successful integration of the Washington public school system has just been issued by the American Friend Service Committee, it was announced today by Lewis M. Hoskins, Executive Secretary of the Quaker organization.

The pamphlet, which is titled "Working Together: Integration of Washington School," will be distributed by the organization's Community Relations Program in Washington, 104 C Street, N. E. The pamphlet poses 24 questions most often asked about the integration of Washington schools and gives answers based on the experience of the American Friends Service Committee and of school systems which have integrated in recent years.

Among the questions asked and answered in the pamphlet are: "What has happened when schools have integrated in other communities?" "What are the steps in establishing integration?" Has there been adequate preparation for integration?" "On what basis should children be assigned to schools?" "Will teaching staffs be integrated?" And "are we facing a lot of trouble in doing this job?"

The pamphlet grows out of the concern of the Service Committee that educational systems need to reflect a belief in the essential worth of each human being and equality of all men in the sight of God. For two years the Quaker organization has conducted a program in Washington working toward integration of the public school syttem.

Seminars for teachers and school administrators have been an important part of this program. Seven interracial seminars have been held, with 182 teachers and administrators attending. They met with Intergroup Education consultants and personnel from school systems which have experienced integration.

"Out of this experience, the Service Committee has become aware of teacher interest in meeting the challenge of a more democratic school program. "The questions raised by these teachers have us greatly in preparing our pamphlet, which we hope will be of help to them in the job ahead," she continued.

"The Washington community, the nation, and the world await the Supreme Court decision on school segregation," Miss Osborne said. We feel confident that integration of the school system here is inevitable as the community and the nation continues to work toward a greater realization of democratic ideals."

The American Friends Service Committee's activities in Washington include working toward the integration of public recreation facilities and private child-serving agencies. A short term program was conducted in the field of public accommodations. Quaker work camps have also brought young people to Washington for four summers, to help establish interracial programs on public playgrounds and to work with tenants to repair homes in the southwest. The Joint Social Order Committee of the Washington Friends Meetings has co-sponsored these camps and carried on weekend work camps in cooperation with the Southwest Neighborhood Council.

International Student House, a student residence and international center for young people from many nations, is also a part of the Service Committee's program. Davis House, an international guest house, helps people from other countries feel at home in the United States.

Seminars for high school and college age young people conducted by the Service Committee have brought young people from many parts of the country and the world together to discuss critical national and international problems.

These Washington activities are carried out in a framework of national and international activities of the Quaker organization, which is perhaps best known for its work of relief and rehabilitation.

FAST INTEGRATION IN SCHOOLS URGED

This Would Lessen Chance to Evade Court Ban, 19 Race Relations Experts Say

NYT 5-9-54

By MURRAY ILLSON

The quicker the United States Supreme Court ban on segregated schols is put into effect the less chance there will be to evade it, according to a committee of nineteen race relations experts.

The committee's conclusions were made public yesteday at a special conference held in conjunction with the American Psychological Association's sixty-second annual meeting in the Statler Hotel. Among those taking part was Thurgood Marshall, special counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Mr. Marshall, who argued before the Supreme Court in support of the ban on segregation, said he had not seen the committee's report and would not comment until he had had a chance to study it. The court is scheduled to hear arguments this fall on whether its ruling should be effected forthwith or gradually and whether it should issue detailed or general instructions on desegregation policy.

Report Based on 81 Studies

Three members of the committee were present at yesterday's meeting. They were Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, associate Professor of Psychology at City College; Dr. John P. Dean, associate Professor of Sociology at Cornell University, and Dr. Isador Chein, Professor of Psychology at New York University.

They said that the committee represented educational institutions in all parts of the country and included a number of members who were Southerners. The committee's report, they declared, was based on eighty-one studies in the field of race relations.

Observing that "the threat of violence has often been used as device to postpone or prevent desegregation," the report said:

"Violence can be perpetrated by a small minority of frustrated and disgruntled individuals whose basic motivations are not necessarily directly related to race.

"Though rare, violence has been found under conditions of ambiguous, inconsistent or dilatory desegregation policy on the part of authorities; ineffective, weak and at times conspiratorial police action, and as a reflection of the

Continued on Page 36, Column 2

THE

Fast School Desegregation Urged To Lessen Time for Evading Ban

Continued From Page 1

type of inconsistency which is associated with conflicting and competing governmental agencies and authorities."

The report asserted that studies of violent acts in areas where desegregation had occurred indicated that such acts were "more likely to occur in those communities in which there is a tradition of general lawlessness, political corruption and criminal contamination of the police power."

'Techniques' of Delay Cited

Various "techniques" for delaying or evading desegregation were cited in the report. Among them were the establishment of "voluntary" desegregation policies, gerrymandering or other manipulation of school district lines to insure that schools in effect would remain segregated, "prolonged periods of public education," and token admissions of Negroes to "desegregated" schools.

An effective desegregation policy in the public schools, the report said, should include the following points:

¶All children should be assigned to the available school facilities without regard to race.

¶The only delay permitted should be that time required by specified and necessary administrative adjustments. There is no available evidence to suggest that this time need be any longer than a school year.

Mr. Marshall observed that white and Negro children traditionally played together in the South and that "the only time they are segregated is in school and in church." He added that "from the earliest days of slavery, Negroes have been teachers of white childen—spanking them, wet-nursing them and teaching the manners."

PTA ASKED TO AID WITH INTEGRATION

N. Y. Times 5-24-54

Board Calls Upon Southern State Groups to Decide How They Can Help

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J., May 23 (AP) — The National Congress of Parents and Teachers said today it will be up to each state PTA in the South to decide how to help public schools make the changeover from racial segregation to nonsegregation of pupils.

In a policy statement issued on the eve of the national PTA convention, the group's board of managers urged members "to study and pursue effective means in working toward integrated education for all children."

An estimated 3,000 delegates representing 8,822,694 PTA members are expected here for the convention's opening session tomorrow morning.

"The U.S. Supreme Court, in finding segregated public schools unconstitutional, has focused attention upon social change which has been in process for a long time," the board said.

"Realization of the constitutional guarantee of citizenship requires the integration of all peoples.

"The program of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers has been and will be to promote the welfare of all children and youth in home, school, church and community. Attainment of these objectives is the responsibility of each state congress.

"Educational integration of different races is proceeding rapidly in some communities — it will require a longer transition period in others."

The 95-member board is headed by the national PTA president, Mrs. Newton P. Leonard of Providence, R.I.

Group Plans South-wide Meeting For Integration

Palmetto Leader N, 7-3-54.

Atlanta— (ANP)-- A South-wide conference to speed compliance with the Supreme court decision outlawing schoo segregation was proposed here last weekend.

Eighteen distinguished southern liberals announnced this project at a meeting of the board of the Southern Conference Educatioal Fund, Inc.

Aubrey Williams, Montgomery, Ala., publisher who heads the fund presided at the gathering which icluded Mrs. Mary McLeod Betthune; John Wesley Dobbs, Rpublican nationnal committeeman from Georgia; Mrs. Lula White, NAA-Houston, Tex., and the Rt. Rev. S. L. Green, president of the council of Bishops, A.M.E. church of Atlanta, Ga.

Plans for the regional assembly call for a meetting early this fall in a southern city, to which will be invited all individuals and organizations "who believe that quick compliance with the ruling is fesable, just, and mutually advantageous to all citizens."

The board pointed out that for the past decade it had devoted its efforts to combatting racial segregation and discrimination. It pledged to continue its endeavor to secure, integration in the public schools, in medical facilities, and in housing, as well as to seek FEPC legislation.

The Southern Conference Educational Fund has an interracial board of 63 professional people and civic leaders residing in 17 Southern and border states and the District of Columbia.

St. Louis High Schools Set To Integrate Sports

Atl. World 7-14-54

ST. LOUIS — (ANP) — When school opens in September, St. Louis high schools will embark on an integrated sports program, it was announced last week.

The St. Louis Public High School league has invited the city's three Negro high schools, Sumner, Vashon and Wasington Technical, to compete in league activities "so far as the present schedules will permit."

Because football and basketball schedules already have been completed these sports will not be included until 1955. According to the league announcement:

"All other sports will be open to full participation by all public high schools immediately.

"Plans further provide that the first semester of the coming school year be used to reorganize the present league to include all public high schools and to work out details of the new organization. By September 1955 the reorganized league should be in full operation."

Sports to be integrated at once include tennis, swimming and cross country races.

N, 7-15-54

ROSWELL, (NEW MEXICO) DAILY RECORD

Segregation End in Artesia Schools Presents Problems

ARTESIA—Segregation in Artesia schools officially ended Monday night with action by the city school board. The board declared the city's only Negro school, Carver Elementary School, as part of the Roselawn School District, and gave the school the official designation as "Roselawn Annex."

Roselawn is a white elementary school in the same school zone as Carver school. The board also declared that Carver school's two Negro teachers would be assigned to the best advantage of the district. The possibility was suggested the two teachers might be assigned to other schools. However, the board took no action on teacher assignments, they are to be made later this summer.

Discussion on the de-segregation lasted over an hour. Attending the open meeting were three members of the Artesia Negro Civic League, President, Mrs. Ruby Young, and League members, Albert Young and the Rev. J. H. Horton. The minister told the board the Artesia Negro group had "every confidence the board would work to the best interests of everyone concerned.

However his group was not satisfied with three classes in each of Carver's two rooms. Horton also said the Negro organization wanted all children to attend school in the particular district they lived, rather than bypass certain schools.

The president of the Artesia Negro Civic League, Mrs. Ruby Young, disclaimed any connection of the Artesia Negro Civic League with the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Hobart Legrone, state president of the NAACP, had threatened petitions preparatory to lawsuits if Artesia's School Board had not brought about de-segregation before school this fall.

Mrs. Young praised the work of the NAACP, but said the people whom she represented had full confidence the segregation problem would be handled in the manner they wanted it done. She said there was a representative of NAACP in Artesia but there was no contact with her group.

Mrs. Young said she was "extremely well pleased" with the action of the board. "It was just what we expected them to do," she said.

Superintendent Vernon Mills said the board could not afford to close Carver school because of the need for classrooms. He said it would be easy to absorb the approximately 35 children in the upper five grades into other schools, but that it would be a problem to add the twenty some students in the first grade.

Members of the board expressed worry that if all the students in the Negro district where Carver is located chose to return there next year it might be construed as segregation. Another problem, facing the board, he said, was assignment of white students to attend Carver school. This would have to be done to fill up the classrooms if they were to be maintained on a one-class-to-a-room schedule instead of the present three.

Roswell, N. Mex.
June 16 - 54.

Mrs M. E. Tilly,
Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Mrs. Tilly -

As per your request will answer U.C.W. has made no statement regarding the Supreme Court decision v Schools. I presume you refer to non-segregation. The eastern part of New Mexico in which Roswell is located has pretty much the same attitude as expressed in enclosed clipping. We are the only section in which there is an appreciable colored population.

There is some resentment toward the N.A.A.C.P. where they seem to be forcing an immediate integration where various adjustments are necessary - but on the whole the public is most co-operative.

In Roswell we have had non-segregation in the High School for several years with apparently good relations.

There is no N. Mex. State Council of Churches to make a statement.

New Mexico has gradually been working toward non-segregation for a number of years. The organized colored people would probably rate a greater confidence if the public was sure N.A.A.C.P. was not Communist inspired.

Sincerely,

Ruth B. Knorr

Mrs. John W. Knorr, Pres.
W.C.W. of N. Mex.
Roswell, N. Mex.
Box 125 a

(Will be interested in discussion reports from Kansas City.)

PANEL TO DISCUSS SCHOOL INTEGRATION

BY ALICE A. DUNNIGAN

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — While five educational experts from Maryland and Washington were discussing before a prominent national Negro organization "techniques in school integration," last week a local white group was charging the D. C. Board of Education with allowing subversives to influence it to immediately begin integration.

The integration panel was sponsored by the Frontiers of America during its 13th annual convention meeting here last week. It was composed of such prominent educators as Dr. Margaret J. Butcher, a member of the D. C. Board of Education; Dr. John H. Foscher, Superintendent of Public Education of Baltimore; Elmer Henderson, director of the American Council on Human Rights; William S. Schmidt, Superintendent of schools in Prince Georges County, Md.; and Furman Tompleton, executive director of the Baltimore Urban League.

SCHOOL BOARD

The subversion charges were made Thursday night by the lily-white Federation of Citizens' Associations. This group claimed that it had called upon the FBI and Congressional investigators to look into the School Board's integration proposals to determine whether they were not the result of influence brought about by subversive individuals and groups rather than by loyal District Citizens.

Mrs. Henry A. Barlett, president of the Federation, said she was not charging those individuals and organizations as being Communists, but "more un-American than Communist."

CURRENT PLANS

In spite of the Federation's announcement that it has retained an attorney to file suit for an injunction against the board and superintendent, to prohibit them from putting into effect current plans for partial integration this fall, the D. C. and Maryland school administrators went right on with their discussion Friday morning on ways and means of carrying out the Supreme Court's de-segregation decision.

Dr. Butcher criticized District school officials for what she called their "gradual" steps toward integration. The officials should make up their minds what they are going to do, she said, make a clean cut statement on their policy.

Integration can be carried out by making four decisive steps, she added. They are:

GIVE AND TAKE

(1) Insist on the child going to the school nearest his home;

(2) Allow no options;

(3) Prohibit "special" cases; and

(4) See that integration works both ways. This should be a give-and-take process, she added, with white children entering what were formerly Negro schools, as well as Negro children entering schools which were formerly white.

Fischer explained that his school system would drop all racial bars in September. He said that Baltimore had never had any rigid school boundaries. That students would be permitted to go to any school they wish, this fall with the exception of cases where buildings are overcrowded.

(Continued on Page 8 Column 3)

Panel To

(Continued From Page One)

Schmidt, who heads the Superintendents' committee on segregation in Maryland, said his group is currently gathering information to be used in the brief which the State's attorney will submit to the Supreme Court in October.

He pointed out that integration presents different problems, mostly financial, in the rural districts of Maryland than in the cities. Concerted communities action is needed, he said, if integration is to work.

Templeton said integration does not mean mixing; it is only "a positive thing in which opportunity is limited only by ability or qualification."

13-POINT PROGRAM

He claimed that the greatest need at this time is a responsible group which will make the facts known to the community.

Henderson outlined the 13-point program which the ACHR has recently published in a brochure on "Integrating Our Schools." This booklet, which has been sent to all local ACHR Councils and other organizations, is important in helping communities effect a rapid transition from segregated to integrated schools. Community groups must take the responsibility of seeing that the Supreme Court's decision is implemented stated Henderson.

Courier Poll: 8-7-54

U. S. Teachers Vote 'Yes' On Integration

FFFF

EDITOR'S NOTE: America knows that school integration is the law of the land! It became so at 12:51 P. M. on the afternoon of Monday, May 17, 1954 . . . when Chief Justice of the Supreme Court Earl Warren read his now famous unanimous opinion, outlawing the practice.*

How do Negro teachers in the South feel? The following poll story gives the "lie" to the Talmadge-Byrnes contention that Negroes . . . and Negro teachers . . . don't want integration.

Alex Rivera, an expert in this field, tells the story "told to him" in this remarkable article.

By A. M. RIVERA JR.

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—The American Teachers Association began its second half-century here last week with a future as bright as the face of a first-grader on his first day in school.

The ATA adopted resolutions urging its membership to comply actively with and seek the immediate implementation of the May 17, U. S. Supreme Court decision.

Replying to the basic question of a Courier three-query questionnaire, "Do you favor integration?" 182 of the 300 assembled teachers participated in the survey. Of those voting, 173 voted in favor of integration, three or 1.6 per cent voted against it and three were undecided whether they wanted it or not.

* * *

Thus 95.1 per cent of the assembled teachers, representing 16,500 teachers from

(Continued on Page 4, Col. 6)

On Int

(Continued from Page 1)

seventeen Southern and border states, made false the prosegregationists' assertion that Negroes don't want integrated schools.

Response to the second question, "Do you feel that the U. S. Supreme Court's decision jeopardizes the Negro teacher's job," was both significant and revealing. Of the 182 who filled out the questionnaire, four did not answer this question, seven were undecided and ten were of the opinion that the decision did jeopardize the jobs of the Negro teacher. Contrary to the sputterings of Southern politicians 161 or 85.5 per cent of the voting teachers expressed no concern about prospective loss of jobs in the face of impending integration.

In reply to the third question, "Do you think that Negro children will be unhappy in integrated schools?" It was shown that whereas 82.4 per cent of the respondents felt that Negro children would not be unhappy in schools with white children, the feeling was that the bigger adjustment would have to be made at the high school level. This is believed to reflect the result of parental indoctrination and feelings about peer culture.

* * *

MRS. LILLIAN R. JOHNSON, of Clarksdale, Miss., newly elected president of the ATA, said in an interview, "Competent Negro teachers will find jobs where school systems are integrated . . . however, Negro teachers place the welfare of colored people above their jobs."

Quite mindful that practical considerations influence that in which a man believes and that for which a man stands, Mrs. Johnson expressed the belief that "If our teachers were faced with the choice of losing jobs in integrated systems they would place the advancement of the race above their self-interest."

Sensing the fact that perhaps the greatest human story of a race of people is mixed up in the varying and contradictory reports that are being published about the attitude of Negroes toward this threshold of a new and different life, the Courier is interested in learning the true feeling of a representative cross-section of Negroes.

There are many questions that in the past few weeks have been passed

3:00 P. M.
FOR A ONE SHOW
BLUES
BALLADS BOOGIE
BOUNCE
BOP and BARREL-
HOUSE

advancement of the race above their self-interest."

Sensing the fact that perhaps the greatest human story of a race of people is mixed up in the varying and contradictory reports that are being published about the attitude of Negroes toward this threshold of a new and different life, the Courier is interested in learning the true feeling of a representative cross-section of Negroes.

There are many questions that in the past few weeks have been passed across the fence by neighbors, by workmen on their jobs, in taverns, on street cars and on street corners, civic clubs, by families around the dinner table, in churches and by just plain people across the width and breadth of this nation.

* * *

MOST OFTEN asked questions, however, involve: (1) the student, and (2) the teacher. Politicians declared even before the decision was announced that the Negro wanted to go to "his own school" and that the "Negro teacher does not want integration," and further that "Negro teachers will lose their jobs in an integrated system."

The Courier prepared a questionnaire which did not require the respondent to give his name, but required him to give his state and such pertinent information which would give educational researchers an insight into factors which might be influential in making a decision.

The poll, which was tacitly approved by the ATA, was not officially sanctioned by the group, but was conducted independently by the Courier.

Some of the participants in the poll, who took time to enlarge upon their views, expressed the general feeling that a period of adjustment will be necessary. One woman answered, "Children will not be unhappy unless the parents or teachers make

* * *

State .....

Grade level of teaching: 1-2-3-4-5-6-7-8. High school, 1-2-3-4.
Professional degree: RB, BS, MA, above.
Age range: (20-30), (31-40), (41-50), above.

Sex ..... Married ..... Single ..... Number of children ..... Ages .....

(1) DO YOU FAVOR INTEGRATION? Yes ..... No ..... Uncertain .....

(2) DO YOU FEEL that the U. S. Supreme Court's decision jeopardizes the Negro teacher's job? Yes ..... No .....

(3) DO YOU FEEL that Negro children will feel unhappy in schools with white children? Yes ..... No ..... Uncertain .....

Elementary? Yes ..... No ..... Uncertain .....

High school? Yes ..... No ..... Uncertain .....

IF YOU are a school teacher . . . and want to participate in the nation-wide poll now being conducted by the Courier . . . kindly fill out the blank printed above, and mail IMMEDIATELY to Poll Editor, the Courier, Box 1828, Pittsburgh, Pa.

IF YOU sign your name, the signature will be kept in strictest confidence. Your name is our sacred trust . . . and we will not violate your confidence in us!

Atl. Wor H 8-8-54

REVIEWING THE NEWS

BY WILLIAM GORDON

Managing Editor, Atlanta Daily World

The Negro Teacher And Integration

The telephone rang and the voice at the other end of the line echoed in desperation:

"What about the Negro teachers and the Supreme Court decision? Will we lose our jobs when integration becomes a reality?

There was a pause and I could hear the person at the other end of the line doing a bit of throat-clearing. There was also a quaver in the voice as the person tried to calm the emotions.

"Well, I just wanted to know," the voice said and quietly hung up the receiver.

It was obvious that the person was frightened . . . frightened because she thought her job was at stake with this new ruling being in effect. No doubt, she had been told all along that Negro teachers should work to maintain a dual school system, because economically, they would be the first to feel the adverse affects.

What many teachers don't know is that this is only one side of the story and the wrong side at that. Economically, the Negro teacher will not be hurt through integration. Opponents to integration would like for it to happen this way, and usually they are the ones who control the channels of propaganda. And one has only to observe some of our main networks of communications to see how effective this can be.

What teachers should do is sit down and trace a little of the history they have been studying and teaching and draw their own conclusions.

First of all, the American populaiton is definitely on the increase. The National Association of Manufacturers predicts that by 1975 our population will have jumped to near two hundred million souls. This figure represents a lot of babies.

These babies will need homes, clothes, food and naturally school buildings and teachers. There will be millions of jobs for qualified people in the fields of their choice. But the effects of social change often have deeper implications and that which affects the present period is not much different from any other in our history. Deep-rooted factions always argue that changes bring about instability, the consequences of which disturb the status of employment.

The same story was told at the advent of the automobile. The blacksmith, the stable boys and innkeepers were disturbed by the coming of the horseless carriage, believing that their skills would be replaced by auto and electrical mechanics. That may have been true, but today we have far more people employed, making automobiles, digging the iron ore out of the ground, running service stations and managing food shops than perhaps all the industries combined during this period.

There was also a howl when the tractor came on the scene and subsequently the cotton picker. What would the poor Negro farm hands do in the wake of all this mechanization? The answer is clear. Since 1940 more than a million Negroes have migrated from the farms to the cities. And they have not been idle in doing so. They have acquired jobs. Their income and living standards have been higher than at any other time in history of the country.

The tractor and the cotton picker emancipated the Negro farm hand. And the result has been good. Instead of following the line of the shiftless underpaid farm hand, the Negro is gradually becoming a skilled workman with good pay, better housing and better educational opportunities for his children.

For the Negro teacher, there is no reason for fear. Like the Negro farm hand, the future points to better economic status for all and fuller integration into industry at large. For every Negro teacher replaced by integration there will be three jobs available in industry. With the going of segregation goes a disease . . . a disease which has long plagued its victims with the stigma of second-class methods and second-class training. Neither has any place in a democratic society.

you can get one.

SCHOOL ANTI-BIAS MOVE

New Rochelle High Asks Four From South to Visit It

10-13-54 N1

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., Oct. 11—Four Southern high schools with nonsegregation problems were invited today by the New Rochelle High School to send students here to see how an integrated school operates.

Twenty per cent of the 1,600 students at New Rochelle High are Negroes, according to the principal, Willis Thomson.

The local students would contribute funds and conduct cake sales to pay for transportation of the guests from the South and that sixty-five families had volunteered to provide rooms and meals, he said this evening. The visitors, four from each school, were urged to stay for a week.

Invitations were sent to the Anacostia and the Eastern High Schools of Washington, the Southern High School of Baltimore and the Milford (Del.) High School. The letters were signed by Mr. Thomson and Robinson Brown, president of the Undergraduates' General Organization.

SOUTHWEST

WASH TIMES 10/19/54 N1

SOUTHERN PUPILS VISIT THE NORTH

Students From Washington, Baltimore See Integrated School in New York

NEW ROCHELLE, N.Y., Oct. 18 (AP)—Six Washington (D.C.) and four Baltimore white high school students attended a nonsegregated school today to see for themselves how it works.

Their hectic, confusing day, interlarded with news conferences, included a visit to a Negro teacher's classroom.

The Baltimore group arrived yesterday to spend the rest of the week; the Washingtonians flew in this morning and must leave Thursday to take an exam back home.

All are guests of families whose children attend New Rochelle High.

The Baltimore pupils opened the day by blaming professional agitators for the demonstrations against integration at their school, Southern High.

Robert E. Rodgers, a 23-year-old veteran of the Korean War, called the demonstrations "subversive" and said they were "too well organized" and "planned for mass confusion" to have been staged by students themselves.

"I have seen such agitation in Japan but I never believed it could happen in America," he said.

His schoolmates, Carole Peters, 16; Betty Manalansan, 18, and Wayne Woolford, 17, told of "false rumors" and "vicious lies" that spread uncertainty among students and parents alike.

All turned out to be untrue, they said.

Miss Peters said she believed "professional rioters" aided by grownups who have no children in the school turned a peaceful month of successful integration into a series of disturbances.

The Washington visitors are Richard Caulk and Alan Cross, of McKinley High; Betty Harris and Lack Linden, of Anacostia, and Ann Hooten and Robert Hunt, of Eastern.

Miss Harris wanted to find out how New Rochelle managed to make its integration program work.

There never was any "ntegration," Thomson explained, because there never was any segregation in the school.

The local high school keeps no racial data on its students, but about a quarte rof its 1,611 pupils are estimated to be Negroes.

Segregated School In N. J. Closes

Atl. World 1/21/55

TRENTON, N. J.—(SNS)— The state of New Jersey Friday ordered the closing of the all-Negro State Manual Training and Industrial School for Youths at Bordentown because it was unable to induce white students to enroll at the institution.

Gov. Robert B. Mayner made the announcement on behalf of the State Board of Education. The board declared that the failure of white students to enroll there makes the school a violation of the spirit of the constitutional provision against segregation.

As a direct result of the closing, 500 pupils will be transferred to other New Jersey schools in nearby counties, and the faculty of 60 will be dismissed. Many of the pupils will have to travel 20 or 30 miles daily to continue their studies.

Defending the board's action, Gov. Meyner said "despite efforts to integrate pupils at the school there has in fact remained a separation of Negro children." Therefore, "the institution is a segregated school in its practical operation," he added.

The Governor pointed out that the Supreme Court had emphasized that such separation tends to retard the development of the children. Moreover, it deprives them of some of the benefits that could be received in an integrated system.

Gov. Meyner said the Bordentown school is the only segregated public institution in the state. The State Board of Education's contemplated action would be sought from the legislature.

Agricultural Agent, W...

Slaps Talmadge

Ike Names Ga. Negro To Confab On Education

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA)—President Eisenhower Thursday slapped directly at Governor Herman Talmadge of Georgia by appointing Lorimer D. Milton of Atlanta to the Committee for the White House Conference on Education. Mr. Milton is president of the Citizens Trust Company of Atlanta and a member of the Board of Trustees of Howard University.

The question of the participation of colored persons in the White House Conference on Education was raised when Dr. Samuel M. Brownell, United States Commissioner of Education, addressed the Conference of Land-Grant College Presidents in October.

Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atlanta University, and other college presidents reminded Mr. Brownell that Talmadge in 1951 had refused to name any colored persons as delegates from Georgia to a White House conference on youth and President Truman had to intervene to have colored persons from Georgia attend the conference.

Dr. Brownell assured the land-grant college president that colored educators and laymen would participate in the White House Conference on Education, to be held in 1955, and apparently the first move toward that end was made with the appointment of Mr. Milton as one of the thirty-three persons who comprise the full committee.

The conference will "consider and report to the President on significant and pressing problems in the field of education."

In letters to the governors of all states and territories, President Eisenhower has stressed that "the primary responsibility for meeting these problems lie with the states and local communities" and that "The Federal Goverrment should strengthen and not interfere with state administration of education.

Each state will hold its own conference on education prior to the White House conference to discuss its own problems, make appropriate recommendations, and name delegates to the White House conference.

Congress appropiated $700,000 to assist the states in holding these conferences. The share allotted to Georgia is $14,456.

Buy U. S. Saving Bonds

Southern Whites Tell How Negroes Entered Schools

Ohio Union World 12/10/54

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — (ANP) — Three white Southern educators told a conference here last week how Negroes were admitted to their respective schools.

The unrevealed story of how Negroes were first admitted to the University of Louisville, University of Kentucky and Louisiana State University was given to two separate conferences of educators meeting here.

President Troy H. Middleton, Louisiana State University and President Phillip Davidson, University of Louisville told their stories to the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

SECONDARY SCHOOLS

Dr. Frank Dickey, dean, University of Kentucky School of Education, told of his school's progress to the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

"This was our approach—to oppose with dignity (their admittance) in the courts," Middleton said. "You can well understand the reluctance in that part of the country to admit Negroes to a white institution."

He also told the group that not all LSU schools are open to Negroes.

"We will continue to admit them by court order only, at least for the time being."

92 NEGRO STUDENTS

However, he admitted that 368 Negroes have been admitted to the school since 1950. Last summer 232 Negroes, mostly teachers in Louisiana public schools—attended the graduate summer school. The school now has 92 Negro students in graduate schools.

The only Negro ever admitted as an undergraduate entered in September, 1953, after a court fight. The decision, Middleton said, was overthrown by a higher court on a technicality and the student went elsewhere.

In sharp contrast to Middleton's story was that of President Davidson. He told how all U of L schools and divisions were voluntarily opened to Negroes in 1951. This came after an amendment to the Day law which prohibited Negroes from attending the same classroom.

(Continued On Page Eight)

Southern Whites

(Continued From Page One)

FIRST ADMITTED

"We are not trying to promote racial equality, or social reform, but we are trying to operate a first-class educational institution in every way," he declared.

Immediately after Negro students were first admitted, "a lot of white students leaned over backwards to have a Negro student on every committee, and things of that sort," he observed.

Now, student committees are picked on the basis of "who's the best man for the job," he said.

Davidson admitted he has been "troubled" by the fact that integration of the old Louisville Municipal College (Negro) with the U of L meant "we were unable to take on many able people" who formerly taught at the Negro institution.

He said there are at least 200 Negroes in the school but he was unable to tell the exact number since no record was kept of the number in attendance. He concluded:

TREAT FATAL

SAN PEDRO, Cal. — As a special favor to his four-year-old sister, Mary Lou, Joseph Del Fuente, 8, took the little girl along to play in a cave the neighborhood boys had dug. The cave roof collapsed and Mary Lou was buried alive. Joseph dug frantically and finally dug the little out, but a Fire Department rescue squad could not survive her.

N,

NYT

24, 1954. 15

12-24-L54

RACIAL UNITY SET FOR CITY SCHOOLS

Board to Create Commission for a Study to Develop an 'Integrated' System

PRAISED BY NEGRO CRITIC

3 Supervisory Executives Are Elected, but Choice of Vice President Is Put Off

The Board of Education authorized yesterday the creation of a special commission to examine the racial composition of the city's schools. The purpose is to provide "effective democratic education for all of the children."

Among the commission's specific responsibilities will be the problem of "segregated schools" in some sections of the city and the development of "racially integrated" schools. The commission will be composed of representatives of the school board, the school staff and the community.

The action was taken at the school board's last meeting of the year, a meeting noteworthy not only for what happened but also for what did not happen.

The board unanimously elected two associate superintendents and an assistant superintendent—items on which action had been postponed since June.

But it delayed the election of a new vice president and withdrew—until the next meeting—an item giving the position of the Corporation Counsel on whether the board could legally compel employes who are former Communists to identify former party associates.

On Wednesday the item dealing with the election of a new president was dropped from the meeting calendar after Arthur Levitt said he would continue as president for a little while longer. He must resign his membership on the board before the end of the year to become State Controller.

Objectives of the Inquiry

In a statement on the special commission the board took note of last spring's Supreme Court decision declaring segregation in the schools to be unconstitutional, and asserted:

"In seeking to provide effective democratic education for all employes who are former Communists to identify former party associates.

On Wednesday the item dealing with the election of a new president was dropped from the meeting calendar after Arthur Levitt said he would continue as president for a little while longer. He must resign his membership on the board before the end of the year to become State Controller.

Objectives of the Inquiry

In a statement on the special commission the board took note of last spring's Supreme Court decision declaring segregation in the schools to be unconstitutional, and asserted:

"In seeking to provide effective democratic education for all of the children of this city, the members of the board * * * are faced with many real obstacles in the form of complex social and community problems.

"Among these problems are the existence of residential segregation, which leads to schools predominantly of one race on the elementary and junior high school levels. In addition, prevailing racial attitudes and misinformation of some white and Negro parents reflect outworn patterns of segregation as well as limited educational and vocational horizons which make it difficult for them to accept school procedures contrary to their attitudes."

The commission, the board said, will be asked to recommend "whatever further action is necessary to come closer to the ideal, viz., the racially integrated school." Facts will be obtained from community groups, such as parent-teacher organizations.

Hailed by Negro Complainant

The board's action drew praise from Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, a Negro psychologist, who last summer accused the school system of permitting "Jim Crow" practices in some schools. His charges prompted the board at that time to ask the Public Education Association to make an independent study of the situation. That study is still under way. Mr. Levitt said that the commission would cover a broader field.

The two new associate superintendents are John F. Conroy and Edward J. Bernath, who will fill the respective vacancies created by the death of George F. Piggott Jr., and the retirement of Dr. Elias Lieberman. Mr. Conroy has served for six years as administrative assistant to the Superintendent of Schools and Mr. Bernath has been an assistant superintendent in charge of school districts in Manhattan.

Philip Becker was chosen assistant superintendent. A high school principal, he will take the post made vacant by the retirement of Morris Siegel.

Tributes to Mr. Levitt were expressed by Charles H. Silver and Charles J. Bensley, who are regarded as the leading candidates for the presidency of the board, and by Dr. William Jansen, Superintendent of Schools.

The board's next meeting will be Jan. 13.

AIN — Memorial honoring the Seventh R nue in move to make way for new walk

Says Carlsbad Is Dedicated to Non-Segregation

CARLSBAD (AP)—"We are dedicated to a non-segregated policy in the Carlsbad schools," Tom Hansen, new city school superintendent, said today as a controversy boiled anew over plans by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to end all racial segregation in New Mexico schools by September.

Hansen was reached for comment at New Mexico A&M College where he is taking summer graduate work.

Non-segregation, Hansen said, has been a "long range policy" of the Carlsbad board of education, a "voluntary program planned many years ago." He estimated the phased policy is about "three-fourths completed." He said non-segregation has not reached the elementary level yet.

Based on the availability of classrooms and personnel, the phased de-segregation policy in Carlsbad will continue at its present pace, Hansen said.

Clovis Seeks to Comply with Law On Segregation

CLOVIS (AP)— The Clovis municipal school board has taken steps to comply with the federal law which ends segregation in the schools, Travis Stovall, superintendent, has stated.

Clovis school district zoning was completed last week which permits Negro children to attend Clovis junior and senior high schools, Stovall said.

All junior and senior high school students in the Clovis school district will now attend the local junior and senior high schools, he explained. Formerly Negro children attended Lincoln - Jackson school.

Negro children of elementary school age will have the choice of attending either Lincoln-Jackson Negro or La Casita grade school. Both schools are located in the zone in which most of Clovis' Negro population live.

"TRY SALLY ANN BREAD"
7-8t2c

Government Submits Five-Point Desegregation Plan To Court

Supreme Court To Maintain Jurisdiction

BY DARRELL GARWOOD

WASHINGTON — (INS) — The government urged the Supreme Court Wednesday to adopt a five point program to bring about desegregation in the public schools "at the earliest practicable date."

A brief submitted by Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr., contained little tract of the decentralized plan that President Eisenhower said Tuesday was under consideration for consolidating white and Negro schools.

Brownell recommended that the High Court retain jurisdiction for the purpose of issuing further orders if necessary, after taking

(Continued on Page 7 Column 6)

"There are doctors too who have no interest in learning beyond meeting the qualifications for getting a practitioner's license."

Rev. Branch said many able students go into medicine. He asked why are there not more Drews, Wrights, Hintons, Murays?

The professor of religion charged that a proper regard for learning and things of the mind is necessary both for humanity and to democracy. He added that though Thanksgiving and freedom are bound up together, no democracy is possible without them.

Supreme Court

(Continued From Page One)

these steps:

1. By decree of the Supreme Court, the lower courts would require the Boards of Education in the five test cases to submit within 90 days "a plan for ending, as soon as feasible, racial segregation in public schools subject to their authority and control."

2. Unless a satisfactory plan is submitted to and approved by the lower courts, "it shall forewith enter appropriate orders, by way of injunctions or otherwise," directing admission of the Negro plaintiffs "and other children similarly situated" to non-segregated public schools at the beginning of the next school term.

LOWER COURT HEARINGS

3. The lower courts would be directed to hold hearings on whether the plans submitted provide for transition to nonsegregated schools "as expeditiously as the circumstances permit."

Boards asking for a delay would have "the burden of proof on the question of whether, and how long, an interval of time was necessary to carry out full desegregation."

4. During any periods of time allowed for the transition, the defendant Boards of Education would be required to "submit detailed periodic reports showing the progress made in any segregation."

5. The lower courts would be authorized to "enter such further orders as may be required from time to time in order to insure against unnecessary delay in the execution of the program."

In addition, the lower courts would be required to submit reports to the Supreme Court at specified intervals "showing in detail the actions taken to bring about compliance with the requirements of the Constitution." The Supreme Court could issue "such further orders, if any, as may become necessary for carrying out its mandate."

Southeast Empire

4-F The Atlanta Journal AND CONSTITUTION SUNDAY, JUNE 6, 1954

Top Mississippi Officials Plan Way to Bypass Schools Ruling

Ed-Miss-54

Leaders Vow Duel System To Continue on Some Level

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau Chief, Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., June 5—Top state officials are blueprinting plans Mississippi will use in an effort to bypass the United States Supreme Court decision banning segregation in public schools.

They insist even though the plans fail to meet the test, Mississippi's dual system "will continue" on some level.

Chief architect in the program drafting is Chief Justice Harvey McGeHee of the Mississippi Supreme Court. He drew the assignment from a 25-member Educational Legal Advisory Committee setup at the 1954 legislative session for the purpose of devising means of meeting the then anticipated adverse court ruling.

The committee, headed by Gov. Hugh White, met this week for its organization. As vice chairman, it elected House Speaker Walter Sillers of Bolivar County, an advocate of public education abolition, if that is necessary to prevent mixing the races in the classrooms.

Would Assign Pupils

Secretary of the group is Repr. Ney Gore of Quitman County, author of a 1954 law for "assignment" of students which is expected to serve as a legal buffer for years against a breakdown in school segregation. The Gore Act requires students to apply for admission to school, and then authorizes school boards to "assign" them on a basis of the general welfare, social and otherwise.

Taking the lead in formulation of the committee course was Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin of Laurel, opponent of U.S. Sen. James O. Eastland in the summer campaign. He insisted that the committee state definitely its ac- [illegible] will be eye-single to main-er Sillers said segregation can not be maintained if the constitutional provision for public education remains in effect. However, he said that might be accomplished through use of the state's police powers in enforcing segregation.

Local Option

Attorney General J. P. Coleman voiced opposition to state level abolition of public education. He favors a local option statute to permit a county or municipal separate school district to vote on whether to continue public schools and its use as a "threat" in event Negroes seek integration.

Either plan would leave the way open for the legislature to vote funds directly to the students for attendance at private schools.

At the 1954 legislative session, Speaker Sillers gained House adoption of a proposed amendment which would have authorized the legislature to abolish public education. It was defeated in the Senate where leaders termed it "premature" in advance of the court's ruling.

MISSISSIPPI

Governor White, one of those branding the Sillers proposal "premature," told the committee "we are now faced with one of our most serious problems" which finds "all of us in the same boat."

Voluntary Approach

Although he heads the constitutional amendment drafting subCommittee, Chief Justice McGeHee feels that the problem can be solved through "voluntary" agreements with Negro leaders. He said 95 per cent of the Negroes favor continuance of segregation, provided their schools are equalized with the whites.

With no assurance as to how long that 95 per cent will favor segregation, and whether the chief justice's estimate is too high, state officials have little hope that the legislature will vote funds for new Negro buildings and then face a deluge of suits attacking the separate but equal operations.

Chief Justice McGeHee also feels that when "it dawns" on Negroes that integration would almost "completely eliminate the Negro teaching profession," they will not seek a change. He said that would come about by the all-white school boards refusing to hire Negro teachers for mixed classes.

Education - Miss - 56

drafting is Chief Justice Harvey McGeHee of the Mississippi Supreme Court. He drew the assignment from a 25-member Educational Legal Advisory Committee setup at the 1954 legislative session for the purpose of devising means of meeting the then anticipated adverse court ruling.

The committee, headed by Gov. Hugh White, met this week for its organization. As vice chairman, it elected House Speaker Walter Sillers of Bolivar County, an advocate of public education abolition, if that is necessary to prevent mixing the races in the classrooms.

Would Assign Pupils

Secretary of the group is Repr. Ney Gore of Quitman County, author of a 1954 law for "assignment" of students which is expected to serve as a legal buffer for years against a breakdown in school segregation. The Gore Act requires students to apply for admission to school, and then authorizes school boards to "assign" them on a basis of the general welfare, social and otherwise.

Taking the lead in formulation of the committee course was Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin of Laurel, opponent of U.S. Sen. James O. Eastland in the summer campaign. He insisted that the committee state definitely its actions will be eye single to maintenance of segregation, the Supreme Court decision notwithstanding.

A terse, but definite, one sentence statement of policy was unanimously adopted by the group of state officials, legislators, constitutional lawyers, school authorities and business leaders, It states:

"The committee conceives its duty to be to devise the means and methods by which separate schools for the races shall be maintained in this state and to submit such plan to the legislature for its action thereon."

With that course charted, the committee then set up sub-groups to work the various angles. However, it instructed the "constitutional amendment" group immediately to draft proposed changes and have them ready for full committee action June 22.

Special Election

At that time, Governor White is to decide just how soon he will call a special legislative session to consider the proposals for submission to the voters for ratification. To gain adoption of whatever amendments are adopted, the plan is to have them voted on in a special election when no other issues are on the ballot.

That was decided since their inclusion on the November general election ticket could see them gain a majority vote of those voting on them, yet lack a majority of those voting on all issues on the ballot. Failure to vote on an amendment, while checking off other items, such as candidates for office, is a vote against.

A major difference of opinion, however, was registered among the members on the public education abolition proposal. Speaker [illegible] state's police powers in enforcing segregation.

Local Option

Attorney General J. P. Coleman voiced opposition to state level abolition of public education. He favors a local option statute to permit a county or municipal separate school district to vote on whether to continue public schools and its use as a "threat" in event Negroes seek integration.

Either plan would leave the way open for the legislature to vote funds directly to the students for attendance at private schools.

At the 1954 legislative session, Speaker Sillers gained House adoption of a proposed amendment which would have authorized the legislature to abolish public education. It was defeated in the Senate where leaders termed it "premature" in advance of the court's ruling.

MISSISSIPPI

Governor White, one of those branding the Sillers proposal "premature," told the committee "we are now faced with one of our most serious problems" which finds "all of us in the same boat."

Voluntary Approach

Although he heads the constitutional amendment drafting subCommittee, Chief Justice McGeHee feels that the problem can be solved through "voluntary" agreements with Negro [illegible] almost completely eliminate the Negro teaching profession," they will not seek a change. He said that would come about by the all-white school boards refusing to hire Negro teachers for mixed classes.

Education - Miss - 56

Education
Mississippi

Under Capitol Dome

Students Hurl Editorial Broadsides at Those Who Advocate Censorship of College Speakers, Like Rev. Alvin Kershaw

By PHIL STROUPE
Daily News Staff Writer

Proponents of academic freedom and expression of thought hurled back editorial broadsides this week to legislators who advocate censorship of college speakers.

Student publications at the University of Mississippi, Mississippi State College and Mississippi Southern College declared their "intelligence has been insulted" by a move to cancel a scheduled speaking engagement of an Ohio Episcopal minister, the Rev. Alvin Kershaw.

The Rev. Mr. Kershaw was invited to address Ole Miss students at Religious Emphasis Week on the Oxford campus next February. The invitation was extended "early last summer" before Kershaw exhibited his amazing knowledge of modern jazz music to win $32,000 on the fabulous television quiz show, "The $64,000 Question."

After Kershaw's big winnings, he declared he would contribute part of the money to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Rep. Jimmy Morrow of Rankin county urged that Kershaw's speaking engagement be cancelled and that he be publicly rebuked for his intention to support the NAACP.

Sen.-elect Lamar Moss of Smith and Rankin counties joined Morrow in opposition to Kershaw's visit. Moss declared in a letter to University Chancellor John D. Williams:

"Inviting one into our midst who is openly supporting the NAACP is committing suicide with our own cause."

"The Mississippian," student publication at the University, took issue with Morrow's objection and urged that Kershaw be permitted to fill the speaking engagement.

"The Reflector," publication at Mississippi State College, voiced its support of Kershaw's appearance in an editorial in the Nov. 15 issue.

Quoting from the famed France writer Voltaire, the two student newspapers declared:

"I may disagree with what you say, but I will defend to death your right to say it."

The Reflector wrote: "We agree with the Mississippian. Certainly it would be un-American and un-Christian to snatch the rug out from under the Rev. Mr. Kershaw because he happens to be hoodwinked by the NAACP."

In further defense of the Ole Miss student body, the "Reflector" editorial said, "Ole Miss students are intelligent men and women who can do their own thinking. Nothing the Rev. Kershaw could say is going to dupe them or plant radical ideas in their minds . . . . The demands that the minister's invitation be revoked for fear he'll warp their thinking are something of an insult to the intelligence of Ole Miss students."

James Ellis, editor of the "Student Printz" at Mississippi Southern, said in a telephone interview:

"We do not agree with the Rev. Mr. Kershaw's support of the NAACP but we believe that his speech should not be canceled because some disagree with his views."

Removal of Mississippi institutions of higher learning from the era of political control during the Bilbo administration was followed by the creation of the Board of Trustees as a constitutional board in 1944.

It took education out of politics, or politics out of education.

But that same board of trustees last February adopted a resolution requiring college presidents to "investigate" speakers before they are invited to address the student bodies of the various state institutions.

Did that take freedom of academic expression out of college curricula?

On the minutes of the Board of Trustees of Institutions of Higher Learning is the resolution proposed by Martin Miller of Meridian and seconded by Tom Tubb of West Point. It was adopted and is now what Dr. E. R. Jobe, executive secretary of the board, called "the formal policy of the board."

The resolution states: "All speakers invited to the campus of any of the State Institutions of Higher Learning must first be investigated and approved by the head of the institution involved, and when invited the names of such speakers must be filed with the executive secretary of the board of trustees."

A Senate Concurrent Resolution, adopted by the Special Session of the Mississippi Legislature on March 1, 1955, also called for "careful investigation." of speakers who are members of organizations dedicated to the overthrow of the spirit and intent of the laws of the State of Mississippi.

Such speakers, the Senate resolution said, should not be invited to state-supported institutions, and governing authorities of institutions were requested to "apprise themselves of the concensus of the legislature" on that matter.

College presidents are complying with the resolution adopted by the board of trustees, Dr. Jobe said.

Miller said in Jackson Thursday that the Rev. Mr. Kershaw's background was investigated after he had been recommended as a speaker by a committee of 175 Ole Miss students.

The Student Senate at Ole Miss Friday urged Chancellor Williams not to cancel the scheduled speech of the Ohio minister. He is a graduate of the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn., and has a wide appeal as a public speaker because of the dramatic manner in which he portrays religion.

Miller said, "If the preacher comes he will speak on religion, not segregation," but Miller said he did not know what would come of the incident.

Chancellor Williams was out of the state on an education mission to Europe for the U. S. State Department, and his assistant, Dean W. Alton Bryant, who was in Jackson Thursday for the meeting of college trustees, declared simply, "The University has no comment on the matter at this time."

Freedom of thought and expression is a constitutional right which if tampered with may become a right without a constitutional guarantee.

7/27/55

Clip!

THE CHATTANOOG

SEGREGATION HIT IN JACKSON, MISS.

Petitions to School Board There, in Natchez Urge Integration Start

JACKSON, Miss., July 26 (AP)—A petition signed by 42 Negro parents asking an immediate end to public segregation in Jackson "started something they will never finish," a Citizens Council spokesman declared.

Negro parents petitioned Jackson and Natchez school boards today. They asked the boards to obey the U.S. Supreme Court ruling that segregation in public schools is unconstitutional.

Ellis Wright, president of the Jackson Citizens Council, said the goal of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is eventual intermarriage with whites.

"If the NAACP thinks that we have the slightest idea of surrendering our Southland to a mulatto race, the NAACP had better think again," Wright declared.

"For this reason alone, if for no other and there are many, we now tell the NAACP that they have started something they will never finish."

The Citizens Councils were organized to keep segregation in all walks of life.

Some 100 parents signed the petition received by the Natchez school board.

In Jackson, 42 parents signed the petition mailed today to the Jackson school board. Another 10 parents filed a similar petition with the Hinds County school board, said he received the petition and the board will not take action on it until its Aug. 11 regular meeting.

Kirby Walker, superintendent of Jackson schools, said his group will "just bide our time" until the petition is received.

The three petitions followed the form of the Vicksburg petition filed last week.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People expects the school boards to reject the petitions. The Vicksburg school board ignored its petition.

The petitions apparently will form the foundation for legal action.

Atlanta Constitution 9/29/55

2 Reportedly Pushing Integration Asked To Leave Mississippi County

TCHULA, Miss., Sept. 28 (AP)—An angry mass meeting of white men last night asked two white men to leave Holmes County because of alleged advocation of racial integration.

The two men are Dr. D. R. Minter and E. C. Cox. They are directors of a co-operative farm in Providence community and do medical and missionary work among the Negroes.

The mass meeting, which overflowed from the Tchula High School gymnasium, passed a resolution asking Dr. Minter and Cox to move "in the best interests of the county."

J. P. Love, newly elected member of the state House of Representatives, who presided at the four-hour mass meeting, said a "representative group of citizens" wanted to investigate reports that Dr. Minter and Cox had been teaching theories against the Southern "way of life."

Dr. Minter and Cox said they have no immediate plans of moving.

The main "evidence" produced at the rally was a two-hour tape recording of seven Negroes. Four were arrested last week for allegedly talking obscenely before a teen-aged white girl.

In the tape recording, the Negroes reportedly told of the two races swimming together at the co-operative farm established in 1936 and Dr. Minter and Cox preaching racial integration at Sunday meetings for whites and Negroes.

The Negroes apparently do not live in Providence community, seven miles from Tchula.

Love said he did not know who made the tape recording but it was done by "a representative group" from the county.

Dr. Minter and Cox, who attended the protest meeting against them, denied they preached racial integration.

Both agreed their personal opinions on racial relations don't agree with opinions of most Holmes County white citizens. Both added they generally keep their opinions to themselves.

At the rally which asked them to leave, Dr. Minter said today in a telephone interview, he and Cox told the meeting:

". . . I categorically denied that mixed swimming, to my knowledge, had ever taken place at Providence. That is the truth.

"I also stated that I had not, in the past or present, ever advocated integration of the schools of Holmes County."

Cox commented: "I challenge anyone to prove that I have ever said Negroes should go to white schools. I am a Southerner and I know the situation.

"Despite the fact that I differ with people on some points, I try to do my work and follow the customs of the segregated system."

Intermediate (1955)

Miss. Ed Chattanooga 1956

, TENN., TUESDAY, JA

ABSENTEES BLOCK MISSISSIPPI BILLS

Segregation Action Put Off Until the Return of Legislative Chiefs

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 23 (AP)—Mississippi's House, hamstrung by the absence of legislative leaders, today postponed action on major segregation bills and adjourned quickly.

In the House, Rep. Joe Hopkins of Coahoma County, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, asked postponement of the five bills until the leaders return.

The Senate, though lacking segregation bills on its calendar, adjourned after 20 minutes.

Gov. J. P. Coleman, House Speaker Walter Sillers of Bolivar County and Senate President Pro Tempore Earl Evans of Canton left early today for Richmond, Va., and a governors' conference on segregation.

The conference was called by Virginia Gov. Thomas Stanley to discuss segregation problems. He called those governors whose legislatures are in regular session. They included Coleman, Stanley, Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia and Gov. George Bell Timmerman of South Carolina.

Mississippi's delegation, all members of the Legal Education Advisory Committee (LEAC), were scheduled to return "as quickly as possible." But Coleman said he was prepared to stay as long as necessary.

The LEAC proposed several prosegregation bills to the 1956 Legislature.

One, a bill to strengthen libel and slander laws, was returned to the House Judiciary Committee for additional study.

The Senate adopted a House concurrent resolution commending Sen. James Eastland (D-Miss) for his fight against communism and un-American activity.

The Senate adjourned until 10 a.m. (CST) tomorrow.

Lawmakers voted to ask Miss America of 1956, Miss Sharon Kay Ritchie of Denver, Colo., to address the House at 11 a.m. tomorrow.

Ed. Miss (1956)

Gov. Coleman Defies U.S. to Force Racial Integration in Miss.

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 21—Mississippi added two new steel-strong supports this week to its legal-girded foundation for the preservation of racial segregation at all levels.

One was the inauguration of a new governor on a "no-budge" position of segregation, yet tempered with an assurance of "sympathetic consideration to the problems" of "loyal Negroes unwilling to be made the victims of propaganda from professional agitators."

The other was the introduction of bills in the current general assembly to give Gov. J. P. Coleman new supporting laws to back his declaration that "the full weight of the government will unfailingly be used to the end that Mississippi will be a state of law and not violence."

Gov. Coleman challenged the "loyal" Negroes to accept this opportunity with an assurance "it will mean better days for all of us."

"If you reject it," he warned, "the responsibility is yours."

The 42-year-old former Choctaw County "plowboy," who during the past five years has served as Mississippi's attorney general, reminded Negroes that "there cannot be found one single instance where a government has forced one race against its will to integrate with another."

"And," he added significantly in his inaugural message Tuesday, "with all due respect to the mighty power of the United States government, it will never be able to force racial integration in Mississippi, nor any other state where the people are unwilling to have it done."

As for Mississippi, he said, "the sentiment is unanimous — so we have nothing to fear unless it be 'fear itself.'" In that connection, he admonished the people to "keep cool heads and calm judgment," because, "even the United States Supreme Court did not undertake to say how or when its decision of May 17, 1954, could or would be enforced."

Gov. Coleman's strong stand on segregation was "good news" to pro-segregation groups which had waited for its disclosure in view of his campaign last summer in which he not once used the word "Negro."

MISSISSIPPI

It was apparent he did not want an appearance of a divided people as was interpreted when he labelled a proposed "nullification" effort by Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss.) as "legal poppycock." However, he said to newsmen he still feels that way about "nullification," but is willing to consider whatever steps necessary that will harmonize with those of other southern states.

As a sort of "olive branch," Gov. Coleman said in his message: "Unity must be preserved at all costs, and I urge the assistance and cooperation of all persons and groups to the end that we may present a united front in this all important cause."

That was interpreted as a willingness to recognize the Mississippi Citizens Councils "dedicated to the preservation of segregation" so long as their course is charted along legal avenues, devoid of any sort of violence.

Gov. Coleman said "the great overwhelming majority of the white people of Mississippi are not now guilty and never intend to be guilty of murder, violence or any other wrongdoing toward anyone."

"We are unalterably determined as a matter of right and justice that the necessary rules of society shall be maintained, but we do not approve of violence and lawlessness," he said. "Despite all the propaganda which has been fired at us, the country can be assured that the white people of Mississippi are not a race of Negro killers."

Pointing out that only six Negroes were killed by whites in 1954, while 182 Negroes were killed by members of their own race, Gov. Coleman inferred that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People might give attention to the latter, rather than centering on the former.

On the legislative side, seven bills to strengthen the state's efforts to maintain segregation in public schools, and five to keep the customs in other fields, were introduced simultaneously with Mr. Coleman's succession to the office vacated by Gov. Hugh White.

Stirred by the Interstate Commerce Commission order to end segregation in all forms of transportation, a group of members headed by House Speaker Walter Sillers of Bolivar County, have proposed laws to test whether a federal agency order supersedes a state law. They are designed to back recent municipal ordinances in Mississippi using the police power to retain segregation in transportation, notwithstanding the ICC mandate.

Briefly, the bills propose:

A $1,000-a-day fine on any railroad or bus company which fails to keep segregated waiting room for intrastate passengers; subject passengers who refuse to wait in rooms marked for their race to a fine of $1,000 and/or one-year jail sentence, and subject to arrest those who attempt to use waiting rooms or toilet facilities marked for those of the other race.

Another bill is aimed at maintaining segregation in restaurants, stores, hotels and all public businesses. Any person refusing to "vacate a public place when ordered so to do by the owner or an employe" would be subject to arrest as a trespasser, and fined accordingly. The maximum fine is $500 and/or six months in jail.

Aimed at preventing the printing of libel statements in connection with the race situation, or using obscene or indecent words by telephone or other oral communication, a companion measure tightens Mississippi laws on criminel libel.

Atlanta Constitution Jan 27, 1956

Clarion Ledger 9/1

to Tuition...

Do Mixed Schools Lower Standards In Classrooms?

"Do Mixed Schools Lower Classroom Standards?"

This is the title of a research-backed article, copyrighted by the United States News and World Report, a weekly magazine published at Washington, D. C.

The qualified answer given in the article is "Yes."

Some remedial measures to some degree "involve a return to what might be called segregated classes, if not of schools," says the magazine in a report on the de-segregated Washington public schools.

A number of questions are asked and some are answered by the story, which provides much food for thought in the South and indeed, across the nation.

The report begins with the statement:

"A close look at what has happened to schools in the nation's capital, after nearly two years of mixed classrooms, shows this:

"Since Negro and white children were integrated, pupils' test averages have run below the national average.

"Costly new measures are being taken now to maintain standards and to help lagging pupils. . ."

The report adds:

"The question now being asked is this: When schools are desegregated, does the average educational level become lower than it was in the formerly all-white schools?

"The tests in Washington indicate that the answer is 'yes.' Both Negro and white teachers agree on that answer. The educational attainments of Negro children as a whole, on the basis of these tests, are far below those of the whites.

"In Washington, where 64 per cent of all public-school children now are Negro, the resulting problem is described as a big one. . ."

Regarding the "low score of Negroes," the article states that none of the interviewed white and Negro officials and principals "thought that the Negro pupils had any less native intelligence than white children," that "they attribute the Negroes' low educational status primarily to low economic conditions in a large proportion of Negro homes, along with inferior educational opportunities."

Placing some of the blame on the rural South, the article states:

"Besides all that, the Negro children have been handicapped by the kind of schooling they have been given.

"Large numbers of them have immigrated to Washington from rural Southern areas. Teachers say that the education of most of these has been badly neglected. Those who come from Southern city schools, they add, usually are better prepared. . ."

Discussing steps made or planned by school authorities "to meet the new problems posed by integration," the article lists a request that the number of "special teachers" for lagging and handicapped pupils in Washington be increased from 106 to 229, and that 180 be added annually for three years to the number of regular teachers for elementary schools.

Discussing the new form of segregation, the division of the brighter pupils from the dull ones to prevent the brighter children from being held back, the article states: "This kind of division has been a practice for many years in schools all over the country. Integration has only brought a greater need for it."

Discussing a "new method of dividing senior high schools" being prepared, calling for the giving of a "terminal diploma" to subnormal students who complete a special course, the article also quotes Dr. Rowland F. Kirks, of the Washington board of education, as contending: "Integration now makes this more necessary than ever. You've got more of the slow learners to take care of. . . .Negroes would be in the large majority in the new curriculum for slow learners. It would, in effect, produce a new segregation of the races by use of educational standards. . ."

The article's next-to-last paragraph adds what may be a prophecy: "Dr. Walter E. Hager, president of the District of Columbia Teachers College, believes that within 10 years Washington pupils will be able to equal the national average in achievement tests. But many other Washington educators, both Negro and white, are not so optimistic."

We believe that thinking over this report carefully will make many Mississippians think. . .and ask questions.

Jane: Mrs.

ning, February 3, 1956 VOL. CXVII NO. 287 Clarion Ledger Full AP and INS Reports

Ole Miss Withdraws Bid For Kershaw Appearance

Ed. Mis

Action Follows Letter's Receipt

Minister Admits NAACP Membership

Ole Miss Chancellor J. D. Williams Thursday revealed he has written to the Rev. Alvin Kershaw, requesting that the controversial minister not appear on the program of Religious Emphasis Week at the state university.

The chancellor's action followed receipt of two letters from Kershaw, one addressed to him and the other to Wallace Sherwood, editor of The Mississippian, the campus paper.

Previous to receipt of the letters, McComb editor Oliver Emmerich, member of the Board of State Institutions of Higher Learning, had talked with Kershaw via telephone and reported to the board that the minister had denied having NAACP affiliations.

On the basis of this report, the board indicated that Rev. Kershaw might be acceptable as a speaker, and left the decision in the hands of Chancellor Williams.

At the time of the board's Jan. 19 report, State Rep. James Morrow of Brandon, who had strongly opposed Kershaw's appearance, withdrew his opposition and apologized for any "embarrassment" his earlier attitude may have caused the minister.

Kershaw's letter to Sherwood was written in response to a request from the student editor that the minister make clear his views on the race question for the benefit of the student body.

Chancellor Williams' message to the Rev. Mr. Kershaw follows:

"Your message directed to the student body, to be released in The Mississippian, will appear tomorrow. Your letter of January 28 to me reveals information not given to Mr. Emmerich of the board of trustees that became the basis for the statement of the board. Your statement to the press and your letter to me will provoke additional controversy inconsistent with the purpose of the invitation for you to come.

"I have failed repeatedly to get you today by telephone to suggest that we agree that under the present conditions it would be unwise for you to appear on our program this year.

"After considering your letter of January 28 and the communication which you have released for publication, I have concluded that it will

Kershaw's letter to Sherwood was written in response to a request from the student editor that the minister make clear his views on the race question for the benefit of the student body.

Chancellor Williams' message to the Rev. Mr. Kershaw follows:

"Your message directed to the student body, to be released in The Mississippian, will appear tomorrow. Your letter of January 28 to me reveals information not given to Mr. Emmerich of the board of trustees that became the basis for the statement of the board. Your statement to the press and your letter to me will provoke additional controversy inconsistent with the purpose of the invitation for you to come.

"I have failed repeatedly to get you today by telephone to suggest that we agree that under the present conditions it would be unwise for you to appear on our program this year.

"After considering your letter of January 28 and the communication which you have released for publication, I have concluded that it will be unwise for you to participate in our program this year."

Kershaw became a controversial figure when he won $32,000 on a television quiz show and allegedly said he planned to give part of the money to the National

Kershaw---

(Continued From Page One)

Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Gov J. P. Coleman said he would not interfere in the matter. "I will back the college board and the university to the limit," he said.

Rep. Morrow, in a statement to the press, said he withdrew his apology to Rev. Kershaw.

Full test of Rev. Kershaw's letter follows: To the members of the Student Body University of Mississippi:

I am grateful indeed that the editor of The Mississippian has invited me to comment on the recent controversy regarding by February speaking engagement on your campus and on what seems to be the resolution of the conflict. I was scheduled to come to your campus a year ago, but illness necessitated the cancellation of that intended visit. During last fall, I was again invited by your Committee of One Hundred and since I have for many years enjoyed discussing with students the pentrative insight of drama, poetry, and art, I was delighted to accept the invitation. Thus, I particularly appreciate this opportunity to speak directly with you, since in the confusion of second and third hand information my position has become muddied; for I feel you have the right to know clearly and first hand where I stand on the issue of segregation so that you can responsibily make you own judgements, whatever they might be. Since I have not received a full account of Mr. Morrow's statement I can only comment on the statements attributed to him by the press. Your Chancellor, Dr. Williams, has sent me a copy of the full resolution passed by the Board of Trustees on Thursday, Jan. 19.

It is true technically that I was misquoted by some of the press following my appearance on "The $32,000 Question" program. But the statement attributed by the Associated Press to Mr. Morrow on Jan. 24, that I had been "tricked by leading questions" of journalists into making a statement endorsing the NAACP, is unfortunate. I was interrogated concerning my plans, but not concerning my convictions and attitudes.

During my last appearance on the program I made the statement that, although I did not appear on the program for money, that $32,000 that had now inadvertently and unexpectedly come to us gave Doris (Mrs. Kershaw) and me an opportunity to support some of the agencies that are laboring for justice and brotherhood in the world, agencies embodying concerns that were deep in our own conviction and interest. After the program a number of reporters asked me what these agencies were. In effect, I told them that because of heavy schedule Doris and I had not had time to discuss the disposition of that money—that, in fact, we hadn't thought of having any until the moment the check was actually given to us. I said that I supposed we would use it to support more generously those movements which we were already supporting in a meager way because of our limited salary. When the reporters asked me what these movements were, I replied that we were greatly interested in the CARE food program, the Share Our Surplus program, the UNICEF program of the United Nations; that our parish was engaged in resettlement of refugee families, and that, as southerners, Doris and I felt a deep responsiblity in the de-segregation work of one of the advisory committees of the NAACP. The Oxford Branch of the NAACP meets in the parish house of our church.

I was misquoted by the press in parts of the nation, in that some of the accounts said: (a) I had definitely committed $32,000, or half of it to the NAACP, and (b) I had embarrassed Mississippi by talking of my support of the NAACP over television to some 60 million viewers. I did neither of these. But to conclude that I had been "tricked" or misquoted in regard to my concern for desegregation is an unfortunate and untrue implication. I made this quite clear in a telephone conservation with one of the trustees on the day of the last trustee meeting; in fact, I have repeated three times that as a Christian clergyman, as a southerner, and as an American, I have been, am, and will continue to support legal and social action that labors to effect, protect, and ensure the equal status and estimation of all people.

The resolution of the trustee of the University rightly pointed out that I am to speak on the religious insights of contemporary literature and not on the Supreme Court's judgement on segregation. I anticipate with pleasure my opportunity to discuss with some of you my contention that some of the most sensitive insights in our time can be found in the arts. However, if I am asked or engaged in discussion I must in the candor that any honest question deserves speak from my convictions on segregation or any other subject not precisely arriving from the contest of literature, and it must be said that contemporary literature certainly is concerned with the spiritual pathology issuing in our rejection and dissmisal of other human beings as inferior and unworthy of respect and relationship. Because this controversy has arisen, it seems inconceivable that such discussion and questions would not be a natural part of student inquiry. Therefore, I am all the more anxious that you know clearly where I stand.

1. As a Christian I am convinced that at the core of the Faith is love of God and neighbor which has to do with all men's equal needs to be accepted and respected as of equal work as children of God: the barrier to any fulfillment of love, and thus to Christian attainment also is sin which the church interprets as the separation of man from man, and man from God, because of the pride and pretentions that exclude equal children of God from their rightful, equal acceptance, respect, and opportunity. This is the stated position of the National Episcopal Church as it is the stated position of the National Council of Churches and the World Council of Churches.

2. I have for years been an active member of the NAACP which I respect as an organization entirely loyal to the democratic traditions of the United States. Its action is in accordance with its respect for the Constitutional and legal structure of our Nation, as under law, it attempts to bring to realization what in ideal and in principle is consistent with democratic conviction. Since the program after due consideration, Doris and I have substantially contributed to the legal and educational fund of the NAACP along with contributing to other agencies and organizations. The bishop of this diocese in which I work is a member.

3. It came as a complete surprise that my casual remarks to reporters after the program could be interpreted as causing embarrassment to the people of Mississippi. It was this misstaken interpretation that I had intentionally get out to embarrass Mississippi that fired this tragic controversy, an interpretation that now thankfully is regretted by all of us.

4. I regret now that I didn't make a clarifying statement three months ago. I certainly wanted to do so, but felt that such a statement would only prolong a debate that I sincerely hope would end quickly in the general agreement among the people of Mississippi that a true University is the matrix of open academic discussion and free inquiry of responsible consideration of alternative positions in any issue.

5. As a southerner, I am well aware of the complexity and difficulty that attends the transition of social paterns. Consequently, what has troubled me the most is not the obvious fact that many in your state disagree with my convictions, but that the distressing climate has smothered the freedom necessary to all democratic thought: the freedom and candor, trust, and in the respect for the integrity of the individual to think responsibly his own thoughts; the freedom, as Americans, as human beings, as people with religious faith, to consider, discuss, ponder together issues such as this which have powerful impact upon our national and individual destiny. Therefore, I have been deeply impressed, according to my information about the student poll and the action of your campus Senate that you have been concerned to protect this guarantee American liberty so fundamental to the productive life of a free University. And so, anticipating mutual respect, affection and trust, I look forward to a profitable week among you.

Rev. A. L. Kershaw.

2/4/56 NYT - ED 14/18

Mississippi Talk Canceled

UNIVERSITY, Miss., Feb. 3 (AP)—An Ohio minister changed his mind about not discussing his anti-segregation views during a proposed address at the University of Mississippi. The school revoked his invitation.

Chancellor J. D. Williams said he notified the Rev. Alvin Kershaw of Oxford yesterday that it would be "unwise" for him to address students during religious emphasis week beginning Feb. 12. Mr. Williams said he had withdrawn the invitation after Mr. Kershaw had written the university that he was "an active member" of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and that he would discuss his views on segregation if the question arose.

MISSISSIPPI CANCELS SPEAKER'S INVITATION

UNIVERSITY, Miss., Feb. 2 (AP)—The University of Mississippi today withdrew its invitation for the Rev. Alvin Kershaw to address students during religious emphasis week because of his stand against racial segregation.

Reliable sources reported the Oxford, Ohio, minister wrote Chancellor J. D. Williams he would talk on all points of segregation should the question arise.

He was invited last spring to speak on "Religion and Drama" Feb. 12-15.

Williams wrote Kershaw that his invitation had been withdrawn because Kershaw's letter "reveals information not given to . . . the college board" when the board decided last month to let the invitation stand.

The chancellor's letter said Kershaw's statements "will provoke controversy inconsistent with the purpose of the invitation for you to come.

"It will be unwise for you to participate in our program this year." Cht. Times 2/3/56

Fickle Water

The Delta Democrat-Times

HODDING CARTER
Editor and Publisher

JOHN T. GIBSON
General Manager

Greenville, Miss., Thursday, February 9, 1956

Were it left for me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers or newspapers without a government, I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter. —Thomas Jefferson.

Academic Freedom Under Fire

Miss.-Educ.

OLE Miss has lost one highly competent professor. How many more will succumb to the pressure of "Big Brother's" watchful eyes in the tense days that lie ahead?

And as they begin to find jobs elsewhere, in more relaxed atmospheres, how long will Mississippi's university be able to remain on the accredited lists?

In Dr. Morton King's public statement concerning his resignation this week he indicated plainly that the segregation issue as such had nothing to do with his action. He resigned because "there are forces at work which would stifle academic freedom."

Just as prohibition cannot be enforced by law, segregation cannot be maintained by "book burning." The rabid element in the state, by prohibiting freedom of discussion on college campuses, are admitting their fear of the "enemy" and branding their children as irresponsible will-o-the-wisps who don't have enough sense to make a choice when all facts are presented.

In addition, they are causing strong resentment to build up in the minds of many students toward political leaders in the state who, some students believe, are trying to fashion their thought patterns.

Neither faculty nor students can understand how members of the legislature suddenly became qualified to dictate what should be taught in the state's institutions of higher learning.

It's another example of the shotgun blasts shallow thinking people are taking at the "integration threat." The blasts are so haphazard they hit more innocent bystanders than anything else.

Educ. Miss. 1956

2-9-56

MISS. COUNC
1104 LYNCH
JACKSON 3, M

Delta Democrat-Times

...ed of the Agriculture Com- ...enough. ...March 24.

May Hurt Scholastic Rating

Miss - Ed

Chancellor Explains Why Rev. Kershaw's Talk Canceled: Avoid 'Alabama Tragedy'

By JAY MILNER

UNIVERSITY — The Kershaw incident "probably will be bad" for the scholastic rating of Ole Miss, Chancellor J. D. Williams told members of the Campus Senate this week.

But the University head insisted that cancelling the Ohio Episcopal minister's speaking engagement "will not be as bad for our school as the inevitable furor which would have resulted from his appearance on the campus."

The Campus Senate is composed of student and faculty representatives from the school's various housing units and academic divisions. Chancellor Williams made the first official announcement of Dr. Morton King's resignation in his address to the Senate Tuesday night.

Kershaw Incident Protest

Dr. King, chairman of the Sociology Department at Ole Miss since 1946, resigned in protest of the recent cancellation of the Rev. Kershaw's scheduled speaking engagement during Religious Emphasis Week on the campus. Kershaw had admitted he belonged to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The strain of the past few days showed in Chancellor Williams' face as he spoke to the assembly of campus leaders. At one point he stopped speaking to wipe his eyes apparently overcome by emotion.

He told the group he believed his handling of the Kershaw situation averted an incident "similiar to the tragedy at the University of Alabama."

Alabama students and "outsiders" rioted earlier this week when a Negro girl tried to attend classes there.

Would Wreck Program

"If Rev. Kershaw had come here it would have wrecked the entire Religious Emphasis Week program," Chancellor Williams said. "Everybody would have gone to hear him. The campus would have been full of newspaper, radio and television reporters. There would have been a student demonstration of some kind and I am responsible for the welfare of this university."

Dr. King, a native of Tennessee and a graduate of Vanderbilt, plans to remain at his duties here until the end of the semester. He insists he is not a crusader but a teacher who resigned because of a professional principle involving academic freedom, not the segregation issue.

The Last Straw

He said the Kershaw incident was only "the last straw" in a series of happenings which have deeply concerned him during the past few years.

He is a member of the student-faculty committee which chose the speakers for Religious Emphasis Week and has encountered the state's "screening process" for college speakers on other occasions

He and other professors are under a constant tension, wondering if what they are saying in lectures will stir the wrath of members of the legislature.

"How can one teach sociology without discussing the segregation issue?" King asked.

Not Bitter

He has refused to talk about his resignation but said he is not "bitter" toward Chancellor Williams, whom he believes to be a "victim of circumstances and has the "best interests of the school at heart."

In his official public statement, made jointly with a statement by Williams, King said: "...I have slowly and reluctantly been convinced that the administration and the board (state college and university trustees) are no longer able to defend, ...the freedom of thought, inquiry and speech which are essential for higher education to flourish."

Meanwhile, the entire University faculty is disturbed about the Kershaw issue. There is much talk on the campus that other professors will resign as soon as they can find other jobs.

See—Chancellor Explains—Page 1

Chancellor Explains

(Continued from Page 1)

One professor said he and three others "talked seriously of quitting this week. But we decided we can't afford it. We have families to consider."

Screening Procedure

The speaker screening requirement was put in effect about a year ago after members of the state legislature received protests from some parents about the background of one speaker on a program at Mississippi Southern College. At Ole Miss the screening process includes:

1. The name of the proposed speaker is given to Hugh Clegg, former FBI man who now is Chancellor Williams' assistant.

2. Clegg sends the name to the Americanism Committee of the American Legion in Washington, D. C. They check the name with their list of about 17,000 "suspect" organizations.

3. If the speaker has belonged or contributed to any of these groups on the American Legion list, at any time in his life, he is screened.

Two Choices

Few, if any, faculty members agree with the legislature's screening order. But one professor said: "We have two choices—abide by the legislature's order or resign. If we resign the legislature would have us replaced by radicals. The courageous thing for us to do is remain here and give as liberal an interpretation to the order as possible."

Episcopalians Reject Pro-Kershaw Gesture

A conference of Episcopal students Saturday rejected a resolution condemning the withdrawal of a bid to Rev. Alvin Kershaw by Ole Miss.

The Ohio minister was to have participated in Religious Emphasis Week but the invitation was withdrawn last week after Rev. Karshaw's letter linking him to the NAACP was made public.

The Canterbury Club took up the issue again at its statewide meeting in Jackson.

Vote was reportedly 22 to 14.

The resolution also blasted the screening of campus speakers — and that phase was rumored to be acceptable to most of the students.

But the mention of Mr. Kershaw led to the defeat of the entire resolution, one student said.

The resolution was introduced by Russell Viau, Flint, Mich., Lloyd Spivey, Canton, and Alfred Marvle, Vicksburg, all students at Ole Miss.

The meeting Saturday afternoon was held at St. Andrew's church.

A portion of the resolution read: " . . . Be it therefore resolved that this state conference of the Canterbury Club of Mississippi go on record as being strongly opposed to the recent withdrawal of the invitation extended to Rev. Alvin Kershaw for Religious Emphasis Week at the University of Mississippi and go on record as being in ardent disagreement to the ruling of the Mississippi legislature that all speakers coming to our campus be screened."

State Times Feb. 5-/56
Miss-Ed

A Peevish Professor Quits His Job

Ed. Miss

Jackson Daily

(An Editorial)

2/9/56

The resignation of Dr. Morton B. King Jr. as professor of sociology at the University was an act both foolish and childish and utterly unworthy of a supposedly well-educated man.

Dr. King tossed his conniption fit because Chancellor Williams withdrew the invitation to Dr. Alvin Kershaw, the jazz preacher, to take part in the Religious Emphasis Week at Ole Miss.

The professor says he quit because the Ole Miss administration is "no longer able to defend the freedom of thought, inquiry and speech which are essential for higher education to flourish."

And then more blah-blah to the same effect.

Up to this moment the University has not closed down and the student body has not been sent home because of Dr. King's resignation. Classes are being held as per usual.

In fact, it looks like things will continue this way until the June commencement exercises, and even now plans are being made for the 1956-57 session. The summer school program will be as per usual.

Just another case of a peevish professor pushing himself out of a job. If you feel sorry over the incident, calm yourself. The NAACP will doubtless help the professor attach himself to some other educational institution where he will be free to prattle about "freedom of thought," etc.

The people of Mississippi were profoundly surprised last week to learn that 238 members of the Ole Miss student body voted in favor of integration and wondered from what source they were being infiltrated with poisonous propaganda.

This newest incident may throw some light on the subject.

Educ. Miss. 1956

MISS. COUNCIL ON HUMAN REL
1104 LYNCH ST.
JACKSON 3, MISS.

The Delta Democrat-Times

8-1 HOME EDITION

ress (AP) United Press (UP) Greenville, Mississippi Friday, February 10, 1956 Price 5c No. 139

Another Prof Quits; Hits Attempt To 'Screen Thought'

(Ed Miss)

Gives 5 Reasons For Leaving State College

From The Wire Services

STARKVILLE, Miss.—Mississippi State College today lost an assistant government professor who quit in protest of a series of incidents designed, he charged, to "screen out thoughts."

President Ben Hilbun made the resignation of Dr. William Buchanan effective immediately, saying, "your attitude has gravely impaired your usefulness here."

The resignation came two days after Dr. Morton King resigned as head of the sociology department at the University of Mississippi in protest against the revoking of an invitation to the Rev. Alvin Kershaw, Oxford, Ohio, Episcopal minister, to address the student body during Religious Emphasis Week.

Kershaw became the center of a controversy because of his avowed membership in the National Association for Advancement of Colored People and his refusal to say he would not discuss segregation if the subject came up in a question period.

Gives Reasons

In tendering his resignation, Dr. Buchanan cited four other reasons:

1. The college board's order requiring screening of prospective speakers.

2. President Hilbun's refusal to permit Pulitzer-prize winning editor Hodding Carter of the Greenville Delta Democrat-Times to address the local chapter of the American Association of University Professors.

3. A proposed bill in the Mississippi Legislature to forbid "teachers of government, or anyone else, to criticize any official or policy of state government." No action has been taken on the bill.

4. "The statement by (an unidentified college) trustee . . . to the effect that 'while everyone has a right to think what he pleases, we have the right to know what an employe thinks and the right not to hire him if we do not approve it.' "

Screen Thoughts

Buchanan said, "When ministers are prevented from speaking to students and editors from speaking to faculty members and when trustees feel they must screen not only our speakers but our thoughts, it appears to me that a college can not perform its functions as an institution."

The professor said he was getting out "before the law is passed which might make the expression of these sentiments a criminal act."

In reply, Hilbun said Dr. Buchan failed to distinguish between "the promulgation of the findings of scholarship and the promultation of opinion and personal bias."

The resignation, he told Buchanan, "is based upon the five particulars outlined in your letter your attitude toward which has gravely impaired your usefulness here."

(1956)
Education: Mississippi

JACKSON (MISS.) DAILY NEWS
FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1956

Education Mississippi

Who's Next?

State College Prof Resigns In Sympathy With Kershaw

STATE COLLEGE Miss. (AP) — Government professor William Buchanan was out of a job at Mississippi State College today after authorities promptly complied with his resignation in protest against the "Kershaw incident" and other actions of Mississippi's College Board.

Buchanan yesterday tendered his resignation, effective at the end of his current contract, but college President Ben Hilburn immediately relieved him of his duties, saying "your attitude . . . has gravely impaired your usefulness here."

The resignation came two days after Dr. Morton King resigned as head of the sociology department at the University of Mississippi in protest against the revoking of an invitation to the Rev. Alvin Kershaw, Oxford, Ohio, Episcopal minister, to address the student body during Religious Emphasis Week.

Kershaw became the center of a controversy because of his avowed membership in the National Association for Advancement of Colored People and his refusal to say he would not discuss segregation if the subject came up in a question period.

In tendering his resignation, Dr Buchanan cited four other reasons:

1. The college board's order requiring screening of prospective speakers.

2. President Hilbun's refusal to permit Pulitzer-prize winning editor Hodding Carter of the Greenville Delta Democrat-Times to address the student body. Carter was condemned by the Mississippi House last year for his magazine article criticizing the pro-segregation white citizen councils.

3. A proposed bill in the Mississippi Legislature to forbid "teachers of government, or any one else, to criticize any official or policy of state government." No action has been taken on the bill.

4. "The statement by (an unidentified college) trustee . . . to the effect that while everyone has a right to think what he pleases, we have the right to know what an employe thinks and the right not to hire him if we do not approve it.' "

When such conditions are in effect Dr. Buchanan told Hilbun, "it appears to me, that a college cannot perform its functions as an institution of higher learning."

The professor said he was getting out "before the law is passed which might make the expression of these sentiments a criminal act."

In reply, Hilbun said Dr. Buchanan failed to distinguish between "the promulgation of the findings of scholarship and the promulgation of opinion and personal bias."

The resignation, he told Buchanan, "is based upon the five particulars outlined in your letter; your attitude toward which has gravely impaired your usefulness here."

Dr. Buchanan, 38, a native of Richmond, Va., received his BA and MA degrees from Washington and Lee University and his Ph. D. from Princeton University. During World War II, he served in the Navy in South America and Europe.

He has served as a reporter for the Lynchburg, Va., News and the Mobile, Ala., Press-Register. Co-author of "How Nations See Each Other," he was public relations director of the Washington and Lee Bicentennial from 1947 to 1949 and English instructor and public relations director at Roanoke College, Salem, Va., in 1946 and 1947.

He came to Mississippi State in 1953 from Princeton University where he had served as assistant in research in the psychology department. Dr. Buchanan is married to the former Vivien Landrum of Picayune and they have two sons.

2/11/56 Jackson

Let's Have A House Cleaning

Jackson Daily

(AN EDITORIAL) (Ed. Miss)

Another professor quits his job. This time it is Prof. William Buchanan, assistant professor of government at State College.

The Professor says he doesn't like the way government is being run in Mississippi, so he follows the example of Dr. Morton King Jr., at Ole Miss, and kicks his job right out from under his own precious self.

Ever and always, no matter who you are, if you don't like your job, quit it.

That goes for everybody, from ditch-digger to president.

Whiners, grumblers, complainers, dissenters, and malcontents generally, are darned nuisances and elements of danger, no matter where or by whom employed.

President Ben Hilbun promptly accepted the resignation of Prof. Buchanan "in the spirit in which it was submitted," and made it effective immediately, adding:

"Your attitude has gravely impaired your usefulness here."

That is exactly what should be said to that other peevish Professor, Dr. Morton King Jr., instead of allowing him to name May 31st as his date for quitting.

The usefulness of the Ole Miss sociology professor has likewise ended and his services should be brought to a close immediately. Any teaching he may do from now on will not be of much value to the student body at Mississippi because of the manner in which he has discredited himself.

If we have any more instructors of this sort in our higher institutions of learning they should follow the examples set by King and Buchanan.

If they are opposed to any policies or principles proclaimed by our governing bodies they should be summarily discharged, no matter what may be the terms of their contracts.

In Dr. King's case he should be paid his salary in full up to the 31st of May and told to leave the campus.

Strikingly illustrative of the mawkish minds of these professorial malcontents is this statement of Prof. Buchanan setting for one of his reasons for quitting:

"Chancellor Williams' apparently successful efforts to prevent a minister of the gospel from discussing music and religion with students at the University."

The facts of the Dr. Alvin Kershaw case are already known to the people of Mississippi, but apparently Prof. Buchanan has a mind too myopic to recognize facts. "Academic freedom" was not in any sense violated when the conclusion was reached that the minds of Ole Miss students would not be benefitted the least bit by the mouthings of a minister who wants to tell church choirs how to sing jazz music. Call it bigotry or intolerance, if you like, but the people of Mississippi do not want to hear whorehouse music sung from choir lofts, nor can they cherish respect for any member of the clergy who seeks to sponsor that sort of music. It bears no relation to religion or real melody.

Another objection offered by Prof. Buchanan is the alleged statement of an unnamed member of the board of trustees to this effect:

"We have a right to know what an employe thinks, and the right to fire him if we do not approve it."

That is exactly the way all real Mississippians think. We do not want to hire persons, no matter how many college degrees they hold, to pour poison into the minds of our young people.

The truth is that there should be a general housecleaning in the halls of learning in Mississippi. There are other rotten apples in the educational barrel that need to be tossed out.

Instructors who are not in thorough sympathy with the Southern way of life and the Southern way of thinking should be told to seek jobs elsewhere. The peurile prattle they are peddling is something we don't care to buy with our tax money.

3 CLERGYMEN CANCEL MISSISSIPPI SPEECHES

2/13/60 Chattanooga Times

UNIVERSITY, Miss., Feb. 12 (AP)—Three more ministers Friday canceled speeches at the University of Mississippi because the school banned an Ohio minister from talking on the campus.

The university withdrew an invitation extended to the Rev. Alvin Kershaw of Oxford, Ohio, when it discovered he was a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The three latest cancellations wiped out the entire slate of non-Mississippi clergymen who were scheduled to speak on the university's Religious Emphasis Week program, Feb. 19-22. Earlier this week, a Catholic priest from New Orleans said he would not appear.

The latest clergymen to cancel speaking engagements were the Rev. George Chauncey, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Monticello, Ark.; the Rev. Joe Earl Elmore of New York, former director of Methodist student work at the University of Mississippi, and Rabbi Milton Grafmon, Temple Emanuel, Birmingham, Ala.

Rev. Kershaw, an Episcopal minister, won fame recently by winning $32,000 on a television quiz show.

Miss - Ed

Lambasting Is Had By All

Marion Ledger 2/15/56

Coleman Flays Professors Who Sound Off For NAACP

By CHARLES M. HILLS

Professors in state-owned and operated institutions of higher learning who wish to act as a "sounding board" for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People are not wanted, Gov. J. P. Coleman told newsmen here Tuesday.

The state's chief executive thus backed up the Mississippi legislature in its resolutions of "good riddance" of two college officials, Morton King, of the University of Mississippi and William Buchanan, of Mississippi State College, both of whom have resigned in protest against screening of speakers in the two institutions.

"They just staged a sympathy strike on behalf of the Rev. Alvin Kershaw, whom Ole Miss barred after he announced he belonged to the NAACP," Coleman declared.

Coleman told newsmen that "I worked hard to get Kershaw here, and then he wrote the silliest letter I ever read, announcing his NAACP stand.

"I really don't believe Kershaw wrote the letter he sent us," Coleman said. "It reads like it was NAACP-inspired."

Gov. Coleman reminded that the University of Mississippi and Mississippi State College are state-owned.

"They belong to the people, and the people of Mississippi have the right to demand that teachers expounding against our way of life be ousted," he said.

"There was no real substance to anything that King or Buchanan said," Coleman declared. "King had been at Ole Miss for 16 years. Nobody ever tried to influence his thinking. He just resigned as a sympathy strike."

As to three others who have broken their promises to speak at the Ole Miss religious rally, Coleman believes that "they are no friends of Mississippi, anyway."

"If they were looking for the good of our college youth, they would have come here and performed their Godly duties, if they be such," he said.

Gov. Coleman also took a slap at two potential Democratic candidates for president, Averill Harriman, New York and Sen. Estes Kefauver, Tennessee.

"Harriman has just advocated integration by brute force," he declared. "We in the South can't stomach a man like him. Kefauver even has a representative of the NAACP working in his office in Washington. We certainly look on him with utmost disfavor."

The governor did not discuss Adlai Stevenson Tuesday, but has made it clear he thinks Stevenson is our best bet for President.

The governor also mentioned the interposition question, telling newsmen that "we have actually been practicing interposition in this state ever since the May 17, 1954 supreme court decision."

He again reminded that he is opposed to nullification terming it as "practical as running the Mississippi River upstream."

"If the supreme court decision is null and void, why are we having troubles?" Coleman asked.

Ed. Miss

Miss. Ed. 2/12/56 Chatt Times

12

PROFESSOR QUITS MISSISSIPPI STATE

Asserts Conditions Prevent Proper Performance—Is Released at Once

STATE COLLEGE, Miss., Feb. 9 (AP)—Prof. William Buchanan today resigned from Mississippi State college in protest over what he called conditions that prevent state colleges from performing their functions.

Dr. Buchanan, professor of government, submitted his resignation to become effective at the end of his current contract. However, college President Ben Hilbun relieved him of his duties immediately and on grounds that "your attitude has gravely impaired your usefulness here."

Dr. Buchanan's resignation followed closely that of Dr. Morton King, head of the sociology department at the University of Mississippi.

Dr. King resigned Tuesday, effective May 31, because he said the university apparently would "no longer defend the freedom of thought, inquiry, or speech necessary for higher education to flourish."

Dr. Buchanan listed five reasons for his resignation:

1. The college board's order requiring prospective speakers to be screened.

2. Hilbun's refusal to permit Hodding Carter to address students. Carter, Pulitzer prize-winning editor of the Greenville Delta Democrat-Times, was condemned by the House of Representatives in 1955 for a magazine article in which he criticized Mississippi's white citizens' councils.

3. Introduction in the 1956 Legislature of a bill forbidding "teachers of government, or anyone else, to criticize any official or policy of state government." The bill has not been considered.

4. Revocation of an invitation to the Rev. Alvin Kershaw of Oxford, Ohio, to speak at the University of Misissippi during Religious Emphasis Week. Kershaw's invitation was withdrawn because of his avowed membership in the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and because he changed his mind about not discussing his anti-segregation views on the campus.

5. "The statement by (an unidentified college) trustee, which we heard this morning, to the effect that 'while everyone has a right to think what he pleases, we have the right to know what an employe thinks and the right not to hire him if we do not approve of it.' "

1956 Miss.

~~MISS.~~
1104
JACKS

Ed. Miss

The Delta Democrat-Times

2/15/56 1

United Press (UP) Greenville, Mississippi Wednesday, February 15, 1956

Substitute 3 Days Of Prayer

5 State Ministers Nix Ole Miss Meet

OXFORD, Miss. (UP) — Ten speakers have now declined invitations to the University of Mississippi's controversial religious emphasis week program but students remained determined today to hold the annual event.

Five local ministers yesterday withdrew as alternates for five speakers who had declined earlier in protest against the university's cancellation of a speech by an anti-segregation minister.

"Atmosphere" Wrong

The local ministers in a resolution urged the university to call off the entire program because the controversy "would make it difficult to maintain an atmosphere in which real religious values could be given proper consideration."

Students and faculty members were determined not to call off the traditional program entirely, however, and decided to hold three days of prayer and meditation next week, with no speakers at all.

By ASSOCIATED PRESS

The controversy was touched off when university officials withdraw their speaking invitation to the Rev. Alvin Kershaw, Episcopal minister from Oxford, Ohio.

The Rev. Kershaw is a member of the National Assn. for the Advaneement of Colored People, which opposes Mississippi's intention of keeping the races segregated despite the U. S. Supreme Court decision.

He was to have discussed religious drama.

After his invitation was dropped, four out-of-state speakers, a Catholic priest, a rabbi and two Protestant ministers, decided to cancel their speaking engagements.

Joined Last Night

They were joined last night by five ministers from Oxford, Miss., where the campus is located.

Finding itself virtually without speakers, the 100-man executive committee in charge of the Feb. 20-22 program decided to do away with all activities and substitute 30-minutes of silent prayer and meditation on each of the three days.

Clergymen cancelling last night were the Rev. A. Emile Joffrion, rector of St. Peter's Episcopal Church; the Rev. A. L. Meadows, pastor of Oxford University Methodist Church; the Rev. James Southerland, pastor of the First Baptist Church, the Rev. Murphy C. Wilds, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church and the Rev. Athol D. Cloud, extension Presbyterian.

Education: Miss

Ed. Miss
2/15/56

Rural School Heads Organize To Fight School Closings

Further Meeting Is Set

By WILLIAM E. KEITH
State Times Staff Writer

School superintendents opposing the state's long-range program to equalize public schools are making plans today to organize as the State Association of Rural Superintendents.

G. L. Tutor, superintendent of schools at Washington, Miss., said he will call the superintendents together in an organizational meeting in the "near future."

Tutor presided Tuesday at a meeting of county and rural superintendents and school board trustees at the Robert E. Lee hotel, called to protest the workings of the statewide program.

He lashed out at what he called "super consolidation" of the state's rural schools and said he and other rural superintendents are ready to put up a good fight "even if we are country boys."

Under the program, the state, through the Educational Finance Commission, expects to effect a number of consolidations which would result in elimination of a number of smaller schools.

Commission spokesmen have said such consolidation will mean more efficient school operations at less cost and is a necessary preliminary to more equal schools statewide.

Counties cannot get state funds accruing for equalization purposes without the approval of the Educational Finance Commission on consolidation plans for each county.

Some 300 school officials from all sections of the state authorized Tutor to call the organizational meeting following a two-and-a-half hour session Tuesday.

The meeting was addressed by H. B. Drane, chairman of the Adams county school board; W. A. Sojourner, Adams county superintendent of education, and six state legislators.

Legislators included representative Walter Hester, Adams; and senators R. E. L. Gentry, Mt. Olive; Kelly Hammond, Columbia; would result in elimination of a number of smaller schools.

Commission spokesmen have said such consolidation will mean more efficient school operations at less cost and is a necessary preliminary to more equal schools statewide.

Counties cannot get state funds accruing for equalization purposes without the approval of the Educational Finance Commission on consolidation plans for each county.

Some 300 school officials from all sections of the state authorized Tutor to call the organizational meeting following a two-and-a-half hour session Tuesday.

The meeting was addressed by H. B. Drane, chairman of the Adams county school board; W. A. Sojourner, Adams county superintendent of education, and six state legislators.

Legislators included representative Walter Hester, Adams; and senators R. E. L. Gentry, Mt. Olive; Kelly Hammond, Columbia; Z. B. Whisenant, New Albany; L. C. Ladner, Kiln, and Amos Stricland, Laurel.

Drane and Sojourner reviewed the issues involved in the Adams county school board's appeal to a chancery court of the Educational Finance Commission's insistence that all Adams county schools be placed under the Natchez Municipal Separate School District. The county board wants separate districts for Natchez and the rest of the county.

Hester said the issue should be submitted to popular vote, because "I still rely upon the judgment of the good people of this state."

He said it was never the intention of the legislature "to authorize any separate school district to destroy or take over areas outside municipalities without the consent of the people affected."

Sen. Gentry said parts of the consolidation program were "enacted too hastily" and that the people of Mississippi are "not ready for super-consolidation," although he thinks some schools probably should be eliminated.

Sen. Hammond blasted the Educational Finance Commission as a "six-man oligarchy" and said the consolidation program as set up "smacks of totalitarianism."

Sen. Whisenant said the program as originally envisioned was a good one but that "this legislator would make this amendment and that one another and now the original program is hardly recognizable."

He said administrative power for school operations should be given back to the people.

Sen. Ladner said proponents of the statewide program as presently set up are "cramming things down our throat," and Sen. Strickland said the entire program should be abolished "and let's give the schools back to the people."

Jim C. Barnett, superintendent of schools at Meadville, suggested from the floor that the proposed organization of rural superintendents might duplicate the presently-functioning consolidated school division of the Mississippi Association of School Administrator of the Mississippi Education Asociation.

Tutor opened the meeting by reading excerpt from letters sent him by legislators and others opposed to "super consolidation" and then introduced those in attendance from each county. He urged all those present to call community meetings on the same subject when they return home because "our only chance is with the legilature and with informing the people back home."

2-17-56 Miss-Ed

Not A Single Negro Attends White Public School In State

Moves To Maintain Segregation Still Being Considered

By PHIL STROUPE
Daily News Staff Writer

Not a single Negro student has been admitted to a white public school in Mississippi since the U. S. Supreme Court outlawed racial segregation nearly two years ago.

The unwelcomed decision of the nine judges was branded by Sen. J. O. Eastland as political at the time it was handed down. Vice President Richard M. Nixon confirmed that last week with his praise of that "great Republican Chief Justice Earl Warren."

Mississippians took immediate steps following the decision to side step its enforcement. The state's nearly 600,000 white and Negro students are still attending separate schools, but schools are improving. New ones are being built and new school buses are in use. Teachers are better paid.

Largest Budget

The state's largest public education budget in history has been approved. Both branches of the legislature speedily placed an OK on the $78 million appropriation.

Negroes in some quarters have asked for an immediate end to segregation. Members of National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and Negro parents in five Mississippi towns filed petitions with school superintendents urging an end to separate classes.

The petitions were ignored in Jackson, Vicksburg, Clarksdale, Natchez and Yazoo City.

Unlike the Autherine Lucy case of Montgomery, Ala., a Mississippi Negro, Medgar Evers of Mound Bayou, applied for admission to the University of Mississippi shortly after the court decision, but his applicaton "was never completed."

Recommendations Asked

The Board of Trustees of Institutions of Higher Learning adopted an order that no person would be admitted to any state college unless his application is accompanied by letters of recommendation from five alumni of the institution.

Evers, unable to get the necessary letters for his application, came to Jackson and took a job as field secretary with the NAACP.

The Mississippi legislature, in joint assembly last Jan. 17, heard Gov. J. P. Coleman in his inaugural address vow that segregation will be maintained without violence.

Recommendations had already been made by Coleman to the Legal Education Advisory Committee on specific points to assure continued segregation.

Lawmakers went to work and enacted those recommendations. The bills are being studied by the young Governor at his Ackerman home this weekend before signing them into law.

Segregation Bills

The bills would: Prohibit agitation of lawsuits to end segregation, require school teachers to list organizations to which they belong, provide for separate facilities at bus and train stations, repeal the compulsory school attendance law, and give operators of restaurants, hotels and other places of business the right to chose their own customers.

The state had already amended its constitution to authorize the abolition of public schools as a last resort to prevent integration.

The state also has on its books the all-important pupil assignment law which Coleman has declared is "absolutely constitutional." It would apply in assigning students to schools — not on the basis of race or color—but on the basis of public health, welfare, safety and morals.

A bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives to create one University of Mississippi with "branch" campuses at the towns now having a state-supported institution of higher learning. This would provide Negro branches of the University at Jackson, Itta Bena and Alcorn, where Negro colleges are in existence.

Meanwhile, leaders of the legislative and executive departments plunged ahead on interposition, an old legal procedure by which a state could interpose its sovereign right against the federal court which had acted outside its province.

A 13-member committee, consisting of Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin, House Speaker Walter Sillers, five senators and six members of the House of Representatives, is now engaged in drafting the resolution of interposition.

Coleman said he favors an appropriation to tell the Mississippi story to the rest of the nation on its fight to preserve Southern social traditions and racial patterns. It would be an answer to adverse publicity about Mississippi in the "Yankee" press.

Mississippi's action on the interposition course follows closely that of Georgia, South Carolina, Virginia and Alabama.

The South is beginning to act in unity; and once it forces are united, racial integration is expected to face ever-increasing odds.

Miss - Ed

Mississippi Governor Brands Nullification Legal Poppycock

11-Man Legislative Panel Named to Chart State's Course

Atl Const 2/19/56

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 18—Mississippi's course in "interposing" its sovereignty against enforcement of the integration decisions of the United States Supreme Court will be charted by a 11-member legislative committee.

There is one thing certain—the avenue will steer clear of any sort of "nullification" movement since Gov. J. P. Coleman says that is "legal poppycock" and void of enforcement, except by military force which he said is "out of the question."

"It's all right to interpose your strength and power in every legal way, but talk of nullification is about like ordering the Mississippi River to run upstream or turning the eagle atop the Capitol to face north," he said.

Gov. Coleman pointed out that Alabama and Georgia have adopted resolutions declaring the decisions "null and void," yet "look at what has happened in those states."

"The golf courses of Atlanta have been opened to Negroes, as has the University of Alabama," he said. "Declaring null and void doesn't change a thing—the federal courts are still sitting in those states."

MISSISSIPPI

Gov. Coleman believes that Mississippi has numerous legal ways in which to interpose itself between the desegregation mandates. Fact is, he said a 1954 law for assignment of pupils on the basis of health, welfare, morals and community welfare is one avenue of interposition.

Strategy Meeting

The governor was one of the four chief executives who met recently at Richmond, Va., to adopt a segregation-strategy course. He said they agreed on the overall approach, but that some of the states planned more drastic actions than others—all with the same objective to preserve the Southern way of life.

It was on Gov. Coleman's return from the Virginia meeting that the current biennial session of the Legislature authorized appointment of a joint House and Senate committee to draft the interposition course.

That group met this week for organizational purposes and named Sen. Earl Evans Jr., of Canton, the president pro tem of the Senate, chairman, and Rep. George Payne Cossar of Tallahatchie County, vice chairman.

A subcommittee was delegated to draft the resolution of interposition. On it are Lieut. Gov. Carroll Gartin of Laurel, House Speaker Walter Sillers of Bolivar County, Sen. Hayden Campbell of Jackson and Rep. Thompson McClellan of Clay County.

Speaker Sillers said since Gov. Coleman "is the leader of our efforts to preserve segregation, we plan to confer with him."

"We just want to see if he is going along with us, or we're going along with him, which of course we will," he said.

In view of the governor's position on "nullification," Speaker Sillers explained that Mississippi will propose an "interposition resolution."

After the wording has been formulated and the whole committee agrees on the draft, Gov. Coleman is to go before the Legislature and speak for its adoption.

Legal Bypasses

Meanwhile, added legal bypasses to the integration decisions of the Supreme Court have been authorized by the Legislature. A series of bills designed to strengthen Mississippi's hold on segregation have been passed, almost unanimously.

Gov. Coleman looks on the bills, some of which he proposed, as interposition steps. At least, they are designed to present legal obstacles, which it may take years to clear, to any integration movements.

The bills were passed despite absence of any movement in Mississippi looking to integration in the public schools, senior colleges or public parks. Some of their opponents felt that the whites were "agitating" the situation, rather than the Negroes.

Some of the new bills presenting legal delays approved at the current legislative session are:

Prohibit out-of-state lawyers from "fomenting or agitating" lawsuits, and make it unlawful for anyone to solicit funds or donate money for the filing or prosecution of lawsuits.

Permit any public business, profession or trade to select its clientele and those it will serve, and subjecting those refusing to vacate such a place when asked to do so to prosecution as a trespasser.

Making it unlawful to create a disturbance or breach of the peace in any public place or business.

Safeguards the rights of Mississippians from interference by federal agents when they are acting in conformity with state laws or the state constitution. One senator complained that the FBI had been in his Bolivar County at least four times investigating charges he said were filed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The Delta Democrat-Times

HODDING CARTER
Editor and Publisher

JOHN T. GIBSON
General Manager

Greenville, Miss., Tuesday, February 21, 1956

Were it left for me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers or newspapers without a government, I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter. —Thomas Jefferson.

Clever Plan

Ed - Miss

IT IS STRANGE how the simpliest solutions to problems sometimes escape us. That was our immediate reaction Friday to the proposal by Rep. Stanford Young of Wayne County.

Mr. Young introduced a bill in the House that calls for one great big University of Mississippi, which would have branches at Oxford, Starkville, Hattiesburg, Cleveland, Columbus, Alcorn, Jackson and Itta Bena.

The latter three are, of course, sites of state-owned Negro colleges. As a part of the University of Mississippi, they could be the "attendance colleges" to which any Negro students seeking to enter the University would be sent.

The University of California is split up into several campuses this way. Other Universities have more than one campus. Why not Mississippi? It sounds like a perfectly sound and legal way to avoid the sort of thing that is today creating a havoc at the University of Alabama.

2/23/56
Ed
Miss
Chat

OGA TIMES: CHATTANOO

INTEGRATION SEEN CLOSING COLLEGES

Mississippi Governor Says State Wouldn't Support Mixed Schools

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 22 (AP) — Gov. J. P. Coleman said Tuesday it "is as inevitable as the sunrise" that Mississippi would close its institutions of higher learning if they were forced to accept Negro students.

He told his press conference state colleges must operate "with a decent regard for the people who support them."

"The people would not support integrated schools. To allow integration is to destroy schools."

"Right or wrong, it's an inescapable fact. It's impossible to get a Negro into a white school in Mississippi."

The Mississippi constitution already permits the Legislature to abolish white public elementary or high schools faced with accepting Negro students.

Would Cut Off Funds

Coleman said the Legislature would order closed any college faced with integration. Appropriations could be cut off, he added.

The governor charged the press with "making matters worse" by "continuing agitation of the (segregation) question."

He established a new press conference rule: "We will not discuss segregation unless there is a new development to justify it, because the more you agitate this old sore the worse it gets."

Then, he announced signing two more bills to help keep Negroes out of white society. He had sponsored the bills as a member of the legal education advisory committee last year.

They would permit choice of customers or clients and would require railroad and bus companies to provide separate waiting rooms for Negro and white passengers traveling within Mississippi.

ARISON GROUP TO GIVE

Mississippi Notebook

by TOM ETHRIDGE

Miss - Ed

Feb 1956

TWO OF A KIND

In New Orleans, a Loyola University professor has cancelled his speech at Ole Miss because of our University's stand on segregation and because jazz-loving Dr. Kershaw's invitation was withdrawn.

If the people of Mississippi had been consulted, neither of these ardent race mixers would have been invited here in the first place. Small wonder some leaders deem it necessary to screen campus speakers in our state.

JUST A RUMOR

An Illinois reverend and his attractive feminine "companion" have been found dead, suffocated by escaping gas in a North Mississippi tourist court.

There is no truth in the current rumor that he was en route to Ole Miss, to take part in Religious Emphasis Week.

"YEA, ALABAMA!!!"

Many Mississippians have a kindly feeling toward University of Alabama students for their rather vigorous protest against integration at the Tuscaloosa institution. Yet 'Bama students seem certain of denunciation by the nation's "liberal" press.

Oddly enough, the same "liberal" press had nothing but praise for rowdy Georgia Tech students who tore up Atlanta defending their "right" to play against a Negro in the Sugar Bowl. Sauce for the goose is not sauce for the gander, in the case of Alabama.

Ed. Miss

Delta Democrat-Times
Greenville, Miss., Mon., Feb. 13, 1956

Ole Miss To Try To Salvage Religious Emphasis Week Today

By JOHN HERBERS

JACKSON, Miss. (UP) — The University of Mississippi today begins a salvage job on its 1956 religious emphasis program that has been wrecked by cross-fire over the segregation question.

A student - faculty committee planned to meet tonight at Oxford, Miss., to revamp the program because all the scheduled speakers have withdrawn, protesting what they called political interference with academic freedom.

The state Senate last year adopted a resolution urging heads of state institutions to screen speakers appearing on the campus, especially those advocating a breakdown in racial segregation.

The resolution was introduced after a clergyman suggested in a talk at Mississippi Southern College that there should be small groups everywhere to refuse to take up arms and fight for their country.

The State College Board, which governs all the institutions of higher learning except the junior colleges, secretly adopted a screening order.

The annual religious emphasis program, scheduled to be held on Feb. 19 this year, got involved last summer.

TV Quiz Winner

A group called the Committee of 100 at the University invited the Rev. Alvin Kershaw of Oxford, Ohio, to be one of five speakers. Later, Kershaw won $32,000 on a television program and suggested giving part of it to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Immediately there were protests against Kershaw's appearance before the students. The college board investigated Kershaw's background and pronounced him acceptable.

Later, however, Kershaw wrote to the student newspaper and to Chancellor J. D. Williams saying he was in fact a member of the NAACP. Williams cancelled his talk.

"If the Rev. Kershaw had come here it would have wrecked the entire Religious Emphasis Week Program," Williams said. "Every body would have gone to hear him. The campus would have been full of newspaper, radio and television reporters. There would have been a student demonstration of some kind, and I am responsible for the welfare of this university."

Dr. Norton King, chairman of the sociology department, resigned in protest.

"How can one teach sociology without discussing the segregation issue?" King asked. "I have been slowly and reluctantly convinced that the administration and the board are no longer able to defend the freedom of thought, inquiry and speech which are essential for higher education to flourish."

Resigns in Protest

Two days later Dr. William Buchanan, assistant professor of government at Mississippi State College, resigned on the same grounds. He added his protest to the board's screening order and introduction in the Legislature of bills that "would make it a crime for a teacher of government to criticize any official or policy of state government."

One by one all the scheduled speakers for the religious emphasis program pulled out.

Williams admitted the incident "probably will be bad" for the university's scholastic rating but "not as bad for our school as the inevitable furor which would have resulted from Kershaw's appearance."

Newspapers took up the controversy.

"Just as prohibition cannot be enforced by law, segregation cannot be maintained by book burning," the Greenville Delta Democrat-Times said. "It's another example of the shotgun blasts shallow-thinking people are taking at the 'integration threat.'"

But the Jackson Daily News said if the state has any more instructors "of this sort in our higher institutions of higher learning they should follow the examples set by King and Buchanan. . .The truth is there should be a general housecleaning in the halls of learning in Mississippi. There are other rotten apples in the educational barrel that need to be tossed out."

★ ★ ★ ★

Times

...spaper Owned By The People ★

...iss., Tuesday, February 14, 1956 | City Edition | Price 5 Cents — 16 Pages

The Weather Forecast

Mostly cloudy and mild today, tonight and Wednesday, with showers this morning. Showers or thundershowers this afternoon, tonight and Wednesday. High today, 72, low tonight, 52, high tomorrow, 66. Outlook for Thursday: partly cloudy and cooler.

Governor Declares Kershaw Weakling In Hands of NAACP

Says Uproar Did State 'No Harm'

By WILLIAM E. KEITH
State Times Staff Writer

Gov. J. P. Coleman said Tuesday he considers the Rev. Alvin Kershaw a "weakling" and thinks the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People wrote the letter in which the Ohio Episcopalian rector announced that he is an active member of the NAACP.

Gov. Coleman had refrained from comment during the height of the Kershaw controversy, but he made some strong observations on the subject in his regular press conference Tuesday morning, now that the issue apparently has been resolved.

He put the "weakling" label on the controversial clergyman for his failure to tell the state college board (Board of Trustees, Institutions of Higher Learning) early in the game that he was an NAACP member.

The letter announcing this fact was written to the University of Mississippi campus publication after it appeared certain that the Rev. Kershaw would appear as a speaker at the university's annual "Religious Emphasis Week."

Gov. Coleman called the letter "the silliest, most inexcusable letter I ever heard of." It was after publication of this letter that Chancellor J. D. Williams changed his mind and revoked the invitation to the Rev. Kershaw.

Education

the letter in which the Ohio Episcopalian ... that he is an active member of the NAACP.

Gov. Coleman had refrained from comment during the height of the Kershaw controversy, but he made some strong observations on the subject in his regular press conference Tuesday morning, now that the issue apparently has been resolved.

He put the "weakling" label on the controversial clergyman for his failure to tell the state college board (Board of Trustees, Institutions of Higher Learning) early in the game that he was an NAACP member.

The letter announcing this fact was written to the University of Mississippi campus publication after it appeared certain that the Rev. Kershaw would appear as a speaker at the university's annual "Religious Emphasis Week."

Gov. Coleman called the letter "the silliest, most inexcusable letter I ever heard of." It was after publication of this letter that Chancellor J. D. Williams changed his mind and revoked the invitation to the Rev. Kershaw.

Raps Others

As for other out-of-state speakers who cancelled plans to appear following revocation of the invitation, Gov. Coleman said "If they had been interested in doing something for the religious welfare of the children they would have appeared as scheduled."

He said he thinks the entire Kershaw controversy has been resolved "without ten per cent of the uproar some expected" and expressed his belief that "no material harm has come of it."

He added that there is "no real substance" to statements by two Mississippi professors who resigned following the Kershaw ban claiming that freedom of speech and freedom of thought had suffered a set-back.

"Neither of them," he said, "can point to any specific incidence in which their freedoms of thought or speech has been circumscribed. They just wanted to try to start a sympathy strike for Kershaw."

He added:

"The fact remains that the University of Mississippi and Mississippi State are state institutions and belong to the state. They are not private institutions. The people maintain them and support them and are entitled to have their wishes considered."

Coleman . . .

Other subjects covered at the press conference:

NATIONAL POLITICS: Gov. Coleman said it was "utterly out of the question to begin with" that Mississippi would ever support either New York governor Averill Harriman or Tennessee senator Estes Kefauver for President and that Harriman's advocacy of "brute force" to back up the U. S. Supreme Court's anti-segregation decrees "only confirms that fact," while Sen. Kefauver "has a member of the NAACP on his headquarters staff."

INSURANCE PREMIUM TAX: The governor said some insurance companies "have thrown up a lobby like we had for the surtax during the special session last year" to work against its enactment. He said it would "be a disappointment to me if the legislature let itself be pressured and influenced by lobbies." He expressed confidence that the tax will be enacted. It will raise an estimated $1 million per biennium.

UTILITY REGULATION: Gov. Coleman said the House public utilities committee is "tee-totally working" on this measure, reading the bill section by section and considering all proposed amendments. He said he thinks the bill will be reported out of committee later this week and "should pass as now written." He said he favors letting municipalities continue to have the right to acquire utility distribution systems.

NULLIFICATION: The governor, noting that Georgia has passed a resolution declaring U. S. Supreme Court anti-segregation rulings "null and void," said talk of nullification "is like suggesting the Mississippi river run uphill." He said regardless of legislative resolutions, "federal courts will be sitting right on" and added that insistence that a state can nullify a U. S. Supreme Court decision is "misleading the people. When you do that, your hand eventually gets called, and and ought to be."

Education

Gets Life

PAGE 1

Delta Democrat-Times
e, Miss., Mon., Feb. 20, 1956

Sees More Harm Than Good In Law On Negro Teachers

Ed-Times

HATTIESBURG, Miss. (UP) — N. R. Burger, president of the state Negro Teachers Assn., said today a proposed law requiring Negro teachers to list the organizations to which they belong is "frightening" and threatens to do more harm than good.

Burger, principal of the Royal Street Negro high school here, said the law threatens the "freedom of speech and peaceful assembly" when directed against a specific group.

It will tend, Burger said, to "force underground many such activities that would have been better dealt with openly."

Backers of the legislation offered the law to help keep check on teachers who belong to organizations favoring racial integration.

"Many of us belong to or have held membership in churches and other organizations that presently views in conflict with those now held by local white citizens of Mississippi," Burger said. "Such membership was accepted when questions now before us were not considered at all.

"Thus, many Negroes are exposed to dangers today for membership in organizations which but a few days ago would have brought them higher status and praise."

Burger said he felt the "best minds of both races" are ready to seek "peaceful solutions rather than pursuing courses leading to further confusion and bitterness."

★ ★ ★

JACKSON (MISS.) DAILY NEWS
FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1956

One University, Eight Campuses Proposed in Bill

Ed Times

A proposal to create a state university with eight campuses scattered over the state as an aid in maintenance of racial segregation was before the Legislature Friday.

Rep Stanford Young of Wayne County introduced the bill in the House Thursday. It calls for university "branches" at Oxford, Starkville, Hattiesburg, Cleveland and Columbus, present locations of state-supported white colleges; and at Alcorn, Jackson and Itta Bena, sites of three state Negro colleges.

University students would be assigned to "attendance colleges" of the university which would be under control of the state college board here.

Ed. Miss

Miss. Governor Says Schools Go If Mixing Comes

(Copyright 1956 by The New York Times Co.)

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 21—Gov. J. P. Coleman told his press conference Tuesday Mississippi would close any white public school or college forced to accept a Negro student.

"The people of Mississippi simply will not support these institutions on an integrated basis," the governor said.

"Right or wrong, it's an inescapable fact. It is impossible to get a Negro into a white school in Mississippi. To allow integration would destroy the schools."

The state constitution was amended in December, 1954, to authorize the Legislature to abolish public elementary and high schools as a last resort to prevent racial integration.

Educ. Mississippi

Clarion Ledger 2/19/56

Mississippi Negro Teachers Concerned At New Legislation

Ed Miss

Fear Laws May Slow Progress

Some Proposals Are 'Frightening'

Negro teachers of Mississippi are concerned that some of the legislation now aimed at their race will hamper good will and continued progress in the state, they said in a statement issued here Saturday.

Over the signature of Prof. N. R. Burger of Hattiesburg, president of the state teachers association, the Legislative Committee of the association said some of the proposals "are frightening to us."

They mentioned specifically, the proposal to require Negro teachers to list all organizations to which they have belonged for five years, — and suggested that it is possible that such memberships might have been "accepted when questions now before us were not considered at all."

Prof. Burger, principal of the Royal Street High School in Hattiesburg, is an honor graduate of Alcorn A&M College of Mississippi, and holds the master's degree from Cornell University of Ithaca, N. Y. He has taught for 20 years in Mississippi public schools.

Text of the statement:

"Most of the best thinking people of our state are vitally concerned with maintaining and promoting the good of all the citizens of Mississippi. We realize that men of good will find it difficult to agree always on given problems or the best methods of finding a workable answer to such problems when isolated. Yet, we feel that we must go on in our search for an answer in a spirit of good will. It is in this spirit that a few responsible Negro leaders wish to point out some of the things we feel will make it increasingly difficult for us to achieve our goal of continued good will and progress here in Mississippi.

(Continued on Page 12)

Negro Teachers - - -

(Continued from Page 1)

"It is our humble opinion that laws are best for a people when they are few, just, simple to understand, and well administered. When laws create fears by being directed toward a specific group, such laws destroy those foundations upon which mutual understanding and co-operative action are based.

"As Negro leaders we fear that some of the laws now to be applied to us will hurt us more than they will help the cause of good relations and continued progress here in our great state. The law to require Negro teachers to list all organizations to which they have belonged for the past five years is frightening to most of us. If carried to ultimate conclusions, it could do serious harm to many without touching the problem it seeks to solve. Many of us belong to or have held membership in churches and other organizations, that presently hold views in conflict with those now held by local white citizens of Mississippi. Such membership was accepted when questions now before us were not considered at all. Thus, many Negroes are exposed to dangers today for membership in organizations which but a few days ago would have brought them higher status and praise.

"We feel that such laws as prescribe the freedom of speech and peaceful assembly, when directed against any specific group, create tensions and force underground many such activities that would have been better dealt with openly.

"Are we to assume that we have lost the right to assemble peacefully, to petition the proper authorities, and to use the press in seeking corrections for apparent wrongs affecting our people?

"We further feel that the future progress of Mississippi is of vital concern to all of us. We should seek to find ways of resolving our difference by other methods than passing laws that make such effort at friendly understanding increasingly more difficult. It is our humble belief that the best minds of both races stand ready to join hands in seeking peaceful solutions rather than pursuing courses leading to further confusion and bitterness. Such course is now within our reach; each hour's delay may be too late.

Ed. Miss

2/22/56

NEW YORK TIMES, WED

Mississippi Would Shut School Accepting Negro

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 21 (AP)—Gov. J. P. Coleman said today any Mississippi white public school including colleges forced to accept a Negro student would be abolished immediately.

"The people would not support integrated schools," he told his press conference. "To allow integration is to destroy schools."

He accused the press of "making matters worse" by "continued agitation of this question."

The Governor announced he had signed two bills he sponsored to help keep Negroes out of white society. They would permit choice of customers or clients and would require railroad and bus companies to provide separate waiting rooms for Negro and white passengers in intrastate travel.

No Funds for the Integrated

Ledger 2/22/56

Ed - Miss

State Would Close Schools If Negroes Enter—Coleman

By CHARLES M. HILLS

Gov. J. P. Coleman declared Tuesday that if a Negro succeeds in entering any institution of higher learning or any common school in Mississippi, the seat of learning would be immediately abolished.

"Not only would the legislature refuse to appropriate funds to operate an integrated institution," he cited, "but lawmakers would insist on immediate cessation of teaching activities there."

He said that the problem facing Mississippi is the building of adequate schools for both races and that he is directing his activites to that end.

Coleman said that proposals for making the state system of higher education or the university of Mississippi one big institution, including Negro colleges, is not a necessity now, but that it might become so in the future.

His statements were prompted by questioning of newsmen at his regular news conference Tuesday morning, in which the Kershaw incident and refusals of other preachers to speak at the Ole Miss religious emphasis week observance were taken up.

Coleman declared that the decision not to have Kershaw appear at Ole Miss came after the preacher himself wrote a letter to Chancellor J. D. Williams completely "changing his story of activities with the NAACP."

The governor denied that freedom of speech was abridged by the Kershaw refusal.

"He can speak anywhere in the state except at tax-operated institutions," Coleman said. "The people of Mississippi have a right to decide who shall speak in their institutions.

"Allowing men like Kershaw to spew their differences with the southern way of life would incur the wrath of our taxpayers and perhaps destroy our institutions," Coleman said. "We cannot have that."

Coleman---

(Continued from Page 1)

He said that the statements of the Rev. Duncan Gray, Jr., at Mississippi State College a few days ago were entirely a different category from the Kershaw incident.

Coleman said he worked to get Kershaw a speech at Ole Miss, only to have the preacher throw a monkey-wrench in the whole affair.

"Kershaw was no friend of Mississippi or he would never have pulled the stunts he did by writing that letter to Chancellor Williams," Coleman said.

The governor disputed those who claim that segregation is "un-Christian."

"I have read the New Testament about as closely as most people," he said, holding up a copy for the press to see.

"Nowhere in this Bible do I find that Jesus Christ ever preached integration, and there were plenty of different races in his time.

"In fact, I believe that Jesus would have looked with disfavor upon intermingling of the races. When he talked of the brotherhood of man, he was discussing the spiritual matters and not the inherently corrupt flesh," Coleman declared.

"I am not going to sacrifice our institutions in favor of speakers who denounce our own people," he declared. "This is not a matter of freedom of speech, but a matter of our people running their institutions as they see fit. People not employed by the state or her institutions have decided they want to run them. We can't have that from any speaker."

Coleman said that he thinks that hereafter, the authorities at state institutions of higher learning will take better care whom they invite to speak to the students.

The governor, after lengthy discussion of the segregation issue, announced to the press that he is making a rule.

"Hereafter, I shall refuse to discuss segregation unless something new arises," he said. "You all know how I stand, and it is a waste of time to re-hash old issues. If something new arises, I will be glad to talk with you about it."

He said that he does not believe the legislature will override his veto of a bill having to do with curtailing investigations by the FBI of state balloting.

2/22/56

The Clarion-Ledger

T. M. HEDERMAN ..... Editor 1921-1948 R. H. HENRY ..... Editor 1871-1921
R. M. HEDERMAN, JR..... Manager T. M. HEDERMAN, JR. .. Editor

"There are disloyalties and there are crimes which shock our sensibilities, which may bring suffering upon those who are touched by their immediate results, but there is no disloyalty and no crime in all the category of human weakness which compares with the failure of probity in the conduct of public trust. The breaking down of the faith of the people in the honesty of their government and in the integrity of their institutions, the lowering of the respect for standards of honor which prevail in high places, are crimes for which punishment can never atone."

Miss Ed

Fine Freedom at Ole Miss

Despite some rumors and charges inspired during controversy over a recent and regrettable incident, University of Mississippi students retain, cherish and use freedom of the press, freedom of speech, freedom to think—and freedom to pray and to worship as their minds and hearts move them as free individuals.

Thus many of the University's conscientious and sincere students are carrying out an impressive and potentially useful and fruitful substitute or revised form of the officially abandoned Religious Emphasis Week at the University.

One such student makes these things clear, directly and indirectly, in a short, fervent, persuasive note to The Clarion-Ledger.

That note, we believe, should be of interest, cheer and inspiration to many readers, many thoughtful citizens, especially many parents of University students. Read it slowly:

"Today at 10:00 o'clock three hundred sincere students filed in Fulton Chapel to worship God. Every student in that chapel this morning was thanking God for the privilege that we still have to pray and worship as free individuals. It made me realize the freedom we now have and what it would be if suddenly this privilege and freedom were stamped out.

We are having a Religious Emphasis Week here at Ole Miss, maybe not the way it was planned, but we students today were worshipping our God in a way that affected our hearts deeply."

Read it again, ladies and gentlemen!

We submit it as timely, cheering, mind-stirring and heart-touching reading for citizens of Mississippi, especially parents of students, who have faith and love and hope in the University and in the lives and freedoms of its present and coming generations of students, and who may have been worried by some recent developments and reports.

Editorial

THE CLARION-LEDGER, JACKSON, MISS., MONDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 27, 1956

Voice of the People

Letters to the Editor must be brief, must be signed (though name may be withheld on request) and must avoid defamatory or abusive statements. The Editor reserves the right to reduce lengthy letters and to limit the number of letters on any one subject.

Dear Editor:

I wish to add my "two cents worth" to what Charlie Horner has written about using the "Christian Spirit" to help solve our racial problems.

It seems to me that our situation is this: We are trying to hold the front gate closed with one hand while at the same time trying to "tidy up" our back yard. If we could develop this Christian Spirit and the Negroes would have the proper patience, then we could leave the front gate. We could also conserve the energies which we now are using trying to convince other parts of the country that our "way of life" is best for the Southern people (white and black). Our elected leaders could then concentrate on helping the Negroes to have better segregated schools, and we all could help them continue their development as in the past.

If we deliberately place a BAD DOG at the front gate to "Bite", then we will develop hatreds between races, similar to the hatreds between peoples of Europe. However, with the "outside influences" trying to change our way of life, it seems that we need "latches" in the way of "States-Rights and "Interposition" to keep our gate closed until it can be left 'wide open" again.

A FAITHFUL READER
Jackson, Miss.,

2/26/56
Chat Ed.
Miss

4 SPEAKERS LEFT TO KEEP RESPECT

Withdrew From Mississippi State Program Because of Silence Request

AUSTIN, Tex., Feb. 25 (AP)—Dr. Blake Smith, University Baptist Church pastor, says he and three other scheduled speakers who withdraw from Mississippi State College's Religious Emphasis Week Program did so to maintain self-respect.

"We withdrew from the campus because we did not want to cause any embarrassment to a fine institution like Mississippi State," Dr. Smith said after returning home.

The ministers had been told they were not free to say publicly that "Christianity and segregation are incompatible."

"Texas has its problems, but thank God we can discuss them," Dr. Smith told a reporter.

The pastor said he believes the events causing his withdrawal from the program were precipitated by what he called an "irresponsible and inflammatory" Mississippi press and by political pressure exerted by the Citizens Council.

Dr. Smith described the spirit of the students and administration at Mississippi State College as "wonderful."

"On the first day, we discovered that the race question eclipsed every other issue," said Dr. Smith.

"The university administration requested us not to discuss the subject on or off the campus, even when the question was raised by students, and not to issue any statements to the press concerning our personal convictions on this subject, even after one of our team has been misrepresented by the press.

"Four of us felt we could not accede to this request and withdrew."

Established 1837

Clarion Ledger Ed Miss

Jury Claims Books In School Libraries Favor Integration

By ODELL McRAE

LAUREL, Miss.—An Ellisville circuit court grand jury report, released to the press Thursday charges that Jones county elementary school children are coming in contact with school library books which support integration of the races.

The sensational charges came to light in a final report from the grand jury following a three-day probe and pointed out that proponents of integration, through many book companies and publishing houses, are using books in the elementary schools and among children as a "Trojan Horse" to tear down the teachings and principles in the Southern way of life.

District Attorney Grover Doggette and County Prosecutor Leonard Melvin, Jr., who worked with the grand jury in its probe, said textbooks for the county elementary schools are screened but that school libraries do not follow a screening policy.

"This Ellisville grand jury discovery that proponents of integration and enemies of segregation are planting books in the school libraries for our children to poison their minds may be statewide and may stir up similar charges across the entire state and throughout the South", Doggette and Melvin predicted in a joint statement Thursday.

The grand jury reports said its investigation produced a book at one elementary school library used by sixth grade students that sought to spread the proproganda of integration and destroy the argument for segregation by playing up the social equalities among the races throughout the north and other sections of the nation. This book was a work of fiction, the report said.

"These books are camouflaged and made appealing to the eyes of our youth by using covers and pictures to attract their attention and thereby to encourage the reading of this camouflaged proproganda", the report charged.

The report did not name a book company or publishing house involved. Neither was an involved elementary school named. Nor did it give the title of any such book. But the grand jurors recommended that the State Superintendent of Education, County Superintendent of Education and superintendents of separate school districts give serious thought to the screening of all books, magazines and periodicals used in the school system and weed out those books that reflect criticism on the southern way of life.

The report said "the time has come when all must assert themselves in support of that which we know to be for our own best interests."

John M. Caughman, superintendent of the Laurel School System, said all textbooks and library books used in schools here are screened. He said a selection committee purchases library books only after they have been read and approved by the school principal or a qualified member of the faculty.

Bernard Powell, Jones County superintendent of education although not officially informed of the grand jury charges Thursday, said he will take immediate action toward adopting a screening policy at all county schools in the purchase of library books.

Powell has jurisdiction over 27 elementary schools and 14 high schools of Jones county. Schools here and at Ellisville, eight miles to the South, are not under his jurisdiction.

The sensational report was returned to Circuit Judge Lunsford Casey, who convened a two-weeks term at Ellisville Monday. Jones county has two judicial districts, one at Ellisville, the other at Laurel, and Judge Casey convenes a circuit court and grand jury here March 19.

JACKSON (MISS.) DAILY NEWS

SATURDAY, MARCH 3, 1956

Library, Textbooks Hit In Segregation Dispute

Ed Miss

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The dispute over racial segregation has spread to Mississippi libraries.

Approved by the Mississippi House and sent to the Senate is a bill requiring the State Library Commission to buy books emphasizing white supremacy.

One Mississippi legislator, Rep. Walter Phillips, called it "thought control"—a phrase made famous by Japanese police action during World War II.

Gov. J. P. Coleman has declined comment on the two-year-old measure.

In south Mississippi, a Jones County grand jury called for statewide screening of school and library books to cull those critical of the Southern segregated way of life.

No action has been taken on the grand jury request.

Unknown to most Mississippians, Rep. Russell Fox of Claiborne County included in a $192,000 Library Commission appropriation for 1954-56 a stipulation that $5,000 must be spent for "books dealing with the subject of ethnology."

Then, according to commission records, Fox told the Purchasing Department what type books to buy. All uphold white supremacy.

The same bill — with minor changes — came up this week for re-enactment in the House. It passed. But, debate brought this statement by Rep. Phillips from the floor:

"You are legislating thought control. The United States fought Hitler during World War II because he advocated a master race and required his book 'Mein Kampf' to be in every library and school."

Hitler also burned books which disagreed with the Nazi way of life.

Ordinarily, the commission buys five or six copies of the same book "to make our meagre book budget ($38,000 a biennium) cover all subjects and materials for all ages."

The commission last year spent $200 for 25 copies of "Black Monday," 47 of "White America," 50 of "Unending Hate," 14 of "My Old Kentucky Home, Good Night," 20 of "You and Segregation," and 10 each of "Cult Of Equality" and "Whither Solid South."

Commission records show few persons are reading them.

Because of that situation, Fox this week made a change in his 1954 $5,000 special ethnology fund to require $500 of it to be used to tell Mississippians how and where to get these white supremacy books.

Under current appropriations, the commission has less than $800 to spend for publicity to tell Mississippians about the other 70,000 books on its shelves.

Last year, the commission found it impossible to buy $5,000 worth of white supremacy books without ordering several hundred copies of each adn went to the dictionary for a complete meaning of "ethnology."

As a result, the commission bought $3,000 worth of books on the historical aspects of ethnology and anthropology.

Most of these books are highly technical and are used as reference by students.

Though considerably disturbed by all the publicity handed her library commission, Mrs. Lura Currier, the director, saw one bright light:

"At least this Legislature realizes the value of books. Previous Legislatures have hend appropriations to a minimum, arguing that children ought to be plowing, not wasting their time reading."

Education: Mississippi

Invited Clergymen. . . Ed. Miss 3/3/56

Refuse To Talk Religion At Second Miss. College

STARKVILLE, Miss. — (ANP) — The withdrawal of four ministers scheduled to speak during Mississippi State college's Religious Emphasis Week program has brought collapse of the event. A similar program at the University of Mississippi was cancelled after all the ministers withdrew. The segregation issue prompted the withdrawals.

The Rev. Duncan Gray Jr. of Cleveland, Miss., an Episcopal minister informed officials at Mississippi State that he could not appear because he would not be allowed to mention segregation in a talk on "The Changing South."

* * *

OTHER MINISTERS who gave the explanation "we feel that in good conscience we cannot meet our engagements for the rest of the week" are Dr. Blake Smith, pastor of University Baptist Church, Austin, Tex.; Dr. John J. Compton, professor of philosophy at Vanderbilt university and Rev. Stewart Currio of Fulton, Mo., a graduate student of Emory university. Three persons who remained on the program are all Mississippians.

Dr. Gray said the issue came up after he told a group of Presbyterian students that "segregation is incompatible with the Christian faith."

He denied, however, that he had been asked by College President Ben Hilburn to withdraw from the program.

Miss. Drops Compulsory School Laws

JACKSON, Miss.—(A N P)—Mississippi state senators voted Monday to repeal the state's compulsory school attendance laws as another step toward keeping Negroes out of white schools.

The bill is part of the Legal Education Advisory Committee's six-bill program, aimed at getting around the Supreme Court's school anti-segregation decisions.

Other bills have been introduced without LEAC approval and all have passed without discussion as fast as they hit the senate floor.

Gov. J. P. Coleman has agreed to sign the six LEAC measures, although he has not acted on any of them as yet.

Ed. Miss 2/25/56 atl World

MONDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 20, 1956

THE CLARION-LEDGER, JACKSON, MISS.,

Religious Week Is Planned At State

Ed. Miss.

Withdrawals Fail To Affect Schedule

STATE COLLEGE — Religious Emphasis Week at Mississippi State College will proceed as scheduled February 19-24 despite the withdrawal of two of the expected participants, according to Earnest Price, YMCA secretary.

The two who have withdrawn are Father Josiah Chatham of St. Richard's Parish, Jackson, and Rabbi James A. Wax of Temple Israel, Memphis, Tenn.

"We regret that Father Chatham and Rabbi Wax have seen fit to withdraw," said YMCA Secretary Price. "In spite of this, we expect the students and faculty to have a good religious experience here next week. We have assurances that Dr. Blake Smith of Austin, Texas, and the other scheduled leaders will be here. We have already made the readjustments necessary to carry on the full schedule of Religious Emphasis Week."

The first REW meeting is scheduled in Lee hall auditorium at 7:30 Sunday evening. Dr. Blake Smith, pastor of the University Baptist church, Austin, Texas, will preach.

Daily convocations will be held at 11 a. m. in Lee Hall auditorium. The speaker will be Reverand Stuart Currie of Emory University, Atlanta, Monday and Tuesday; and Dr. Blake Smith will address the students and faculty Wednesday and Thursday.

Other discussions with students and faculty will be led by Dr. Smith and Mr. Currie, and by other religious leaders: Dr. Mary Louise Gehring of Mississippi Southern College, Dr. John Compton of Vanderbilt University, Rev. Duncan M. Gray, Jr., of Cleveland, Rev. Bernard Mounger of Corinth, and Rev. John Sutphin of Jackson.

ning, February 25, 1956

Ed. Miss

Dulles Violent

Clarion Ledger

Governor Signs Attendance Bill

Moves To Protect School Segregation

By The Associated Press

Gov. J. P. Coleman signed a bill repealing the compulsory school attendance laws—a move to protect the state in integration cases.

The bill was proposed by the Legal Education Advisory Committee, set up to find ways to evade the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation.

Members argued last year the state would have firmer legal standing in integration cases if it did not require children—Negro and white—to attend school.

In addition, members said, the school attendance laws were not enforced in many counties.

Both the Senate and the House gave the bill overwhelming votes of approval.

Coleman also signed two other bills:

1. Repealing the absentee voting laws. Under the new law, only qualified voters in the Armed Forces may cast absentee ballots.

Coleman had reported "widespread abuse" of the absentee ballot during last summer's elections and promised to clean up the situation.

2. Levying a 1½ per cent tax on Blue Cross Hospitalization Insurance premiums. The tax would produce about $174,000 every two years.

Education: Miss

Clarion-Ledger 3/6/56 Cloudy

VOL. CXVII NO. 319 Full AP and INS Reports

Ed. Mess

Senators Approve Huge 'Budgetbuster' Measure On Schools

Legislators Cheer As Governor Signs Interposition Bill

By CHARLES M. HILL

The Mississippi House of Representatives late Monday cheered announcement by Speaker Walter Sillers, Bolivar, that the governor had signed the interposition resolution upon which this state and the South count heavily to forestall integration of schools.

Announcement of Gov. J. P. Coleman's action came a few minutes before the House adjourned at 4:45 p. m., until 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon.

The resolution, unanimously adopted by both houses of the legislature last week, memorializes the Congress to stand between the U. S. Supreme Court and the states to protect the rights of the states to govern their school and prevents further juristic legislation which encroaches on the powers which the states retain for themselves.

In other actions of the day, the House voted 77 to 32 in favor of HB 155, a measure steered to passage by Rep. Gene Caldwell, Hinds, which limits practicing dentists in this state to those who are educated in the United States.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which HB 253, the act forcing tubercular patients to take treatment or be isolated, was tabled and the measure now goes to the Senate.

The House voted 107 to 10 in favor of HB 398, an act which raises the educational requirements to secure a license to practice optometry, the measure being steered to passage by its author, Spurgeon Eure, of Forrest with the aid of Rep. Chris Faser, Montgomery, chairman of the public health and quarantine committee.

Several wildlife bills drew exlosive debate in the House, as they were brought up by Rep. Pettis Walley, Perry, chairman of the Game, Fish and Wildlife committee.

Topping the list was an act, HB 392, which provides a $150 fine, 3 months in jail and confiscation of guns and vehicles owned by any person hunting deer by headlight.

The membership of the lower

(Continued On Page Four)

PAGE (s) MISSING

Ed Brian 3/12/56 Presbyterian Outlook

Leaders Withdraw from Miss. State Program

JACKSON, MISS. (RNS)—Six clergymen withdrew from the Religious Emphasis Week program at Mississippi State College in Starkville over the racial segregation issue.

Three of them acted after Duncan Gray, Jr., an Episcopalian of Cleveland, Miss., said he would not participate because he could not agree not to mention segregation in an address on "The Changing South." The other two said there was too much pressure on both sides of the segregation question.

The withdrawals left only three speakers on the program—all from Mississippi: Bernard V. Munger (Presbyterian), Corinth; John Sutphin (Methodist), Jackson; and Mary Lou Gehring, Mississippi Southern professor.

Josiah Chatham, pastor of St. Richard's Roman Catholic church here and Rabbi James Wax of Memphis, Tenn. withdrew because of the pressure problem.

The others are Blake Smith, pastor of University Baptist church, Austin, Tex.; John J. Compton, professor of philosophy at Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn.; and Stuart D. Currie, presently doing graduate work at Emory University, Atlanta, Ga.

In a joint statement explaining their action, the latter three said:

"One of our team has felt obliged to withdraw. We have professed our willingness to proceed with Religious Emphasis Week in full observance of President Ben F. Hilbun's request to avoid discussion of segregation in our meetings on the campus. Since, however, we have not been made to feel free to announce our personal conviction in regard to Duncan Gray Jr.'s statement which was quoted in the press, we feel that in good conscience we cannot meet our engagements for the rest of the week."

In his statement, Mr. Gray said the issue had arisen after he told a Presbyterian Westminster Fellowship group in Starkville that "segregation is incompatible with the Christian faith."

As a result of that talk, he explained, President Hilbun requested speakers not to discuss segregation during Religious Emphasis Week "because of the inflammatory nature of the issue."

Mr. Gray said that President Hilbun did not ask him to retract his statement or withdraw from the program. But the clergyman said that he could not promise not to mention segregation in his Religious Emphasis Week talks and therefore was withdrawing.

Earlier, the Religious Emphasis Week program at the University of Mississippi was cancelled when both out-of-state and local clergymen withdrew over the cancellation of a talk by an Ohio minister who is said to favor racial integration.

—o—

Plans to study the status of academic freedom in Southern colleges have been announced by a committee of the American Association of University Professors. The study was stimulated by the "Kershaw incident" at the University of Mississippi where a Religious Emphasis Week invitation was withdrawn because invited speakers would not pledge themselves not to discuss segregation.

Ed Miss
3/10/57
Chat

OOGA TIMES: CHATTANOOG

MISSISSIPPI'S AIM IS EQUAL SCHOOLS

House Defeats Attempt to Put Off Improvements in Negro Facilities

JACKSON, Miss., March 10 (AP) — Mississippi's representatives today showed their determination to put into effect as soon as possible the state's program to equalize Negro and white schools.

The program's opponents sought unsuccessfully to have referred to a favorable committee a bill postponing from July 1, 1957 to July 1, 1958 the effective date of the program.

Under present law, county schools must be reorganized into school districts by 1957 to qualify for state school construction funds.

Yesterday, education committee chairman James Baxter of Lauderdale County announced his group killed a bill calling for the same one-year delay.

Later, Rep. Lovie Gore of Oktibbeha County called up a similar bill by Rep. Luther Adams of Lee County and sought to have it referred to the rules committee where opposition to the program is strong.

But the House declined.

Had the Legislature passed the bill, there was some doubt whether the governor would have signed it. Gov. J. P. Coleman has told the press: "The state's school laws will remain on the books."

NEGROES WELCOMED BY TEXAS STUDENTS

AUSTIN, Tex., March 9 (AP)—A resolution "welcoming" Negroes to the University of Texas was adopted by the student assembly of the university last night.

The student resolution "welcoming the enrollment of all eligible students to the University of Texas without regard to race, creed or color" came shortly after university administrative officials announced that housing owned and operated by the university will continue a segregation policy.

Education

Miss - Ed

THE CLARION-LEDGER, JACKSON, MISS., TUESDAY MORNING, MARCH 13, 1956

Eastland Praised By State's Solons

U. S. Senator James O. Eastland was Monday afternoon commended by the Mississippi legisture for his fight to preserve the rights of the state against U. S. Supreme Court encroachments.

The lower chamber unanimously adopted and sent to the state senate a resolution authored by Speaker Walter Sillers, Bolivar, which took cognizance of the high honor paid the senior senator from this state by the U. S. Senate in elevating him to the chairmanship of the powerful judiciary committee.

Text of the resolution as presented to the house personally by Speaker Sillers, and which was signed by practically every member and adopted unanimously is as follow:

"The Senate of the United States, by an overwhelming vote, has elevated to the Chairmanship of the Committee on Judiciary Honorable James O. Eastland, Senior Senator from the State of Mississippi.

'In so doing, that illustrious body has not only signally honored Senator Eastland, but has placed its emphatic stamp of approval upon his loyalty, ability, patriotism, zeal, integrity, and unswerving devotion to duty; and

In so honoring this able statesman the Senior Senator from Mississippi, the Senate of the United States has also cast luster upon the State of Mississippi and placed Senator Eastland where he rightfully belongs with that immortal galaxy of great Mississippians who have preceded him in the Senate of the United States and who so nobly served Mississippi and the Nation in the years that have passed.

'BE IT RESOLVED BY THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE STATE OF MISSISSIPPI, THE SENATE CONCURING THEREIN, THAT:

"This Legislature extend to Senator Eastland our sincere gratulations upon his elevation to the Chairmanship of the Committee on Judiciary of the United States Senate, and commend the Senate for its action in elevating him to this position of high honor;

"This Legislature commend Senator Easltand for the strong, able, and courageous leadership he has given the United States Senate and the Nation, and for the statesmanship he has displayed in his outstanding fight to protect the reserved powers of all the States of the Union against the unlawful invasion and usurpation thereof by the Supreme Court and other branches of the Federal Government;

'We commend him for his firm stand against those who would repeal or modify the provisions of the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act and throw down the bars of restriction against immigration into the United States of Communists and other subversive aliens who would flood this country with hired agents and spies bent on destroying our form of government and setting up in its stead a Communistic - Socialistic dictatorship;

'We commend him fir his firm stand and aggressive leadership in support of segregation in the public schools, colleges, and other public institutions and activities, and his militant fight against integration in any form;

We commend him for his firm and aggressive leadership in exposing to the public and affiliation of some of the top NAACP leadership with communistic and subversive fronts and organizations;

"We commend and endorse the valiant efforts and the courageous fight he is making to protect this government from the onslaughts being made against it by enemies within, to the end that this nation of free people shall never perish, but shall live on forever.

"BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States Senate, to Senator James O. Eastland, and to the press.

---

march 13, 56

JACKSON (MISS.) DAILY NEWS

'If Segregation Is Lost, All Is Lost,' Group Says

Miss

The State Educational Finance Commission today warned its opponents not to lose sight of the objective of the equalization program and to realize that "if segregation is lost, all is lost."

A statement issued Monday after a special meeting restated the primary goal of the program to bring Negro and white schools on a par as "separation of the races in the public schools of this state."

The commission met apparently to answer critics who oppose what they call "super-consolidation" in the revamping of the state's county school districts.

The policy statement said further redistricting was cut off until public meetings have been held for the purpose of fully informing the people as to the details of the proposed reorganization." The commission said it plans to sponsor such meetings.

Objectors have said that in the rush to streamline the schools by the July 1, 1957, deadline, the people have not been allowed to know what is happening to the present county school systems.

Answering a charge that the commission is jamming too many children into single county districts, the group said it "does not intend to make a practice of approving municipal separate school districts to embrace an entire county except where unusual circumstances make it necessary."

Some foes claim that "superconsolidation" would deprive rural children of participating in extracurricular activities on an equal basis with city children, because they would be forced to take long rides on county school buses.

3-13-56

Says Segregation A School Necessity

The Education Finance Commission (EFC), charged with consolidating school districts, said today a segregated school system is the only way to operate public schools in Mississippi.

Referring to schools, the EFC said in a prepared statement, "if segregation is lost, all is lost."

The commission issued the statement in answer to "misinformation which seems to be circulating . . . with reference to the functions" of the commission.

The statement listed the intentions and policies of the commission, including:

1. The commission "will not consider any further re-organizations in any county until public meetings have been held for the purpose of fully informing the people as to the details of the proposed re-organization."

Under state law, county school districts must be consolidated to qualify for state school construction funds.

2. No child shall be required to ride a school bus longer than one hour per trip.

3. "The commission does not intend to make a practice of approving municipal separate school districts to embrace an entire county except where unusual circumstances make it mandatory."

Last year the EFC approved reorganization of Adams County into one municipal separate school district. The county objected and the case was dismissed by chancery court.

4. "The commission only passes upon plans that have previously been approved by county boards of education and boards of trustees of municipal separate school districts and has no authority to force . . . re-organization on any particular plan."

MISS. COUNCIL ON HUMA
1104 LYNCH ST.
JACKSON 3, MISS.

e Delta Democrat-Times

ssociated Press (AP) Greenville, Mississippi Tuesday, March 13, 1956 Price 5c

Cafe-Owner Faces Charges Of Assault With Intent To Kill

JACKSON (UP) — A 25-year-old white cafe owner today faced charges of murder and assault with intent to kill in the death of one Negro man and the serious wounding of another here last Friday night.

Willoughy Luther Lynch yesterday was held for a Hinds County grand jury for the murder of Jeffie White and the wounding of Isom Casse. Lynch shot the Negroes as they brawled in his cafe, claiming that one of them attempted to attack him.

Bond was set at $5,000 on each of the two charges.

House Debates White Supremacy Teaching

By DOUGLAS STARR

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—A proposal to teach white supremacy in elementary and high schools was sent back to an unfavorable Education Committee in the Mississippi Hou of Representatives.

And the Senate reduced by half a stipulation that the Library Commission use $5,000 of its $37,000 book fund for books "pointing up fundamental differences, in addition to physical differences, between the races."

Action on both issues yesterday marked a tentative defeat for Rep. Russell Fox of Claiborne County, author of both proposals and a state leader in the program to strengthen the barriers between Negroes and whites in all phases of Mississippi life.

See More Action

Further action is expected later.

Rep. James Baxter of Lauderdale County, chairman of the Education Committee, had called up for consideration an administration bill to require Mississippi history be taught in high schools.

But Fox successfully inserted an amendment to require elementary schools to teach white supremacy.

"All children, white and Negro, are entitled to know the fundamental differences, in addition to physcal differences, between the races," he said.

"And if no textbooks has been written, and there should have been one years ago, we can find somebody to write one real quick."

Rep. Stanford Young of Wayne County inserted an amendment to require high schools to teach "the value and principles of segregation."

All-Out Fight

"I thought this was an all-out fight between the forces of segregation and integration," he told the House. "It would be useless to teach anything if we don't teach this.

"We ought to teach the white students the value of segregation and it would be a great help to teach Negroes value and pride in their race."

But Rep. Z. P. Polk of Jefferson Davis County disagreed: "This teaching would be contrary to what Negroes believe. They wouldn't study it even if we required it."

As soon as the two amendments had been approved, the House sent the bill back to the Education Committee.

In the Senate, the Finance Committee cut to 2,500 the amount the Library Commission was directed to spend for segregation books.

But Sen. Flavous Lambert of Belmont held the bill on a motion to reconsider the passing vote, saying he would seek to remove the requirement.

Not Democratic

"It is not democratic to tell the commission what books it should buy," he said. "If it wants to buy the books, that is all right, but it should not be told what books to buy."

Last year, on order of the Legislature, the commission bought $200 worth of white supremacy books.

Ordinarily, the commission buys half a dozen copies of the same title. But Fox had suggested the commission buy extra copies of white supremacy books, including as many as 40 copies of "Unending Hate" and "White America."

Mississippi Yet to Fulfill 'Separate, Equal' Doctrine

By GLADWIN HILL
New York Times News Service

Chat. 3/14/56

(This is one of a series of reports by a team of New York Times reporters surveying the South for results of the Supreme Court's school integration decision.)

Of all the Southern states, Mississippi is probably the farthest from integration in both word and deed.

Its reaction to the Supreme Court's school integration decree has been the most intransigent. It has been tinged, in the words of one of Mississippi's own conservatives, with hysteria.

There has been no Negro integration. The state has declared officially over and over that there is not going to be any. Instead it has been engrossed in a frenzy of legislative proposals, some bizarre, designed to fend off integration "for 20 years—or more."

Traditionally Mississippi had given only partial recognition to the doctrine of "separate but equal" facilities enunciated by the Supreme Court in 1896. Now it is evincing sudden enthusiasm for this repudiated concept, at least in the field of lower education.

Mississippi's distinctive racial attitudes customarily are ascribed to the fact that almost half its population is Negro—the highest ratio of any state. But this appears to be an oversimplification. There are areas elsewhere with higher ratios of Negroes where attitudes are more moderate. Mississippi's outlook can be explained only in terms of its character and background as a state.

Physically, it is about the size of New York, flat and gently rolling open country and forests. Politically, it is an aggregation of small, predominantly agricul-

See Page Four, Column Three

3/14/56

THE CHATTANOO

MISSISSIPPI SHORT ON EQUAL SCHOOLS

Rising Economic Status of Negro Is Factor as State Looks to the Inevitable

From Page One

tural communities—less than a score with as many as 10,000 inhabitants — island-like in their isolation. The white population is almost uniformly descended from Anglo-Saxon settlers from the Atlantic Seaboard for generations back.

Down the years Mississippi's largely agricultural economy, pegged on cotton, has yielded steadily decreasing revenue in relation to the growth and diversification of other states, leaving Mississippi the poorest state in the Union. There is little question that the restricted productivity of half its manpower —the Negro half—has been a sizable factor in this.

Recent decades have brought a succession of blows to the comfortable and once-lucrative socio-racial pattern inherited from slavery days. The New Deal, with its social legislation and exaltation of "the forgotten man," tended to put plantation-style paternalism, the keystone of the segregation system, out of business. The industrial boom of World War II gave Mississippi's Negroes, while they remained politically impotent, a degree of economic enfranchisement. The war also cracked Mississippi's isolation, taking young people of both races abroad and exposing them to new concepts.

But amid these buffets to their ancient mold, Mississippians, like other Southerners, adhered to the pattern they knew.

Today a good many Mississippians give tacit intimations — such as continual references to staving off integration "for twenty years"—of sensing that the ancient pattern to some degree is doomed.

But upon their intimate, unacknowledged soul-searching a regionally alien voice, from the nation's highest tribunal, suddenly intruded. It declared that Mississippi had been treating a large segment of its humanity unjustly. It compared Mississippi's standards unfavorably, by inference, with a Northern yardstick of purported racial equality that Mississippians consider hypocritical or fraudulent.

The majority reaction was the universal reaction of individuals who consider themselves unfairly rebuked for behavior long sanctioned: indignation, denial, intransgence.

Not 'Armed Camp'

The atmosphere at the Emmett Till murder trial last fall created a widespread impression that Mssisssippi was an armed camp. This is not true. A person can drive the length and breadth of Mississippi today and hardly know he is in a Southern state. Animus is directed at the paternalism, the keystone of the segregation system, out of business. The industrial boom of World War II gave Mississippi's Negroes, while they remained politically impotent, a degree of economic enfranchisement. The war also cracked Mississippi's isolation, taking young people of both races abroad and exposing them to new concepts.

But amid these buffets to their ancient mold, Mississippians, like other Southerners, adhered to the pattern they knew.

Today a good many Mississippians give tacit intimations — such as continual references to staving off integration "for twenty years"—of sensing that the ancient pattern to some degree is doomed.

But upon their intimate, unacknowledged soul-searching a regionally alien voice, from the nation's highest tribunal, suddenly intruded. It declared that Mississippi had been treating a large segment of its humanity unjustly. It compared Mississippi's standards unfavorably, by inference, with a Northern yardstick of purported racial equality that Mississippians consider hypocritical or fraudulent.

The majority reaction was the universal reaction of individuals who consider themselves unfairly rebuked for behavior long sanctioned: indignation, denial, intransgence.

Not 'Armed Camp'

The atmosphere at the Emmett Till murder trial last fall created a widespread impression that Mssisssippi was an armed camp. This is not true. A person can drive the length and breadth of Mississippi today and hardly know he is in a Southern state. Animus is directed at the Supreme Court, the federal government, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the North generally, rather than at the local Negroes.

There is tension in Mississippi. But it is a tension less of interracial animosity than one of engendered by paralled frustrations. The whites generally are bent on maintaining their "way of life"; the Negroes want something better. Neither group has, at this juncture, the power to secure its desires. Both groups are conscious that their destinies are being shaped by forces that transcend local and state boundaries and are to a great extent beyond their control.

This frustration on the part of whites in a few communities has erupted into attacks on a few individuals Negroes and pressures on non-conforming whites. But the incidents have not been typical of the general situation.

Mass action against Negroes, such as pressures to drive them wholesale from the state, has not materialized for one evident reason: the Negroes are economically important. Unlike twenty to thirty years ago, they now represent a sizable fraction of consumer purchasing power. And they constitute a big segment of the labor supply on which Mississippi is dependent in its effort to "balance agriculture with industry" and make economic headway.

Instead of reacting violently, white Mississippians have taken a position behind a wall of self-justification. This has consisted largely of reiterating the rationalizations of segregation with which the South has reassured itself for nearly a century. At one extreme these start with racial-superiority notions and continue through various stages of dilution down to the contention that integration is out of the question because "Negroes are dirty."

Because of Mississippi's heavy Negro population the commonest argument is that if Negroes received equal status "they would overwhelm us."

But integrationists say this presupposes the presence of military force as in the Reconstruction Era, which does not enter into the present situation. The evidence, they add, is that Negroes, whatever their ratio, are subject to the same political dynamics as whites—notably that their rise in public affairs and influence hinges primarily on capability.

No 'Overwhelming'

They point out that in Coahoma County, one of the few Mississippi districts where Negroes are relatively free to vote, only about 1,000 out of 40,000 have even registered; and that in predominantly Negro, free-voting counties elsewhere in the South, no "overwhelming" has occurred.

The white minority that opposes segregation does not speak loudly. A handful of small organizations dedicated to interracial understanding carry on their activities in obscurity and in some apprehension of being called "subversive."

There is liberal sentiment in colleges and in some church circles. The Catholic Church, against segregation in principle, son he can discuss his problems with."

But a Negro leader in the same town, and other Negro leaders in other towns, say that this kind of "Uncle Tom" relationship is not what they want. What is wanted is regular communication between representative groups of whites and Negroes — not necessarily to discuss integration but to discuss things as simple as a leaky school roof.

This lack of communication appears to a visitor as the most striking thing about Mississippi today. Standing in the way of white-Negro rapport is the psychological block, compounded of defensiveness and resentment.

Negroes know that school integration is something that with the best will could not possibly be effected tomorrow or next year. But they are becoming increasingly resentful of such discrepancies as racial separation rigidly enforced in trolley cars when it is disregarded in elevators, bank-window lines and in stores.

Negroes who pay substantial taxes also are becoming increasingly resentful of governmental expenditures in which even a pretense of separate-but-equal is ignored.

In Mississippi's present state of mind, local observers have commented, almost any legislation "with a segregation label will go through automatically."

A bill was formally proposed making it illegal to violate any state law or not to "conform with established traditions, customs and usages of our state." It was aimed at integration; but, critics pointed

3/14/56

OGA TIMES: CHATTANOOGA, TENN., WEDNESDAY

CHANGES IN SOUTH'S POPULATION

Reprinted From "The Negro And The Schools."

in predominantly Negro, free-voting counties elsewhere in the South, no "overwhelming" has occurred.

The white minority that opposes segregation does not speak loudly. A handful of small organizations dedicated to interracial understanding carry on their activities in obscurity and in some apprehension of being called "subversive."

There is liberal sentiment in colleges and in some church circles. The Catholic Church, against segregation in principle, is small and has not undertaken to integrate its parochial schools. In Protestant churches there is considerable division of opinion.

Voices for Moderation

There are only two prominent white spokesmen for moderation and conciliation on the integration issue: Hodding Carter of Greenville, the editor, and William Faulkner of Oxford, the novelist. Both are regularly denounced.

The most conspicuous cleavage in opinion is that between age and youth. The older generation, having a vested responsibility in the existing system, is prone to defend it; young people tend to be more open-minded. Even within families, differences sometimes are so strong that discussion of "Topic A" is taboo.

Symptomatic, however, of the undercurrent of dissent were the recent resignations of two faculty members of the state university and college. Their action was in protest against the cancellation of a university talk by the Rev. Alvin Kershaw because he was an NAACP member.

Mississippi's most vocal segregationist, Sen. James O. Eastland, has termed the integration movement a product of Communist conspiracy and an invasion of states rights warranting "nullification." Mississippi's new governor, James P. Coleman, a segregationist but far more moderate, retorted that nullification was "legal poppycock."

Citizens Councils

The Citizens Councils in Mississippi, where the movement originated, encompass all shades of opinion, from a belief that segregation is God-ordained to a reliance on states rights.

Claiming 75,000 members in 57 of the state's 82 counties, the Mississippi organization includes community leaders as well as what are locally referred to as "hotheads." The typical local pattern is for some community leaders to be adherents, some abstainers and some outspoken critics of the Citizens Council movement.

Negroes generally are prevented from voting in Mississippi, on technicalities. There are only about 10,000 Negroes among 500,000 registered voters. No Negro has gone to a white public school or a white state college, and no suits have been filed to admit them—although some are planned. Some petitions for public-school admission were presented last fall and were rejected.

The current turn of affairs has found many Negroes inert or inarticulate. But the organized Negro leadership, represented chiefly in the NAACP,, is demanding eventual full realization of the federal decrees, and has no doubt that every Negro in Mississippi would welcome this.

More than school integration, though, more than the vote, more than even the elimination of small Jim Crow practices, what they are restive for is group recognition on the community level.

"Why," a kindly white businessman in a small town said, "every Negro here knows some white people who pay substantial taxes also are becoming increasingly resentful of governmental expenditures in which even a pretense of separate-but-equal is ignored.

In Mississippi's present state of mind, local observers have commented, almost any legislation "with a segregation label will go through automatically."

A bill was formally proposed making it illegal to violate any state law or not to "conform with established traditions, customs and usages of our state." It was aimed at integration; but, critics pointed out, it could apply also to someone who failed to eat hominy grits for breakfast. Only a gubernatorial veto blocked a law making agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation subject to arrest.

Legal Barricade

Measures taken to maintain the present system include:

A constitutional amendment making possible the dissolution of the state's school system and its re-establishment under ostensibly private or local auspices.

A ban on attending school with Negroes.

A law against conspiracy to violate segregation laws "by force or otherwise."

A voting registration law requiring applicants to "interpret" a constitutional passage.

The deputizing by the attorney general by mail of some 1,000 lawyers to defend school districts against integration suits.

A law reaffirming the terminal waiting-room and washroom segregation invalidated by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

A law requiring school teachers to list affiliations (such as the NAACP) for five years back.

Mississippi's hastily erected legal barricade already is being buffeted. A pupil-assignment law similar to Mississippi's was invalidated by the federal district court in New Orleans Feb. 15.

In pursuance of the "separate but equal" idea, the state has set up a program of financial aid to local school districts designed to bring facilities, chiefly on the Negro side, up to par.

Mississippi is at the bottom of the national ladder educationally. It has about the same number of public school pupils as the city of Los Angeles, but spends less than half as much money on them. The number of white and Negro pupils is approximately the same; two dollars are spent on white instruction for every dollar spent on Negroes.

In Mississippi's present mood, any substantial integration is unlikely if not impossible.

The emotional pitch is such that it cannot be sustained indefinitely. Time also is shifting the reins of influence from the segregationist "old guard" to the more liberal younger generation.

The strongest immediate pressure for the achievement of a modus vivendi is economic. The state's economic future hinges critically on industrialization. Northern capital is not likely to choose Mississippi in preference to more stable parts of the South.

Mississippi's resistance — not just to integration itself, but to more dispassionate consideration of the subject — is primarily a psychological barrier that may yield to the passage of time and the pressure of forces already in play.

"Things are going to get worse before they get better," is a commonplace, usually followed by: "But what are you going to do about it?"

This outlook, while defeatist in tone, also has a positive implication. Forces transcending Mississippi are at work. Its destiny, whatever efforts are made to shape it unilaterally, is bound up ultimately with that of 47 other states.

Copyright, 1956, The New York Times Co.

3-25-56

THE CLARION-LEDGER—JACKSON (MISS.) DAILY NEWS, SUNDAY MORNING, MARCH 25, 1956

Barnett Belives Mississippi Safeguards Segregation

Police Powers, Assignment Act 'Are Sufficient'

Police powers of this state, along with a pupil assignment act adopted by the 1954 legislature are sufficient safeguard against integration of the schools in Mississippi, a twice-candidate and third-time prospect for governor declared here this week.

Ross R. Barnett, prominent local attorney, speaking before the Hinds County Women's Civic Club at the War Memorial Building, said that with proper administration the U. S. Supreme Court would be "compelled to uphold the constitutionality of Chapter 260, Laws of 1954, the pupil assignment act."

"The trustees of a school have a tremendous responsibility under this statute," Barnett cited.

"If they exercise their powers reasonably and can support their decisions by facts and circumstances showing a reasonable exercise of the powers and evidencing an earnest and sincere desire to advance the educational welfare of each and every child attending our schools, the U. S. Supreme Court should not be able to say that the trustees abused their discretionary powers. And, if this law can be so administered as to be throughly supported by reasonable conduct on the part of the trustees in the allocation of the children in their respective schools, then the Supreme Court of the United States would of necessity be compelled to realize the earnest desire of the state and the school trustees to promote the welfare of each child, and even though the races as a result would be segregated, nevertheless, the basis of the rule and the earnest consideration of the trustees would be manifest that segregation was only a collateral result that necessarily followed in the classification of all children according to their welfare and best interest.

"There is a vast difference between the vast majority of colored children and the vast majority of white children," Barnett said.

"Laying aside all questions of race and color and viewing the school question from the standpoint of the educational welfare of the children and of the public health of the state, the only reasonable conclusion that can be reached is that the State, since it is the one that bears all of the expense of the educational program, should so regulate and control the schools of the state as to secure the maximum benefit to each particular child for the money that the state expends.

"This is no more than common promote the welfare of each child, and even though the races as a result would be segregated, nevertheless, the basis of the rule and the earnest consideration of the trustees would be manifest that segregation was only a collateral result that necessarily followed in the classification of all children according to their welfare and best interest.

"There is a vast difference between the vast majority of colored children and the vast majority of white children," Barnett said.

"Laying aside all questions of race and color and viewing the school question from the standpoint of the educational welfare of the children and of the public health of the state, the only reasonable conclusion that can be reached is that the State, since it is the one that bears all of the expense of the educational program, should so regulate and control the schools of the state as to secure the maximum benefit to each particular child for the money that the state expends.

"This is no more than common sense and good judgment. In order to arrive at such a result it is fundamentally necessary that each child, whether white or colored, be placed in a school and in a class where the environment is suitable for his progress, where he will be encouraged to properly pursue his studies and will have a reasonable opportunity to do so with the result that he will not become the laggard of the class, with the consequent discouragement and disillusionment incident thereto, creating a hatred in his mind for those around him, as well as the whole program of school work. Such a result could only result in the student becoming discouraged and disgusted with school work and dropping out and forfeiting all of the benefits of education at the very earliest opportunity available to him. Accordingly, both Negro children and white children should be classified to such schools as in the light of their background and educational advancement and aptitude toward their work, the condition of their health and their ability to make progress will enable them to keep step with the class and not fall behind.

"We must, in the administration of this Act, administer it solely for the best interest of the children with regard only to their best interest and educational welfare. If we do this we, in my judgment, stand on solid ground and can meet the United States Supreme Court face to face and justify this Laws of 1954 as being a reasonable exercise of the Police Power of the State," Barnett concluded.

He was given a rising vote of thanks by the club membership.

Negro College Accreditation Is Postponed

31/15/56 (Co. Mag) Jackson

By JOHN NEWMAN
State Times Staff Writer

Action on a petition to accredit Utica Institute, a Negro junior college located at Utica, has been delayed until July 1.

At the same time Campbell colcollege, a Negro senior college in Jackson, has been accredited following its "correction of differences" during a probation period.

These actions were announced Thursday morning at the 35th annual meeting of the Mississippi Association of Colleges in the Crown room of the Edwards hotel.

Dr. W. H. Sumrall, president of the Council on Studies and Accreditation of Higher Education in Mississippi, gave the report following an earlier meeting of the council.

Dr. Sumrall is Dean of the Graduate School at Mississippi Southern college.

Library Problem

Commenting on the Utica Institute decision, Dr. Sumrall said the institution was denied accreditation last year because of the "library situation" there.

"That situation has since been corrected," Dr. Sumrall said, "but we now find deficiencies in regard to the faculty and we can not accredit the college at this time."

He said that the July 1 delayal of action could be considered placing the college on "probation" until deficiencies could be corrected.

As for the decision to accredit Campbell college, Dr. Sumrall stated that it came following the college's "survival of a probation period and correction of necessary deficiencies."

All Saints Episcopal college, a junior college for girls located at Vicksburg, still remains off the council's accredited list.

Dr. Sumrall said that the College . . .

"has not had an opportunity to visit the college this year to determine if it has reached the standards for accreditation."

All Saints was expelled from the list of accredited colleges in Mississippi in 1952.

In other business at the Thursday morning meeting, Dr. J. F. Bozard, chairman of the Department of English at MSCW, gave a report of the English commission; Dr. Alton Bryant, Pervost, University of Mississippi, reported on the Mississippi Junior-Senior College conference, and Dr. A. J. Brumbaugh, associate director for University Studies, Southern Regional Education Board, Atlanta, presented an address on "Critical Issues in Higher Education."

Dr. Charles T. Morgan, president of Wood Jr. College at Mathiston, was named to the presidency of the association for the 1956-57 session, to succeed Dr. Ben F. Hilbun, president of Mississippi State college.

Other new officers elected at the session were Dr. Charles P. Hogarth, president of MSCW, vice president; and Miss Mildred Herrin, registrar at Hinds Jr. college, secretary-treasurer.

Sunday Cl Led - Jackson Daily

Negroes Denounce Legislative Act

3-25-56

By GENE WILLIAMS
Clarion Ledger Staff Writer

One of the state's new legislative acts which requires teachers to list organizations of which they are members or to which they belonged the preceding five years was denounced Saturday by the Mississippi Negro Teachers Association a "an instrument of fear."

The terse resolution was adopted at the final general assembly of the 50th annual state convention of Negro educators at Jackson College. Over 5,000 Negro teachers from throughout the state attended the three day meeting.

The resolution compared the requirement of the legislation in the same light as "to ask the criminal to carry out the mandate of the court and thus become his own executioner." The teachers contend this requirement "is testing democracy beyond its fullest extent."

"We are now required to also teach that it is right to circumvent the laws of our federal government," the resolution continued.

Gov. J. P. Coleman recently signed the "membership listing" bill into law. It was recommended by the defunct Legal Education Advisory Commission which was established to seek means of evading the Supreme Court's decision on integration of schools. Gov. Coleman, then attorney general, was a member of the commission. The legislation was intended to reduce the number of Mississippi's Negro teachers belonging to the NAACP.

According to the resolution, the teachers claim that if the law is carried out "under present tensions (it) will lead most teachers, as a matter of conscience and economic safety to go undergrbund."

"The requirement," the teachers said, "has become a disturbing morale factor. This is in conflict with what is right to do over against what should be done for our own best interest ...."

Blasting the "instrument of fear" the teachers declared that they have been "required to teach citizenship along the lines laid down by state authorities."

"In fairness to our own people they should be taught that in a democracy it is the duty of every citizen to abide by the law."

In other resolutions, the educators called for an increase in state aid to Negro graduate students. Negro teachers now receive from $42 to $80 per summer session from the state for graduate work in out-of-state institutions. The teacher's association is asking the legislature to consider an increase to $250.

(Continued On Page 6)

Negroes - - -

(Continued from Page 1)

The convention also requested the legislature to give "serious consideration" for additional appropriations to improve state Negro colleges.

The fourth resolution called for a bi-racial committee to be appointed by the Governor "to deal with over all problems affecting the people." A recommendation was made for such a committee to study the feasibility of hiring Negroes "on all supervisory and policy making levels in all areas affecting all the people."

What Negroes REALLY Want---

Jackson Colored Schools Chief Says They Want To 'Feel Good' In Public As White People Do

(Editor's note: When the feature writer from "up North" asks the Director of Negro schools in Jackson for an interview, and the City Superintendent authorizes that director to, " go ahead and talk to him. Give him the answer to any question you feel qualified to answer,"—what is the result?

(Here is the result of the interview with Director James Gooden by a special writer from King Features Syndicate in New York, which is being printed in scores of newspapers over the nation with circulations running into the millions.)

(Copyright by King Features Syndicate, 1956)

JACKSON, Miss. — James Gooden has 30 years of work in the public school system of Jackson behind him. He is director of Negro schools in this state capital city. We came to talk to him about school segregation and integration questions. What do the Negroes themselves want,—we asked him.

Gooden lowered his head and smiled sadly at the green blotter. He said softly:

"It took a couple of hundred years for this problem to come up and now everybody wants an answer overnight. What do you want to know? How many children? How many schools? We have 8,000 children in 10 buildings in Jackson. Negro children, of course. There are maybe 400 children who should be in school and who aren't."

He talked on. A ballpoint pen danced over the pages of a notebook.

Negro Schools Bigger

Gooden knows his subject. Only twice did he refer to the files for figures. Negro school enrollment in this city is about 40 per cent of the total. The white board of education spends 40 cents out of every dollar on Negro schools.

Negro schools are bigger than white schools because Negro families live in congested areas and need bigger schools. Colored schools are newer and brighter than white schools because the white people didn't begin to take Negro education seriously until 20 years ago.

Negro teachers are paid 10 per cent less than white teachers in Jackson. Living expenses for the white teacher are higher. The average white teacher pays $50 a month for an apartment. The Negro schools. Even the city teacher, on less pay, has more purchasing power. All schoolbooks come from a common printer and are the same in the white and Negro schools. ven the city requisition blanks for rulers and inkwells and erasers are the same. The desks are the same.

going to tell him that, in the new school, if a white boy gets fresh with him, he must not hit back or answer back? What Supreme Court is going to make the white students take the colored children into their games at recess?"

Millions of Words

Funny. Millions of words, hot and cold, have been spoken and written about this matter and nobody asked the little girl with the cute black pigtails how she feels about it.

James Gooden smiled and slammed both hands on his desk. He said:

"You know what? There are nine million Negroes with 300 miles of where we're sitting. Know what they want? What they really want? They want to feel as good as you in public. That's all.

"Let us bring up our children in our own schools. But don't make us get off the sidewalk to let you pass; don't make us take a back seat in a bus; don't make us sit in a separate waiting room. You want the whole truth? There, you have it.

"The races have character. Each has his own. Every time my church tries to put on nice quiet services like the white people, the people don't come to the church any more. They go down to another church where they can shout and weep. What makes the colored boy laugh may not be funny to the white boy at all. Vice versa, too.

"But the only real trouble we have is the result of 200 years of bad treatment. Now we're neurotic. We need adjusting. Deep down we don't feel as good as the whites. That's why our men buy flashy clothes and flashy cars. The Negro is trying to convince himself that he's as good as anybody.

"If integration comes, who is going to teach the colored children how to get used to the whites getting around them? Do you know how cruel children can be to each other? Mister, there are more sides to this question than I can count."

Negro Women Agree

I talked to some Negro women. They agreed with Gooden. One said that, in the city of Jackson, there may be as many as 50 families out of 10,000, who would want to put their youngsters in white schools. They talked about status, and used the word several times. What, I asked, is status?

They grinned, wiped their hands on aprons, and all started to talk at once.

The best example of status, it seems. is the colored maid in the white household. She has status. She excites envy among the Negroes. She runs the white kitchen. She is trusted. They give her money to go shopping. They make a fuss over her cooking. When she goes to a movie with the white children, she sits in the white section.

Status. That's what the Negro wants.

At Sallie Reynolds Elementary School, the children have it. They also have it at the Jim Hill High School. These are modern structures, schools which look like sunlit bakeries.

There are 852 students in grades one to six. There are 26 rooms; about 33 students to a room. All of the teachers graduated from Negro colleges. Their salaries range from $2,200 a year to $3,200. The Sallie Reynolds School cost $360,000 to build in 1952. In a city of 135,000, it is one of seven elementary Negro schools. There are two junior high schools and two junior-senior high schools.

Here, they study chemistry and astronomy in the sixth grade. The children are gifted with good manners and rich laughter. The teacher said hello to the reporter.

Astronomy Lesson

"Which planet," she asked the class, "is the smallest?"

Hands went up. A dark boy got the nod. "Mercury," he said.

The teacher looked hurt. 'Well," he said, "Pluto is something the most."

The class laughed fit to kill. "Pluto," they said in a babbling chorus, "is farthest from the sun."

We left the school in silence and walked back down to Lynch. I said:

"I don't know, I just don't know."

My companion shook his head. He said:

"The story is running in the opposite direction. I came down here thinking that desegregation of schools was what the Negro wants."

Jackson Mississippi

Negro schools in this state capital city. We came to talk to him about school segregation and integration questions. What do the Negroes themselves want,—we asked him.

Gooden lowered his head and smiled sadly at the green blotter. He said softly:

"It took a couple of hundred years for this problem to come up and now everybody wants an answer overnight. What do you want to know? How many children? How many schools? We have 8,000 children in 10 buildings in Jackson. Negro children, of course. There are maybe 400 children who should be in school and who aren't."

He talked on. A ballpoint pen danced over the pages of a notebook.

Negro Schools Bigger

Gooden knows his subject. Only twice did he refer to the files for figures. Negro school enrollment in this city is about 40 per cent of the total. The white board of education spends 40 cents out of every dollar on Negro schools.

Negro schools are bigger than white schools because Negro families live in congested areas and need bigger schools. Colored schools are newer and brighter than white schools because the white people didn't begin to take Negro education seriously until 20 years ago.

Negro teachers are paid 10 per cent less than white teachers in Jackson. Living expenses for the white teacher are higher. The average white teacher pays $50 a month for an apartment. The Negro schools. Even the city teacher, on less pay, has more purchasing power. All schoolbooks come from a common printer and are the same in the white and Negro schools. ven the city requisition blanks for rulers and inkwells and erasers are the same. The desks are the same.

Shocks You Softly

Gooden does not alter the soft tone when he is about to shock you. He continues softly, almost prayerfully:

"No Negro parent has asked me to transfer a student to a white school. Most of my people are opposed to desegregation of schools."

He cups his hands behind his head.

"Very few people have stopped to think that we too have pride. Most children would rather be Negro students in a Negro school than be unwelcome in a white child's school. Go over and talk to the children at recess. Ask them.

"Speak to the mothers. They know real well. You tell them that their little boys and girls are going to go to the nice white school and watch how sad the faces get. You know why? I'll tell you why.

'Her little girl dresses as good as the colored children, but not as good as the white children. Her little boy is as good as any boy in his own school, but how is she seat in a bus, don't make us sit in a separate waiting room. You want the whole truth? There, you have it.

"The races have character. Each has his own. Every time my church tries to put on nice quiet services like the white people, the people don't come to the church any more. They go down to another church where they can shout and weep. What makes the colored boy laugh may not be funny to the white boy at all. Vice versa, too.

"But the only real trouble we have is the result of 200 years of bad treatment. Now we're neurotic. We need adjusting. Deep down we don't feel as good as the whites. That's why our men buy flashy clothes and flashy cars. The Negro is trying to convince himself that he's as good as anybody.

"If integration comes, who is going to teach the colored children how to get used to the whites getting around them? Do you know wants.

At Sallie Reynolds Elementary School, the children have it. They also have it at the Jim Hill High School. These are modern structures, schools which look like sunlit bakeries.

There are 852 students in grades one to six. There are 26 rooms; about 33 students to a room. All of the teachers graduated from Negro colleges. Their salaries range from $2,200 a year to $3,200. The Sallie Reynolds School cost $360,000 to build in 1952. In a city of 135,000, it is one of seven elementary Negro schools. There are two junior high schools and two junior-senior high schools.

Here, they study chemistry and astronomy in the sixth grade. The children are gifted with good manners and rich laughter. The teacher said hello to the reporter.

Astronomy Lesson

"Which planet," she asked the class, "is the smallest?"

Hands went up. A dark boy got the nod. "Mercury," he said.

The teacher looked hurt. 'Well," he said, "Pluto is something the most."

The class laughed fit to kill. "Pluto," they said in a babbling chorus, "is farthest from the sun."

We left the school in silence and walked back down to Lynch. I said:

"I don't know, I just don't know."

My companion shook his head. He said:

"The story is running in the opposite direction. I came down here thinking that desegregation of schools was what the Negro wants."

Lynch Mississippi

Delta Democrat-Times

ciated Press (AP) Greenville, Mississippi Monday, April 9, 1956

Gov. Coleman Tells Negro Vocational Audience Education Can't Stand In Divided Mississippi

ITTA BENA— "A House divided against itself cannot stand, and if we get divided in Mississippi, education cannot stand," Gov. J. P. Coleman told an audience of Negroes and whites here Sunday.

The Mississippi governor quoted and paraphrased Abraham Lincoln in a Founders Day address in the Mississippi Vocational College Auditorium.

He told how more money for public eduction was appropriated at the legislative session just ended than ever before. He cited the rapid growth of Mississippi Vocational College from a "cotton patch" to a $1.5 million educational institution for Negroes in only six years.

"With a few regretable exceptions" the two races in Mississippi still have a high regard for each other and we have been able to maintain the atmosphere of progress, he said.

"Yet from other places we are continually jabbed, provoked and prodded into trouble," he said.

"In the face of all this, are we going to be able to maintain institutions like these..what will it profit us if egged on by others we do like Samson and pull down the pillars of progress around us," he continued.

Referring to another biblical character he said, "better would it be for us to copy Joshua who had his people hold up his arms so that his armies would be triumphant—we should hold up each others arms," he said.

The governor was introduced by S. R. "Doc" Evans of Greenwood, a member of the Board of Trustees of Higher Learning and former Leland vocational agriculture teacher. Retiring president of the board, Dr. H. M. Ivey, spoke and was presented with gifts. He was introduced by Representative C. L. Partridge.

Citations were presented to 36 individuals and firms by Dr. J. H. White, president of the college, for outstanding service to the college.

Included from this area among those honored were Mayor George F. Archer of Greenville, Mayor W. T. Caraway of Leland, Mayor T. M. Pitts of Indianola, Mayor Paul Stowers of Itta Bena, Walter Beard of Tralake, and father Meinrad of Indianola, O. Fm.

Others on the program included the Rev. H. H. Humes, the Rev. B. H. Martin, Alvin J. McNeil, the Rev. Fred Matthews, the college band and the college choir. A color guard from Greenville Air Force Base led the academic procession.

Ed Miss

Education: Miss.

Commercial App

TUESDAY MORNING,

Memphis

By Dulles

4-10-56

NEGRO SCHOOLS AID URGED BY CHAMBER

Coahoma C. Of C. Unit Tells Needs In County

Special to The Commercial Appeal

CLARKSDALE, Miss., April 9. — A Coahoma County Chamber of Commerce committee, Monday reported its findings on the conditions of City Negro schools. Recommendations included a new building for Booker T. Washington School and alleviation of congestion in the Myrtle Hall School.

The full list of recommendations are:

1. Booker T. Washington School, additional properties to be acquired and new building constructed.
2. Myrtle Hall School, nevessary repairs be made.
3. Myrtle Hall, necessary temporary repairs with consideration for replacement when possible.
4. Myrtle Hall School (General), additional classrooms and extra facilities adding combination gymnasium-assembly hall.
5. Higgins High School, enlargement and provide sufficient instructional aids in classrooms and reference books.

Education: Mississippi

Miss. Council Seeks to Abolish Justice of the Peace System

Const 4/15/56

Launch Citizen-Education Move In Attempt to Bring Court Changes

By KENNETH TOLER

Ed Mus

Mississippi Bureau Chief, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., April 14—Unsuccessful in gaining legislative authority for modernization of the constitution of 1890, certain Mississippi groups are launching a citizen-education approach for piecemeal changes through amendments. None has any connection with legislative reapportionment, a matter scheduled for attack in the courts.

At the moment, the Mississippi Economic Council is spearheading a movement looking to abolition of the justice of the peace system which had its origin in England. The first such officials were appointees of the king and served largely in a ministerial capacity, with none of the functions of judges.

The system was brought to America by the English colonists and, although abandoned or substituted by judicially manned courts by many states, still holds sway in Mississippi. Thus far, the justices of the peace have managed to show sufficient strength to defeat efforts for their abolition.

Program of Education

A special study of the system has been made by the economic council, now in its seventh year as the "voice of organized leadership." It plans a program to educate the citizens to the need for abolition of those courts and the setting up of those more capable of handling the affairs of the people.

At present, the only prerequisite of a justice of the peace in Mississippi is the status of a qualified elector. No legal training is required and most of the justices measure up accordingly.

Mississippi has 410 beats in its 82 counties, and a justice of the peace in each beat. However, some of the beats have two justices of the peace, depending upon the will of the County Board of Supervisors.

MISSISSIPPI

In a report to the economic council this week, C. S. Tindall, an attorney of Greenville, said with reference to the system based on a study by a special committee:

"It has long been a laughing matter that 'J. P.' means 'judgment for plaintiff' . . . The reasons for this situation are apparent since the justice of the peace must insure satisfaction of the plaintiff's demands or he is not likely to have much business."

Mr. Tindall also stated that "there are those instances in which there are two or more justices for the same beat, who, in a sense, are competitors for the business and the word gets around to the grocer or the merchant who wants accounts collected that one or the other gets the best results."

In that connection, one of the chief functions of the court is that of a collection agency. More times than otherwise, the costs assessed by the justice exceed the amount of the debt.

Advantages Are Gone

The study committee said the chief advantages of the justice of the peace court have now largely vanished with the automobile, good highways and shortened distance to the county seat.

"Moreover, the office has gradually decreased in prestige," the study showed. "Today, rarely is the justice a man of the standing in his community that for so many decades was the badge of the office."

Despite that, the survey disclosed that the occupants of the office deal with the property, lives and liberties of the citizens of the state.

The council recommendation, which it hopes to gain citizen support sufficient to prod the legislature into action, calls for:

1. A magistrate court for each county presided over by an elector licensed to practice law, on a full-time, salary-paid basis. The magistrate would be appointed by the circuit judge with jurisdiction covering all misdemeanors and as a committing court in case of felonies. The justices are elected.
2. Submission of a constitutional amendment to the voters for repeal of the justice of the peace court system. This would open the way for creation of the magistrate courts.

Up until the 1956 legislative session, just adjourned, the justice of the peace court was used as an "avenue" to delay final prosecution. There was no time limit on appeals, and in many cases appeals were delayed until just before convening of the circuit court, in which case trial was not possible in the higher tribunal.

Instances where final trials were delayed for years through the no time limit on appeals from justice of the peace courts were recited recently by Gov. J. P. Coleman.

It was largely through the governor's efforts that the legislature set the time limit on appeals in criminal cases from the justice of the peace courts at 40 days after conviction.

The economic council is not discouraged, admitting that reform and improvement take time.

Back Another Change

The council is also "drumbeating" for employment of a county unit system for building and maintaining roads.

The situation was summarized by S. R. Jeffers, director of research for the council, as follows:

"If you try to play pingpong with five balls, simultaneously, it would illustrate the problem facing all but a very few of Mississippi County supervisors. For in virtually all counties, the supervisors are having to juggle the affairs of five separate and independent road districts."

Mr. Jeffers said the "beat" system "in its pure form means that each of the five supervisors in each of the counties assumes individual responsibility for construction and maintenance of roads in the district from which he is elected."

EDGER, JACKSON, MISS., THURSDAY MORNING, APRIL 26, 1956

Sounds Like a Fair Move To Protect Some Teachers

"The Colorado Board of Education has approved a plan under which charges of subversive activity made against teachers in the state's public schools would have to be submitted in writing and under oath to require action," Denver reports. "A 20-member citizens' committee suggested the procedures in dealing with such charges — aimed at eliminating 'hearsay' accusations submitted by faceless informers."

At this distance, that sounds like a fair, just, not dangerous, and probably effective move to give teachers at least some protection against imagined or manufactured charges shouted or whispered by irresponsible agitators lacking any evidence of guilt.

When any teacher, in Mississippi and most other states engages in genuine subversive activities, some intelligent, patriotic and courageous colleague or associate can likely learn enough about it to file and prove a responsible charge.

Gossip and other forms of "hearsay", however, could be harmful and dangerous anywhere if carelessly invited or tolerated.

Apr 27/56
Chat

OGA, TENN., FRIDAY, APR.

USE OF TAX FUNDS IN RACE FIGHT AIM

Eastland Says Such Action Legal—Says Segregation Foes Well Financed

Ed. Miss.

TUPELO, Miss., April 26 (AP)—Sen. James Eastland (D-Miss) today called for the use of public funds—"and we have a legal right to do so"—to fight integration.

Addressing the 1st Dist. convention of the Mississippi American Legion, Eastland said the South can no longer stay on the defensive.

"The opposition has several million dollars," he said. "We must use public funds and we have a legal right to do so because in essence this is an attack upon the South.

"The first duty of the state is to protect its sovereignty. We must bring to the attention of the people what integration will do to our school system."

The Mississippi Legislature recently voted $250,000 to finance the work of a newly created State Sovereignty Commission for the avowed purpose of resisting federal "encroachment" in any form.

The senator said the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People is "a front, an action group. Behind it is a more powerful group directing its every move."

'Group' Not Identified

He did not identify the directing group.

He said border states—those between the segregated South and the integrated North and Midwest—have "weak-kneed political leaders."

He said "if we can win the border states I am confident of the outcome. The determination of the South has caused the people of the North to stop and think. Now they say 'We had better go slowly.'

"The average man thinks exactly as we do. We are not going to permit NAACP agitators to take over and run our states."

The senator said segregation fights are being waged in the North "and the outcome there will be determined by what happens here."

Eastland said the last thing Mississippi will do is to permit the NAACP to play a political game at the expense of "our children."

"The first line of defense is the home," he said. "If we lose the minds of children there is no hope for the future."

Uranium, the essential metal for making the atom bomb, is the most sought after metal in the world today.

Ed. Ten.

Tennessee Trustees Switch, Postpone Wider Integration

MEMPHIS, April 25 (AP) — The start of gradual racial integration on the undergraduate level at the University of Tennessee has been postponed pending further study.

Trustees made the decision Tuesday — reversing themselves a few hours after they had decided to accept the state's stairstep college integration plan unchanged.

The stairstep plan commits colleges controlled by the State Board of Education to open senior classes to Negroes in September. Junior classes will be opened in the next September, and so on. All graduate schools were opened to Negroes last year.

Though it is not under jurisdiction of the state board, trustees approved the state plan six months ago, withholding the final "go" until a special committee could study the plan for possible modifications.

After hearing the committee report, the trustees first decided to accept the stairstep plan without change. Then, late in the long private conference, came the switch.

Not Worried, Coleman Says

MEMPHIS, April 25 (AP)—Gov. J. P. Coleman of Mississippi said Tuesday, "We will hold the line on segregation without fail but will not keep ourselves in a daily uproar over it."

Speaking before the Rotary Club, the governor said:

"The people of Mississippi are not worried and are not stampeded by the question of segregation that has been forced upon us from the

Suits to integrate Miss. schools set

By LEWIS E. LOMAX

JACKSON, Miss.—School integration suits in five Mississippi cities will be instituted by June 1. according to an announcement by NAACP officials here Tuesday. The cities are Clarksdale, Yazoo City, Natchez, Jackson, and Vicksburg.

The action is the result of many months of planning on the part of colored leaders and comes after white school boards have consistently refused to respond to petitions by colored students for admission to previously "all white schools."

Typical of this planned move on the part of the NAACP is the case in Clarksdale. The efforts began last fall when colored leaders petitioned the board of education and asked that colored children be allowed to attend schools near their homes.

* * *

THE BOARD ignored the petition and the White Citizens Council began to apply economic pressure to colored persons who had signed the petition. Two nurses at Coahoma County Hospital were fired because of their relationship to the petition.

R. L. Drew, Clarksdale businessman was denied a bank loan because he had signed the petition and was active in other civil rights areas.

In the wake of this, colored leaders began choosing children who were required to pass white schools on their way to colored schools in order to have grounds for protest under the Supreme Court decision.

* * *

THE LEADERS screened the families of these children and chose those whose parents were not vulnerable to the pressures of the White Citizens Council.

For the most part, the children are from families whose principal breadwinner receives his livlihood from the colored community and cannot be pressured.

It was also revealed that the White Citizens Council has been planning for a defense to the suits. Every lawyer in Mississippi reportedly has been pledged to give his service free to local school boards.

* * *

ANY LAWYER who accepts the colored case reportedly will face disbarment for life. "I knew they would try to get in," Peter Williams, leader of Clarksdale White Citizens Council, said when contacted.

"Old Thurgood Marshall said he had $300,000 to spend here in Mississippi but they will not get in.

Miss. Schools Near 'Equality'; Integration Could Ruin Setup

Entire Public System Faces Abolition If Court Decision Is Pushed in State

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., July 28—Mississippi is fast closing the gap in its segregated public school system. And barring efforts to integrate the system, the Negro and white segregated schools will soon be on the equal basis called for in the state constitution of 1890. However, the progress could be all for naught should efforts be pushed to carry out the United States Supreme Court decision, because the Legislature has "standby" authority to abolish the whole system if that is attempted.

That apparently is the main reason no suit has been filed in Mississippi to integrate the public schools. Another possible factor in slowing down efforts of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People to force integration may be the personal troubles of one of its Mississippi leaders. His son, a sophomore in a nearby Negro college, stands charged with raping a Negro waitress. Another factor is the NAACP-challenged statement that Mississippi Negroes are willing to accept voluntary segregation provided their schools are brought up to a par with those of the whites without further delay.

MISSISSIPPI

Possibly the most benefitted group under a 1953 legislative-enacted Negro - white public school equalization program are the Negro teachers. They are feeling it in their paychecks.

At the same time, Negro students are being given buildings and facilities equal to those of the whites and are now riding to school in state-paid-for buses. No longer are discarded white school buses with wooden bodies given to the Negroes. All buses now operated in Mississippi are all-steel.

Indicative of the adjustment in Negro school teachers' salaries is a recent report by State Supt. J. M. Tubb. In the 1945-46 session, Negro teachers averaged $398 a year. That compared to the $1,108 for whites for an over-all average annual teacher salary of $840. That schedule in the 1955-56 session shows the average Negro teacher's annual salary had moved up to $2,010. The whites last session advanced to $2,609 for an over-all average of $2,356.

Improvement in Training

Supt. Tubb also disclosed the improvement in the training of Negro teachers. In 1945-46, an estimated 1,376 Negro teachers, or 16 per cent of the total, had completed four years" college training. That compares with the record in the approaching 1956-57 session of holders of "A" certificate by 3,375 Negro teachers, or 49.4 per cent. On the white side for the 1945-46 session, the white average in that category was 68.7 per cent and for the approaching session is 72 per cent of the 6,097 classroom teachers.

A sharp reduction in the number of school districts has also taken place. In the 1945-46 period, Mississippi had 4,746 school districts of all types. Last year, the number had been cut to 869, with the new consolidation program which must be completed by next July expected to reduce the number to 200. In the 1945-46 school year, Mississippi spent $20,846,208 for public schools, or $46.96 per student, against $59,935,737 in the last year, or $135.39 per pupil.

There were 674 school buses in 1945-46, with very few Negroes transported. Now Mississippi has 4,600 all-steel bodied buses driven by trained drivers which last year transported 230,167 students, of which 91,047 were Negroes.

8-2

8-23-3

Ed - Miss - Year?

Gov. White Says He'll Use Force

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 2 (AP)—Gov. Hugh White declared today that Mississippi's "police power" will be used if necessary to keep Negroes out of white schools.

"I am going to see this thing through to make certain that Negroes never enter the white schools," he said.

He said the "police power" of a state, allowing it to preserve law and order, has never been touched by the U.S. Supreme Court.

"The people of this state now see what is before them. They are solidified as never before and we will maintain segregation."

The governor's statement followed the suggestion yesterday that he invoke "police powers" to prevent racial mixing in public schools. The suggestion was made by former Gov. Fielding Wright.

His stiffened attitude followed a meeting Friday with a group of 90 Negro leaders, who declared they would fight any attempt to dodge the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools. The governor and the Legal Educational Advisory Committee had hoped to get their cooperation in a plan of voluntary segregation in return for additional school buildings.

Aug. 5, 1957 Miss Ed makes provision for Prejudice

Sovereign Members Feel

Northern Criticism Of South Shows Signs Of Slacking Off

By PHIL STROUPE
Daily News Staff Writer

Northern criticism of Southern states on the segregation question "has very definitely slacked off in recent weeks."

That's the feeling of members of the 12-man State Sovereignty Commission created to maintain segregation "in all phases of public life."

Rep. Ney Gore of Marks, executive director of the commission, said, the commission "is busy putting into effect several programs to accomplish the mission outlined for this agency by the legislature."

Sen. Bill Burgin of Columbus, a member of the Commission, said, "Northern people and the Northern press are more friendly to Mississippi nowadays. A realization has begun to creep into their minds that our position has merit, and is founded on reason and logic."

Hal DeCell, director of public relations for the commission, returned to Jackson Friday from a visit to New York with regard to various projects in which the Commission is interested.

"The New York trip," DeCell said, "was made principally on behalf of the Sovereignty Commission as a technical advisor to a national television program which is to be shown over a nationwide NBC setup. The date for the showing is tentatively set for Sunday Aug. 26."

DeCell said the film, entitled "Outlook," was not arranged by the Sovereignty Commission, "but I did what I could to put forth the true facts to avoid misrepresentation of the Mississippi side of things."

REP. NEY GORE OF MARKS, executive director of the State Sovereignty Commission, puffs on his big black crooked-stem pipe as he studies newspapers of the nation "to see what they're saying about Mississippi." He said, after a long search through the nation's dailies, "Northern criticism has slacked off." (Daily News photo by Phil Stroupe).

The film has a setting in the Clarksdale area.

Gore said the Commission is also "putting into effect" another program — that of mailing to a nationwide list of weekly and daily newspapers releases and stories of life in Mississippi.

"We are also engaged in maintaining close contact with legislatures in several other southern states who are dealing with this particular problem," he said.

He named Florida, Virginia, and North Carolina where special sessions of legislature in those states has been called to act on the question.

More specifically, Gore said the pupil assignment law which he drafted and steered to passage in the legislature in 1954 has been adopted "by every Southern state except Tennessee."

The assignment law vests in the board of education and the trustees of county and city schools the power to assign pupils to attendance centers on a basis of individual and community welfare and a ... review of those cases.

DeCell said the recent move by the Commission to get public relations people in other Southern states to work together as a cohesive group on the question of segregation "is meeting with enthusiastic support."

He said Tennessee, Louisiana, Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina have lined up in favor of the program.

While in New York, DeCell "advised with" a West Coast film producer who is doing a documentary film on race relations in Mississippi.

"The film," DeCell said, "will not be unfair to the South."

DeCell also talked with two publishing houses in New York about books expected to hit the market soon on the race question.

He also learned that Howard Keel Hollywood singing star, will sing a song at the National Democratic convention in Chicago written by Robert Colby, formerly of Rolling Fork, Miss.

The Commission is setup by a legislative act to maintain segregation in public schools, transportation facilities, hotels, public buildings, parks and other areas of public life.

Members of the Commission are: Gov. J. P. Coleman, chairman; Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin, vice chairman; House Speaker Walter Sillers of Rosedale, Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson, Sen. Earl Evans Jr. of Canton, Sen. Bill Burgin of Columbus, Rep. Joe Hopkins of Clarksdale, Rep. W. H. Johnson of Decatur, and Rep. George Payne Cossar of Charleston.

In addition, three businessmen or laymen on the commission are George J. Thornton of Kosciusko, W. S. Henley, Hazlehurst attorney, and Hugh Clayton of New Albany, Democratic national committeeman of Mississippi.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Ed. Miss.

Page 10 Delta Democrat-Times
Greenville, Miss., Sunday July 22, 1956

Leland Lions Hear Judge Lee Analyse Court Decision

LELAND — Mississippi Supreme Court Justice Percy Lee this week described the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in the public schools as one reached in a method never before used in English or American courts and which defied previous legislative, executive and judicial history.

He spoke at the Lions Club here and was introduced by George Hurtig.

"The basis of the May 17 decision was that if you decline to let a colored child go to school with a white child it may inject in him a feeling of inferiority that may never be undone," Judge Lee began.

Three Branches

He then showed how Congress, actions of the Executive Branch of the Government and the courts had decided on previous segregation problems as follows:

Congress—the Constitution under the Tenth Amendment provided that education should remain within the powers of the state; the 14th amendment was adapted in 1865 from a part of the Massachusetts Constitution on which a Massachusetts Supreme Court decision in the case of Roberts vs. the City of Boston had ruled that segregation of whites and Negroes in separate school did not result in the Negro child being inferior to the white.

Executive Branch — operated Washington D. C. schools on a segregated basis for 86 years following adoption of the 14th amendment, opened schools for Negroes only under the Freedmens Bureau during Reconstruction, and as recently as 1946 recognized segregated schools in carrying out the school lunch bills' provisions.

The Courts

The courts—The U. S. Supreme Court in five previous decisions upheld segregation; two cases involved segregation in transportation in which the separate but equal doctrine was upheld and the other three allocated to the states the administration of education.

"Instead of basing their decision on these previous decisions the court turned to writings of sociologists and psychologists, and for the first time injected the ideas of authors into court records without subjecting the authors to cross examination," Judge Lee concluded.

Ed. Miss.

Televise Interracial Mississippi Meeting

CLARKSDALE, Miss. — A meeting of a Negro PTA group with the board of trustees of the Clarksdale municipal separate school district will be televised nationally by the National Broadcasting co.

The filmed proceedings will be shown on NBC's "Outlook" as an example of "interracial goodwill and cooperation" at the local level.

School segregation was not mentioned and the Negro group confined requests to petitions for improved school conditions. Charles C. Stringer, spokesman for the P. T. A. delegation, said:

"At this time it is not our purpose to attempt to solve the question of segregation or integration. Whatever complexion our school system takes in the future, it is certain we should have adequate classroom space, facilities and personnel."

The group asked for additional facilities, including buildings, equipment, instructional materials and supplies, band and athlectic equipment.

They also asked for elimination of dual curriculum standards and the hiring of "qualified teachers, properly trained in their fields, in order to be able to do the best job, and at tne same time qualify for top salaries."

In the matter of new schools, the PTA requested the board to "take under consideration the distance that elementary students have to travel to reach school."

It was stated that one of the chief purposes of the meeting was to "advance understanding, cooperation and goodwill between the racial groups of the city."

-1956 - Education; Miss.

Miss. Schools Near 'Equality'; Integration Could Ruin Setup

Entire Public System Faces Abolition If Court Decision Is Pushed in State

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., July 28—Mississippi is fast closing the gap in its segregated public school system. And barring efforts to integrate the system, the Negro and white segregated schools will soon be on the equal basis called for in the state constitution of 1890. However, the progress could be all for naught, should efforts be pushed to carry out the United States Supreme Court decision, because the Legislature has "standby" authority to abolish the whole system if that is attempted.

That apparently is the main reason no suit has been filed in Mississippi to integrate the public schools. Another possible factor in slowing down efforts of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People to force integration may be the personal troubles of one of its Mississippi leaders. His son, a sophomore in a nearby Negro college, stands charged with raping a Negro waitress. Another factor is the NAACP-challenged statement that Mississippi Negroes are willing to accept voluntary segregation provided their schools are brought up to a par with those of the whites without further delay.

MISSISSIPPI

Possibly the most benefitted group under a 1953 legislative-enacted Negro - white public school equalization program are the Negro teachers. They are feeling it in their paychecks.

At the same time, Negro students are being given buildings and facilities equal to those of the whites and are now riding to school in state-paid-for buses. No longer are discarded white school buses with wooden bodies given to the Negroes. All buses now operated in Mississippi are all-steel.

Indicative of the adjustment in Negro school teachers' salaries is a recent report by State Supt. J. M. Tubb. In the 1945-46 session, Negro teachers averaged $398 a year. That compared to the $1,108 for whites for an over-all average annual teacher salary of $840. That schedule in the 1955-56 session shows the average Negro teacher's annual salary had moved up to $2,010. The whites last session advanced to $2,609 for an over-all average of $2,356.

Improvement in Training

Supt. Tubb also disclosed the improvement in the training of Negro teachers. In 1945-46, an estimated 1,376 Negro teachers, or 16 per cent of the total, had completed four years' college training. That compares with the record in the approaching 1956-57 session of holders of "A" certificate by 3,375 Negro teachers, or 49.4 per cent. On the white side for the 1945-46 session, the white average in that category was 68.7 per cent and for the approaching session is 72 per cent of the 6,097 classroom teachers.

A sharp reduction in the number of school districts has also taken place. In the 1945-46 period, Mississippi had 4,746 school districts of all types. Last year, the number had been cut to 869, with the new consolidation program which must be completed by next July expected to reduce the number to 200. In the 1945-46 school year, Mississippi spent $20,846,208 for public schools, or $46.96 per student, against $59,935,737 in the last year, or $135.39 per pupil.

There were 674 school buses in 1945-46, with very few Negroes transported. Now Mississippi has 4,600 all-steel bodied buses driven by trained drivers which last year transported 230,167 students, of which 91,047 were Negroes.

MISS. COUNCIL ON HUMAN REL.
1104 LYNCH ST.
JACKSON 3, MISS. 8-16-56

Education - Miss

In Mississippi

Third School Enrollment Since Court Decision Likely To Be Most Peaceful; Radicals On Both Sides Moderating Efforts

Other side also

By JOHN HERBERS

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 2 (UP) Negroes and whites, almost equally divided, are enrolling in Mississippi's public schools for a third year of total segregation since the Supreme Court declared it unconstitutional.

But much of the unrest and racial tension that sprang up across the state following the 1954 ruling has subsided. Extremists on both sides of the bitter struggle have taken on a degree of moderation.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has dropped its immediate threat of forcing integration through the courts. And there are signs that the NAACP may be switching its emphasis in this deep South state to more basic rights for Negroes like voting and job opportunities.

On ther other hand there have been fewer and fewer reports of Negroes being intimidated through economic and other pressures. While Mississippi in 1955 was the scene of a series of touchy racial incidents, including slayings, there have been virtually none this year. If there was racial violence it has been kept under cover.

Mississippi has never been sued by a Negro seeking admission to a white school, neither on the college nor common school level. Petitions for admission were filed with several school boards and these were expected to be followed by suits, in line with NAACP policy.

But no suit has been filed. Roy Wilkins executive secretary of the NAACP, was asked a few days ago what had happened.

"I don't know," he said. "But I think there are plans underway to file a suit in regard to intimidation of Negro voters."

C. R. Darden of Meridian, state president of the NAACP, was asked the same question.

"There is nothing definite being done or decided as to when or where the suits will be filed," he said. He, too, said a voter suit was "uner discussion."

Several sources close to the NAACP onfirmed there is sentiment witin the organization to press firs for equal voter rights and scho facilities.

Percy Greene, Negro editor of Jackson and outspoken enemy of the NAACP, said no school integration suit was filed because "they cant get a plaintiff."

"It's not that Negroes are afraid of being intimidated," he said. "They are beginning to realize that it's just not worth it to be involved in a long and troublesome suit. Some of the novelty has worn off since the 1954 decision and what Negroes want now is equal schools."

Despite the Supreme Courts decisions, the Mississippi legislature has built a legal defense of segregation — including abolition of public schools as a last report— that will take years to crack. Meantime, school construction is being speeded to bring Negro facilities up to that of whites.

WDDT
The New Sound
in RADIO
900
"Center of dial"

The Delta Democrat-Times

SUNDAY EDITION

61st Year United Press (UP) Associated Press (AP) Greenville, Mississippi Sunday, September 2, 1956 Price 10c No. 97

tate ton

Clarion Ledger 9/13/54

Gov. Coleman Predicts No Try At Integration

Edwin Gross

Gov. J. P. Coleman said here late Tuesday that he does not anticipate any attempts to integrate the common schools of this state "now or at any time in the foreseeable future."

"Our firm policy of state government which has the backing of all of our people will forestall that," he said.

He said that the Negroes of Mississippi themselves have paid little attention to outside interests seeking to stir up racial hatreds, and that "they are to be complimented for that."

PRIVATE STATUS

Coleman also reminded that the school abolition act of 1954 which would allow the state to transfer its schools to private status is also a deterrent to any attempts at integration.

"Our Negro leaders know that to attempt to integrate would only cause their children to lose out on schooling altogether," the chief executive said.

"I think that our Negroes are glad to have the chance to have their own schools, and they should be," Coleman told newsmen. "Our school equalization program is developing swiftly and the colored children are going to have equal opportunities with white children all over the state. In many places they already have."

The governor answered a newsman's question:

"Do you think now that our schools have all opened the new term that there will be any attempts to crack the segregation barrier?"

"I definitely do not," the governor answered emphatically.

PEOPLE WILL DECIDE

"We will have segregation in Mississippi so long as our people want it," Coleman declared.

He reminded that there has been no agitation in this state and thereupon complimented the Negroes on that.

The governor refused comment on the rioting incident to attempts at integration in several other southern and border states.

"We will confine ourselves to our own state's business," he said.

He said that Mississippi has many ways of defending itself against any attempts at integration, but that he would not reveal them until such time as needed to be put into effect.

State Times 9/13/54

Segregation Here To Stay—Coleman

Edwin Moss

Mississippians were reassured today by Gov. J. P. Coleman they will have total school segregation "as long as the people want it."

The governor made the prediction at a press conference Tuesday and said he did not anticipate any efforts by Negroes to gain entrance to white schools this year. He outlined his reasons as:

1. "The firm policy adopted by the state government and endorsed by the people" against racial integration.

2. "The fact that the people of the state have paid no attention to outside agitators."

3. "The way the constitution was amended in 1954 (to permit abolition of public schools as a last resort means of maintaining segregation."

4. The fact that Negroes are taking justifiable pride in having their own institutions (which are being equalized with white schools)."

Coleman also said he knew any number of ways of avoiding enforcement of the Supreme Court's integration rulings in addition to the legal defenses the state has thrown up.

When asked if this meant segregation could be considered permanent in Mississippi, Coleman said: "So long as the people of Mississippi want it, they are going to have it."

The governor also announced two appointments to the State Board of Dental Examiners. They were Drs. A.H. Richter Jr., of Greenwood and Jack Tindall of Brookhaven who replaced Drs. M. L. Jones of Meridian and L.J. Smith of Biloxi.

'DOGFIGHT'

St Times 9-5-56

Patterson To 'Study' Integration

By WILLIAM E. KEITH
State Times Staff Writer

Attorney-general Joe T. Patterson will "study" questions involving racial integration policies in effect at federal facilities in Mississippi.

Serving with him will be state senator Earl Evans, of Canton, president pro tem of the Senate; and state representative William H. Johnson, of Decatur.

All three are members of the State Sovereignty Commission, Mississippi's official "watchdog" on segregation matters, and will serve as a sub-committee of the commission.

The three-man sub-group is to make recommendations to the full commission, based on its study, after completing the assignment, according to Gov. J. P. Coleman, commission chairman.

Gov. Coleman announced organization of the study group following a two-hour session of the commission at the state capitol, which was closed to the press.

Asked if discussion of federal race integration policies consumed the entire two hours the commission was in session, the governor replied tersely: "It did!"

Asked if the decision to set up the study group was a unanimous one, the governor replied: "It was!"

Different Story

One person emerging from the meeting chamber, however, referred cryptically to proceedings inside as "a dogfight."

Gov. Coleman said the commission had discussed "At great length questions relating to integration at the Veterans Hospital at Jackson."

Later, however, when asked if the sub-committee's study would be confined to that institution, the governor said he wanted to make it clear that "no particular facility is being pinpointed" and that the study group would be concerned with "the general question of integration in federal facilities in Mississippi."

It was originally believed that the commission would hear reports from its executive director, Ney Gore, as well as publicity director Hal DeCell and L. C. Hicks, its investigator.

Gov. Coleman said no reports were made.

Asked what authority the state has regarding federal policies in federal institutions, Gov. Coleman said the study committee will "study all such questions."

Milner Bldg.

Clarion Ledger 9/8/56

AFFAIRS OF STATE

By CHARLES M. HILLS

An elderly lady called us at our home last night, greatly worried about the integration riots in other states, and inquiring if we thought Mississippi might be in for some of the same

Of course, we could do little save share her fears that we may indeed one of these days have the same troubles, only far worse, what with our greater Negro population.

If the whites in towns like Clinton and Sturgis with only eight or nine Negroes trying to enter white schools have riots, what do we have to expect here in Mississippi where often the Negroes far outnumber the whites

The lady then wanted to know how we would cope with such a situation

We expressed the hope that a solution might be found.

And then, the $64 question:

"Well, Mr. Hills... do you think our governor will send white national guardsmen with bayonets against our white people on behalf of Negroes as the governors of Tennessee and Kentucky have done?

What do you think?

STUDENT ASSIGNMENT

In the city of Jackson, the board of trustees of the separate school district has just purchased 20 acres of land on Livingston Road for a new Negro high school.

There has also just been authorized, a new elementary school for Negroes on Whitfield Mills Road, near the airbase.

Both are to be located in the heart of heavily populated Negro sections of the city.

Could it be that the board is looking strategically at the locations of the bulk of the Negro population areas with the view of utilizing to the fullest our legislatively - approved student assignment plan

We think so!

Takes Dim View Of Coleman Statement

Jackson, Miss.
Sept. 12, 1956

Dear Editor:

It is almost amusing to read Gov. Coleman's statement that he sees no threat of Negroes trying to enter Mississippi white schools in the foreseeable future. Certainly they will try, and it won't be very long. Admittedly, ours will possibly be the last state where it will be done, but it will, and most probably during Mr. Coleman's term. True, very few of our Negoes seem to want integration any more than the whites do. But it would be no hard task for the agitators to find a few who will be willing to start the ball rolling when they get ready to start on Mississippi.

We cannot help recalling Mr. Coleman's strong contentions that an acceptable platform and candidates would be adopted by the Democratic party. . . .and now we have anything but either. Daily, Mr. Stevenson blasts Eisenhower for his failure to enforce integration. So it is understandable that, if elected, Stevenson intends to promote stronger enforcement. And Mr. Kefauver is scheduled to appoint a Negro as a chief campaign worker. Yet, Mr. Coleman enthusiastically urges our unwavering support of these two men, and their platform, and urges their campaigning in Mississippi.

Certainly Negroes will attempt to enter Mississippi white schools in the near future. We wonder if Mr. Coleman then will feel obliged to call out the National Guard to assure their entrance. Such action would surely be called a "triumph for Gov. Coleman", as it has just been called for Gov. Clement of Tennessee.

"True Mississippian"
(Name Withheld by Request)
Jackson, Miss.

Clarion Ledger 9/19/56

Easiest Course Can Often Be The Worst

Mississippians by and large have been disturbed at the increasing extent of forced integration in public schools of some Southern states during recent days. While no thinking citizen condones mob violence, few white citizens of our state have much enthusiasm for compelling racially-mixed education at bayonet point, as is being done in Tennessee.

What is happening at Clinton High School has resulted from the policy of procrastination and inertia on the part of Tennessee's elected officials. While other Southern states have busily erected numerous legal barriers to integration, Governor Clement et al have been content to follow the line of least resistance.

NAACP leaders have promptly chosen to force the issue in Tennessee, knowing full well that few if any legal obstacles existed there. Thus is offered a painful but perfectly clear demonstration of the fact that only disaster can result when a state elects to imitate the ostrich and bury its head in the sands against grim reality.

Clarion Ledger - 9/15/56

1956 Education - Miss.

Clarion Ledger - 10-11-56

State Congressmen's Kids In Integrated Schools

Miss-Ed

WASHINGTON — The children of three Mississippi congressmen attended integrated Washington schools with Negro children last year, Superintendent Hobart M. Corning has informed a House District subcommittee.

Rep. John Bell Williams of Raymond, subcommittee member, had requested the list of District public school pupils whose parents were congressmen, supreme court justices, cabinet members, White House aides or district commissioners.

NAMES GIVEN

The three Mississippians whose children were included were Rep. Arthur Winstead of Philadelphia, Rep. Jamie Whitten of Charleston and Rep. Thomas Abernethy of Okolona.

Winstead's daughter, Betty, attended Alice Deal Junior High School, where five Negroes were enrolled. One of Abernethy's children, Thomas, also attended the same school. One of Abernethy's daughters, Gail, attended Woodrow Wilson High School, where there are a number of Negro children, and another daughter, Alice Kay, was enrolled at Lafayette School, where there were no Negroes. Whitten's daughter, Beverly, attended Horace Mann school, at which one Negro child was enrolled last year.

The Mann school also was attended by Vice-President Richard Nixon's daughters, Julie and Patricia, and Interior Secretary Frederick Seaton's son, Alfred. Other Horace Mann students last year included Gail, Diane and David Kefauver, children of Sen. Estes Kefauver (Dem, Tenn.).

By HAROLD TURNAGE
Clarion Ledger Staff Writer

Hinds Countains will decide October 9 whether to invest $1,000,000 in improving white and negro schools. They will vote that day on a special bond issue, and on their decision rides not only the future education of their children but also their long-range hopes for preserving their segregated school system.

The million dollars the County Board of Education is recommending that citizens invest will be matched with money from a state school building appropriation for Hinds County of $1,653,000 — for a total of $2,058,000 will be needed immediately.

The money will be used to solve two pressing problems. One of these is the phenomenal enrollment jump in schools in the Jackson suburbs — Forest Hill and Clinton.

USE BACK OF STORE

At Forest Hill children are attending school in the back of a store, in two churches, and in "temporary" barracks. The not-so-temporary barracks were war surplus from Camp Van Dorn. They were thrown up in 1946 to meet the first wave of swelling enrollment, and were to be disposed of so soon as the war babies made their way through the school. (Population experts predicted the wartime boom in babies would soon taper off.) However, no tapering off has appeared. In fact the "boom'" has become normal.

The other serious problem facing Hinds Countains is the schocking condition of the Negro schools.

Negroes throughout most of the nation have challenged school segregation. Thus far, Mississippi Negroes have shown a willingness to be patient while the state worked out its problem.

The state legislature has ordered that the Negroes be given better schools — that the citizens practice their preachments of separate but "equal".

In Hinds, the state's wealthiest county, the situation is better than in more rural areas.

MUCH IMAGINATION

Yet, in Hinds County, Negro children's "equal" facilities leave much to the imagination. At Curtis Ridge school near Utica, for example, a one-room shack houses 110 students and their two teachers. A drunken basketball backboard in the middle of the dusty yard is their playground equipment. The wooden foundations of the shack are rotting and the roof shows the signs of frequent patching.

The building itself is clad in rotting timbers, unpainted. There lighted. It compares favorably with any of the county's white schools. Yet, it is short of space and equipment already.

How will the money be spent? Approximately $761,000 is needed immediately in the white schools to meet the growing enrollment requirements. Approximately $1,297,000 is needed to bring the Negro schools up to standard.

SPECIFIC NEEDS

The specific needs as listed by Supt. J. E. Aldridge are as follows:

White — Byram, four classrooms, a vocational shop, $112,000; Clinton Boulevard, eight more classrooms, $112,000; Oak Forest, a 12-classroom school, and Van Winkle, eight additional classrooms, $220,000 and $112,000, respectively, to handle students now "temporarily" housed at Forest Hill; Raymond, 7 classrooms, vocational agriculture shop, home economics facilities, $175,000; Utica, school improvements, $30,000.

Negro — Sumner Hill, four classrooms and vocational shop, $75,000; Bolton, 10 classrooms, science laboratory, home economics facilities, library, $260,000; Edwards, nine classrooms, science, home economics, library, $250,000; Raymond, 8 classrooms, science, home economics, library, $240,000; Terry, four classrooms, science, home economics, library, $215,000; Utica, four classrooms, four renovated, science, home economics, library, $207,000; West Side High, two classrooms and toilet facilities, $50,000.

With this money the school board feels that it can offer Hinds Countians an adequate school system that will eventually repay the investment many times over, even in terms of dollars and cents.

Clarion Ledger 10-18-56

Negro Principals Could Achieve Much

With good intentions and full sincerity we congratulate Leroy Johnson, principal of Edwards Negro Junior High Schools, on his election as president of the newly organized Negro School Principals, and we wish him a successful and progressive term.

The new organization should be both able and eager to help advance the progress of the Negro schools and the progress and welfare of their teachers and principals.

As The Clarion - Ledger news item noted, the newly organized group, at the local meeting at which they elected officers, "discussed a county - wide course of study; tenure of service for teachers, better relations toward the school, community, teachers, and staff; and better competency for all."

It added that "they plan to do further study on school-community problems."

If they approach and study such matters in a friendly and intelligent attitude, they should be able to accomplish much that would contribute to the community's welfare and that of the Negro schools, and such a program and policy also would help promote friendly inter-racial attitudes reducing friction and ill feeling.

Educ - Miss

time boom in babies would soon taper off.) However, no tapering off has appeared. In fact the "boom"' has become normal.

The other serious problem facing Hinds Countains is the schocking condition of the Negro schools.

Negroes throughout most of the nation have challenged school segregation. Thus far, Mississippi Negroes have shown a willingness to be patient while the state worked out its problem.

The state legislature has ordered that the Negroes be given better schools — that the citizens practice their preachments of separate but "equal".

In Hinds, the state's wealthiest county, the situation is better than in more rural areas.

MUCH IMAGINATION

Yet, in Hinds County, Negro children's "equal" facilities leave much to the imagination. At Curtis Ridge school near Utica, for example, a one-room shack houses 110 students and their two teachers. A drunken basketball backboard in the middle of the dusty yard is their playground equipment. The wooden foundations of the shack are rotting and the roof shows the signs of frequent patching.

The building itself is clad in rotting timbers, unpainted. There are no hard-surface play areas, and when it is wet the children play on the muddy, grassless ground or stay inside.

At Brown School, fifty students use a two-room building. The foundation has given way and the structure is propped up with rocks and scraps of concrete. Window panes are missing and the chimney has crumbled until it is little higher than the roof. However, the sheet tin roof is apparently sound. The playground, too, is muddy in wet weather and dusty in dry — as are most other Negro school playgrounds.

LACK FACILITIES

Throughout the county Negro schools lack libraries, home economics training equipment, science laboratories, and vocational training facilities.

These are only a few of the things that must be remedied. There are other and worse situations in the county's Negro schools.

Fortunately, the picture is not all bad. Citizens had already seen the problem and begun to take action. At Sumner Hill a modern school has been constructed that serves 1100 Negro students. Its classrooms are spacious and well

Clarion Ledger - Daily News
9-30-56
Miss Hall

White — Byram, four classrooms, a vocational shop, $112,000; Clinton Boulevard, eight more classrooms, $112,000; Oak Forest, a 12-classroom school, and Van Winkle, eight additional classrooms, $220,000 and $112,000, respectively, to handle students now "temporarily" housed at Forest Hill; Raymond, 7 classrooms, vocational agriculture shop, home economics facilities, $175,000; Utica, school improvements, $30,000.

Negro — Sumner Hill, four classrooms and vocational shop, $75,000; Bolton, 10 classrooms, science laboratory, home economics facilities, library, $260,000; Edwards, nine classrooms, science, home economics, library, $250,000; Raymond, 8 classrooms, science, home economics, library, $240,000; Terry, four classrooms, science, home economics, library, $215,000; Utica, four classrooms, four renovated, science, home economics, library, $207,000; West Side High, two classrooms and toilet facilities, $50,000.

With this money the school board feels that it can offer Hinds Countians an adequate school system that will eventually repay the investment many times over, even in terms of dollars and cents.

wards Negro Junior High Schools, on his election as president of the newly organized Negro School Principals, and we wish him a successful and progressive term.

The new organization should be both able and eager to help advance the progress of the Negro schools and the progress and welfare of their teachers and principals.

As The Clarion - Ledger news item noted, the newly organized group, at the local meeting at which they elected officers, "discussed a county - wide course of study; tenure of service for teachers, better relations toward the school, community, teachers, and staff; and better competency for all."

It added that "they plan to do further study on school-community problems."

If they approach and study such matters in a friendly and intelligent attitude, they should be able to accomplish much that would contribute to the community's welfare and that of the Negro schools, and such a program and policy also would help promote friendly inter-racial attitudes reducing friction and ill feeling.

Educ - Miss

Delta Demo-Times
10-25-56

Educ - Miss

To Dedicate New Negro School In Greenville On Sunday Afternoon

Formal dedication ceremonies for the new Weddington Elementary School will be held at the school building Sunday afternoon, October 28, at 2:30.

The invocation will be given by Rev. L. S. Rounds, pastor of the Calvary Presbyterian Church; and the platform guests will be introduced by R. J. Koonce, superintendent of the Greenville Public Schools.

Harold Kaplan, architect for the Weddington School, will discuss the planning of the building. His talk will be followed by a musical number presented by the Coleman High Glee Club.

The featured speaker will be E. J. Bogen, president of the Greenville School Board, who will deliver an address entitled "Progress of the South."

Irene Weddington, for whom the school is named and who has now retired after 36 years of teaching in the Greenville schools, will make a brief talk.

The dedicatory remarks and presentation will be made by W. C. Keady, formerly president of the Greenville School Board.

Fulton Hill, principal of the Weddington Elementary School, will speak on the "Acceptance of Responsibility;" and the dedicatory prayer will be given by Rev. C. R. Haughton, pastor of the St. Mathew Methodist Church.

Platform guests for the occasion will include members of the Greenville School Board, former members of the School Board, members of the City Council, and special guests.

After the dedication ceremonies, the faculty of the Weddington School will entertain with an open house.

State Times 10-28-56

Schools Are Changing Our Living Pattern

By MABEL DONOVAN
Special To State Times

HATTIESBURG, Miss. — "The school reorganization program in Mississippi has started the state's economic ball rolling out of the cellar division," Dr. John E. Phay told members of the Mississippi Research Clearinghouse Thursday evening.

Dr. Phay, director of the Bureau of Educational Research at the University of Mississippi, was principal speaker at the opening session of the sixth annual seminar meeting of researchists at Mississippi Southern College Thursday and Friday.

"Better schools mean better educated people. The higher the education, the higher the standard of living," he said, "and reorganization will accelerate the whole economic pattern of this state."

"This social implications of the state's school reorganization program will mean greater acceleration to something that is already happening. People are leaving the country and coming to the towns. Too many times this migration leads right on out of the state. Reorganization will accelerate that.

"When the school closes, the country store will die. The storekeeper and his wife will have to seek livelihood elsewhere. The munity is tied up with the counmunity is tid up with the country school.

"With larger high schools and fewer districts, we are going to have a demand for better teachers, more adequate facilities, and the means toward higher education, which means a higher standard of living.

"With more intelligence we are going to produce more goods. With higher salaries we will have increased spending. Industries will have a large field from which to bid for labor.

Dr. Phay was presented by Dr. James Ferguson, dean of the college at Millsaps, who served as chairman. Welcome greetings were extended by Miss Edna Ruth Davis, administrative research analyst of Jackson, who is clearinghouse chairman. The meeting was opened officially by Dr. Ralph Owings, head of educational administration at Southern, and host to the group.

Following Dr. Phay's address, Dr. Ferguson conducted a panel discussion.

Questions and answers in this period covered such problems as the movement of Negroes out of the state (it is not yet known whether the more intelligent ones are leaving or remaining); the establishment of qualifications for school board members (Dr. Phay cannot see this. "The schools belong to the people around them," he said.); the need for larger curricula and more technical training for industry; the need for a balance in higher education and wider opportunities to keep young people in the state.

Educ - Miss

State Times

Published Each Evening and Sunday at Jackson, Mississippi, by Citizens Publishing Co.

R. E. DUMAS MILNER, President
W. P. BRIDGES, Vice-President LELAND SPEED, Secretary-Treasurer

Board of Directors:

W. W. BAILEY, W. P. BRIDGES, R. C. BROWN, BRECK CABELL, W. A. CALDWELL, SR., SID DON CAMPER, R. D. EZELLE, SR., JOHN M. (Jim) EVANS, JAMES E. FOWLER, HAROLD GOTTHELF, JR., BAGBY HALL, HENRY HOLMAN SR., A. D. HOPKINS, FRANK B. HUTTON, R. W. HYDE, JR., STUART IRBY, JR., SID D. JONES, JACK KENNINGTON, O. H. KERR, FLOYD KIMBROUGH, COLLIN T. LANE, ISIDORE LEHMAN, W. B. McCARTY, SR., DR. STIRLING S. McNAIR, SAM P. McRAE, JR., R. E. DUMAS MILNER, LEO MOORE, GEORGE MORI, W. R. NEWMAN, H. J. NICHOLAS, KENNETH PAINE, KELLY PATTERSON, DUDLEY PHELPS, JR., ANGELO PRIMOS, ROBT. I. (Rip) PRICHARD, DAVE RICE, SIDNEY ROBINSON, JR., HARRISON RUSSELL, THAD J. RYAN, W. D. SEALE, JR., GEORGE E. SHAW, LELAND SPEED, LEON THOMAS, W. F. TURMAN, JR., J. W. UNDERWOOD, DUDLEY H. WHITE, LESLIE L. WILKINSON, TOM E. WRIGHT

O. A. ROBINSON, Publisher & General Manager

PAUL TIBLIER, Editor-In-Chief
ROBERT E. WEBB, Associate Editor
GEORGE HARMON, City Editor
JIMMIE McDOWELL, Sports Editor
KENNETH E. DAHLSTROM, Retail Advertising Manager
MARION SEATON, Circulation Manager
WILLIAM L. BROWN, Classified Advertising Manager
JACK NOLAN, National Advertising Manager
JOHN W. GRAY, Mechanical Supt.

Please Return

Brotherly Compassion Of Races Urged In Solution Of State School Problems

Now that FBI agents have been appointed schoolroom proctors, to punish errant white students of integrated schools, the Kremlin must be breathing a bit less heavy.

For it sees the United States, the cradle of liberty, adopting its own spy tactics, the kind of secret police methods which brought rebellion to Hungary.

Radio Moscow and Pravda, the Communist newspaper, can tell their readers how the Reds-chasing FBI has borrowed a note from the Russian secret police in order to compel racial integration at Clinton, Tenn.

It must be conceded, however, that orders for this Hitlerian, Stalinistic assignment of the FBI came from higher up, Attorney General Herbert Brownell, not from career officers of the police agency.

Never was it imagined that school room discipline, dealing with young boys and girls, would be removed, in final analysis, from teachers to the FBI, no matter what kind of race-mixing commands were issued. Agents must feel a bit ridiculous, if not hostile, toward the "big bully" role given them at Clinton, a role which, it is presumed, will be repeated wherever integration is attempted.

At best the sinister threat of FBI interrogation and federal punishment makes schooling uncomfortable for both races at Clinton. At worst, it could cause psychotic disturbances among these children in their formative years. And that, of course, would defeat the very psychological excuse given by the Supreme Court for its desegregation decision.

So as we of Mississippi sympathize with Clintonians, wisdom suggests no delay in the state's school equalization program. Negro systems should be brought up to par with every possible haste.

It's not wishful thinking to say that our Negro citizens prefer their own schools. They do. But they have every right to expect them to be equal to white schools, a goal to which 65 cents of every Mississippi tax dollar is now pledged.

Meantime, justice forbids ignition of racial discord on account of the Clinton incident, although it demands repudiation of tactics thrust upon the FBI. Let us continue the brotherly compassion of the races in Mississippi while working toward a just solution of our problems.

The spirit upon us at Christmas time, fostered year round, would see to it that the Clinton drama never had a repeat performance.

Educ. - Miss.

...OM READERS

St Times 12-15-56

Our Own Freedom

State Times,

During World War II, there was an expression, "It can't happen in America." Well, it has happened at Clinton, Tenn. Clinton, Tenn., now has come under a Gestapo form of government. This kind of government, which will be so much like the so-called "Reconstruction" era, will creep like a cancer, over the entire South. No southern community will be safe from the Gestapo unless there happens to be one that has no Negro population.

There are a number of Northern towns that have no Negroes. The inhabitants of these places are very smug over the fact that they know that their schools will never be integrated. They know that this entire mess over segregation is merely for the purpose of making a black belt of the South, and thus keeping the Negro out of the North.

The following quotation from an editorial in an Illinois paper would be funny if it did not smack so definitely of Russian technique. It is entitled, "Moderation At Clinton."

> "These injunctions do not directly force a community to comply with the desegregation decision, but they do make enforcement possible through the more oblique method of punishing those who interfere with the peaceful integration of a school."

No, the South is not being forced, but in case we do not follow the Supreme Court's decision, we will be punished. Just what else, pray, is force?

Lillian Smith (that "strange author" of Strange Fruit) says that we of the South are losing our freedom because we are doing nothing to end segregation. We are losing our freedom all right, but not for the reason she gives. It's just the opposite. It's because we are doing nothing to ensure segregation. Trace the South's actions down through history, and we will find that the average Southerner has to be slapped in the face with reality before he is ready to act, and then it is usually too late.

At present, while we are bestowing our sympathy on the "poor Hungarians" who are struggling for freedom, we Southerners are having our own taken away from us.

We have one alternative, that of following the tactics of the all white communities of the North. The only schools that can remain all white will be those in all white communities. Does Mississippi have any such, or any that are willing to become such in order to keep their children in all white schools?

Yours truly,
A Southerner

P.S. In case ~~you publish~~ my letter, please give the above signature instead of my own.

Miss - Ed

Clarion Ledger - Miss Nov 20, 1956

Promises To Enforce Our Segregation Laws

Miss Pol + Gov.

Mississippi's Attorney General Joe T. Patterson declared Monday that so long as the state's segregation laws stay on the books he will hold that they shall be enforced against integration in schools or on busses.

He labeled as a "veiled threat" to Mississippi officials a statement by U. S. Attorney General Herbert Brownell that state officials who interfere with orderly de-segregation on buses may be prosecuted.

Brownell has summoned U. S. attorneys of 14 Southern states to appear in Washington on Dec. 10 to map plans of action for enforcing de-segregation on busses and other public carriers.

Meantime, U. S. Attorney Robert Hauberg said in Jackson that he has not yet received a request to come to Washington to meet with the U. S. attorney general.

HAUBERG NOT NOTIFIED

"I probably will get a letter from Mr. Brownell in a day or so," Mr. Hauberg said. "Since I have not yet received a request to attend the conference, and also because I know nothing of what might transpire at the conference, I am not in a position to make any comment."

Mississippi's attorney general said that the steps to enforce desegregation ordered by the federal official is "just another example of federal encroachment on states rights."

Late Monday afternoon, no action had been taken by the State Sovereignty Commission toward an early meeting to cope with the new problem.

SITUATION SERIOUS

Hal DeCell, publicity director, said that his office had received no notice of the Brownell action. The Sovereignty Commission, created to keep Mississippi segregated, has not held a meeting in several weeks.

Gov. J. P. Coleman, nominal head of the commission, was not immediately available for comment.

Patterson said that he will take every step necessary to maintain segregation as applied by Mississippi law. He admitted that the situation may be serious.

Referring to U. S. Atty. Gen. Brownell's summons in Washington Monday for a meeting of U. S. attorneys from 14 Southern states on Monday to implement a U. S. Supreme Court decision which declared bus segregation in Montgomery, Ala., illegal, Patterson said:

"If the United States attorney general had any regard for states rights, he would also seek to confer in person with state officials who are responsible for state laws."

NO REGARD FOR STATES

Patterson said that Mississippi has "statutes on the books" which prohibit the mixing of races on busses and other public carriers and added:

"As far as I'm concerned, they will stay on the books."

He said:

"This (the high court ruling) is just another instance of the repeal of state laws by court decree without regard to the rights of a state as contained in the Tenth Amendment to the U. S. Constitution."

News wire services Monday carried the statement of U. S. Attorney General Brownell from Washington that he has summoned the U. S. attorneys of 14 Southern states to map action for enforcing integration on busses and other carriers.

Brownell said the action was made necessary by the Supreme Court decision last Tuesday which struck down a city ordinance requiring segregation on city buses in Montgomery.

Brownell added: "It is now clear that any such law, statute, ordinance or regulation must be regarded as a dead letter."

CALLS 34 ATTORNEYS

The attorney general asked 34 U. S. Attorneys in 14 states "in which discriminatory state or local laws of this kind are unrepealed" to come to Washington.

He explained: "The purpose of the conference will be to consider and decide upon those measures most appropriate for the Department of Justice to take to secure observance of the United States Constitution and laws by the carriers and all others."

States to be represented at the conference will be Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

Clarion Ledger
(Jackson, Miss)
November 20, 1956

~~August 3, 1954~~
Atlanta Constitution

Ed. Miss - 56

Speaks To Kiwanis Here

Waits 'Not So Certain' Schools To Be Segregated In Four Years

Reprinted from yesterday's late edition

Rep. Hilton Waits of Leland told Greenville Kiwanians today he's "not so certain" Mississippi public schools will still be segregated four years from now.

"The governor says we won't be integrated this four years," the veteran Washington county legislator said. "But I'm not so certain. We've already got all the courts on the other side."

He said it was with this thought in mind the Legal Education Advisory Committee, of which he is a member, sought to pass a number of laws to maintain segregation.

Reviews Laws

Among the LEAC laws passed during the recent legislative session reviewed by Waits were:

Repeal of compulsory school attendence—Now, in case the federal government forces schools to integrate, Waits pointed out, "white people won't have to send their children to school . . . We weren't enforcing the compulsory schools laws for the Negroes anyway."

Making common law marriages illegal — "They (Negroes) now don't want to be second class citizens anymore; so, this law will make them get married like first class citizens."

Passed laws making it illegal to mix two races in restaurants and other public places — "We found to our surprise that segregation is practiced in Mississippi because of custom and that there are no laws about it; so we made some."

More For Patrol

Increased the appropriations for the National Guard and state Highway Patrol — They are the only law enforcement agencies the state government has at its disposal, Waits explained, and the appropriation increase was made to make available a competent force for highway safety and "in case we have any race riots."

★ ★ ★

Waits said legalization of liquor is "getting closer" in Mississippi "although I don't know whether I'll live to see it."

"The people in the dry counties want every other county to be dry," he added.

He said this legislature exceeded the budget by only 1.7 percent "which is better than we've ever done."

Forceful Governor

He called Gov. Coleman "a very energetic, ambitions and forceful governor" who was "pretty successful with the legislature and I think he will be a progressive governor."

There is much misunderstanding about the net income of the state tax collector, Waits said, and explained that the office netted $23,000 last year "which was the best year and a lot less than the estimates you hear being made."

He said a proposed criminal liable law, which failed to pass, was not aimed at the press in general but at the "Eagle Eye," a mimeographed sheet distributed in Jackson by a Negro, and at abusive telephone calls.

Headache such FAST relief Get the BEST for LESS...get St. Joseph ASPIRIN A PLOUGH PRODUCT WORLD'S LARGEST SELLER AT 10¢

George.

Dr. Duckett did this little survey on his own & reported his findings at our last SRC meeting. He let me have a copy to run off on the mimeograph.

You seemed to be a spring topic for this locality. Rock Hill's mayor, et als are reported on the verge of establishing a Committee on Human Relations to work, among other things, for appointment of Negroes to local governing & advisory bodies.

D

Responses of 100-Negro Citizens* of Rock Hill, S.C. to 18 Questions Related to Desegregation—

March, 1954

Questions:	Responses: Number Yes	Number No	Percent Yes	Percent No
1. Do you feel that there can ever be equality in education as long as segregation exists?	15	79	16	84
2. Do you feel that segregation in education is a form of discrimination?	85	7	92	8
3. Are you against de-segregation because you think Negro teachers will lose their jobs?	10	86	11	89
4. Are you in favor of gradual integration? Explain.	67	28	70	30
5. Do you feel that the retention of jobs by teachers who are not prepared to teach children irrespective of color is more important than the full development of our youths' capacity?	4	91	4	96
6. Do you favor segregation because you feel that the Negro has a greater chance of development?	14	81	15	85
7. Are you satisfied with the showing that the majority of our race made on the Armed Services Examination?	0	97	0	100
8. Do you think that progress would have been better if you were not segregated?	94	1	99	1
9. Do you feel that Negro youth has the intellectual capacity that is possessed by white youth?	96	1	99	1
10. Do you feel that you have developed intellectually as much as you would have if there had not been segregation in education?	8	87	8	92
11. Would you favor having your child sit by, play with, and eat with white children?	96	1	99	1
12. Should segregation be abolished, and conflict arise between students and parents of both races?
b. Would you favor settlement through forceful means?	0	100	0	100
1. Conference with Mayor
2. Members of School Board	100	0	100	0
3. Parent-Teacher Association
13. Should the Supreme Court rule in favor of segregation, are you in favor of another law suit to bring about de-segregation to the extent you would make a financial contribution?	100	0	100	0
14. Do you favor Negro membership on all public boards?	99	0	100	0
15. Are you prejudiced against a few white people or	80	19	81	19
a. Are you prejudiced toward the whole Caucasian race?	4	93	4	96
16. Have you earnestly tried not to be prejudiced toward white people?	66	31	68	32
17. Do you earnestly feel that their prejudices toward you justify your prejudice?	74	24	76	24
18. If segregation is eliminated are you willing to aid in the drive for better race relationship?	99	0	100	0

* Representing a cross section of occupations and income levels.

Education, S. C.

WHAT'S NEXT IN CLARENDON COUNTY?

In order for Negroes to be hired as teachers in Clarendon County 1955-56 the attached questionnaire must be filled out with stress being placed on question number 15.

It is said that teachers not holding college degrees are now being rehired; the reason given for such action is that they want local professional workers. Mr. J. T. McCain, former principal of the Scotts Branch High School 1954-55 was ousted without being given a reason, in spite of the fact that it is conceded that he is one of the best school men in the state. He was urged this past spring by the Summerton superintendent not to accept another position (offering him more money) in view of the fact that he had done such a fine job at Scotts Branch.

The combined PTA groups of Clarendon County have asked for a hearing before the local school board (at Summerton) in regards to the firing of Mr. McCain but, the board has not consented to meet with them.

DATE_____1955

1. NAME_____ FOR: Permanent Position_____
Substitute Work_____
2. Temporary Address:_____Telephone_____
3. Permanent Address:_____
4. Marital Status: Single____ Married____ Widowed____ Divorced_____
5. Number of Children_____Age of Youngest_____ Other Dependents_____
6. Physical Condition:_____Weight_____Height_____ft. _____inches
7. TRAINING:

	SCHOOL	PLACE	DEGREE
ELEMENTARY
HIGH
COLLEGE GRADUATE SCHOOL
EXTENSION COURSES

8. Total Semester Hours earned in Education: GRADUATE_____
9. Plans, if any, for further study_____
10. CERTIFICATE STATUE: S. C. Certificate:
Group_____ Class_____ Grade_____/ Time expires
Years of experience_____ subjects or area_____
11. Name subjects or grades applying for in order of preference_____
High School Grades:_____
Elementary Grades:_____
12. Date of Birth_____ Place of Birth_____
Age_____ Race_____ Church Affiliation_____
13. Teaching Experience:

PLACE	NATURE OF WORK	DATES

14. Of what professional organizations are you a member?_____
15. Are you a member of NAACP?_____ If so what chapter?_____
16. If we should request a personal interview when would it be possible for you to come to this office? _____
17. REFERENCES:

NAME	ADDRESS	POSITION

_____
Legal Signature

Husband's/Wife's occupation_____his/her residence

S. C. COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS
1508 LADY STREET • COLUMBIA, S. C.

Fleming

Reprinted from SCHOOL AND SOCIETY, April 28, 1956. Vol. 83, No. 2084, pages 143-147

Turmoil in the Deep South

Education, Desegregation S.C.

By CHESTER C. TRAVELSTEAD[1]
Dean, College of Education, University of New Mexico

TENSION is running high in the deep South, and most observers agree that things will get considerably worse before they are better. One southern-born writer has said recently that the "Solid South has always been cracking from within: before the War Between the States, during the war, and ever since. Any system will crack if it opposes not only justice but also the ruling opinion of its time."[2]

In South Carolina the state political leaders are not only questioning the power, authority, and jurisdiction of the Federal government, but they are freely using such words as "nullification" and "interposition" with respect to the decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court concerning segregation of the races in the public schools.

"Psychological secession" might be an appropriate term to describe what is happening in this state today. "We will be a part of the Union as long as—and in the ways in which—it suits our fancy! When the Constitution of the United States is interpreted by the highest court of our land so as to rule out 'our way of life' here in the South, then we will declare such interpretations null and void. We know we can do this with impunity because we have found the legal terms 'nullification' and 'interposition' which we think will protect us in this matter." So shouts the political leader, and so follows a group of people who refuse to accept the fact that much of the old South has "gone with the wind."

I came to South Carolina in the summer of 1953 to become dean of the School of Education at the state university in Columbia. Born and reared in southern Kentucky and having taught for many years in the public schools and universities in Kentucky, Virginia, and Georgia, I felt thoroughly acquainted with the laws, ideals, customs, and current practices in the southern states. All my life I have been a part of this paradoxical South.

In 1953, life in South Carolina was moving along quietly on a segregated basis. The state had undergone a wholesale reorganization and consolidation of its school districts. Previously, there had been more than 1,500 school districts; now there were only 103 of them. The South Carolina Educational Finance Commission was in the process of allocating large sums of money to be used in the construction of public-school buildings—still to be on a segregated basis. It was interesting for me to note that well over half the money being distributed was earmarked for Negro schools. This "new deal" for the Negroes had begun in 1951, when several of the state political leaders decided that if South Carolina was going to stand on the "separate-but-equal" policy (as accepted by the U. S. Supreme Court in 1896 in the Plessy v. Ferguson case), it would first have to make some effort toward improving the grossly inadequate Negro school facilities. For even the most ardent supporter of segregation in South Carolina knew that for more than 50 years this state had given only lip service to the "separate-but-equal" policy.

In 1953, these leaders and their newly elected colleagues were working desperately to beat the deadline. Somehow they hoped and believed that the Federal government would not tamper with the school-segregation policy if it was shown that definite efforts were being made to close the gap of difference between the white and Negro schools. Consequently, about 63% of the school-building money was put into buildings for Negro boys and girls during this period.

This line of thinking received a great shock on May 17, 1954, when the U. S. Supreme Court handed down its decision declaring unconstitutional the practice of segregation of races in the public schools. (This day is sometimes referred to as "Black Monday" in several of the southern states.) The shock was of a strange type, however. Instead of inciting belligerence and threats,

[1] Until Feb. 1, 1956, the author was dean, School of Education, University of South Carolina. He wrote this article in Dec., 1955-Jan., 1956, and submitted it to SCHOOL AND SOCIETY, Jan. 25.

[2] J. McB. Dabbs, South Atlantic Quarterly, 55:33-40, Jan., 1956.

it was accompanied by calm and silence, perhaps numbness or dullness.

No "extra" editions of the papers appeared. No speeches or pronouncements were made by southern leaders in the papers or over the radio. The event was so serious that many people did not even discuss it. They wanted to think about it for a while, at least. Thus, a period of silence.

In the early summer of 1953, I discussed with Pres. Donald Russell of the University of South Carolina the possibility of Negroes being admitted to the university, and he said at the time that he fully expected Negroes to apply for admission and to be admitted in "two or three years." Having been a member of the faculty at the University of Georgia where a Negro had been denied admission to the Law School because of his race, I told Pres. Russell I felt keenly that such denials should not and could not continue in graduate schools of southern universities in the face of previous U. S. Supreme Court decisions to the contrary. He agreed—and three days later employed me as dean of the university's School of Education.

During the 1954-55 school year, I had the opportunity to talk with many educators and laymen concerning the Supreme Court decision. Many of these people expressed a willingness to help implement the decision. Others were violently opposed and said it could never be done in this generation. Some would say, "I don't object personally, but what about all these other people? They won't stand for it." Somehow I never have been able to identify definitely "all these other people," but I suppose that they do exist in large numbers—at least the political leaders claim that this is so. Regrettably one no longer hears in this state the opinions of those who advocate even a gradual process of desegregation. Their voices have been silenced. Those in positions of leadership not only condone but encourage declarations of defiance of the Supreme Court decision. No thought of compromise—much less agreement—with the Court is tolerated.

While James F. Byrnes was still governor, he appointed a legislative committee to look into the possibilities of preserving segregation of the races in the public schools of the state. The committee soon came to be known as the Gressette Committee, taking its name after its chairman, Marion Gressette, state senator from Calhoun County, S. C. This committee studied the matter during most of 1954 and then made some specific recommendations to the 1955 legislature concerning action to sustain the status quo. Here are some of the changes brought about by this 1955 legislature as a direct result of recommendations from the Gressette Committee:

1. The compulsory school-attendance law was repealed.

2. A law was passed which requires that all state funds be cut off from any school district which assigns Negro and white children to the same school. (This action, of course, precludes the possibility of any local community carrying out—even on a gradual basis—the Supreme Court decision. For in South Carolina about 75% of all money spent on public schools comes from the state level.)

3. All teachers in the state's public schools were taken off continuing contracts. If a teacher is not notified by March 31 that she is to be re-employed for the next year, then she is automatically without a position at the end of the current school year.

Gov. George Bell Timmerman, Jr., in his inaugural address delivered in January, 1955, openly defied the U. S. Supreme Court decision by saying that the Court had exceeded its authority. He said in essence that it was a sociological decision by nine political appointees who had usurped powers reserved only for Congress. He also flatly denounced those persons who, for any reason, advocated even a gradual compliance with the decision. "It is cowardly to advocate gradualism in this matter of integration," he said. Later, in a major address before the South Carolina Education Association, the Governor again devoted a large part of his time to a denunciation of the Supreme Court decision.

All this time I was distressed to observe that only one side of this whole issue was being presented to the public. Concerning this question, one could only hear from the public platform, or on local and state radio and television programs, reasons for opposing, ignoring, or defying the Supreme Court decision. It was obvious that few, if any, persons were willing to discuss in public the possibility of compliance.

This line of action not only deprived almost half our citizenry of its right to first-class citizenship, but, even more important, we were fast developing an autocratic police state. When all sides of important issues cannot be freely discussed, when conformity of thought is demanded, we lose our birthright guaranteed by our forefathers.

With this in mind, I felt compelled to express my views on this matter in some way. Therefore, about two weeks after I heard Gov. Timmerman address the South Carolina Education Association in April, 1955, I wrote a letter to him, giving my opinions on several points included in his speech.

In this letter I tried to discuss objectively and in parliamentary language my viewpoints on some of these matters. Below are some excerpts from my letter to Gov. Timmerman, dated May 2, 1955:

I must say sincerely and respectfully that I disagree emphatically with several of your views on matters referred to in your recent speech and in others delivered during the current year. I will list below some of these views and my reasons for disagreement with them:

You have said: "The opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States in the school segregation cases uphold for the first time in judicial history that equality of treatment is discrimination."

It is my considered judgment that it was not the intent of the Court to say, nor did it say, that "equality of treatment is discrimination." Rather did it say, in effect, that segregation is in and of itself discriminatory and therefore a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.

You have sharply attacked the integrationist and have said that he is "seeking to abolish parental rights in education, utilizing men of talent and little character to bombard the public with a barrage of false propaganda designed to lynch the character of a fourth of our nation."

It is without evidence to say that those who, in 1955, for moral, civic, and legal reasons believe that segregation is outmoded and should therefore be abolished, are, as you say, men of "little character" attempting to "lynch the character of a fourth of our nation." It is my opinion that many men of great stature are sincerely convinced that the May 17 ruling of the Supreme Court was both timely and sound.

You have said: "No precedent, no parallel, can be found for compulsory integration. It is new. It is novel. It is contrary to the divine order of things. Only an evil mind can conceive it. Only a foolish mind can accept it."

It seems to me that there are many parallels and precedents. Every state that has enforced compulsory school attendance (for separate or integrated schools) has practiced compulsory integration. When we put together in the same school and in the same classes children who differ widely in educational, social, mental, emotional, physical, and cultural backgrounds and achievements, we are faced with extreme differences—whether within one race or among different races.

Schools are constantly striving for better ways of integrating these differences or of educating in spite of the differences. Compulsory integration does have parallel and precedent. Thirty-one states and the District of Columbia do have school systems in which the races are integrated. The other seventeen states, now practicing segregation of the races in their schools, still practice compulsory integration within each race by requiring that boys and girls of widely different socio-economic and cultural backgrounds go to the same schools in spite of these differences.

It is my opinion, therefore, that the phrases, "evil mind" and "foolish mind," quoted above, have been ill used and are without foundation.

One other point which might be quite pertinent. All peace-loving and law-abiding citizens believe that the laws of the state and of the nation should be respected and obeyed, in spite of the fact that every law seems unjust or unnecessary to some people. In the present case, the highest court of our land has said that the practice of segregation of races in the schools is unconstitutional.

As we maneuver and manipulate in order to circumvent these duly constituted agencies of law, how can we explain and justify this action to our children and to our children's children? Can we on Monday tell them to obey the law and have respect for the agencies of law and order, and then on Tuesday tell them they don't need to obey the law, that it is right to circumvent the law as long as they don't get caught?

I will appreciate your serious consideration of my views in this matter, and I will be delighted to discuss it with you at your convenience. I am not sending a copy of this letter to anyone else, in the hope that you will be kind enough to acknowledge it and send an answer at your convenience.

I did not receive from the Governor an answer to my letter; nor have I ever had any communication from him on this or any other matter. I was asked by Pres. Russell a few days later, however, if I had written the Governor a letter on segregation. I told him I had written such a letter and that I would be glad to let him see a copy. After he had read the letter on the following day, we discussed the matter for some time. He was not pleased that I had written the letter, but he did not direct or even suggest that I desist from writing about or discussing the matter of segregation. This was about June 1, 1955.

On August 2, I delivered on the university campus a speech which had been scheduled and advertised for more than two months in advance. It was the sixth in a series of seven summer lectures. About 400 summer-session students and university faculty members made up the audience.

In this lecture, titled "Today's Decisions for Tomorrow's Schools," I mentioned briefly eight major problems and issues facing us in education today in South Carolina. The last problem discussed was that of integration of the races in the public schools. Some excerpts from this speech are given below:

In the absence of such statements from the professional organizations we cannot know how the members of these organizations feel about this problem [segregation]. Perhaps one would say that silence indicates concurrence with action being taken, but of course this may or may not be true. Silence can in some cases indicate opposition, coupled with a great reluctance to speak one's views—reluctance because of fear of embarrassment, ridicule, or reprisal. Be that as it may, it seems imperative to me that this or any other issue of so great import deserves and demands public discussion.

It is my firm conviction that enforced segregation of the races in our public schools can no longer be justified on any basis—and should, therefore, be abolished as soon as practicable. Even though, as a white southerner, I have, since my early childhood, taken for granted the practice of segregation, I can find now no justification for it. As I study the Judaic-Christian concept prevalent in western civilization; as I examine the bases of our own government—the Bill of Rights and all other pronouncements of our forefathers—I find nothing which requires, justifies, or even allows a notion of second-class citizenship for any group. I find no conclusive evidence that any one group of men is foreordained to be superior or inferior to other groups of men. I even find that this notion of race and national superiority came to a ruinous end in Nazi Germany. For races or nations of men to think and act upon the assumption that theirs is the superior race or nation and that all other groups are inferior is to invite disaster and downfall. None of the great religions dictates such a creed. Instead, all of them say, in essence, that each man and woman is judged according to his own beliefs and acts. The fact that we have practiced segregation on the assumption that it was right and just, does not make it right and just.

There comes to mind, of course, the question of what to do when parts of the state constitution are not in agreement with parts of the Federal constitution. If one looks at this situation as a citizen of the United States, he can give only one answer. He must support the Federal constitution.

Still another aspect of this question of segregation is that of its implications for international relations. Even if all white people were personally in favor of segregation; even if the practice of segregation had not been declared illegal; one should still be keenly aware of the significance of this problem as the United States is trying so valiantly to gain the support of such countries as India, Egypt, and many other nations in Asia, Africa, Europe and South America. In our grave struggle against communism as a world power, we gain or lose prestige according to our practices back home, rather than by our words said abroad. World travellers, both natives of the United States and of other countries, tell us seriously and emphatically that our continued practice of segregation of the races in this country is jeopardizing our position in world affairs. This possibility is worthy of our serious consideration.

On August 21, when I returned from a brief vacation, I found at my home a letter from the secretary of the board of trustees of the university, informing me that, "in the best interest of the University," I was being dismissed from my position as dean of the School of Education, to become effective June 30, 1956. Since I had no warning whatsoever that such action was even contemplated, this news was a great shock to me.

On August 23, I went to see Pres. Russell to get an explanation. He said in a somewhat vague manner that the executive committee of the board of trustees had felt that the university would be embarrassed before the legislature if representatives of the university faculty were suggesting implementation of the Supreme Court decision on integration of the races in the schools.

About the middle of November, I accepted the position as dean of the College of Education at the University of New Mexico. This acceptance had been preceded by several weeks of correspondence between the officials of that institution and me. Early in October, I had revealed to Pres. Tom L. Popejoy the entire story of events as they had developed here at the University of South Carolina. I sent him copies of the August 2 speech and of the letter of dismissal. After informing him of all developments here, I told him that, if he still wished to consider me for the deanship, I would be interested in discussing the matter further.

In a few days, I received an invitation to visit the University of New Mexico campus at Albuquerque for an interview in connection with the position. I made this trip about November 1 and two weeks later was offered the position. On November 18, I accepted, with the agreement that I would begin my work there on February 1, 1956.

The charitable and courageous stand taken by Pres. Popejoy and the University of New Mexico officials is most noteworthy. When asked by reporters if he knew about my dismissal at the University of South Carolina, Pres. Popejoy replied,

Dr. Travelstead's stand on segregation was more of a recommendation than an indictment. . . . We made a thorough investigation of the speech Dr. Travelstead made in reference to segregation, and we found that it was in line with our point of view that segregation is contrary to our way of life. . . .

The University of New Mexico faculty unanimously adopted a resolution commending Pres. Popejoy on his action. The resolution read in part:

. . . this faculty wishes to associate itself with the action of President Popejoy and to warmly commend him for an act conforming to the best traditions of American democracy and to the noblest of education . . . by those acts President Popejoy has demonstrated an understanding of and a devotion to the finest principles of the democratic ideals. . . . In the climate of these times this statement of President Popejoy reflects real moral and political courage.

Equal job opportunity is good business

WASHINGTON, June 29, 1954

To the President's Committee on Government Contracts:

It is good that the Committee on Government Contracts has prepared this pamphlet describing its functions.

Quietly but persistently the members of this Committee have been at work, with heartening success, on employment problems which over the years have become charged with emotion and distorted by prejudice. Their efforts will, I am sure, continue to bring far-reaching results of enduring value. For notable achievement, the Committee has earned the appreciation and congratulations of the American people.

Because I believe that all who understand the Committee's efforts will wish to assist its progress, I urge everyone who receives this pamphlet to give its message sympathetic and thoughtful attention.

Sincerely,

Dwight D. Eisenhower

Foreword

This pamphlet has been prepared in order to bring to the attention of those employers who are performing Government contracts, other interested agencies, and the general public the purposes and functions of the President's Committee on Government Contracts.

Equality of opportunity in employment for all Americans is a cornerstone of the moral foundation on which this country was built. Further, it is a matter of urgent importance to the Nation for two very practical reasons.

First, the growing industrial might of this country requires the largest possible reserve of skilled manpower.

Second, in the world struggle for the minds of men, America's position of leadership makes it mandatory that we not be subject to the charge of racial prejudice which is being hurled at us every day by the Communists.

This Committee, through the application of the provisions of the so-called "contract clause," is seeking to eliminate all discrimination in employment because of race, religion, color, or national origin by those contracting with the Government. Six million Government contracts in 1953 totaling some forty billion dollars brought millions of Americans in every trade and occupation under direct protection of this contract clause.

Moreover, this Committee has made significant progress in bringing about equality of opportunity in the Nation's Capital.

These accomplishments are substantial.

The basic issue, however, goes far beyond the scope of Government. No one has spoken with greater wisdom on the responsibility of the individual American to insure equality of opportunity than President Eisenhower when he made the following statement on October 9, 1952:

"This problem and its solution are the job of all of us. Government can help and must help. But the final answer is up to you and me and must be achieved in the communities where we live. Every American who opposes inequality, every American who helps, in even the smallest way, to make equality of opportunity a living fact, is doing the business of America. He is strength, against its enemies, in the cause of freedom."

Richard Nixon

Chairman, President's Committee on Government Contracts

The President's Committee on Government Contracts

Chairman
THE HONORABLE RICHARD M. NIXON
Vice President of the United States

Vice Chairman
THE HONORABLE J. ERNEST WILKINS
Assistant Secretary of Labor

MR. GEORGE B. MCKIBBIN
Consultant to the Administrator
General Services Administration

THE HONORABLE JAMES P. MITCHELL
Secretary of Labor

MR. WILLIAM MITCHELL
General Counsel
Atomic Energy Commission

THE HONORABLE THOMAS P. PIKE
Assistant Secretary of Defense

THE HONORABLE WILLIAM P. ROGERS
Deputy Attorney General

THE HONORABLE JAMES C. WORTHY
Assistant Secretary of Commerce

MR. FRED LAZARUS, JR.
President
Federated Department Stores, Inc.
Cincinnati, Ohio

MR. GEORGE MEANY
President
The American Federation of Labor
Washington, D. C.

MRS. HELEN ROGERS REID
Chairman of the Board
New York Herald Tribune
New York, N. Y.

MR. WALTER P. REUTHER
President
Congress of Industrial Organizations
Washington, D. C.

MR. JOHN ROOSEVELT
President
Lee Limited
New York, N. Y.

MR. IVAN L. WILLIS
Vice President
International Harvester Company
Chicago, Ill.

MR. JOHN MINOR WISDOM
Attorney
New Orleans, La.

DR. JACOB SEIDENBERG
Executive Director

Alternates: Mr. Boris Shishkin for Mr. George Meany—Mr. Victor Reuther and Mr. George L-P. Weaver for Mr. Walter Reuther

Every Government contract contains a clause which requires every contractor to give equal employment opportunity regardless of race, religion, color, or national origin. This clause has the same force as all other contract terms such as price, quality, quantity, and delivery.

THE CONTRACT CLAUSE

The clause, clarified and strengthened by The President's Committee on Government Contracts on April 20, 1954, reads as follows:

"In connection with the performance of work under this contract, the contractor agrees not to discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of race, religion, color, or national origin. The aforesaid provision shall include, but not be limited to, the following: employment, upgrading, demotion, or transfer; recruitment or recruitment advertising; layoff or termination; rates of pay, or other forms of compensation; and selection for training, including apprenticeship. The contractor agrees to post hereafter in conspicuous places, available for employees or applicants for employment, notices to be provided by the contracting officer setting forth the provisions of the nondiscrimination clause.

"The contractor further agrees to insert the foregoing provision in all subcontracts hereunder, except subcontracts for standard commercial supplies or raw materials."

Functions of the Committee

The Committee is charged with the responsibility of insuring that each Government contracting agency takes appropriate steps to enforce the nondiscrimination clause.

The Committee also receives complaints of discrimination against Government contractors. These are transmitted to the appropriate contracting agency which reports back to the Committee its findings and actions on the complaints. The Committee reviews these findings and, where advisable, makes further recommendations.

The Committee also advises contracting agencies on measures for implementing the program to enforce the contract clause.

The Committee encourages educational programs by civic, religious, educational, labor, employer, and other voluntary nongovernmental groups to eliminate job discrimination.

The Committee cooperates with state, municipal, private, and voluntary agencies to effect nondiscrimination.

EVERYONE PROFITS FROM EQUAL JOB OPPORTUNITY

EVERY ELEMENT of our society gains through equal job opportunity. Nondiscrimination makes for a secure America; a unified country in which all people believe in our common ideals and respect one another. It lowers barriers and tensions between people. It reassures all groups. It means a stronger America.

This pamphlet places special emphasis on equal job opportunity for Negroes because they represent so large a part of the problem of discrimination. However, the facts in this presentation apply with equal force to all, regardless of race, religion, color, or national origin.

National Gains

Equal job opportunity increases our national wealth. It raises our standard of living by increasing the income of people who have been discriminated against. This expands demand and consumer and producer markets. The results are increased production and employment.

It has been estimated that the Nation's 16,000,000 Negroes now have an annual personal income exceeding $15,000,000,000. If equal opportunity were universal, billions of dollars in additional purchasing power would be created.

Community Gains

Communities are forced to expend large sums of tax money to counteract delinquency, crime, and other social maladjustments which can be traced to discrimination in employment.

Everybody pays this bill. Nondiscriminatory employment reduces this bill.

Business Gains

Companies that give employment on a basis of qualification alone are able to hire the person with the best training and experience available for the job. They increase their labor supply.

Through such a program, business has contributed to the social and economic welfare of the community and the country, resulting in building good will for itself and increasing its potential consumer market.

Workers Gain

All workers gain from equal job opportunities, not only those who have been subjected to discrimination.

Unions strengthen their economic position under uniform standards of pay, hiring, upgrading, promotion, and layoff for all workers. A divided work force is a weak work force.

On the International Front

Equal job opportunity improves our relations and strengthens our position among nations. Discrimination weakens the moral position of the United States in the World, gives Communists an opportunity to play up racial bigotry and create anti-American sentiment.

Our acts of discrimination hurt the United States wherever citizens belong to the same race as those who are discriminated against here. Two-thirds of the world's population is colored. Prejudice against nonwhites in the United States prejudices the nonwhite world against us.

Equal job opportunity is democracy in action, the most effective answer to Communist propaganda.

WE'VE COME A LONG WAY

THE UNITED STATES Supreme Court has banned segregation in public schools. This historic decision shows clearly the trend. Equality in job opportunity will be accelerated as a result. We have come a long way.

Changes have taken place in recent years smoothly and effectively. Voluntary programs of nondiscrimination are bringing about more friendly relations among groups which were formerly distrustful of each other.

Sixty million Americans already live under some kind of state or local equal employment legislation.

Twelve states since 1945 have passed laws barring discrimination by employers and labor unions because of race, color, religion, or national origin. These are usually administered by a commission and made effective through cooperation of business, labor, and community groups.

The City of Washington, D. C., now inserts the nondiscrimination clause in all the contracts it executes. This step followed the Committee's request for the insertion of such a clause. The District of Columbia executes annually approximately 1,000 contracts, expending approximately 23 million dollars a year.

Thirty-one cities have local ordinances prohibiting job discrimination.

In the Armed Services

Integration is complete in the Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps and is almost complete in the Army.

There was integration of our combat forces in Korea. The integration program at the United States Air Force Base at San Antonio, Tex., of 26,000 white and Negro enlistees, was achieved without incident.

The Navy Department in December 1953 integrated its installations for civilian and military personnel at Charleston, S. C., and Norfolk, Va. Negroes and whites share the same cafeterias, locker rooms, washrooms, drinking fountains, and all other facilities.

In Training Opportunities

Negro students are enrolled on the undergraduate, graduate, and professional levels in many colleges and universities, and in technical and trade schools in all parts of the country.

In Public Service

In government, Negroes hold important elective and appointive positions on the local, national, and international levels.

In Unions

In 1953, more than 2,000,000 Negroes were members of unions, as compared with 700,000 in 1938. Negroes hold top office in 23 national unions.

The Southern Regional Council estimates that of 1,750,000 trade unionists in the South, about 700,000 are Negroes.

In Industry

During World War I, thousands of Negroes entered industrial employment in urban areas. At the start of World War II, in 1941, only 2.5 percent of all war workers were Negroes. Between 1940–44, skilled and semiskilled Negroes increased from 500,000 to 1,500,000.

In the early 1940's, Negroes reached professional levels as chemists and engineers in such companies as International Harvester in Chicago; Western Electric in Kearny, N. J.; General Electric in Schenectady; Curtiss-Wright and Bell Aircraft in Buffalo; Lockheed in Los Angeles.

After World War II they retained most of their wartime gains and entered new fields.

BUSINESS AND UNIONS LEAD THE WAY

America's forward-looking businessmen and labor leaders believe that equal employment opportunity is good business. Trade unionists believe that equality of opportunity advances the standards of employment of all workers.

"General Cable Corporation has for many years followed the policy of equal economic opportunity. This policy provides employees and applicants for employment equal consideration on all phases of personnel policy. Of course, there is no segregation of employees in any of our plants."

A. LEON FERGENSON
Vice President
General Cable Corporation

"It is the policy of the Company to afford equal opportunity of employment to all job applicants regardless of their race, creed, color, or national origin and that employment with us shall be based solely on the selection of the best qualified candidates for the openings available. Our employees have been fully advised of this policy and no serious difficulties have been experienced with regard to it."

WILLARD G. HAMPTON
Vice President
New York Telephone Company

"The United Mine Workers of America practices complete equality of membership—it has no substandard memberships—and also complete job equality in accordance with its Constitution adopted in 1890. Its official seal carries the phrase 'One and indissoluble' and the United Mine Workers of America has lived by that doctrine for 64 years.

"The United Mine Workers of America recognizes that discrimination in any form operates to the detriment of organized workers, that it offers fertile ground for antiunion 'divide and conquer' tactics, and that it is contrary to our ideals of democracy.

"The United Mine Workers of America believes in and practices equality of opportunity and further believes that all Americans, regardless of race, creed or nationality, should be free to exercise those rights which are their heritage."

JOHN L. LEWIS
President
United Mine Workers of America

"We are in favor of workers being hired on the basis of their training and skill rather than their religion or color of their skins. Good Americans favor this policy. It makes good sense."

A. E. LYON
Secretary-Treasurer
Railway Labor Executives Association

"For many years International Harvester has followed a policy in our plants of employing the best qualified person available without regard to race, color, or creed. This same policy was followed when our plants at Memphis, Tenn., Louisville, Ky., Evansville, Ind., and Melrose Park, Ill., were placed in operation following World War II and has also led to the successful integration of minority groups in our work force in these newer operations.

"We believe that such a program is not only good business for the Company, but contributes to the economic welfare of each community in which our plants are located."

JOHN L. MCCAFFREY
President
International Harvester Company

"In America's struggle against world Communism our country is fighting for the dignity of man and his freedom. At the heart of this struggle is free and equal opportunity for all men to share in the fruits of production and in citizenship. Today, more than ever before, it is our Nation's duty not only to proclaim but to enforce this principle in the conduct of its government. Nondiscrimination in employment has been one of the foremost objectives of the American Federation of Labor since its inception. The work toward its full realization is urgent. In this work labor must and will do its part."

GEORGE MEANY
President
The American Federation of Labor

"The difficulties one expects to encounter in initiating a program of Negro employment materialize to the extent of about five percent of what was anticipated. Negroes, once they are established within an industry, are no longer identified as members of a group of outsiders to be feared collectively; instead, they become, in a very little time, people with names, identities, and personalities who are individually measured."

J. J. MORROW
Director of Personnel Relations
Pitney-Bowes Inc.

"We have integrated Negroes without incident into practically every department of the plant, including the skilled trades groups. Also, some measure of success has been experienced on salaried jobs, particularly in the field of engineering. We anticipate further progress in the future as the number of qualified Negro applicants increases, consistent with our employment requirements.

"We have only one policy for hiring, training, upgrading and promoting employees; that is, Qualification."

H. I. NEWSOME
Personnel Director
General Motors Corporation
Inland Manufacturing Division

"Discrimination in employment, because of race, creed, color, or national origin, is an evil which can and must be eradicated.

"There is neither reason nor excuse in a land where we believe all men are created equal for denying equality of opportunity to all our people.

"We must eliminate discrimination because it is morally indefensible as well as economically unsound. We cannot tolerate discrimination in employment, whether the practice is initiated by the employer, the labor union or the employment agency.

"It is intolerable and unthinkable that any government contract, calling for the expenditure of the taxpayers' money, should go to any concern which engages in such discriminatory practices.

"We believe this principle is above politics—that it is a nonpartisan objective to be sought by all parties. Accordingly, in this spirit of nonpartisanship, the CIO supports the principles underlying the President's Government Contract Committee.

"To do less, would be to make us unworthy of our great American heritage."

WALTER P. REUTHER
President
Congress of Industrial Organizations

"We at RCA believe that a policy of equality of employment opportunity without regard to race, religion, color, or national origin is both right and practical. Our experience has fully justified this belief.

"We have found there is no real ground for the fear that employment of minority groups on an equal basis will arouse resentment among the majority of workers or in the community.

"Not only does RCA experience excellent human and community relations as a result of offering equal employment opportunity for all, but our experience has also demonstrated that minority groups can contribute as much in the way of technical skills as any other part of the population. Nondiscrimination in employment is not only a matter of basic democratic principles; it is also a matter of good business."

DAVID SARNOFF
Chairman of the Board
Radio Corporation of America

IT CAN BE DONE

Some of the common objections and answers that business organizations have found useful.

1 I'm in business. I'm no social reformer.

Answer: Businessmen have learned that integration is good business. It is not social reform to use the training, skill and ambition of the entire labor force.

2 I can't move ahead of this community and its traditions.

Answer: Businessmen are leaders in their community. When they establish nondiscrimination in their plants, opposition folds up and anticipated difficulties do not arise.

3 We would hire Negroes, but they don't apply for work.

Answer: If your community knows you have a fair employment policy, qualified applicants will come to you, regardless of their religion or race.

4 Someday Negroes will be able to fill the kind of jobs we have but not yet.

Answer: Negroes who have equivalent training and skill are just as good workers as other people. Personnel records prove there is no difference in turnover, absenteeism, and punctuality between Negroes and other workers.

5 I am afraid our workers will object and walk out.

Answer: With positive leadership many companies have adopted nondiscriminatory employment practices and put them into effect without incident.

6 We believe in equal job opportunity and would like to go ahead, but we think we might offend some people.

Answer: People admire courage. Pioneers in nondiscrimination have made good friends all over this great country.

EIGHT STEPS TO EQUAL JOB OPPORTUNITY

Experience has shown that the following methods are practical in bringing about successful integration:

1 Develop a policy of integration and announce it to the entire organization.

2 Explain policy and methods for its introduction to all supervisors, personnel managers, foremen, interviewers, etc.

3 Explain policy to all workers and union officials.

4 Select carefully initial members of group to be integrated, making sure that they are competent and personable.

5 Place member of minority group in strategic position in personnel or industrial relations department.

6 Explain policy to all job applicants.

7 Enlist the cooperation of the community.

8 Handle all complaints promptly.

■ Top management has the main responsibility to assure equal job opportunity, but there must also be willing cooperation on the part of supervisors and foremen, other employees and the whole community. Equal opportunity is everybody's responsibility.

Principal Contracting Agencies

Department of Agriculture

Atomic Energy Commission

Central Intelligence Agency

Department of Commerce

Department of Defense

Defense Materials Procurement Agency

Federal Civil Defense Administration

Federal Communications Commission

Federal Power Commission

Federal Trade Commission

Foreign Operations Administration

General Accounting Office

General Services Administration

Government Printing Office

Department of Health, Education, and Welfare

Housing and Home Finance Agency

Department of the Interior

Department of Justice

Department of Labor

National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics

Panama Canal Company

Post Office Department

Railroad Retirement Board

Selective Service System

Department of State

Tennessee Valley Authority

Department of the Treasury

Veterans Administration

Correspondence may be addressed to—
The President's Committee on Government Contracts Washington 25, D. C.

U. S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE : 1954—O-304612

EQUAL job opportunity

Procedures for filing complaints
under Executive Order
10479.

PRESIDENT'S COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Washington 25, D. C.

EVERY Federal contract involving the employment of labor, issued on or after December 2, 1954, contains the following provision:

"In connection with the performance of work under this contract, the contractor agrees not to discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of race, religion, color, or national origin. The aforesaid provision shall include, but not be limited to, the following: employment, upgrading, demotion, or transfer; recruitment or recruitment advertising; layoff or termination; rates of pay, or other forms of compensation; and selection for training, including apprenticeship. The contractor agrees to post hereafter in conspicuous places, available for employees and applicants for employment, notices to be provided by the contracting officer setting forth the provisions of the nondiscrimination clause.

The contractor further agrees to insert the foregoing provision in all subcontracts hereunder, except subcontracts for standard commercial supplies or raw materials."

THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT expects contractors to comply voluntarily with their contracts. The Government recognizes, however, that there will be complaints alleging violation of the nondiscrimination clause. The President has authorized the Committee on Government Contracts to receive such complaints.

PRESIDENT'S COMMITTEE

ON GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Washington 25, D. C.

PROCEDURES FOR FILING COMPLAINTS

HOW are complaints filed?

Complaints may be filed by writing a letter to the President's Committee on Government Contracts, Washington 25, D. C.

WHO may file a complaint?

Any person or organization with knowledge of the failure of a Federal contractor to comply with the nondiscrimination clause in the contract may file a complaint with the President's Committee.

WHAT information should be included in the letter?

1 Name and address of complainant.

2 Name and address of employer (contractor or subcontractor).

3 Brief statement of what part of the nondiscrimination clause is alleged to be violated, i. e., employment, demotion, upgrading, or transfer; recruitment or recruitment advertising; rates of pay or other forms of compensation; selection for training including apprenticeship; layoff or termination.

4 Specific evidence supporting the allegation, giving names of persons involved and date of any instances of discrimination in addition to as detailed a description as possible of the circumstances of the case.

What happens to complaints when they are filed with the Committee?

A Chart of Complaint Procedure

Whose RESPONSIBILITY is it to assure equal job opportunity on work done on Federal contracts?

FIRST: Contractors

By signing the contract containing the nondiscrimination in employment clause, contractors agree to assume this responsibility.

SECOND: Agencies of Government

The President directed the contracting agencies of the Government to obtain compliance. By routine compliance checks, the investigation of complaints, and educational methods, the Government agencies bring about compliance.

THIRD: The Public

The public can help bring about compliance by supporting equal job opportunity for all qualified persons.

Equal Economic Opportunity

This employer has agreed to provide equal employment opportunities in connection with all work performed under contracts with the Federal Government in accordance with national policy.

This employer agrees not to discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of race, color, religion, or national origin in connection with:

- EMPLOYMENT, DEMOTION, UPGRADING, OR TRANSFER
- RECRUITMENT OR RECRUITMENT ADVERTISING
- RATES OF PAY OR OTHER FORMS OF COMPENSATION
- SELECTION FOR TRAINING INCLUDING APPRENTICESHIP
- LAYOFF OR TERMINATION

PRESIDENT'S COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS — EQUAL ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY

Inquiries may be addressed to

PRESIDENT'S COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Washington 25, D. C.

Federal contracts require the posting of this notice at conspicuous places available to employees and applicants for employment.

THE PRESIDENT'S COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

President Eisenhower appointed the following Committee to assist in obtaining compliance with the nondiscrimination clause in Federal contracts.

The Honorable RICHARD M. NIXON, Chairman
Vice President of the United States

The Honorable JAMES P. MITCHELL, Vice Chairman
Secretary of Labor

PUBLIC MEMBERS:

FRED LAZARUS, Jr.
President, Federated Department Stores, Cincinnati, Ohio

GEORGE MEANY
President, American Federation of Labor, Washington, D. C.

JAMES M. NABRIT, Jr.
Secretary, Howard University, Washington, D. C.

MRS. HELEN ROGERS REID
Chairman of the Board, New York Herald Tribune, New York, N. Y.

WALTER P. REUTHER
President, Congress of Industrial Organizations, Washington, D. C.

JOHN A. ROOSEVELT
President, Lee Limited, New York, N. Y.

IVAN L. WILLIS
Vice President, International Harvester Co., Chicago, Ill.

JOHN MINOR WISDOM
Attorney, New Orleans, La.

GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIVES:

GEORGE B. MCKIBBIN
Consultant to the Administrator, General Services Administration

WILLIAM MITCHELL
General Counsel, Atomic Energy Commission

The Honorable THOMAS P. PIKE
Assistant Secretary of Defense

The Honorable WILLIAM P. ROGERS
Deputy Attorney General

The Honorable JAMES C. WORTHY
Assistant Secretary of Commerce

MAXWELL M. RABB
Associate Counsel to the President, White House Liaison with Committee

JACOB SEIDENBERG
Executive Director

U. S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE : 1954—O—322333

FREEDOM AGENDA

T. V. Smith

The Bill of Rights and our Individual Liberties

A community adventure
in the discussion of freedom

Freedom Agenda

THE BILL OF RIGHTS AND OUR INDIVIDUAL LIBERTIES

T. V. Smith

Published by the
CARRIE CHAPMAN CATT MEMORIAL FUND, INC.
1954

FIRST REPORT

PRESIDENT'S COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

FIRST REPORT

PRESIDENT'S COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

WASHINGTON, D. C.

SEPTEMBER 1954

Pages 23, 55 + 56 and 73-79

FIFTEENTH CENSUS OF THE UNITED STATES : 1930

Mr Raper

POPULATION BULLETIN

SECOND SERIES

UNITED STATES SUMMARY

COMPOSITION AND CHARACTERISTICS OF THE POPULATION

WASHINGTON
1931

TOPICAL INDEX OF POPULATION CENSUS REPORTS

1900 - 1930

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE
BUREAU OF THE CENSUS
WASHINGTON

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE
MISCELLANEOUS PUBLICATION No. 205

WASHINGTON, D.C. ★ JANUARY 1935

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL PROBLEMS AND CONDITIONS OF THE SOUTHERN APPALACHIANS

By

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics
Bureau of Home Economics, and Forest Service

In cooperation with the Office of Education, United States Department of Interior and the Agricultural Experiment Stations of Tennessee, Virginia, West Virginia, and Kentucky

George Sinclair Mitchell

Southern Regional Council
63 Auburn Ave
Atlanta

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE
BUREAU OF THE CENSUS

16TH CENSUS
OF THE UNITED STATES
1940

HOUSING

First Series

Data for Small Areas

United States Summary

Selected Housing Statistics for States; for Urban and Rural Areas; for Cities of 50,000 or More; and for Metropolitan Districts

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

JESSE H. JONES, SECRETARY

BUREAU OF THE CENSUS

J. C. CAPT, DIRECTOR (Appointed May 22, 1941)

WILLIAM LANE AUSTIN, DIRECTOR (Retired January 31, 1941)

VERGIL D. REED, ASSISTANT DIRECTOR

HOWARD H. McCLURE, ASSISTANT DIRECTOR

16TH CENSUS OF THE UNITED STATES 1940

POPULATION

First Series

Number of Inhabitants

Georgia

Prepared under the supervision of

Dr. LEON E. TRUESDELL

Chief Statistician for Population

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE • WASHINGTON • 1941

For sale by the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. C., Price 10 cents

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

JESSE H. JONES, SECRETARY

BUREAU OF THE CENSUS

J. C. CAPT, DIRECTOR (Appointed May 22, 1941)

WILLIAM LANE AUSTIN, DIRECTOR (Retired January 31, 1941)

VERGIL D. REED, ASSISTANT DIRECTOR

HOWARD H. McCLURE, ASSISTANT DIRECTOR

16TH CENSUS OF THE UNITED STATES 1940

POPULATION

Second Series

Characteristics of the Population

Georgia

Prepared under the supervision of

Dr. LEON E. TRUESDELL

Chief Statistician for Population

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE • WASHINGTON • 1942

For sale by the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. C., Price 40 cents

August 22, 1942

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE
Bureau of the Census
Washington

Sixteenth Census of the
United States: 1940

Series H-13, No. 2

HOUSING

HOME LIGHTING EQUIPMENT: 1940

(This advance release presents data on home lighting equipment in urban and rural areas in the United States and in the North, South, and West. Similar data for States are being issued in releases of Series H-9.)

More than three-fourths of all dwelling units in the United States have electric lights, according to data from the 1940 Census of Housing released today by Director J. C. Capt of the Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. Electric lighting equipment was provided in 28,052,596 dwelling units, or 76.7 percent of the 36,557,913 units for which type of lighting equipment was reported. The percentages of urban and rural-nonfarm homes with electric lights were 92.5 and 77.8, respectively. The corresponding figure for rural-farm homes was 31.3 percent. Of the three regions, the West ranked first in proportion of homes with electric lighting, the percentages being 88.6 in the West, 85.4 in the North, and 54.5 in the South.

While the greatest contrast in the proportion of homes with electric lights occurs between urban and rural areas, especially between the nonfarm and farm residence groups, the census figures show important regional differences among these residence groups. Thus the proportion of rural-farm homes that were wired for electricity was 57.4 percent in the West, as compared with 44.3 percent in the North and 16.4 percent in the South. The percentage of urban homes with electric lights ranged from 84.7 in the South to 98.5 in the West.

Kerosene or gasoline lamps were reported as the principal type of lighting equipment for 7,638,257 dwelling units in the United States, or one out of every five. About 5,000,000 of these dwelling units were rural-farm, 3,000,000 being in the rural-farm areas of the South.

Gas lights were used in fewer than 500,000 homes, or 1.3 percent of all reporting units, and about an equal number used candles or some other means of lighting. Relatively more urban than rural homes used gas lights, the percentages being 1.4 for all urban dwelling units, 0.7 for the rural-nonfarm, and 1.3 for the rural-farm. The most frequent use of gas lighting occurred in urban places of the North, where it was reported for almost 300,000 dwelling units, or 2.0 percent of the total.

The extension of power lines into the rural areas between 1930 and 1940 has brought about substantial gains in the use of electricity by farm families. According to reports of the Census of Agriculture, 13.4 percent of all farm operators' dwellings were lighted by electricity in 1930. By 1940 31.3 percent of all rural-farm dwelling units reported the use of electricity for lighting. The actual increase between 1930 and 1940 may have been even greater than these figures indicate, because the data obtained in the Farm census are restricted to dwellings occupied by farm operators, whereas the 1940 figures cover all dwelling units on farms, including vacant units and homes of farm laborers and persons engaged in nonfarm occupations, as well as those occupied by farm operators.

The figures in the accompanying table were taken from the Second Series Housing bulletins which are being issued for each State by the Bureau of the Census. These bulletins also contain statistics relating to type of structure, year built, number of rooms, size of household, rent or value, and housing facilities and equipment. (over)

ALL DWELLING UNITS BY LIGHTING EQUIPMENT, FOR THE UNITED STATES, BY REGIONS, URBAN AND RURAL: 1940

(Figures include both occupied and vacant units)

Area and lighting equipment	Total		Urban		Rural-nonfarm		Rural-farm
	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent
UNITED STATES
Total.....	37,325,470	-	21,616,352	-	8,066,837	-	7,642,281	-
Number reporting.....	36,557,913	100.0	21,094,463	100.0	7,950,653	100.0	7,512,797	100.0
Electric.....	28,052,596	76.7	19,516,516	92.5	6,185,034	77.8	2,351,046	31.3
Gas.....	458,831	1.3	304,798	1.4	54,622	0.7	99,411	1.3
Kerosene or gasoline	7,638,257	20.9	1,043,431	4.9	1,658,611	20.9	4,936,215	65.7
Other.....	408,229	1.1	229,718	1.1	52,386	0.7	126,125	1.7
Not reporting.....	767,557	-	521,889	-	116,184	-	129,484	-
THE NORTH
Total.....	21,910,203	-	14,572,010	-	4,269,655	-	3,068,538	-
Number reporting.....	21,389,236	100.0	14,157,310	100.0	4,210,976	100.0	3,020,950	100.0
Electric.....	18,260,752	85.4	13,271,197	93.7	3,650,590	86.7	1,338,965	44.3
Gas.....	358,993	1.7	284,672	2.0	21,662	0.5	52,659	1.7
Kerosene or gasoline	2,507,995	11.7	392,754	2.8	520,640	12.4	1,594,601	52.8
Other.....	261,496	1.2	208,687	1.5	18,084	0.4	34,725	1.1
Not reporting.....	520,967	-	414,700	-	58,679	-	47,588	-
THE SOUTH
Total.....	10,876,056	-	4,324,822	-	2,664,771	-	3,886,463	-
Number reporting.....	10,700,124	100.0	4,258,154	100.0	2,625,380	100.0	3,816,590	100.0
Electric.....	5,833,587	54.5	3,606,391	84.7	1,602,958	61.1	624,238	16.4
Gas.....	80,015	0.7	16,343	0.4	27,068	1.0	36,604	1.0
Kerosene or gasoline	4,670,345	43.6	619,007	14.5	970,615	37.0	3,080,723	80.7
Other.....	116,177	1.1	16,413	0.4	24,739	0.9	75,025	2.0
Not reporting.....	175,932	-	66,668	-	39,391	-	69,873	-
THE WEST
Total.....	4,539,211	-	2,719,520	-	1,132,411	-	687,280	-
Number reporting.....	4,468,553	100.0	2,678,999	100.0	1,114,297	100.0	675,257	100.0
Electric.....	3,958,257	88.6	2,638,928	98.5	931,486	83.6	387,843	57.4
Gas.....	19,823	0.4	3,783	0.1	5,892	0.5	10,148	1.5
Kerosene or gasoline	459,917	10.3	31,670	1.2	167,356	15.0	260,891	38.6
Other.....	30,556	0.7	4,618	0.2	9,563	0.9	16,375	2.4
Not reporting.....	70,658	-	40,521	-	18,114	-	12,023	-

3-34871

September 9, 1942

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE
Bureau of the Census
Washington

Sixteenth Census of the
United States: 1940

Series H-13, No. 5

HOUSING

EQUIPMENT AND FUEL FOR HOME HEATING, FOR THE UNITED STATES, BY REGIONS, DIVISIONS, AND STATES, URBAN AND RURAL: 1940

[This advance release presents summary data on heating equipment and heating fuel for urban and rural areas of the United States by regions, divisions, and States. The more detailed figures shown for the United States and the three major regions are being presented for States in release Series H-9. A release on the use of petroleum products as fuel for home heating also has been issued (H-13, No. 3).]

More than 14,000,000 homes in the United States have central heating equipment, according to data from the 1940 Census of Housing released today by Director J. C. Capt of the Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. The homes with central heating represented 42.0 percent of the 34,144,370 occupied dwelling units for which type of heating equipment was reported. Coal or coke was the principal fuel used for heating 54.2 percent of the occupied dwelling units, while wood was reported for 22.6 percent, gas for 11.2 percent, and fuel oil or other petroleum products for 9.9 percent. Almost two-thirds of the 3,396,212 dwelling units reporting the use of petroleum products as heating fuel were in the New England, Middle Atlantic, and South Atlantic States, where restrictions have recently been placed on the sale of these products.

Steam or hot water systems furnished heat for 7,424,844 occupied dwelling units, or about one-fifth of all homes, and piped warm air systems were reported for 5,725,273 occupied units, or one-sixth of the total. The number of central heating installations is considerably less than the number of dwelling units heated with such equipment because a majority of the dwelling units in multi-family structures are heated by one installation which serves the entire structure. Central heat from a pipeless warm air furnace was provided in 1,193,516 homes, or 3.5 percent. Almost 20 million homes were without central heating equipment, but most of these were reported as having "heating stoves." This category includes regular heating stoves, circulator heaters with flues, and nonportable electric or gas heaters.

In the North, 60.2 percent of the homes had central heating equipment, as compared with 27.1 percent in the West and 11.4 percent in the South. The steam or hot water system was the predominant type used in both the North and the South, but in the West the piped warm air system was reported more frequently than any other type. Pipeless warm air furnaces were somewhat more common in the West than in the other two regions, though the actual number of homes with this type of heating system was larger in the North than in the West.

Approximately 12,000,000 of the 14,000,000 homes with central heating were in urban places, and almost 10,000,000 of these were in urban places of the North. In each region the proportion of urban homes with central heat was considerably greater than the proportion of rural homes with this type of heating. In the North, 72.5 percent of all urban homes had central heating, as compared with 43.3 percent of the rural-nonfarm homes and 21.9 percent of the rural-farm. In the West, the percentages were 37.1 for urban areas, 13.6 for rural-nonfarm, and 6.4 for rural-farm; and in the South, 22.3 for urban, 8.0 for rural-nonfarm, and 1.3 for rural-farm.

Coal or coke was reported as the principal heating fuel for almost 15,000,000 homes in the North, or 72.5 percent of the number reporting; for 3,000,000 homes in the South, or 31.7 percent; and for about 750,000 in the West, or 18.7 percent. Almost two-thirds (63.5 percent) of the urban homes used coal or coke for heating, as compared with 53.3 percent of the rural-nonfarm and 28.3 percent of the rural-farm. More than half (58.8 percent) of the homes using coal or coke as heating fuel had central heating equipment.

Gas was reported as the principal heating fuel for almost 4,000,000 homes, 71.1 percent of which were without central heating. This fuel was used in 38.2 percent of the homes in the West and in 15.3 percent of those in the South, but in only 3.8 percent of the homes in the North. Within each region the use of gas was confined for the most part to urban homes.

The 3,000,000 homes that relied on fuel oil for heating were concentrated in the North, especially in the Northern cities on the Eastern Seaboard. Nearly four-fifths (77.7 percent) of all dwelling units that used fuel oil for heating were in the North, and 47.8 percent were in the urban places of the New England and Middle Atlantic States. Of the 2,260,556 urban homes reporting the use of fuel oil for heating purposes, 1,428,194 (63.2 percent) had central heating equipment. In the rural areas, however, fuel oil was used more often as fuel for heating stoves than as fuel for central furnaces.

Wood was reported as the principal heating fuel in nearly 8,000,000 homes, practically all of which were without central heating equipment. Two-thirds of the rural-farm homes used wood for heating--46.5 percent of the rural-farm homes in the North, 83.7 percent of those in the South, and 60.5 percent of those in the West. For the rural-nonfarm homes the percentage using wood ranged from 13.9 in the North to 42.5 in the South. Fifteen and four-tenths percent of the urban homes in the West and 14.8 percent of those in the South used wood as the principal heating fuel, as contrasted with 1.5 percent of those in the North.

The statistics on heating equipment and heating fuel are summarized for the United States and the three major regions in Tables 1 and 2, and are shown in less detail for States in Tables 3 to 6. These figures were obtained from the Second Series Housing Bulletins for States now being published by the Bureau of the Census.

3-35158

TABLE 1. OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS BY HEATING EQUIPMENT, FOR THE UNITED STATES, BY REGIONS, URBAN AND RURAL: 1940

Area and heating equipment	Total		Urban		Rural-nonfarm		Rural-farm
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
UNITED STATES
All occupied units.....	34,854,532	-	20,596,500	-	7,151,473	-	7,106,559	-
Reporting heating equipment....	34,144,370	100.0	20,187,387	100.0	7,002,905	100.0	6,954,078	100.0
With central heating.....	14,343,633	42.0	11,746,736	58.2	1,892,797	27.0	704,100	10.1
Steam or hot water system..	7,424,844	21.7	6,616,433	32.8	669,185	9.6	139,226	2.0
Piped warm air system.....	5,725,273	16.8	4,472,656	22.2	877,856	12.5	374,761	5.4
Pipeless warm air furnace..	1,193,516	3.5	657,647	3.3	345,756	4.9	190,113	2.7
Without central heating.....	19,800,737	58.0	8,440,651	41.8	5,110,108	73.0	6,249,978	89.9
Heating stove.....	15,926,928	46.6	7,081,423	35.1	4,286,115	61.2	4,559,390	65.6
Other or none.....	3,873,809	11.3	1,359,228	6.7	823,993	11.8	1,690,588	24.3
Not reporting heating equipment	710,162	-	409,113	-	148,568	-	152,481	-
THE NORTH
All occupied units.....	20,442,706	-	13,911,316	-	3,667,015	-	2,864,375	-
Reporting heating equipment....	20,142,334	100.0	13,692,606	100.0	3,621,712	100.0	2,828,016	100.0
With central heating.....	12,119,509	60.2	9,931,493	72.5	1,568,279	43.3	619,737	21.9
Steam or hot water system..	6,466,095	32.1	5,795,600	42.3	552,105	15.2	118,390	4.2
Piped warm air system.....	4,867,509	24.2	3,772,167	27.5	752,409	20.8	342,933	12.1
Pipeless warm air furnace..	785,905	3.9	363,726	2.7	263,765	7.3	158,414	5.6
Without central heating.....	8,022,825	39.8	3,761,113	27.5	2,053,433	56.7	2,208,279	78.1
Heating stove.....	7,779,998	38.6	3,596,394	26.3	2,003,137	55.3	2,180,467	77.1
Other or none.....	242,827	1.2	164,719	1.2	50,296	1.4	27,812	1.0
Not reporting heating equipment	300,372	-	218,710	-	45,303	-	36,359	-
THE SOUTH
All occupied units.....	10,278,204	-	4,134,172	-	2,512,578	-	3,631,454	-
Reporting heating equipment....	9,975,381	100.0	4,003,548	100.0	2,439,123	100.0	3,532,710	100.0
With central heating.....	1,133,978	11.4	891,573	22.3	196,145	8.0	46,260	1.3
Steam or hot water system..	662,990	6.6	549,480	13.7	97,075	4.0	16,435	0.5
Piped warm air system.....	327,727	3.3	252,067	6.3	63,932	2.6	11,728	0.3
Pipeless warm air furnace..	143,261	1.4	90,026	2.2	35,138	1.4	18,097	0.5
Without central heating.....	8,841,403	88.6	3,111,975	77.7	2,242,978	92.0	3,486,450	98.7
Heating stove.....	5,845,519	58.6	2,357,722	58.9	1,605,960	65.8	1,881,837	53.3
Other or none.....	2,995,884	30.0	754,253	18.8	637,018	26.1	1,604,613	45.4
Not reporting heating equipment	302,823	-	130,624	-	73,455	-	98,744	-
THE WEST
All occupied units.....	4,133,622	-	2,551,012	-	971,880	-	610,730	-
Reporting heating equipment....	4,026,655	100.0	2,491,233	100.0	942,070	100.0	593,352	100.0
With central heating.....	1,090,146	27.1	923,670	37.1	128,373	13.6	38,103	6.4
Steam or hot water system..	295,759	7.3	271,353	10.9	20,005	2.1	4,401	0.7
Piped warm air system.....	530,037	13.2	448,422	18.0	61,515	6.5	20,100	3.4
Pipeless warm air furnace..	264,350	6.6	203,895	8.2	46,853	5.0	13,602	2.3
Without central heating.....	2,936,509	72.9	1,567,563	62.9	813,697	86.4	555,249	93.6
Heating stove.....	2,301,411	57.2	1,127,307	45.3	677,018	71.9	497,086	83.8
Other or none.....	635,098	15.8	440,256	17.7	136,679	14.5	58,163	9.8
Not reporting heating equipment	106,967	-	59,779	-	29,810	-	17,378	-

TABLE 2. OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS BY CENTRAL HEATING AND TYPE OF FUEL, FOR THE UNITED STATES, BY REGIONS, URBAN AND RURAL: 1940
(Percent not shown where less than 0.1)

Area and heating fuel by central heating	Total		Urban		Rural-nonfarm		Rural-farm
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
UNITED STATES
All occupied units	34,854,532	-	20,596,500	-	7,151,473	-	7,106,559	-
Reporting heating equipment	34,144,370	100.0	20,187,387	100.0	7,002,905	100.0	6,954,078	100.0
With central heating	14,343,633	42.0	11,746,736	58.2	1,892,797	27.0	704,100	10.1
Coal or coke	10,900,186	31.9	8,968,470	44.4	1,442,514	20.6	489,202	7.0
Wood	373,312	1.1	119,534	0.6	82,665	1.2	171,113	2.5
Gas	1,108,889	3.2	983,255	4.9	113,964	1.6	11,670	0.2
Fuel oil	1,687,591	4.9	1,428,194	7.1	231,755	3.3	27,642	0.4
Other	78,221	0.2	66,081	0.3	9,621	0.1	2,519	-
Not reporting fuel	195,434	0.6	181,202	0.9	12,278	0.2	1,954	-
Without central heating	19,800,737	58.0	8,440,651	41.8	5,110,108	73.0	6,249,978	89.9
Coal or coke	7,622,514	22.3	3,850,727	19.1	2,288,666	32.7	1,483,121	21.3
Wood	7,356,155	21.5	1,055,343	5.2	1,840,153	26.3	4,460,659	64.1
Gas	2,724,155	8.0	2,139,322	10.6	481,204	6.9	103,629	1.5
Fuel oil	1,221,874	3.6	832,362	4.1	286,700	4.1	102,812	1.5
Kerosene or gasoline	486,747	1.4	334,160	1.7	107,797	1.5	44,790	0.6
Other	44,965	0.1	22,549	0.1	12,403	0.2	10,013	0.1
None	262,651	0.8	161,541	0.8	71,133	1.0	29,977	0.4
Not reporting fuel	81,676	0.2	44,647	0.2	22,052	0.3	14,977	0.2
Not reporting heating equipment	710,162	-	409,113	-	148,568	-	152,481	-
THE NORTH
All occupied units	20,442,706	-	13,911,316	-	3,667,015	-	2,864,375	-
Reporting heating equipment	20,142,334	100.0	13,692,606	100.0	3,621,712	100.0	2,828,016	100.0
With central heating	12,119,509	60.2	9,931,493	72.5	1,568,279	43.3	619,737	21.9
Coal or coke	9,856,228	48.9	8,143,854	59.5	1,267,144	35.0	445,230	15.7
Wood	242,581	1.2	36,695	0.3	58,356	1.6	147,530	5.2
Gas	455,142	2.3	404,012	3.0	46,128	1.3	5,002	0.2
Fuel oil	1,353,908	6.7	1,151,956	8.4	182,554	5.0	19,398	0.7
Other	44,864	0.2	38,592	0.3	4,964	0.1	1,308	-
Not reporting fuel	166,786	0.8	156,384	1.1	9,133	0.3	1,269	-
Without central heating	8,022,825	39.8	3,761,113	27.5	2,053,433	56.7	2,208,279	78.1
Coal or coke	4,749,247	23.6	2,487,471	18.2	1,322,604	36.5	939,172	33.2
Wood	1,774,221	8.8	162,481	1.2	443,923	12.3	1,167,817	41.3
Gas	311,000	1.5	234,097	1.7	53,708	1.5	23,195	0.8
Fuel oil	906,728	4.5	674,051	4.9	174,037	4.8	58,640	2.1
Kerosene or gasoline	213,688	1.1	161,722	1.2	43,152	1.2	8,814	0.3
Other	14,453	0.1	8,027	0.1	2,370	0.1	4,056	0.1
None	26,400	0.1	17,151	0.1	6,958	0.2	2,291	0.1
Not reporting fuel	27,088	0.1	16,113	0.1	6,681	0.2	4,294	0.2
Not reporting heating equipment	300,372	-	218,710	-	45,303	-	36,359	-
THE SOUTH
All occupied units	10,278,204	-	4,134,172	-	2,512,578	-	3,631,454	-
Reporting heating equipment	9,975,381	100.0	4,003,548	100.0	2,439,123	100.0	3,532,710	100.0
With central heating	1,133,978	11.4	891,573	22.3	196,145	8.0	46,260	1.3
Coal or coke	770,009	7.7	604,663	15.1	137,277	5.6	28,069	0.8
Wood	20,269	0.2	4,368	0.1	4,284	0.2	11,617	0.3
Gas	152,109	1.5	130,629	3.3	19,160	0.8	2,320	0.1
Fuel oil	173,978	1.7	138,059	3.4	32,492	1.3	3,427	0.1
Other	5,376	0.1	3,429	0.1	1,461	0.1	486	-
Not reporting fuel	12,237	0.1	10,425	0.3	1,471	0.1	341	-
Without central heating	8,841,403	88.6	3,111,975	77.7	2,242,978	92.0	3,486,450	98.7
Coal or coke	2,392,453	24.0	1,161,701	29.0	812,953	33.3	417,799	11.8
Wood	4,565,034	45.8	587,116	14.7	1,031,928	42.3	2,945,990	83.4
Gas	1,378,907	13.8	1,042,951	26.1	273,185	11.2	62,771	1.8
Fuel oil	124,826	1.3	77,561	1.9	36,219	1.5	11,046	0.3
Kerosene or gasoline	233,238	2.3	152,419	3.8	51,511	2.1	29,308	0.8
Other	13,018	0.1	7,042	0.2	3,715	0.2	2,261	0.1
None	113,215	1.1	74,432	1.9	27,181	1.1	11,602	0.3
Not reporting fuel	20,712	0.2	8,753	0.2	6,286	0.3	5,673	0.2
Not reporting heating equipment	302,823	-	130,624	-	73,455	-	98,744	-
THE WEST
All occupied units	4,133,622	-	2,551,012	-	971,880	-	610,730	-
Reporting heating equipment	4,026,655	100.0	2,491,233	100.0	942,070	100.0	593,352	100.0
With central heating	1,090,146	27.1	923,670	37.1	128,373	13.6	38,103	6.4
Coal or coke	273,949	6.8	219,953	8.8	38,093	4.0	15,903	2.7
Wood	110,462	2.7	78,471	3.1	20,025	2.1	11,966	2.0
Gas	501,638	12.5	448,614	18.0	48,676	5.2	4,348	0.7
Fuel oil	159,705	4.0	138,179	5.5	16,709	1.8	4,817	0.8
Other	27,981	0.7	24,060	1.0	3,196	0.3	725	0.1
Not reporting fuel	16,411	0.4	14,393	0.6	1,674	0.2	344	0.1
Without central heating	2,936,509	72.9	1,567,563	62.9	813,697	86.4	555,249	93.6
Coal or coke	480,814	11.9	201,555	8.1	153,109	16.3	126,150	21.3
Wood	1,016,900	25.3	305,746	12.3	364,302	38.7	346,852	58.5
Gas	1,034,248	25.7	862,274	34.6	154,311	16.4	17,663	3.0
Fuel oil	190,320	4.7	80,750	3.2	76,444	8.1	33,126	5.6
Kerosene or gasoline	39,821	1.0	20,019	0.8	13,134	1.4	6,668	1.1
Other	17,494	0.4	7,480	0.3	6,318	0.7	3,696	0.6
None	123,036	3.1	69,958	2.8	36,994	3.9	16,084	2.7
Not reporting fuel	33,876	0.8	19,781	0.8	9,085	1.0	5,010	0.8
Not reporting heating equipment	106,967	-	59,779	-	29,810	-	17,378	-

TABLE 3. ALL OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS BY CENTRAL HEATING AND TYPE OF FUEL, BY DIVISIONS AND STATES: 1940

Region, division, and State	Reporting heating equipment	With central heating by type of fuel							Without central heating by type of fuel
		Total	Coal or coke	Wood	Gas	Fuel oil	Other fuel	Not reporting fuel	Total	Coal or coke	Wood	Gas	Fuel oil	Kerosene or gasoline	Other or none	Not reporting fuel
United States...	34,144,370	14,343,633	10,900,186	373,312	1,108,889	1,687,591	78,221	195,434	19,800,737	7,622,514	7,356,155	2,724,155	1,221,874	486,747	307,616	81,676
REGIONS:
The North.....	20,142,334	12,119,509	9,856,228	242,581	455,142	1,353,908	44,864	166,786	8,022,825	4,749,247	1,774,221	311,000	906,728	213,688	40,853	27,088
The South.....	9,975,381	1,133,978	770,009	20,269	152,109	173,978	5,376	12,237	8,841,403	2,392,453	4,565,034	1,378,907	124,826	233,238	126,233	20,712
The West.....	4,026,655	1,090,146	273,949	110,462	501,638	159,705	27,981	16,411	2,936,509	480,814	1,016,900	1,034,248	190,320	39,821	140,530	33,876
THE NORTH:
New England.....	2,164,819	1,253,170	828,873	58,464	15,348	325,603	5,529	19,353	911,649	226,907	233,713	5,834	343,341	85,008	12,166	4,680
Middle Atlantic...	7,145,164	5,131,463	4,116,760	29,616	126,057	740,403	21,691	96,936	2,013,701	1,347,870	219,197	102,790	210,104	112,087	12,226	9,427
East North Central	7,193,726	4,210,845	3,781,264	73,871	159,797	150,872	8,404	36,637	2,982,881	2,163,827	494,015	91,838	210,372	8,573	6,615	7,641
West North Central	3,638,625	1,524,031	1,129,331	80,630	153,940	137,030	9,240	13,860	2,114,594	1,010,643	827,296	110,538	142,911	8,020	9,846	5,340
THE SOUTH:
South Atlantic....	4,170,633	790,071	550,029	9,505	52,886	166,234	3,180	8,237	3,380,562	1,218,741	1,705,711	155,746	93,553	113,793	84,141	8,877
East South Central	2,554,937	247,801	210,903	4,976	26,368	2,284	679	2,591	2,307,136	992,150	1,191,786	105,778	5,451	4,578	3,693	3,700
West South Central	3,249,811	96,106	9,077	5,788	72,855	5,460	1,517	1,409	3,153,705	181,562	1,667,537	1,117,383	25,822	114,867	38,399	8,135
THE WEST:
Mountain.....	1,093,215	282,557	187,868	6,972	72,170	10,189	1,854	3,504	810,658	409,780	240,697	73,175	43,430	8,102	29,219	6,255
Pacific.....	2,933,440	807,589	86,081	103,490	429,468	149,516	26,127	12,907	2,125,851	71,034	776,203	961,073	146,890	31,719	111,311	27,621
NEW ENGLAND:
Maine.....	215,722	86,045	47,647	19,752	289	16,489	434	1,434	129,677	14,407	93,708	155	16,096	2,648	1,990	678
New Hampshire.....	131,086	59,705	33,644	8,629	333	15,794	264	1,041	71,381	11,505	38,370	169	16,633	3,846	493	365
Vermont.....	91,476	37,444	21,294	8,328	67	6,928	146	686	54,032	11,427	35,135	52	6,080	1,017	196	125
Massachusetts.....	1,099,662	718,689	502,762	13,281	10,089	178,085	2,860	11,612	380,973	110,293	36,596	3,166	180,980	41,531	6,285	2,122
Rhode Island.....	186,303	92,527	60,678	1,270	1,466	27,766	785	562	93,776	28,792	6,591	714	41,774	15,446	311	148
Connecticut.....	440,570	258,760	162,848	7,204	3,104	80,546	1,040	4,018	181,810	50,483	23,318	1,578	81,778	20,520	2,891	1,242
MIDDLE ATLANTIC:
New York.....	3,579,550	2,730,740	2,103,338	21,172	69,189	452,383	12,411	72,247	848,810	477,460	126,990	36,301	133,241	67,196	4,084	3,538
New Jersey.....	1,082,761	777,647	586,141	3,980	12,553	164,283	1,903	8,787	305,114	175,382	23,952	2,729	63,213	37,428	1,168	1,242
Pennsylvania.....	2,482,853	1,623,076	1,427,281	4,464	44,315	123,737	7,377	15,902	859,777	695,028	68,255	63,760	13,650	7,463	6,974	4,647
EAST NORTH CENTRAL:
Ohio.....	1,876,038	1,127,300	1,033,977	5,857	70,682	8,557	1,508	6,719	748,738	617,900	50,101	67,969	7,850	1,770	1,330	1,818
Indiana.....	950,097	426,336	399,036	4,281	5,810	10,862	1,887	4,460	523,761	428,441	80,378	3,055	8,202	1,533	900	1,252
Illinois.....	2,167,027	1,331,978	1,210,268	4,602	39,165	60,410	2,737	14,796	835,049	648,325	72,019	8,790	99,412	2,673	1,367	2,463
Michigan.....	1,380,783	859,259	759,963	14,547	40,976	36,766	1,250	5,757	521,524	335,746	116,604	11,346	53,094	1,705	1,550	1,479
Wisconsin.....	819,781	465,972	378,020	44,584	3,164	34,277	1,022	4,905	353,809	133,415	174,913	678	41,814	892	1,468	629
WEST NORTH CENTRAL:
Minnesota.....	719,833	374,711	250,210	32,703	19,592	61,770	5,361	5,075	345,122	115,087	167,309	2,541	55,592	1,111	2,419	1,063
Iowa.....	693,183	344,401	281,614	18,839	14,610	25,307	1,783	2,248	348,782	210,935	96,222	2,518	34,931	1,208	2,024	944
Missouri.....	1,053,349	409,094	339,599	4,744	37,220	23,887	597	3,047	644,255	308,129	308,586	12,251	11,010	1,790	1,220	1,269
North Dakota.....	149,932	57,281	48,015	1,147	3,400	2,898	647	1,174	92,651	78,753	9,052	631	3,471	159	338	247
South Dakota.....	162,571	53,729	40,907	2,916	5,147	3,694	214	851	108,842	64,963	29,434	3,374	9,815	341	549	366
Nebraska.....	356,899	153,771	107,061	12,698	17,024	15,838	305	845	203,128	90,548	85,301	7,716	15,283	1,291	2,456	533
Kansas.....	502,858	131,044	61,925	7,583	56,947	3,636	333	620	371,814	142,228	131,392	81,507	12,809	2,120	840	918
SOUTH ATLANTIC:
Delaware.....	69,695	37,313	25,335	223	448	11,030	23	254	32,382	13,929	12,952	91	4,384	877	84	65
Maryland.....	456,761	265,524	173,264	1,432	9,465	78,296	569	2,498	191,237	90,965	66,974	1,656	12,567	17,825	554	696
Dist. of Columbia.	170,888	149,929	95,428	36	17,679	35,333	89	1,364	20,959	15,472	918	600	1,407	2,258	212	92
Virginia.....	618,663	131,947	101,215	1,147	1,319	26,375	300	1,591	486,716	213,268	248,176	1,428	20,047	2,228	679	890
West Virginia.....	432,033	65,337	50,675	359	13,592	153	136	422	366,696	206,598	43,607	115,076	206	275	232	702
North Carolina....	770,568	60,104	52,424	1,393	233	4,937	283	834	710,464	274,393	414,384	519	16,282	2,727	846	1,313
South Carolina....	425,187	13,823	11,272	414	83	1,705	105	244	411,364	142,731	249,153	688	9,797	7,449	936	610
Georgia.....	728,559	50,025	37,739	1,658	8,132	1,611	200	685	678,534	246,327	399,140	22,289	6,029	2,438	1,223	1,088
Florida.....	498,279	16,069	2,677	2,843	1,935	6,794	1,475	345	482,210	15,058	270,407	13,399	22,834	77,716	79,375	3,421
EAST SOUTH CENTRAL:
Kentucky.....	686,516	110,175	99,775	439	8,066	887	151	857	576,341	395,843	145,193	32,413	833	551	640	868
Tennessee.....	703,927	93,668	79,636	740	11,479	678	267	868	610,259	315,529	278,341	11,343	1,873	1,096	1,148	929
Alabama.....	649,082	34,475	29,299	1,098	2,782	355	152	789	614,607	227,545	363,734	17,685	1,901	1,293	1,205	1,244
Mississippi.....	515,412	9,483	2,193	2,699	4,041	364	109	77	505,929	53,233	404,518	44,337	844	1,638	700	659
WEST SOUTH CENTRAL:
Arkansas.....	482,656	8,603	2,459	1,127	4,505	362	83	67	474,053	28,271	373,676	66,147	2,774	1,566	763	856
Louisiana.....	577,962	13,347	2,231	1,282	6,388	2,890	474	82	564,615	40,002	319,602	161,766	6,566	33,128	2,327	1,224
Oklahoma.....	586,255	34,694	2,697	1,017	29,642	303	284	751	551,561	70,761	232,210	233,498	4,312	7,647	1,593	1,540
Texas.....	1,602,938	39,462	1,690	2,362	32,320	1,905	676	509	1,563,476	42,528	742,049	655,972	12,170	72,526	33,716	4,515
MOUNTAIN:
Montana.....	156,551	45,116	18,694	2,761	21,770	1,150	355	386	111,435	52,671	34,794	18,038	4,326	125	1,029	452
Idaho.....	138,412	26,164	20,937	3,197	33	843	529	625	112,248	52,959	51,017	74	3,974	139	2,895	1,190
Wyoming.....	68,234	17,887	9,372	90	7,778	425	128	94	50,347	30,382	7,381	9,909	1,573	196	701	205
Colorado.....	309,953	119,207	96,967	207	18,206	2,045	236	1,546	190,746	155,691	18,443	4,869	5,089	621	4,266	1,767
New Mexico.....	124,354	12,929	4,169	145	8,197	250	69	99	111,425	25,157	57,143	17,645	2,877	3,511	4,349	743
Arizona.....	125,807	9,980	1,095	378	6,115	1,954	240	198	115,827	5,150	54,516	19,654	18,895	3,321	13,109	1,182
Utah.....	137,803	45,591	34,625	77	10,060	296	135	398	92,212	78,988	8,387	2,791	525	51	1,179	291
Nevada.....	32,101	5,683	2,009	117	11	3,226	162	158	26,418	8,782	9,016	195	6,171	138	1,691	425
PACIFIC:
Washington.....	526,433	187,163	66,751	37,301	2,956	67,604	8,883	3,668	339,270	37,679	236,768	1,450	47,762	548	11,058	4,005
Oregon.....	330,479	115,053	7,952	56,016	5,861	31,877	11,640	1,707	215,426	5,901	183,825	2,052	16,752	296	4,875	1,725
California.....	2,076,528	505,373	11,378	10,173	420,651	50,035	5,604	7,532	1,571,155	27,454	355,610	957,571	82,376	30,875	95,378	21,891

TABLE 4. URBAN OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS BY CENTRAL HEATING AND TYPE OF FUEL, BY DIVISIONS AND STATES: 1940

Region, division, and State	Reporting heating equipment	With central heating by type of fuel							Without central heating by type of fuel
		Total	Coal or coke	Wood	Gas	Fuel oil	Other fuel	Not reporting fuel	Total	Coal or coke	Wood	Gas	Fuel oil	Kerosene or gasoline	Other or none	Not reporting fuel
United States...	20,187,387	11,746,736	8,968,470	119,534	983,255	1,428,194	66,081	181,202	8,440,651	3,850,727	1,055,343	2,139,322	832,362	334,160	184,090	44,647
REGIONS:
The North.....	13,692,606	9,931,493	8,143,854	36,695	404,012	1,151,956	38,592	156,384	3,761,113	2,487,471	162,481	234,097	674,051	161,722	[illegible],178	16,113
The South.....	4,003,548	891,573	604,663	4,368	130,629	138,059	3,429	10,425	3,111,975	1,161,701	587,116	1,042,951	77,561	152,419	81,474	8,753
The West.....	2,491,233	923,670	219,953	78,471	448,614	138,179	24,060	14,393	1,567,563	201,555	305,746	862,274	80,750	20,019	77,438	19,781
THE NORTH:
New England.....	1,645,595	1,023,864	702,857	17,533	14,154	267,144	4,207	17,969	621,731	180,236	57,359	5,389	297,842	68,179	9,536	3,190
Middle Atlantic...	5,552,693	4,360,070	3,488,619	4,411	108,411	645,574	19,466	93,589	1,192,623	814,408	18,895	78,089	179,678	86,511	8,271	6,771
East North Central	4,800,609	3,453,400	3,130,140	7,516	148,337	126,726	7,302	33,379	1,347,209	1,092,203	26,122	73,050	143,013	4,349	4,283	4,289
West North Central	1,693,709	1,094,159	822,238	7,235	133,110	112,512	7,617	11,447	599,550	400,624	60,105	77,569	53,518	2,783	3,088	1,863
THE SOUTH:
South Atlantic....	1,787,102	621,741	433,868	2,409	43,997	132,247	2,076	7,144	1,165,361	622,248	229,742	98,087	62,543	87,661	60,626	4,454
East South Central	838,047	190,895	164,190	295	22,604	1,291	420	2,095	647,152	472,220	79,607	86,648	3,261	2,529	1,418	1,469
West South Central	1,378,399	78,937	6,605	1,664	64,028	4,521	933	1,186	1,299,462	67,233	277,767	858,216	11,757	62,229	19,430	2,830
THE WEST:
Mountain.....	496,048	224,474	147,560	3,413	62,585	6,952	1,266	2,698	271,574	155,407	35,514	51,808	14,476	2,667	9,853	1,849
Pacific.....	1,995,185	699,196	72,393	75,058	386,029	131,227	22,794	11,695	1,295,989	46,148	270,232	810,466	66,274	17,352	67,585	17,932
NEW ENGLAND:
Maine.....	87,166	49,021	32,370	4,325	259	10,617	252	1,198	38,145	7,503	18,007	96	10,680	719	909	231
New Hampshire.....	74,233	39,608	23,734	2,973	324	11,541	151	885	34,625	7,431	11,646	147	12,023	2,840	398	140
Vermont.....	32,137	19,208	12,673	966	64	4,848	97	560	12,929	4,756	3,824	30	3,700	511	87	21
Massachusetts.....	983,279	657,406	464,800	7,199	9,674	161,967	2,485	11,281	325,873	97,004	16,308	3,048	165,995	35,788	5,888	1,842
Rhode Island.....	169,993	85,632	56,601	658	1,443	25,802	585	543	84,361	26,551	3,190	705	39,623	13,882	302	108
Connecticut.....	298,787	172,989	112,679	1,412	2,390	52,369	637	3,502	125,798	36,991	4,384	1,363	65,821	14,439	1,952	848
MIDDLE ATLANTIC:
New York.....	2,981,292	2,416,682	1,874,843	2,721	59,922	397,171	11,845	70,780	564,610	348,085	11,690	30,215	115,709	52,830	3,289	2,792
New Jersey.....	884,330	647,534	487,297	845	10,826	138,871	1,503	8,192	237,016	143,926	4,285	2,454	55,249	29,119	963	1,020
Pennsylvania.....	1,686,851	1,295,854	1,126,479	845	37,663	109,532	6,718	14,617	390,997	322,397	2,920	45,420	8,720	4,562	4,019	2,959
EAST NORTH CENTRAL:
Ohio.....	1,276,563	915,522	836,738	600	65,612	5,663	1,243	5,666	361,041	296,904	987	56,209	4,096	820	900	1,125
Indiana.....	534,768	331,267	311,258	218	4,956	8,963	1,741	4,111	203,501	198,743	1,706	1,579	4,457	854	482	680
Illinois.....	1,614,581	1,161,531	1,052,884	482	37,081	54,498	2,497	14,089	453,050	354,451	1,713	6,326	86,701	1,497	872	1,490
Michigan.....	915,308	701,609	625,830	1,298	37,900	30,452	956	5,173	213,699	170,367	6,822	8,451	25,680	768	873	738
Wisconsin.....	459,389	343,471	303,430	4,918	2,788	27,130	865	4,340	115,918	76,738	14,894	485	22,079	310	1,156	256
WEST NORTH CENTRAL:
Minnesota.....	379,159	284,039	199,517	4,078	18,489	53,016	4,784	4,155	95,130	52,970	12,682	1,799	26,063	375	853	388
Iowa.....	308,277	221,025	184,666	902	18,168	19,217	1,291	1,781	87,252	69,914	3,491	1,577	10,876	430	627	337
Missouri.....	564,914	342,526	283,397	491	34,181	21,149	486	2,822	222,388	178,380	24,766	10,235	6,800	899	772	536
North Dakota.....	38,540	25,705	18,488	97	3,169	2,392	592	967	7,835	6,081	288	505	770	40	161	40
South Dakota.....	42,529	27,640	19,612	417	4,511	2,332	114	654	14,889	7,108	2,928	2,619	2,036	73	73	52
Nebraska.....	144,652	104,781	76,802	619	14,087	12,513	175	585	39,871	27,132	3,388	4,553	4,143	348	210	97
Kansas.....	220,628	68,443	39,756	631	45,505	1,898	175	483	152,185	59,089	12,562	56,281	2,830	618	392	413
SOUTH ATLANTIC:
Delaware.....	36,584	25,642	17,241	21	363	7,835	10	172	10,942	7,595	944	73	1,780	470	54	26
Maryland.....	280,991	198,159	131,276	122	6,658	57,516	391	2,196	82,832	55,023	4,592	1,428	7,250	13,734	427	378
Dist. of Columbia.	170,888	149,929	95,428	36	17,679	35,333	89	1,364	20,959	15,472	918	600	1,407	2,258	212	92
Virginia.....	241,059	98,173	75,551	93	935	20,074	135	1,385	142,886	113,788	12,911	868	13,115	1,377	405	422
West Virginia.....	136,847	41,875	30,073	45	11,346	68	54	279	94,972	31,311	338	52,824	73	78	92	256
North Carolina....	236,159	46,895	42,454	126	209	3,289	169	648	189,264	152,270	25,074	277	9,400	1,402	342	499
South Carolina....	121,215	10,243	8,531	74	49	1,354	56	179	110,972	69,700	26,657	523	7,029	6,324	504	236
Georgia.....	282,528	37,998	31,032	228	4,941	1,053	133	611	244,530	165,218	51,825	19,893	4,891	1,724	537	542
Florida.....	280,731	12,827	2,282	1,664	1,817	5,725	1,029	310	267,904	11,871	106,483	11,602	17,598	60,294	58,053	2,003
EAST SOUTH CENTRAL:
Kentucky.....	234,444	81,722	74,620	49	5,985	364	85	619	152,722	127,639	828	22,921	520	234	232	348
Tennessee.....	272,071	74,574	62,505	62	10,646	453	182	726	197,497	174,521	9,661	10,573	1,114	733	454	431
Alabama.....	218,361	29,371	25,712	95	2,519	227	105	713	188,990	139,059	30,575	16,455	1,238	713	428	523
Mississippi.....	113,171	5,228	1,353	89	3,454	247	48	37	107,943	31,001	36,543	36,699	369	849	294	168
WEST SOUTH CENTRAL:
Arkansas.....	119,294	6,426	1,856	224	4,060	192	50	44	112,868	12,101	43,537	54,114	1,697	707	414	198
Louisiana.....	257,848	10,688	1,977	342	5,371	2,613	324	61	247,160	33,190	52,966	129,341	5,015	24,782	1,379	487
Oklahoma.....	241,800	29,016	1,407	286	26,325	195	143	660	212,784	14,505	22,527	173,544	726	1,341	560	581
Texas.....	759,457	32,807	1,365	812	28,272	1,521	416	421	726,650	7,437	158,637	502,217	4,319	35,399	17,077	1,564
MOUNTAIN:
Montana.....	62,377	30,715	10,083	1,449	17,932	717	226	308	31,662	12,417	4,735	13,131	919	20	364	76
Idaho.....	49,466	18,816	15,501	1,636	30	705	470	474	30,650	19,821	6,914	27	2,022	50	1,276	540
Wyoming.....	27,049	12,701	6,045	7	6,416	63	109	61	14,348	8,029	98	5,817	226	51	82	45
Colorado.....	171,484	101,832	81,707	68	17,098	1,500	100	1,359	69,652	52,362	599	3,646	1,454	218	985	388
New Mexico.....	44,358	10,351	3,176	38	6,882	154	27	74	34,007	9,211	8,177	12,670	810	961	1,847	331
Arizona.....	47,476	6,554	715	129	4,656	861	112	81	40,922	2,298	12,669	13,944	6,549	1,303	3,985	174
Utah.....	81,095	38,888	28,710	11	9,561	204	115	287	42,207	38,042	552	2,436	308	30	728	111
Nevada.....	12,743	4,617	1,623	75	10	2,748	107	54	8,126	3,227	1,770	137	2,188	34	586	184
PACIFIC:
Washington.....	296,769	154,873	55,311	25,382	2,490	60,810	7,561	3,319	141,896	21,003	86,101	1,094	26,735	305	5,245	1,413
Oregon.....	169,260	96,494	6,739	43,873	4,951	28,873	10,619	1,439	72,766	2,411	57,228	1,499	8,925	140	2,086	477
California.....	1,529,156	447,829	10,343	5,803	378,588	41,544	4,614	6,937	1,081,327	22,734	126,903	807,873	30,614	16,907	60,254	16,042

3-35186

TABLE 5. RURAL-NONFARM OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS BY CENTRAL HEATING AND TYPE OF FUEL, BY DIVISIONS AND STATES: 1940

Region, division, and State	Reporting heating equipment	With central heating by type of fuel							Without central heating by type of fuel
		Total	Coal or coke	Wood	Gas	Fuel oil	Other fuel	Not reporting fuel	Total	Coal or coke	Wood	Gas	Fuel oil	Kerosene or gasoline	Other or none	Not reporting fuel
United States...	7,002,905	1,892,797	1,442,514	82,665	113,964	231,755	9,621	12,278	5,110,108	2,288,666	1,840,153	481,204	286,700	107,797	83,536	22,052
REGIONS:
The North.....	3,621,712	1,568,279	1,257,144	58,356	46,128	182,554	4,964	9,133	2,053,433	1,322,604	443,923	53,708	174,037	43,152	9,328	6,681
The South.....	2,439,123	196,145	137,277	4,284	19,160	32,492	1,461	1,471	2,242,978	812,953	1,031,928	273,185	36,219	51,511	30,896	6,286
The West.....	942,070	128,373	38,093	20,025	48,676	16,709	3,196	1,674	813,697	153,109	364,302	154,311	76,444	13,134	43,312	9,085
THE NORTH:
New England.....	389,524	188,662	109,689	22,438	1,121	52,947	1,162	1,305	200,862	39,067	101,228	380	41,336	15,250	2,325	1,276
Middle Atlantic...	1,172,344	641,529	524,934	8,133	16,166	87,300	1,932	3,064	530,815	388,871	73,192	16,454	25,849	21,658	2,912	1,879
East North Central	1,255,118	482,389	434,966	13,283	9,761	20,972	750	2,657	772,729	597,309	105,342	10,360	53,051	3,218	1,558	1,891
West North Central	804,726	255,699	197,555	14,502	19,080	21,335	1,120	2,107	549,027	297,357	164,161	26,514	53,801	3,026	2,533	1,635
THE SOUTH:
South Atlantic....	1,149,646	142,004	98,279	2,301	8,519	31,031	924	950	1,007,642	459,325	434,544	41,690	27,384	22,643	19,251	2,805
East South Central	572,430	42,978	37,509	855	3,257	785	178	394	529,452	304,399	204,423	14,811	1,762	1,649	1,526	882
West South Central	717,047	11,163	1,489	1,128	7,384	676	359	127	705,884	49,229	392,961	216,684	7,073	27,219	10,119	2,599
THE WEST:
Mountain.....	334,427	42,678	27,762	2,088	9,048	2,553	497	730	291,749	136,743	94,120	19,289	21,514	3,254	14,069	2,760
Pacific.....	607,643	85,695	10,331	17,937	39,628	14,156	2,699	944	521,948	16,366	270,182	135,022	54,930	9,880	29,243	6,325
NEW ENGLAND:
Maine.....	88,790	28,894	13,449	9,630	27	5,400	160	228	59,896	6,010	45,762	41	4,924	1,782	988	389
New Hampshire.....	41,038	15,599	8,315	3,269	9	3,759	97	150	25,439	3,298	16,803	17	4,132	904	80	205
Vermont.....	34,778	12,185	7,234	2,938	1	1,847	42	123	22,593	5,541	14,338	14	2,117	419	88	76
Massachusetts.....	93,093	50,885	32,231	3,434	366	14,221	331	302	42,208	10,806	12,079	107	13,452	5,170	367	227
Rhode Island.....	13,746	5,955	3,568	394	22	1,769	186	16	7,791	1,967	2,295	8	1,976	1,500	8	37
Connecticut.....	118,079	75,144	44,892	2,773	696	25,951	346	486	42,935	11,445	9,951	193	14,735	5,475	794	342
MIDDLE ATLANTIC:
New York.....	417,205	255,298	186,996	5,440	8,682	51,822	1,009	1,349	161,907	88,626	40,415	4,814	14,827	12,136	552	537
New Jersey.....	165,726	114,752	87,194	1,774	1,668	23,218	349	549	50,974	24,953	11,273	258	6,955	7,200	165	170
Pennsylvania.....	589,413	271,479	250,744	919	5,816	12,260	574	1,166	317,934	275,292	21,504	11,382	4,067	2,322	2,195	1,172
EAST NORTH CENTRAL:
Ohio.....	334,388	138,655	130,835	374	4,015	2,348	168	915	195,733	176,664	8,151	6,428	3,029	737	307	417
Indiana.....	205,467	59,981	56,996	329	726	1,559	104	267	145,486	127,029	13,955	512	2,930	483	238	339
Illinois.....	306,328	114,038	105,819	462	1,881	5,183	169	524	192,290	168,281	10,859	1,227	10,133	946	321	523
Michigan.....	249,497	101,600	90,714	2,028	2,787	5,418	180	473	147,897	93,810	28,314	2,090	22,134	663	474	412
Wisconsin.....	159,438	68,115	50,602	10,090	352	6,464	129	478	91,323	31,525	44,063	103	14,825	389	218	200
WEST NORTH CENTRAL:
Minnesota.....	133,902	50,458	33,174	7,085	1,054	7,820	475	850	83,444	28,060	35,241	600	18,040	419	746	338
Iowa.....	159,302	63,491	53,943	2,123	1,362	5,372	322	369	95,811	65,714	14,373	802	13,721	384	557	260
Missouri.....	202,184	52,756	46,129	1,207	2,843	2,298	87	192	149,428	79,603	63,377	1,665	3,441	690	306	346
North Dakota.....	46,384	17,408	16,339	152	218	461	50	188	28,976	24,804	1,957	106	1,836	81	101	91
South Dakota.....	48,751	15,313	12,696	523	619	1,233	67	175	33,438	20,213	7,366	711	4,658	157	196	137
Nebraska.....	88,320	28,754	20,703	2,149	2,781	2,846	42	233	59,566	32,961	15,529	2,935	6,972	548	406	215
Kansas.....	125,883	27,519	14,571	1,263	10,203	1,305	77	100	98,364	46,002	25,318	19,695	5,133	747	221	248
SOUTH ATLANTIC:
Delaware.....	21,604	10,250	7,101	74	78	2,904	12	81	11,354	4,925	3,914	11	2,118	337	24	25
Maryland.....	121,809	58,341	35,434	482	2,776	19,207	161	281	63,468	27,206	27,469	199	4,634	3,652	87	221
Dist. of Columbia.	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Virginia.....	171,496	27,586	21,018	315	332	5,621	125	175	143,910	69,654	66,478	457	6,141	715	203	262
West Virginia.....	187,029	19,638	17,257	101	2,007	71	69	123	167,391	120,964	8,841	36,936	111	165	100	274
North Carolina....	212,092	10,633	8,622	236	22	1,493	96	164	201,459	103,206	90,136	103	6,123	1,067	352	472
South Carolina....	123,628	2,941	2,436	,102	33	292	38	40	120,687	62,417	54,142	87	2,521	986	311	223
Georgia.....	165,579	10,052	6,052	195	3,159	524	49	63	155,527	67,942	83,060	2,246	1,023	612	388	256
Florida.....	146,409	2,563	349	796	102	919	374	23	143,846	3,011	100,504	1,651	4,713	15,109	17,786	1,072
EAST SOUTH CENTRAL:
Kentucky.....	176,834	22,393	19,715	83	1,931	416	47	201	154,441	127,267	19,518	6,852	229	218	159	198
Tennessee.....	150,176	15,223	14,100	134	634	179	56	120	134,953	85,911	46,989	495	572	271	493	222
Alabama.....	152,177	3,726	3,080	197	254	106	34	55	148,451	73,546	71,835	1,105	572	498	578	317
Mississippi.....	93,243	1,636	614	441	438	84	41	18	91,607	17,675	66,081	6,359	389	662	296	145
WEST SOUTH CENTRAL:
Arkansas.....	108,018	1,273	456	275	382	129	19	12	106,745	9,988	84,237	10,495	872	660	220	273
Louisiana.....	131,808	1,672	232	116	928	257	130	9	130,136	5,165	86,923	28,684	1,326	7,021	596	421
Oklahoma.....	134,080	3,637	640	218	2,593	43	75	68	130,443	24,583	53,418	47,224	1,622	2,515	608	473
Texas.....	343,141	4,581	161	519	3,481	247	135	38	338,560	9,493	168,383	130,281	3,253	17,023	8,695	1,432
MOUNTAIN:
Montana.....	48,740	10,328	5,275	798	3,698	370	121	66	38,412	17,781	13,218	4,477	2,207	70	493	166
Idaho.....	40,278	4,462	3,198	976	1	104	45	138	35,816	14,086	18,992	30	1,407	56	892	353
Wyoming.....	22,456	4,111	2,400	16	1,316	332	18	29	18,345	11,104	2,025	3,915	805	107	322	67
Colorado.....	76,506	12,852	11,094	27	1,005	442	119	165	63,654	50,519	6,435	1,068	2,416	237	2,089	870
New Mexico.....	41,613	2,090	773	53	1,175	44	25	20	39,523	9,076	21,943	4,086	1,135	1,156	1,888	239
Arizona.....	53,169	2,905	352	161	1,394	782	106	110	50,264	2,617	23,202	5,350	9,789	1,504	7,067	735
Utah.....	36,383	5,010	4,322	30	458	78	18	104	31,373	26,534	3,781	309	169	17	334	129
Nevada.....	15,282	920	348	27	1	401	45	98	14,362	4,926	4,524	54	3,586	87	984	201
PACIFIC:
Washington.....	138,073	23,839	8,635	7,294	450	5,946	1,203	311	114,234	10,791	80,366	305	16,278	199	4,413	1,882
Oregon.....	90,368	13,501	937	8,079	847	2,504	892	242	76,867	2,119	65,257	466	6,137	122	1,889	877
California.....	379,202	48,355	759	2,564	38,331	5,706	604	391	330,847	3,456	124,559	134,251	32,515	9,559	22,941	3,566

TABLE 6. RURAL-FARM OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS BY CENTRAL HEATING AND TYPE OF FUEL, BY DIVISIONS AND STATES: 1940

Region, division, and State	Reporting heating equipment	With central heating by type of fuel							Without central heating by type of fuel
		Total	Coal or coke	Wood	Gas	Fuel oil	Other fuel	Not reporting fuel	Total	Coal or coke	Wood	Gas	Fuel oil	Kerosene or gasoline	Other or none	Not reporting fuel
United States...	6,954,078	704,100	489,202	171,113	11,670	27,642	2,519	1,954	6,249,978	1,483,121	4,460,659	103,629	102,812	44,790	39,990	14,977
REGIONS:
The North.....	2,828,016	619,737	445,230	147,530	5,002	19,398	1,308	1,269	2,208,279	939,172	1,167,817	23,195	58,640	8,814	6,347	4,294
The South.....	3,532,710	46,260	28,069	11,617	2,320	3,427	486	341	3,486,450	417,799	2,945,990	62,771	11,046	29,308	18,863	5,673
The West.....	593,352	38,103	15,903	11,966	4,348	4,817	725	344	555,249	126,150	346,852	17,663	33,126	6,668	19,780	5,010
THE NORTH:
New England.....	129,700	40,644	16,327	18,493	73	5,512	160	79	89,056	7,604	75,126	65	4,163	1,579	305	214
Middle Atlantic...	420,127	129,864	103,207	17,072	1,480	7,529	293	283	290,263	144,591	127,110	8,247	4,577	3,918	1,043	777
East North Central	1,137,999	275,056	216,158	53,072	1,699	3,174	352	601	862,943	474,315	362,551	8,428	14,308	1,106	774	1,461
West North Central	1,140,190	174,173	109,538	58,893	1,750	3,183	503	306	966,017	312,662	603,030	6,455	35,592	2,211	4,225	1,842
THE SOUTH:
South Atlantic....	1,233,885	26,326	17,882	4,795	370	2,956	180	143	1,207,559	137,168	1,041,425	15,969	3,626	3,489	4,264	1,618
East South Central	1,144,460	13,928	9,204	3,826	507	208	81	102	1,130,532	215,531	907,756	4,319	428	400	749	1,349
West South Central	1,154,365	6,006	983	2,996	1,443	263	225	96	1,148,359	65,100	996,809	42,483	6,992	25,419	8,850	2,706
THE WEST:
Mountain.....	262,740	15,405	12,546	1,471	537	684	91	76	247,335	117,630	111,063	2,078	7,440	2,181	5,297	1,646
Pacific.....	330,612	22,698	3,357	10,495	3,811	4,133	634	268	307,914	8,520	235,789	15,585	25,686	4,487	14,483	3,364
NEW ENGLAND:
Maine.....	39,766	8,130	1,828	5,797	3	472	22	8	31,636	894	29,934	18	492	147	93	58
New Hampshire.....	15,815	4,498	1,595	2,387	-	494	16	6	11,317	776	9,921	5	478	102	15	20
Vermont.....	24,561	6,051	1,387	4,424	2	228	7	3	18,510	1,130	16,973	8	263	87	21	28
Massachusetts.....	23,290	10,398	5,731	2,648	49	1,897	44	29	12,892	2,483	8,209	11	1,533	573	30	53
Rhode Island.....	2,564	940	509	218	1	195	14	3	1,624	274	1,106	1	175	64	1	3
Connecticut.....	23,704	10,627	5,277	3,019	18	2,226	57	30	13,077	2,047	8,983	22	1,222	606	145	52
MIDDLE ATLANTIC:
New York.....	181,053	58,760	41,499	13,011	585	3,390	157	118	122,293	40,749	74,885	1,272	2,705	2,230	243	209
New Jersey.....	32,485	15,361	11,650	1,361	59	2,194	51	46	17,124	6,503	8,394	17	1,009	1,109	40	52
Pennsylvania.....	206,589	55,743	50,058	2,700	836	1,945	85	119	150,846	97,339	43,831	6,958	863	579	760	516
EAST NORTH CENTRAL:
Ohio.....	265,087	73,123	66,404	4,863	1,055	546	97	138	191,964	144,332	40,963	5,332	725	213	123	276
Indiana.....	209,862	35,088	30,782	3,734	128	320	42	82	174,774	107,669	64,717	964	815	196	180	233
Illinois.....	246,118	56,409	51,565	3,658	203	729	71	183	189,709	125,593	59,447	1,237	2,578	230	174	450
Michigan.....	215,978	56,050	43,419	11,221	289	896	114	111	159,928	71,569	81,468	805	5,280	274	203	329
Wisconsin.....	200,954	54,386	23,988	29,576	24	683	28	87	146,568	25,152	115,956	90	4,910	193	94	173
WEST NORTH CENTRAL:
Minnesota.....	206,762	40,214	17,519	21,540	49	934	102	70	166,548	34,057	119,386	142	11,489	317	820	337
Iowa.....	225,604	59,885	43,005	15,814	80	718	170	98	165,719	75,307	78,358	139	10,334	394	840	347
Missouri.....	286,251	13,812	10,073	3,046	196	440	24	33	272,439	50,146	220,443	351	769	201	142	387
North Dakota.....	70,008	14,168	13,188	898	13	45	5	19	55,840	47,918	6,807	20	865	38	76	116
South Dakota.....	71,291	10,776	8,599	1,976	17	129	33	22	60,515	37,642	19,140	44	3,121	111	280	177
Nebraska.....	123,927	20,236	9,556	9,930	156	479	88	27	103,691	30,455	66,384	228	4,168	395	1,840	221
Kansas.....	156,347	15,082	7,598	5,689	1,239	438	81	37	141,265	37,137	92,512	5,531	4,846	755	227	257
SOUTH ATLANTIC:
Delaware.....	11,507	1,421	993	128	7	291	1	1	10,086	1,409	8,094	7	486	70	6	14
Maryland.....	53,961	9,024	6,554	828	31	1,573	17	21	44,937	8,736	34,913	29	683	439	40	97
Dist. of Columbia.	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Virginia.....	206,108	6,188	4,646	739	52	680	40	31	199,920	29,826	168,787	103	791	136	71	206
West Virginia.....	108,157	3,824	3,335	213	239	14	3	20	104,333	54,323	34,428	15,316	22	32	40	172
North Carolina....	322,317	2,576	1,348	1,031	2	155	18	22	319,741	18,917	299,174	139	759	258	152	342
South Carolina....	180,344	639	305	238	1	59	11	25	179,705	10,614	168,354	79	247	139	121	151
Georgia.....	280,352	1,975	655	1,235	22	34	18	11	278,377	13,167	264,255	150	115	102	298	290
Florida.....	71,139	679	46	383	16	150	72	12	70,460	176	63,420	146	523	2,313	3,536	346
EAST SOUTH CENTRAL:
Kentucky.....	275,238	6,060	5,440	307	150	107	19	37	269,178	140,937	124,847	2,640	84	99	249	322
Tennessee.....	281,680	3,871	3,031	544	199	46	29	22	277,809	55,097	221,691	275	187	92	191	276
Alabama.....	278,544	1,378	507	806	9	22	13	21	277,166	14,940	261,324	125	91	82	199	405
Mississippi.....	308,998	2,619	226	2,169	149	33	20	22	306,379	4,557	299,894	1,279	66	127	110	346
WEST SOUTH CENTRAL:
Arkansas.....	255,344	904	147	628	63	41	14	11	254,440	6,182	245,802	1,538	205	199	129	385
Louisiana.....	188,306	987	22	824	89	20	20	12	187,319	1,647	179,713	3,741	225	1,325	352	316
Oklahoma.....	210,375	2,041	650	513	724	65	66	23	208,334	31,673	156,265	13,730	1,964	3,791	425	486
Texas.....	500,340	2,074	164	1,031	567	137	125	50	498,266	25,598	415,029	23,474	4,598	20,104	7,944	1,519
MOUNTAIN:
Montana.....	45,434	4,073	3,336	514	140	63	8	12	41,361	22,473	16,841	430	1,200	35	172	210
Idaho.....	48,668	2,886	2,238	585	2	34	14	13	45,782	19,052	25,111	17	545	33	727	297
Wyoming.....	18,729	1,075	927	67	46	30	1	4	17,654	11,249	5,258	177	542	38	297	93
Colorado.....	61,963	4,523	4,166	112	103	103	17	22	57,440	42,810	11,409	155	1,219	146	1,192	509
New Mexico.....	38,383	488	220	54	140	52	17	5	37,895	6,870	27,023	889	932	1,394	614	173
Arizona.....	25,162	521	28	88	65	311	22	7	24,641	235	18,645	360	2,557	514	2,057	273
Utah.....	20,325	1,693	1,593	36	41	14	2	7	18,632	14,312	4,054	46	48	4	117	51
Nevada.....	4,076	146	38	15	-	77	10	6	3,930	629	2,722	4	397	17	121	40
PACIFIC:
Washington.....	91,591	8,451	2,805	4,625	16	848	119	38	83,140	5,885	70,301	51	4,749	44	1,400	710
Oregon.....	70,851	5,058	276	4,064	63	500	129	26	65,793	1,371	61,340	87	1,690	34	900	371
California.....	168,170	9,189	276	1,806	3,732	2,785	386	204	158,981	1,264	104,148	15,447	19,247	4,409	12,183	2,283

October 10, 1942

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE
Bureau of the Census
Washington

Sixteenth Census of the
United States: 1940

Series H-13, No. 8

HOUSING

SIZE OF HOUSEHOLD IN THE NORTH, SOUTH, AND WEST, URBAN AND RURAL: 1940

(This release presents summary data on size of household in the urban and rural areas in the United States, and in the North, South, and West, with separate figures for households of owners and tenants. Corresponding figures for each State are available in release Series H-11.)

The median size of household in the United States in 1940 was 3.28 persons, according to data from the 1940 Census of Housing released today by Director J. C. Capt of the Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. In urban areas the median size of household was 3.16 persons, in rural-nonfarm areas 3.21, and in rural-farm areas 3.81. Households of one, two, or three persons comprised more than half (54.9 percent) of the 34,854,532 households in the United States; whereas households with four or five persons constituted 29.6 percent of the total, and those with six persons or more, 15.6 percent. Home owners in urban areas tended to have larger households than tenants, but in rural areas the households of tenants were larger than those of owners.

The size of a household is defined as the number of persons who live in an occupied dwelling unit. The figures include not only related family members but also lodgers, servants, and other unrelated persons who regularly live in the home. In connection with the median size of household, the general definition of the median as that item or value which stands at the midpoint of a series arranged according to size or value must be qualified somewhat, since this figure is presented with a decimal which can hardly be taken literally. For practical purposes, however, one need not be concerned with the theoretical interpretation of this median, but may simply accept it as a convenient summary figure representing the size of household in the various areas and groups concerned.

The median size of household for rural-farm and rural-nonfarm areas was highest in the South, intermediate in the North, and lowest in the West. For urban areas, however, the median was slightly smaller in the South than in the North, but the figures for both regions were considerably higher than the corresponding figure for urban areas in the West. The medians for urban areas ranged from 2.70 in the West to 3.24 in the North; for rural-nonfarm areas, from 2.96 in the West to 3.41 in the South; and for rural-farm areas, from 3.40 in the West to 4.04 in the South. The larger proportion of very small households in the West is attributable to the relatively high proportion of small families among those migrating to the West; whereas the larger families in the South and in rural areas are explained, for the most part, by high fertility rates.

There were more 2-person households in the United States in 1940 than households of any other size. The 2-person households numbered 8,630,515 and constituted 24.8 percent of all households. One-person households accounted for 7.7 percent of the total, 3-person households for 22.4 percent, and 4-person households for 18.1 percent. Thus, nearly one-third of all occupied dwelling units in the United States were used as the living quarters of one or two persons, and almost three-fourths housed not more than four persons.

Households of five, six, or seven persons represented 22.1 percent of all households; the percentage in this size group varied from 20.1 in the urban areas to 28.5 in the rural-farm. Five percent of all households had eight persons or more--3.7 percent of the urban households, 4.5 percent of the rural-nonfarm, and 9.2 percent of the rural-farm.

3-35849

The trend toward smaller families and households in the United States has been pointed out in earlier releases based on the total population in relation to the number of occupied dwelling units or families (Series PH-3, No. 2 and No. 4). Actual changes between 1930 and 1940 in the proportions of large and small families cannot be measured accurately by comparing the data on size of household, as presented in this release, with the data on size of family, as published for 1930. Only related family members were counted in the 1930 tabulations of private families by size. Later tabulations will show the size of private families in 1940 on a basis comparable with the 1930 statistics.

The median size of household was larger for owners than for tenants in the urban areas, but in the rural areas tenant households were the larger. Similar relationships between tenure and size of family were shown for 1930. In 1940 the median for urban owners was 3.33 persons, and for tenants 3.06; for rural-nonfarm owners 3.11, and for tenants 3.32; for rural-farm owners 3.63, and for tenants 4.00.

The figures in the accompanying table were obtained from the Second Series Housing Bulletins now being published for each State by the Bureau of the Census. These bulletins show data on size of household by color of head as well as tenure, and contain statistics relating to number of rooms, number of persons per room, rent or value, and other housing characteristics.

3-35849

Area and size of household	Total				Urban				Rural-nonfarm				Rural-farm
	All occupied units		Owner occupied	Tenant occupied	All occupied units		Owner occupied	Tenant occupied	All occupied units		Owner occupied	Tenant occupied	All occupied units		Owner occupied	Tenant occupied
	Number	Percent			Number	Percent			Number	Percent			Number	Percent
UNITED STATES
Total	34,854,532	100.0	15,195,763	19,658,769	20,596,500	100.0	7,714,960	12,881,540	7,151,473	100.0	3,698,076	3,453,397	7,106,559	100.0	3,782,727	3,323,832
1 person	2,677,330	7.7	1,054,730	1,622,600	1,671,349	8.1	476,222	1,195,127	644,964	9.0	361,871	283,093	361,017	5.1	216,637	144,380
2 persons	8,630,515	24.8	3,704,371	4,926,144	5,441,183	26.4	1,889,518	3,551,665	1,801,194	25.2	994,759	806,435	1,388,138	19.5	820,094	568,044
3 persons	7,796,091	22.4	3,360,881	4,435,210	4,800,889	23.3	1,792,699	3,008,190	1,582,448	22.1	803,034	779,414	1,412,754	19.9	765,148	647,606
4 persons	6,324,536	18.1	2,823,399	3,501,137	3,800,280	18.5	1,521,189	2,279,091	1,262,299	17.7	639,244	623,055	1,261,957	17.8	662,966	598,991
5 persons	4,012,499	11.5	1,841,214	2,171,285	2,270,577	11.0	953,350	1,317,227	794,566	11.1	398,394	396,172	947,356	13.3	489,470	457,886
6 persons	2,359,856	6.8	1,080,518	1,279,338	1,233,054	6.0	521,903	711,151	470,992	6.6	228,787	242,205	655,810	9.2	329,828	325,982
7 persons	1,340,544	3.8	600,327	740,217	644,265	3.1	268,545	375,720	267,442	3.7	125,021	142,421	428,837	6.0	206,761	222,076
8 persons	768,482	2.2	335,204	433,278	341,765	1.7	139,391	202,374	152,152	2.1	68,850	83,302	274,565	3.9	126,963	147,602
9 persons	435,784	1.3	185,890	249,894	181,416	0.9	72,003	109,413	84,810	1.2	37,872	46,938	169,558	2.4	76,015	93,543
10 persons	242,424	0.7	101,555	140,869	97,059	0.5	37,923	59,136	45,592	0.6	20,070	25,522	99,773	1.4	43,562	56,211
11 persons or more	266,471	0.8	107,674	158,797	114,663	0.6	42,217	72,446	45,014	0.6	20,174	24,840	106,794	1.5	45,283	61,511
Median number of persons	3.28	-	3.34	3.24	3.16	-	3.33	3.06	3.21	-	3.11	3.32	3.81	-	3.63	4.00
THE NORTH
Total	20,442,706	100.0	9,007,749	11,434,957	13,911,316	100.0	5,122,875	8,788,441	3,667,015	100.0	2,099,973	1,567,042	2,864,375	100.0	1,784,901	1,079,474
1 person	1,498,416	7.3	620,675	877,741	999,815	7.2	289,236	710,079	344,649	9.4	221,039	123,610	154,452	5.4	110,400	44,052
2 persons	5,106,360	25.0	2,211,566	2,894,794	3,541,505	25.5	1,202,405	2,339,100	959,748	26.2	591,745	368,003	605,107	21.1	417,416	187,691
3 persons	4,682,244	22.9	1,999,664	2,682,580	3,258,734	23.4	1,171,328	2,087,406	818,869	22.3	452,512	366,357	604,641	21.1	375,824	228,817
4 persons	3,838,983	18.8	1,693,173	2,145,810	2,663,608	19.1	1,024,987	1,638,621	645,617	17.6	353,655	291,962	529,758	18.5	314,531	215,227
5 persons	2,398,948	11.7	1,109,682	1,289,266	1,616,662	11.6	665,201	951,461	398,939	10.9	218,595	180,344	383,347	13.4	225,886	157,461
6 persons	1,353,895	6.6	640,261	713,634	877,455	6.3	371,383	506,072	228,897	6.2	123,683	105,214	247,543	8.6	145,195	102,348
7 persons	726,329	3.6	343,654	382,675	453,662	3.3	192,271	261,391	124,819	3.4	65,613	59,206	147,848	5.2	85,770	62,078
8 persons	391,835	1.9	184,340	207,495	237,307	1.7	99,913	137,394	68,456	1.9	34,906	33,550	86,072	3.0	49,521	36,551
9 persons	210,796	1.0	97,914	112,882	123,936	0.9	51,058	72,878	37,418	1.0	18,756	18,662	49,442	1.7	28,100	21,342
10 persons	113,231	0.6	52,118	61,113	65,281	0.5	26,547	38,734	20,058	0.5	9,756	10,302	27,892	1.0	15,815	12,077
11 persons or more	121,669	0.6	54,702	66,967	73,851	0.5	28,546	45,305	19,545	0.5	9,713	9,832	28,273	1.0	16,443	11,830
Median number of persons	3.27	-	3.34	3.23	3.24	-	3.41	3.14	3.15	-	3.02	3.30	3.63	-	3.47	3.87
THE SOUTH
Total	10,278,204	100.0	4,183,022	6,095,182	4,134,172	100.0	1,492,638	2,641,534	2,512,578	100.0	1,080,874	1,431,704	3,631,454	100.0	1,609,510	2,021,944
1 person	638,444	6.2	245,188	393,256	318,499	7.7	93,471	225,028	175,183	7.0	81,393	93,790	144,762	4.0	70,324	74,438
2 persons	2,322,219	22.6	927,730	1,394,489	1,096,733	26.5	359,317	737,416	578,454	23.0	259,672	318,782	647,032	17.8	308,741	338,291
3 persons	2,196,007	21.4	901,196	1,294,811	957,146	23.2	351,449	605,697	550,491	21.9	237,766	312,725	688,370	19.0	311,981	376,389
4 persons	1,803,431	17.5	767,919	1,035,512	727,276	17.6	290,573	436,703	449,706	17.9	195,394	254,312	626,449	17.3	281,952	344,497
5 persons	1,238,857	12.1	526,190	712,667	447,714	10.8	181,092	266,622	301,101	12.0	127,656	173,445	490,042	13.5	217,442	272,600
6 persons	809,806	7.9	333,160	476,646	258,059	6.2	100,612	157,447	190,885	7.6	77,098	113,787	360,862	9.9	155,450	205,412
7 persons	512,716	5.0	201,794	310,922	144,367	3.5	53,466	90,901	115,861	4.6	44,788	71,073	252,488	7.0	103,540	148,948
8 persons	322,238	3.1	121,958	200,280	81,287	2.0	28,484	52,803	69,095	2.7	26,040	43,055	171,856	4.7	67,434	104,422
9 persons	195,187	1.9	72,506	122,681	45,289	1.1	15,406	29,883	39,323	1.6	14,773	24,550	110,575	3.0	42,327	68,248
10 persons	112,971	1.1	41,154	71,817	25,249	0.6	8,490	16,759	21,180	0.8	7,999	13,181	66,542	1.8	24,665	41,877
11 persons or more	126,328	1.2	44,227	82,101	32,553	0.8	10,278	22,275	21,299	0.8	8,295	13,004	72,476	2.0	25,654	46,822
Median number of persons	3.45	-	3.52	3.47	3.18	-	3.34	3.09	3.41	-	3.34	3.47	4.04	-	3.90	4.14
THE WEST
Total	4,133,622	100.0	2,004,992	2,128,630	2,551,012	100.0	1,099,447	1,451,565	971,880	100.0	517,229	454,651	610,730	100.0	388,316	222,414
1 person	540,470	13.1	188,867	351,603	353,535	13.9	93,515	260,020	125,132	12.9	59,439	65,693	61,803	10.1	35,913	25,890
2 persons	1,201,936	29.1	565,075	636,861	802,945	31.5	327,796	475,149	262,992	27.1	143,342	119,650	135,999	22.3	93,937	42,062
3 persons	917,840	22.2	460,021	457,819	585,009	22.9	269,922	315,087	213,088	21.9	112,756	100,332	119,743	19.6	77,343	42,400
4 persons	682,122	16.5	362,307	319,815	409,396	16.0	205,529	203,767	166,976	17.2	90,195	76,781	105,750	17.3	66,483	39,267
5 persons	374,694	9.1	205,342	169,352	206,201	8.1	107,057	99,144	94,526	9.7	52,143	42,383	73,967	12.1	46,142	27,825
6 persons	196,155	4.7	107,097	89,058	97,540	3.8	49,908	47,632	51,210	5.3	28,006	23,204	47,405	7.8	29,183	18,222
7 persons	101,499	2.5	54,879	46,620	46,236	1.8	22,808	23,428	26,762	2.8	14,620	12,142	28,501	4.7	17,451	11,050
8 persons	54,409	1.3	28,906	25,503	23,171	0.9	10,994	12,177	14,601	1.5	7,904	6,697	16,637	2.7	10,008	6,629
9 persons	29,801	0.7	15,470	14,331	12,191	0.5	5,539	6,652	8,069	0.8	4,343	3,726	9,541	1.6	5,588	3,953
10 persons	16,222	0.4	8,283	7,939	6,529	0.3	2,886	3,643	4,354	0.4	2,315	2,039	5,339	0.9	3,082	2,257
11 persons or more	18,474	0.4	8,745	9,729	8,259	0.3	3,393	4,866	4,170	0.4	2,166	2,004	6,045	1.0	3,186	2,859
Median number of persons	2.85	-	3.04	2.67	2.70	-	2.98	2.48	2.96	-	3.00	2.92	3.40	-	3.33	3.52

10- Education, Higher

National Survey of the Higher Education of Negroes

SOCIO-ECONOMIC APPROACH to EDUCATIONAL PROBLEMS

Misc. No. 6
Volume I

Federal Security Agency, U. S. OFFICE OF EDUCATION

10 - Educ., Higher

National Survey of the Higher Education of Negroes

GENERAL STUDIES OF COLLEGES FOR NEGROES

Misc. No. 6

Volume II

Federal Security Agency U. S. OFFICE OF EDUCATION

UNITED STATES CENSUS OF

AGRICULTURE

1945

Geo. You may keep this. Ray.

Begin page 120

RECEIVED
MAY 16 1949
Southern Regional Council

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

W. Averell Harriman, Secretary

BUREAU OF THE CENSUS

J. C. Capt, Director

Special Report
1945 Sample Census of Agriculture

CHARACTERISTICS OF OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS, FOR THE UNITED STATES: NOVEMBER, 1945

Some improvement has been shown between 1940 and 1945 in the average condition and facilities of homes in the United States according to estimates released today by Director J. C. Capt of the Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. Greatest advance was shown in rural areas while urban communities showed much less over-all improvement.

Occupied dwelling units in the United States increased about 2 3/4 million between 1940 and 1945. The estimated number of occupied dwelling units in November, 1945, is 37,600,000. The number of urban occupied dwelling units increased by more than 3 million. In contrast to this increase the number of rural-farm occupied dwelling units declined by nearly 800,000 and the number of rural-nonfarm increased by only about 400,000 (table 1).

Table 1.—Occupied Dwelling Units, by TENURE, for the United States, Urban and Rural: 1945 and 1940

AREA AND TENURE	ESTIMATED NUMBER		INCREASE, 1940 TO 1945[1]		PERCENT
	1945	1940	Number	Percent	1945	1940
UNITED STATES
Total occupied dwelling units	37,600,000	34,855,000	2,745,000	7.9	100.0	100.0
Urban	23,748,000	20,597,000	3,151,000	15.3	63.2	59.1
Rural-nonfarm	7,533,000	7,151,000	382,000	5.3	20.0	20.5
Rural-farm	6,319,000	7,107,000	-788,000	-11.1	16.8	20.4
Owner	20,009,000	15,196,000	4,813,000	31.7	53.2	43.6
Tenant	17,591,000	19,659,000	-2,068,000	-10.5	46.8	56.4
URBAN
Total occupied dwelling units	23,748,000	20,597,000	3,151,000	15.3	100.0	100.0
Owner	11,047,000	7,715,000	3,332,000	43.2	46.5	37.5
Tenant	12,701,000	12,882,000	-181,000	-1.4	53.5	62.5
RURAL-NONFARM
Total occupied dwelling units	7,533,000	7,151,000	382,000	5.3	100.0	100.0
Owner	4,831,000	3,698,000	1,133,000	30.6	64.1	51.7
Tenant	2,702,000	3,453,000	-751,000	-21.7	35.9	48.3
RURAL-FARM
Total occupied dwelling units	6,319,000	7,107,000	-788,000	-11.1	100.0	100.0
Owner	4,131,000	3,783,000	348,000	9.2	65.4	53.2
Tenant	2,188,000	3,324,000	-1,136,000	-34.2	34.6	46.8

[1] A minus sign (-) denotes decrease.

TENURE

In November, 1945, there were 20,009,000 dwelling units occupied by owners, as compared with the 15,196,000 owner-occupied homes in April, 1940. In contrast, since April, 1940, the number of dwelling units occupied by tenants declined 11 percent to 17,591,000 in 1945. Thus, homes occupied by their owners represented 53 percent of all occupied dwelling units in 1945 as compared to 44 percent in 1940. In the urban areas, the percent of homes occupied by their owners increased from 38 percent in 1940 to 47 percent in 1945. The increase in the rural-farm areas was from 53 percent to 65 percent, and in the rural-nonfarm areas was from 52 percent in 1940 to 64 percent in 1945.

STATE OF REPAIR AND FACILITIES

In 1945, 33,258,000, or 89 percent, of the occupied dwelling units were not in need of major repairs, with 92 percent, 87 percent, and 78 percent for urban, rural-nonfarm, and rural-farm, respectively. Corresponding percentages in 1940 showed that 82 percent of the occupied units were not in need of major repairs, with 89 percent, 78 percent, and 67 percent for the urban, rural-nonfarm, and rural-farm areas. (See table 2.)

37142

In 1945, 23,438,000, or 71 percent, of the 33,258,000 dwelling units needing no major repairs contained both a private bath and a private flush toilet. Seventy-eight percent of all urban occupied dwelling units contained both private bath and private flush toilet and needed no major repairs, while 52 percent of the rural-nonfarm dwellings and only 15 percent of the rural-farm dwellings were reported in this class.

Almost one million of the 4,342,000 units needing repairs contained both a private bath and a private flush toilet. In this group are 3 percent of all urban units, 2 percent of the rural-nonfarm units, and 1 percent of the rural-farm units.

Of the 37,600,000 occupied dwelling units in 1945, more than 24,500,000, or 65 percent, had a private bath or shower in the structure for the exclusive use of the occupants of the dwelling unit (table 3). The corresponding figure for 1940 was less than 20 million, or 57 percent. In 1945, 1,566,000 dwelling units (4 percent) reported a bathtub or shower shared with other dwelling units, and more than 11 million (30 percent) reported no equipment for bathing. In 1940, approximately the same number of dwelling units had bathing equipment shared with other dwelling units, but 2 million more dwelling units in 1940, or 39 percent, of the total occupied dwelling units reported no facilities for bathing. The greatest percentage of homes with a private bathtub or shower for the exclusive use of its occupants was in the urban areas, where 82 percent were reported with such equipment in 1945, as compared with 17 percent of the rural-farm homes.

A private flush toilet in the structure was reported for 69 percent of the occupied dwelling units in the United States in 1945, as compared with 60 percent in 1940. Only 5 percent, or about 1,684,000 dwelling units, in 1945 reported flush toilets for the joint use of 2 or more families, and more than one-fourth (27 percent) of the dwelling units reported that they had other types of toilet facilities or no toilet facilities (table 4).

In 1945, 29,500,000, or 79 percent, of the occupied dwelling units, had running water within the unit. Most of the remaining units had no running water, although one percent of the occupied dwelling units had running water within the structure but not within the unit.

Ninety-five percent of urban homes had running water within the unit, as compared with 70 percent for rural-nonfarm and 28 percent for rural-farm units. However, the rural-nonfarm and rural-farm showed a one-third increase from 1940 while the urban percentage showed little change. The percentage having no running water within the unit was 5 percent of urban dwelling units, 30 percent of rural-nonfarm, and 72 percent of rural-farm dwelling units.

Approximately 18 million dwelling units in 1945 had central heating equipment and they represent 48 percent of the occupied dwelling units. (See table 6.) More than 14 million of the dwelling units with central heating were in urban places.

Ninety-five percent, or almost 36 million, of the occupied dwelling units in 1945 had installed cooking facilities. The urban and rural-nonfarm areas had 96 and 95 percent, respectively, while in rural-farm areas 93 percent of the occupied dwelling units had installed cooking facilities.

More than seven-eighths of the occupied dwelling units in the United States had electric lighting equipment. This type of lighting equipment was provided in 33,356,000, or 89 percent, of the total occupied dwelling units in 1945. The percentages of urban and rural-nonfarm homes with electric lighting were 98 and 90, respectively, and the corresponding figure for rural-farm homes was 52 percent. Although there were fewer rural-farm occupied dwelling units in 1945 than in 1940, a million more of these rural-farm homes had electric lighting.

Almost 34 million, or 90 percent, of the occupied dwelling units had radios in 1945, as compared with less than 29 million, or 83 percent, in 1940. Almost 22,500,000, or 95 percent, of the urban occupied dwellings reported radios in 1945, while rural-nonfarm reported almost 7 million, or 90 percent, and rural-farm almost 5 million, or 77 percent.

SIZE OF HOUSEHOLD AND DWELLING UNITS

The median size of household in the United States declined to 3.1 persons in 1945, as compared with 3.3 persons in 1940. There were more 2-person households in the United States in 1945 than households of any other size. These 2-person households totaled 10,529,000 and constituted 28 percent of all households. One-person households accounted for 9 percent of the total, 3-person households for 23 percent, and 4-person households for 18 percent. Thus, nearly three-eighths (37 percent) of all dwelling units in the United States were used as the living quarters of one or two persons, and more than three-fourths (78 percent) housed not more than 4 persons.

Households of 5 or more persons represented 22 percent of all households; the percentage in this size group varied from 18 in the urban areas to 34 in the rural-farm areas. Three percent of all households had 8 persons or more—2 percent of the urban households, 3 percent of the rural-nonfarm, and 8 percent of the rural-farm.

The size of a household is defined as the number of persons who live in an occupied dwelling unit. The figures include not only related family members but also lodgers, servants, and other unrelated persons who regularly live at home.

Occupied dwelling units in 1945 contained about the same number of rooms as those in 1940.

37142

In the United States, 4- and 5-room dwelling units represented 43 percent of all reporting units, while 35 percent had more than 5 rooms and 22 percent had fewer than 4 rooms. The number of rooms includes all rooms available for use throughout the year. Bathrooms, closets, halls, screened porches, and unfinished rooms in the basement or attic were not counted as rooms.

MONTHLY RENT

The median rent for tenant-occupied dwelling units in 1945 was $27.88 in total urban and rural-nonfarm areas; $30.25 in urban areas, and $15.50 in rural-nonfarm areas (table 13). More than 4,500,000 of the urban and rural-nonfarm dwelling units had rents of less than $20 per month, and 54 percent had rents of less than $30 per month. Monthly rents of $50 or more were reported for 1,508,000 of the 15,403,000 reporting units, or approximately 1 in every 10 units, while rents of less than $10 were reported for 1,242,000 dwelling units, or approximately 1 in every 12.

These rent figures are based on the amount paid per month as rent for tenant-occupied dwelling units. If no money rent was paid, for example, in the case of a minister who uses the parsonage rent-free, the estimated monthly rent based on the monthly rent paid for similar dwelling units in the neighborhood was entered on the schedules.

The rental data presented in this report are not comparable with the figures on changes in rent obtained by the Bureau of Labor Statistics for its cost of living index. The data compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics represent changes in rent charged for identical qualities of housing, essentially rents for identical units with identical services and facilities. The data in this release on the other hand reflect any shift in the size and type of rented units, the rent level of new war housing and other units coming on the rental market for the first time, and possibly also a trend toward more frequent inclusion in rent of charges for furnishings and utilities. Furthermore, the comparisons between 1940 and 1945 shown in this release may be affected by changes in vacancy rates among units in various rental groups.

The statistics presented in this release make it clear that the rental figures for 1940 and for 1945 do not pertain to the same group of units since there took place between those years a considerable shift in the groups of occupied dwelling units to which the rental data pertain. Over this five-year period there was an increase of 4,533,000, or 16 percent, in the number of occupied dwelling units in urban and rural-nonfarm areas. However, the percentage of units occupied by their owners increased sharply over the 5-year period rising from 49 percent in 1940 to 59 percent in 1945.

TECHNICAL NOTES

For this report, the urban and rural areas are those that were classified as urban or rural in 1940 on the basis of the results of the 1940 census. The classification of rural population by farm and nonfarm residence is based on the residence at the time of enumeration. Thus, the 1945 rural-farm population is the population living on farms in 1945 in areas that were classified as rural in 1940.

Source and Reliability of Estimates

Data on home ownership and other housing data, such as size of household, size of dwelling unit, bathing equipment, toilet facilities, heating equipment, and monthly rent were obtained for occupied dwelling units as a supplement to the Monthly Report on the Labor Force for November 1945. The Monthly Report on the Labor Force is a sample survey which is conducted each month in order to obtain information on labor supply, employment and other characteristics of the population. The sample is distributed in 68 areas, each area comprising one or more counties. These areas are located in 42 States and the District of Columbia. Approximately 20,000 households were included in the housing inquiry.

Since the estimates for 1945 are based on a sample, they are subject to error due to sampling variability. Apparent small changes between 1940 and 1945 may not in all cases be significant, either in the amount of the change or its direction. The following table gives approximate measures of the reliability of the estimates for 1945. The measures of reliability are shown for several different sizes of numbers:

SIZE OF ESTIMATE	DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE ESTIMATE AND THE NUMBER THAT WOULD HAVE BEEN OBTAINED FROM A COMPLETE CENSUS
	Chances are about 2 in 3 that the difference would be less than the figure in this column	Chances are about 19 in 20 that the difference would be less than the figure in this column
100,000	40,000	75,000
300,000	60,000	115,000
500,000	90,000	180,000
1,000,000	135,000	270,000
2,500,000	195,000	390,000
5,000,000	240,000	475,000
10,000,000	380,000	760,000
15,000,000	420,000	840,000
20,000,000	425,000	850,000
30,000,000	430,000	860,000

The sampling error of any percentage shown depends not only on the value of the percent but also on the size of base on which the percentage is determined. For example, the estimate of occupied dwelling units needing major repairs in rural-nonfarm areas in the United States in November 1945 is 12.9 percent. The estimate of all occupied dwelling units needing major repairs in the United States in November 1945 is 11.5 percent. Since the latter percent has a considerably larger base it is more reliable than the percent based on rural-nonfarm occupied dwelling units.

For percentages based on the total number of occupied dwelling units, the table below indicates the reliability for several different sizes of estimated percentages.

SIZE OF ESTIMATED PERCENTAGE	DIFFERENCE BETWEEN ESTIMATED PERCENTAGE AND PERCENTAGE WHICH WOULD HAVE BEEN OBTAINED FROM A COMPLETE CENSUS
	Chances are about 2 in 3 that the difference would be less than the figure in this column	Chances are about 19 in 20 that the difference would be less than the figure in this column
1 percent	0.2 percent	0.4 percent
5 "	0.5 "	1.0 "
10 "	0.6 "	1.2 "
25 "	1.0 "	1.9 "
50 "	1.1 "	2.3 "
75 "	1.1 "	2.3 "

The measures of reliability given in these tables are only approximate. They are intended as indications of the general level of sampling reliability of the estimates. In addition to sampling variations, the estimates are subject to errors of response, but the possibilities of such errors are not included in these measures of reliability.

The 1940 data shown were obtained from the 1940 Census of Housing with the data presented in thousands of dwelling units and with dwelling units not reporting on an item distributed in the same proportion as the reporting units. Estimates for 1945 are presented in thousands of dwelling units, not because they are assumed to be accurate to thousands of dwelling units but for convenience in summation.

37142

Table 2.—Occupied Dwelling Units, by STATE OF REPAIR AND PLUMBING EQUIPMENT, for the United States, Urban and Rural: 1945 and 1940

AREA AND STATE OF REPAIR AND PLUMBING EQUIPMENT	ESTIMATED NUMBER		INCREASE, 1940 TO 1945[1]		PERCENT
	1945	1940	Number	Percent	1945	1940
UNITED STATES
Total occupied dwelling units	37,600,000	34,855,000	2,745,000	7.9	100.0	100.0
With private bath and private flush toilet	24,385,000	19,429,000	4,956,000	25.5	64.9	55.7
With private flush toilet, no private bath	1,536,000	1,487,000	49,000	3.3	4.1	4.3
With running water, no private flush toilet	3,622,000	3,614,000	8,000	0.2	9.6	10.4
No running water in dwelling unit	8,057,000	10,325,000	-2,268,000	-22.0	21.4	29.6
Dwelling units not needing major repairs	33,258,000	28,588,000	4,670,000	16.3	88.5	82.0
With private bath and private flush toilet	23,438,000	18,039,000	5,399,000	29.9	62.3	51.8
With private flush toilet, no private bath	1,225,000	1,151,000	74,000	6.4	3.3	3.3
With running water, no private flush toilet	2,938,000	2,807,000	131,000	4.7	7.8	8.1
No running water in dwelling unit	5,657,000	6,591,000	-934,000	-14.2	15.0	18.9
Dwelling units needing major repairs	4,342,000	6,267,000	-1,925,000	-30.7	11.5	18.0
With private bath and private flush toilet	947,000	1,390,000	-443,000	-31.9	2.5	4.0
With private flush toilet, no private bath	311,000	336,000	-25,000	-7.4	0.8	1.0
With running water, no private flush toilet	684,000	807,000	-123,000	-15.2	1.8	2.3
No running water in dwelling unit	2,400,000	3,734,000	-1,334,000	-35.7	6.4	10.7
URBAN
Total occupied dwelling units	23,748,000	20,597,000	3,151,000	15.3	100.0	100.0
With private bath and private flush toilet	19,349,000	15,830,000	3,519,000	22.2	81.5	76.9
With private flush toilet, no private bath	1,201,000	1,227,000	-26,000	-2.1	5.1	6.0
With running water, no private flush toilet	1,930,000	2,193,000	-263,000	-12.0	8.1	10.6
No running water in dwelling unit	1,268,000	1,347,000	-79,000	-5.9	5.3	6.5
Dwelling units not needing major repairs	21,755,000	18,271,000	3,484,000	19.1	91.6	88.7
With private bath and private flush toilet	18,586,000	14,753,000	3,833,000	26.0	78.3	71.6
With private flush toilet, no private bath	920,000	941,000	-21,000	-2.2	3.9	4.6
With running water, no private flush toilet	1,517,000	1,721,000	-204,000	-11.9	6.4	8.4
No running water in dwelling unit	732,000	856,000	-124,000	-14.5	3.1	4.2
Dwelling units needing major repairs	1,993,000	2,326,000	-333,000	-14.3	8.4	11.3
With private bath and private flush toilet	763,000	1,077,000	-314,000	-29.2	3.2	5.2
With private flush toilet, no private bath	281,000	286,000	-5,000	-1.7	1.2	1.4
With running water, no private flush toilet	413,000	472,000	-59,000	-12.5	1.7	2.3
No running water in dwelling unit	536,000	491,000	45,000	9.2	2.3	2.4
RURAL-NONFARM
Total occupied dwelling units	7,533,000	7,151,000	382,000	5.3	100.0	100.0
With private bath and private flush toilet	4,029,000	2,823,000	1,206,000	42.7	53.5	39.5
With private flush toilet, no private bath	273,000	223,000	50,000	22.4	3.6	3.1
With running water, no private flush toilet	987,000	941,000	46,000	4.9	13.1	13.2
No running water in dwelling unit	2,244,000	3,164,000	-920,000	-29.1	29.8	44.2
Dwelling units not needing major repairs	6,563,000	5,559,000	1,004,000	18.1	87.1	77.7
With private bath and private flush toilet	3,878,000	2,587,000	1,291,000	49.9	51.5	36.2
With private flush toilet, no private bath	243,000	179,000	64,000	35.8	3.2	2.5
With running water, no private flush toilet	820,000	714,000	106,000	14.8	10.9	10.0
No running water in dwelling unit	1,622,000	2,079,000	-457,000	-22.0	21.5	29.1
Dwelling units needing major repairs	970,000	1,592,000	-622,000	-39.1	12.9	22.3
With private bath and private flush toilet	151,000	236,000	-85,000	-36.0	2.0	3.3
With private flush toilet, no private bath	30,000	44,000	-14,000	-31.8	0.4	0.6
With running water, no private flush toilet	167,000	227,000	-60,000	-26.4	2.2	3.2
No running water in dwelling unit	622,000	1,085,000	-463,000	-42.7	8.3	15.2

[1] A minus sign (-) denotes decrease.

37142

Table 2.—Occupied dwelling units, by STATE OF REPAIR AND PLUMBING EQUIPMENT, for the United States, Urban and Rural: 1945 and 1940—Continued

AREA AND STATE OF REPAIR AND PLUMBING EQUIPMENT	ESTIMATED NUMBER		INCREASE, 1940 TO 1945[1]		PERCENT
	1945	1940	Number	Percent	1945	1940
RURAL-FARM
Total occupied dwelling units	6,319,000	7,107,000	-788,000	-11.1	100.0	100.0
With private bath and private flush toilet	1,007,000	776,000	231,000	29.8	15.9	10.9
With private flush toilet, no private bath	62,000	37,000	25,000	67.6	1.0	0.5
With running water, no private flush toilet	705,000	480,000	225,000	46.9	11.2	6.8
No running water in dwelling unit	4,545,000	5,814,000	-1,269,000	-21.8	71.9	81.8
Dwelling units not needing major repairs	4,940,000	4,758,000	182,000	3.8	78.2	66.9
With private bath and private flush toilet	974,000	699,000	275,000	39.3	15.4	9.8
With private flush toilet, no private bath	62,000	31,000	31,000	100.0	1.0	0.4
With running water, no private flush toilet	601,000	372,000	229,000	61.6	9.5	5.2
No running water in dwelling unit	3,303,000	3,656,000	-353,000	-9.7	52.3	51.4
Dwelling units needing major repairs	1,379,000	2,349,000	-970,000	-41.3	21.8	33.1
With private bath and private flush toilet	33,000	77,000	-44,000	-57.1	0.5	1.1
With private flush toilet, no private bath	-	6,000	-6,000	-100.0	-	0.1
With running water, no private flush toilet	104,000	108,000	-4,000	-3.7	1.6	1.5
No running water in dwelling unit	1,242,000	2,158,000	-916,000	-42.4	19.7	30.4

[1]A minus sign (-) denotes decrease.

Table 3.—Occupied Dwelling Units, by BATHING EQUIPMENT, for the United States, Urban and Rural: 1945 and 1940

AREA AND BATHING EQUIPMENT	ESTIMATED NUMBER		INCREASE, 1940 TO 1945[1]		PERCENT
	1945	1940	Number	Percent	1945	1940
UNITED STATES
Total occupied dwelling units	37,600,000	34,855,000	2,745,000	7.9	100.0	100.0
Bathing equipment in structure, exclusive use	24,587,000	19,777,000	4,810,000	24.3	65.4	56.7
Bathing equipment in structure, shared	1,566,000	1,641,000	-75,000	-4.6	4.2	4.7
None	11,447,000	13,437,000	-1,990,000	-14.8	30.4	38.6
URBAN
Total occupied dwelling units	23,748,000	20,597,000	3,151,000	15.3	100.0	100.0
Bathing equipment in structure, exclusive use	19,404,000	15,986,000	3,418,000	21.4	81,7	77.6
Bathing equipment in structure, shared	1,443,000	1,484,000	-41,000	-2.8	6.1	7.2
None	2,901,000	3,127,000	-226,000	-7.2	12.2	15.2
RURAL-NONFARM
Total occupied dwelling units	7,533,000	7,151,000	382,000	5.3	100.0	100.0
Bathing equipment in structure, exclusive use	4,096,000	2,925,000	1,171,000	40.0	54.4	40.9
Bathing equipment in structure, shared	105,000	142,000	-37,000	-26.1	1.4	2.0
None	3,332,000	4,084,000	-752,000	-18.4	44.2	57.1
RURAL-FARM
Total occupied dwelling units	6,319,000	7,107,000	-788,000	-11.1	100.0	100.0
Bathing equipment in structure, exclusive use	1,087,000	866,000	221,000	25.5	17.2	12.2
Bathing equipment in structure, shared	18,000	15,000	3,000	20.0	0.3	0.2
None	5,214,000	6,226,000	-1,012,000	-16.3	82.5	87.6

[1]A minus sign (-) denotes decrease.

3 2142

Table 4.—Occupied Dwelling Units, by TOILET FACILITIES, for the United States, Urban and Rural: 1945 and 1940

AREA AND TOILET FACILITIES	ESTIMATED NUMBER		INCREASE, 1940 TO 1945[1]		PERCENT
	1945	1940	Number	Percent	1945	1940
UNITED STATES
Total occupied dwelling units	37,600,000	34,855,000	2,745,000	7.9	100.0	100.0
Flush toilet in structure, exclusive use	25,953,000	21,026,000	4,927,000	23.4	69.0	60.3
Flush toilet in structure, shared	1,684,000	1,725,000	-41,000	-2.4	4.5	4.9
No flush toilet	9,963,000	12,104,000	-2,141,000	-17.7	26.5	34.7
URBAN
Total occupied dwelling units	23,748,000	20,597,000	3,151,000	15.3	100.0	100.0
Flush toilet in structure, exclusive use	20,581,000	17,131,000	3,450,000	20.1	86.7	83.2
Flush toilet in structure, shared	1,547,000	1,578,000	-31,000	-2.0	6.5	7.7
No flush toilet	1,620,000	1,888,000	-268,000	14.2	6.8	9.2
RURAL-NONFARM
Total occupied dwelling units	7,533,000	7,151,000	382,000	5.3	100.0	100.0
Flush toilet in structure, exclusive use	4,302,000	3,078,000	1,224,000	39.8	57.1	43.0
Flush toilet in structure, shared	119,000	135,000	-16,000	-11.9	1.6	1.9
No flush toilet	3,112,000	3,938,000	-826,000	-21.0	41.3	55.1
RURAL-FARM
Total occupied dwelling units	6,319,000	7,107,000	-788,000	-11.1	100.0	100.0
Flush toilet in structure, exclusive use	1,070,000	817,000	253,000	31.0	16.9	11.5
Flush toilet in structure, shared	18,000	12,000	6,000	50.0	0.3	0.2
No flush toilet	5,231,000	6,278,000	-1,047,000	-16.7	82.8	88.3

[1] A minus sign (-) denotes decrease.

Table 5.—Occupied Dwelling Units, by WATER SUPPLY, for the United States, Urban and Rural: 1945 and 1940

AREA AND WATER SUPPLY	ESTIMATED NUMBER		INCREASE, 1940 TO 1945[1]		PERCENT
	1945	1940	Number	Percent	1945	1940
UNITED STATES
Total occupied dwelling units	37,600,000	34,855,000	2,745,000	7.9	100.0	100.0
Running water in unit	29,543,000	24,530,000	5,013,000	20.4	78.6	70.4
No running water in unit	8,057,000	10,325,000	-2,268,000	-22.0	21.4	29.6
No running water in unit but in structure	537,000	-	-	-	1.4	-
No running water in structure	7,520,000	-	-	-	20.0	-
URBAN
Total occupied dwelling units	23,748,000	20,597,000	3,151,000	15.3	100.0	100.0
Running water in unit	22,480,000	19,250,000	3,230,000	16.8	94.7	93.5
No running water in unit	1,268,000	1,347,000	-79,000	-5.9	5.3	6.5
No running water in unit but in structure	376,000	-	-	-	1.6	-
No running water in structure	892,000	-	-	-	3.8	-
RURAL-NONFARM
Total occupied dwelling units	7,533,000	7,151,000	382,000	5.3	100.0	100.0
Running water in unit	5,289,000	3,987,000	1,302,000	32.7	70.2	55.8
No running water in unit	2,244,000	3,164,000	-920,000	-29.1	29.8	44.2
No running water in unit but in structure	104,000	-	-	-	1.4	-
No running water in structure	2,140,000	-	-	-	28.4	-
RURAL-FARM
Total occupied dwelling units	6,319,000	7,107,000	-788,000	-11.1	100.0	100.0
Running water in unit	1,774,000	1,293,000	481,000	37.2	28.1	18.2
No running water in unit	4,545,000	5,814,000	-1,269,000	-21.8	71.9	81.8
No running water in unit but in structure	57,000	-	-	-	0.9	-
No running water in structure	4,488,000	-	-	-	71.0	-

[1] A minus sign (-) denotes decrease.

37142

Table 6.—Occupied Dwelling Units, WITH AND WITHOUT CENTRAL HEATING, for the United States, Urban and Rural: 1945 and 1940

AREA AND CENTRAL HEATING	ESTIMATED NUMBER		INCREASE, 1940 TO 1945[1]		PERCENT
	1945	1940	Number	Percent	1945	1940
UNITED STATES
Total occupied dwelling units	37,600,000	34,855,000	2,745,000	7.9	100.0	100.0
With central heating	18,188,000	14,639,000	3,549,000	24.2	48.4	42.0
Without central heating	19,412,000	20,216,000	-804,000	-4.0	51.6	58.0
URBAN
Total occupied dwelling units	23,748,000	20,597,000	3,151,000	15.3	100.0	100.0
With central heating	14,536,000	11,986,000	2,550,000	21.3	61.2	58.2
Without central heating	9,212,000	8,611,000	601,000	7.0	38.8	41.8
RURAL-NONFARM
Total occupied dwelling units	7,533,000	7,151,000	382,000	5.3	100.0	100.0
With central heating	2,679,000	1,933,000	746,000	38.6	35.6	27.0
Without central heating	4,854,000	5,218,000	-364,000	-7.0	64.4	73.0
RURAL-FARM
Total occupied dwelling units	6,319,000	7,107,000	-788,000	-11.1	100.0	100.0
With central heating	973,000	720,000	253,000	35.1	15.4	10.1
Without central heating	5,346,000	6,387,000	-1,041,000	-16.3	84.6	89.9

[1] A minus sign (-) denotes decrease.

Table 7.—Occupied Dwelling Units, WITH AND WITHOUT ELECTRIC LIGHTING, for the United States, Urban and Rural: 1945 and 1940

AREA AND ELECTRIC LIGHTING	ESTIMATED NUMBER		INCREASE, 1940 TO 1945[1]		PERCENT
	1945	1940	Number	Percent	1945	1940
UNITED STATES
Total occupied dwelling units	37,600,000	34,855,000	2,745,000	7.9	100.0	100.0
With electric lighting	33,356,000	27,604,000	5,752,000	20.8	88.7	79.2
Without electric lighting	4,244,000	7,251,000	-3,007,000	-41.5	11.3	20.8
URBAN
Total occupied dwelling units	23,748,000	20,597,000	3,151,000	15.3	100.0	100.0
With electric lighting	23,238,000	19,719,000	3,519,000	17.8	97.9	95.7
Without electric lighting	510,000	878,000	-368,000	-41.9	2.1	4.3
RURAL-NONFARM
Total occupied dwelling units	7,533,000	7,151,000	382,000	5.3	100.0	100.0
With electric lighting	6,805,000	5,588,000	1,217,000	21.8	90.3	78.1
Without electric lighting	728,000	1,563,000	-835,000	-53.4	9.7	21.9
RURAL-FARM
Total occupied dwelling units	6,319,000	7,107,000	-788,000	-11.1	100.0	100.0
With electric lighting	3,313,000	2,297,000	1,016,000	44.2	52.4	32.3
Without electric lighting	3,006,000	4,810,000	-1,804,000	-37.5	47.6	67.7

[1] A minus sign (-) denotes decrease.

37142

Table 8.—Occupied Dwelling Units, by RADIO, for the United States, Urban and Rural: 1945 and 1940

AREA AND RADIO	ESTIMATED NUMBER		INCREASE, 1940 TO 1945[1]		PERCENT
	1945	1940	Number	Percent	1945	1940
UNITED STATES
Total occupied dwelling units	37,600,000	34,855,000	2,745,000	7.9	100.0	100.0
With radio	33,998,000	28,847,000	5,151,000	17.9	90.4	82.8
No radio	3,602,000	6,008,000	-2,406,000	-40.0	9.6	17.2
URBAN
Total occupied dwelling units	23,748,000	20,597,000	3,151,000	15.3	100.0	100.0
With radio	22,416,000	18,925,000	3,491,000	18.4	94.4	91.9
No radio	1,332,000	1,672,000	-340,000	-20.3	5.6	8.1
RURAL-NONFARM
Total occupied dwelling units	7,533,000	7,151,000	382,000	5.3	100.0	100.0
With radio	6,741,000	5,647,000	1,094,000	19.4	89.5	79.0
No radio	792,000	1,504,000	-712,000	-47.3	10.5	21.0
RURAL-FARM
Total occupied dwelling units	6,319,000	7,107,000	-788,000	-11.1	100.0	100.0
With radio	4,841,000	4,277,000	564,000	13.2	76.6	60.2
No radio	1,478,000	2,830,000	-1,352,000	-47.8	23.4	39.8

[1] A minus sign (-) denotes decrease.

Table 9.—Occupied Dwelling Units, by INSTALLED COOKING FACILITIES, for the United States, Urban and Rural: 1945 and 1940

INSTALLED COOKING FACILITIES	Total	URBAN AND RURAL-NONFARM			Rural-farm
		Total	Urban	Rural-nonfarm
NUMBER
Total occupied dwelling units	37,600,000	31,281,000	23,748,000	7,533,000	6,319,000
With installed cooking facilities	35,878,000	30,022,000	22,842,000	7,180,000	5,856,000
No installed cooking facilities	1,722,000	1,259,000	906,000	353,000	463,000
PERCENT
Total occupied dwelling units	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0
With installed cooking facilities	95.4	96.0	96.2	95.3	92.7
No installed cooking facilities	4.6	4.0	3.8	4.7	7.3

37142

Table 10.—Occupied Dwelling Units, by SIZE OF HOUSEHOLD, for the United States, Urban and Rural: 1945 and 1940

AREA AND SIZE OF HOUSEHOLD	ESTIMATED NUMBER		INCREASE, 1940 TO 1945[1]		PERCENT
	1945	1940	Number	Percent	1945	1940
UNITED STATES
Total occupied dwelling units	37,600,000	34,855,000	2,745,000	7.9	100.0	100.0
1 person	3,481,000	2,677,000	804,000	30.0	9.3	7.7
2 persons	10,529,000	8,630,000	1,899,000	22.0	28.0	24.8
3 persons	8,597,000	7,796,000	801,000	10.3	22.9	22.4
4 persons	6,817,000	6,325,000	492,000	7.8	18.1	18.1
5 persons	3,968,000	4,013,000	-45,000	-1.1	10.6	11.5
6 persons	2,044,000	2,360,000	-316,000	-13.4	5.4	6.8
7 persons	1,018,000	1,341,000	-323,000	-24.1	2.7	3.8
8 or more persons	1,146,000	1,713,000	-567,000	-33.1	3.0	4.9
Median number of persons	3.06	3.29	-	-	-	-
URBAN
Total occupied dwelling units	23,748,000	20,597,000	3,151,000	15.3	100.0	100.0
1 person	2,372,000	1,671,000	701,000	42.0	10.0	8.1
2 persons	7,076,000	5,441,000	1,635,000	30.0	29.8	26.4
3 persons	5,747,000	4,800,000	947,000	19.7	24.2	23.3
4 persons	4,279,000	3,801,000	478,000	12.6	18.0	18.5
5 persons	2,368,000	2,272,000	96,000	4.2	10.0	11.0
6 persons	1,064,000	1,233,000	-169,000	-13.7	4.5	6.0
7 persons	415,000	645,000	-230,000	-35.7	1.7	3.1
8 or more persons	427,000	734,000	-307,000	-41.8	1.8	3.6
Median number of persons	2.92	3.16	-	-	-
RURAL-NONFARM
Total occupied dwelling units	7,533,000	7,151,000	382,000	5.3	100.0	100.0
1 person	786,000	645,000	141,000	21.9	10.4	9.0
2 persons	1,968,000	1,801,000	167,000	9.3	26.1	25.2
3 persons	1,583,000	1,583,000	-	-	21.0	22.1
4 persons	1,414,000	1,262,000	152,000	12.0	18.8	17.6
5 persons	830,000	794,000	36,000	4.5	11.0	11.1
6 persons	458,000	471,000	-13,000	-2.8	6.1	6.6
7 persons	257,000	267,000	-10,000	-3.7	3.4	3.7
8 or more persons	237,000	328,000	-91,000	-27.7	3.1	4.6
Median number of persons	3.14	3.21	-	-	-	-
RURAL-FARM
Total occupied dwelling units	6,319,000	7,107,000	-788,000	-11.1	100.0	100.0
1 person	323,000	361,000	-38,000	-10.5	5.1	5.1
2 persons	1,485,000	1,388,000	97,000	7.0	23.5	19.5
3 persons	1,267,000	1,413,000	-146,000	-10.3	20.1	19.9
4 persons	1,124,000	1,262,000	-138,000	-10.9	17.8	17.8
5 persons	770,000	947,000	-177,000	-18.7	12.2	13.3
6 persons	522,000	656,000	-134,000	-20.4	8.3	9.2
7 persons	346,000	429,000	-83,000	-19.3	5.5	6.0
8 or more persons	482,000	651,000	-169,000	-26.0	7.6	9.2
Median number of persons	3.58	3.81	-	-	-	-

[1]A minus sign (-) denotes decrease.

37142

Table 11.—Occupied Dwelling Units, BY NUMBER OF ROOMS, for the United States, Urban and Rural: 1945 and 1940

AREA AND NUMBER OF ROOMS	ESTIMATED NUMBER		INCREASE, 1940 TO 1945[1]		PERCENT
	1945	1940	Number	Percent	1945	1940
UNITED STATES
Total occupied dwelling units	37,600,000	34,855,000	2,745,000	7.9	100.0	100.0
1 room	610,000	1,156,000	-546,000	-47.2	1.6	3.3
2 rooms	2,330,000	2,905,000	-575,000	-19.8	6.2	8.3
3 rooms	5,416,000	4,929,000	487,000	9.9	14.4	14.1
4 rooms	7,402,000	6,477,000	925,000	14.3	19.7	18.6
5 rooms	8,815,000	7,014,000	1,801,000	25.7	23.4	20.1
6 rooms	6,976,000	6,132,000	844,000	13.8	18.6	17.6
7 rooms	2,968,000	2,792,000	176,000	6.3	7.9	8.0
8 or more rooms	3,083,000	3,450,000	-367,000	-10.6	8.2	9.9
Median number of rooms	4.85	4.78	-	-	-	-
URBAN
Total occupied dwelling units	23,748,000	20,597,000	3,151,000	15.3	100.0	100.0
1 room	475,000	705,000	-230,000	-32.6	2.0	3.4
2 rooms	1,533,000	1,600,000	-67,000	-4.2	6.5	7.8
3 rooms	3,691,000	2,945,000	746,000	25.3	15.5	14.3
4 rooms	4,655,000	3,666,000	989,000	27.0	19.6	17.8
5 rooms	5,765,000	4,533,000	1,232,000	27.2	24.3	22.0
6 rooms	4,495,000	3,926,000	569,000	14.5	18.9	19.1
7 rooms	1,664,000	1,534,000	130,000	8.5	7.0	7.4
8 or more rooms	1,470,000	1,688,000	-218,000	-12.9	6.2	8.2
Median number of rooms	4.76	4.80	-	-	-	-
RURAL-NONFARM
Total occupied dwelling units	7,533,000	7,151,000	382,000	5.3	100.0	100.0
1 room	85,000	289,000	-204,000	-70.6	1.1	4.0
2 rooms	476,000	688,000	-212,000	-30.8	6.3	9.6
3 rooms	931,000	964,000	-33,000	-3.4	12.4	13.5
4 rooms	1,409,000	1,389,000	20,000	1.4	18.7	19.4
5 rooms	1,808,000	1,375,000	433,000	31.5	24.0	19.2
6 rooms	1,393,000	1,168,000	225,000	19.3	18.5	16.3
7 rooms	735,000	595,000	140,000	23.5	9.8	8.3
8 or more rooms	696,000	683,000	13,000	1.9	9.2	9.6
Median number of rooms	4.98	4.68	-	-	-	-
RURAL-FARM
Total occupied dwelling units	6,319,000	7,107,000	-788,000	-11.1	100.0	100.0
1 room	50,000	162,000	-112,000	-69.1	0.8	2.3
2 rooms	321,000	617,000	-296,000	-48.0	5.1	8.7
3 rooms	794,000	1,020,000	-226,000	-22.2	12.6	14.4
4 rooms	1,338,000	1,422,000	-84,000	-5.9	21.2	20.0
5 rooms	1,242,000	1,106,000	136,000	12.3	19.7	15.6
6 rooms	1,088,000	1,038,000	50,000	4.8	17.2	14.6
7 rooms	569,000	663,000	-94,000	-14.2	9.0	9.3
8 or more rooms	917,000	1,079,000	-162,000	-15.0	14.5	15.2
Median number of rooms	5.03	4.80	-	-	-	-

[1] A minus sign (-) denotes decrease.

37142

Table 12.—Occupied Dwelling Units, by PERSONS PER ROOM, for the United States, Urban and Rural: 1945 and 1940

AREA AND PERSONS PER ROOM	ESTIMATED NUMBER		INCREASE, 1940 TO 1945[1]		PERCENT
	1945	1940	Number	Percent	1945	1940
UNITED STATES
Total occupied dwelling units	37,600,000	34,855,000	2,745,000	7.9	100.0	100.0
0.50 or less	14,312,000	10,976,000	3,336,000	30.4	38.1	31.5
0.51 to 1.00	17,750,000	16,831,000	919,000	5.5	47.2	48.3
1.01 to 1.50	3,575,000	3,925,000	-350,000	-8.9	9.5	11.3
1.51 or more	1,963,000	3,123,000	-1,160,000	-37.1	5.2	9.0
URBAN
Total occupied dwelling units	23,748,000	20,597,000	3,151,000	15.3	100.0	100.0
0.50 or less	9,054,000	6,471,000	2,583,000	39.9	38.1	31.4
0.51 to 1.00	12,026,000	10,860,000	1,166,000	10.7	50.6	52.7
1.01 to 1.50	1,889,000	2,082,000	-193,000	-9.3	8.0	10.1
1.51 or more	779,000	1,184,000	-405,000	-34.2	3.3	5.7
RURAL-NONFARM
Total occupied dwelling units	7,533,000	7,151,000	382,000	5.3	100.0	100.0
0.50 or less	3,055,000	2,417,000	638,000	26.4	40.6	33.8
0.51 to 1.00	3,171,000	3,112,000	59,000	1.9	42.1	43.5
1.01 to 1.50	823,000	826,000	-3,000	-0.4	11.0	11.6
1.51 or more	484,000	796,000	-312,000	-39.2	6.4	11.1
RURAL-FARM
Total occupied dwelling units	6,319,000	7,107,000	-788,000	-11.1	100.0	100.0
0.50 or less	2,203,000	2,088,000	115,000	5.5	34.9	29.4
0.51 to 1.00	2,553,000	2,859,000	-306,000	-10.7	40.4	40.2
1.01 to 1.50	863,000	1,017,000	-154,000	-15.1	13.7	14.3
1.51 or more	700,000	1,143,000	-443,000	-38.8	11.1	16.1

[1]A minus sign (-) denotes decrease.

3714 2

Table 13.—Tenant-Occupied Dwelling Units, by CONTRACT MONTHLY RENT, for the United States, Urban and Rural Nonfarm: 1945 and 1940

AREA AND CONTRACT MONTHLY RENT	ESTIMATED NUMBER		INCREASE, 1940 TO 1945[1]		PERCENT
	1945	1940	Number	Percent	1945	1940
URBAN AND RURAL-NONFARM
Tenant-occupied dwelling units	15,403,000	16,335,000	-932,000	-5.7	100.0	100.0
Under $5	251,000	900,000	-649,000	-72.1	1.6	5.5
$5 to $9	991,000	1,962,000	-971,000	-49.5	6.4	12.0
$10 to $14	1,518,000	2,305,000	-787,000	-34.1	9.9	14.1
$15 to $19	1,790,000	2,238,000	-448,000	-20.0	11.6	13.7
$20 to $24	1,812,000	2,031,000	-219,000	-10.8	11.8	12.4
$25 to $29	1,979,000	1,854,000	125,000	6.7	12.8	11.3
$30 to $39	3,488,000	2,546,000	942,000	37.0	22.6	15.6
$40 to $49	2,066,000	1,310,000	756,000	57.7	13.4	8.0
$50 or more	1,508,000	1,189,000	319,000	26.8	9.8	7.3
Median monthly rent (dollars)	27.88	21.38	-	-	-	-
URBAN
Tenant-occupied dwelling units	12,701,000	12,882,000	-181,000	-1.4	100.0	100.0
Under $5	74,000	249,000	-175,000	-70.3	0.6	1.9
$5 to $9	453,000	970,000	-517,000	-53.3	3.6	7.5
$10 to $14	975,000	1,588,000	-613,000	-38.6	7.7	12.3
$15 to $19	1,327,000	1,813,000	-486,000	-26.8	10.4	14.1
$20 to $24	1,529,000	1,787,000	-258,000	-14.4	12.0	13.9
$25 to $29	1,755,000	1,675,000	80,000	4.8	13.8	13.0
$30 to $39	3,180,000	2,402,000	778,000	32.4	25.0	18.6
$40 to $49	1,965,000	1,262,000	703,000	55.7	15.5	9.8
$50 or more	1,443,000	1,136,000	307,000	27.0	11.4	8.8
Median monthly rent (dollars)	30.25	24.60	-	-	-	-
RURAL-NONFARM
Tenant-occupied dwelling units	2,702,000	3,453,000	-751,000	-21.7	100.0	100.0
Under $5	177,000	651,000	-474,000	-72.8	6.6	18.9
$5 to $9	538,000	992,000	-454,000	-45.8	19.9	28.7
$10 to $14	543,000	717,000	-174,000	-24.3	20.1	20.8
$15 to $19	463,000	425,000	38,000	8.9	17.1	12.3
$20 to $24	283,000	244,000	39,000	16.0	10.5	7.1
$25 to $29	224,000	179,000	45,000	25.1	8.3	5.2
$30 to $39	308,000	144,000	164,000	113.9	11.4	4.2
$40 to $49	101,000	48,000	53,000	110.4	3.7	1.4
$50 or more	65,000	53,000	12,000	22.6	2.4	1.5
Median monthly rent (dollars)	15.50	10.08	-	-	-	-

[1] A minus sign (-) denotes decrease.

3114

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE
W. AVERELL HARRIMAN, Secretary

BUREAU OF THE CENSUS
J. C. CAPT, Director

CURRENT POPULATION REPORTS

HOUSING

October 29, 1947 | Washington 25, D. C. | Series P-70, No. 1

HOUSING CHARACTERISTICS OF THE UNITED STATES: APRIL, 1947

Homes occupied by their owners now represent 55 percent of all occupied dwelling units in the United States, according to the results of a survey released today by J. C. Capt, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. The survey also shows that two-thirds of the 41,700,000 dwelling units in the United States have a private bath and a private flush toilet; and nine out of every ten have electric lighting. These figures cover farm as well as nonfarm dwelling units. About 2 1/3 million of the occupied dwelling units contained more than 1 1/2 persons per room and 2 1/2 million had one or more married couples living as subfamilies, in addition to the head of the household. Of the estimated 15 1/3 million tenant-occupied nonfarm dwelling units, 4 1/6 million rented for $40 a month or more and the same number rented for less than $20 a month. All of these figures are based on results of a survey which was conducted in April, 1947, by the Bureau of the Census. The survey covered about 30,000 households in 148 sample areas in 44 States and the District of Columbia, each area comprising one or more counties or parts of counties. Since the estimates are based on a sample, they are subject to error due to sampling variability. The smaller figures, particularly those less than 1,000,000, as well as small changes from 1940 should be used with particular care, as explained below in the section on Reliability of estimates.

TENURE

In April, 1947, homes occupied by their owners represented about 55 percent of all ordinary occupied dwelling units. In urban areas, 48 percent of the occupied dwelling units were owner-occupied while in rural-nonfarm and rural-farm areas about two-thirds were in this category. The percent of homes occupied by their owners in 1947 represents considerable increases over the comparable figures in 1940 when the percentages were as follows: United States, 44 percent; urban areas, 38 percent; rural-nonfarm areas, 52 percent; and rural-farm areas, 53 percent.

STATE OF REPAIR AND FACILITIES

In 1947, about 37,500,000, or 90 percent of the ordinary dwelling units were in good condition or in need of minor repairs, with 93 percent, 89 percent, and 81 percent for urban, rural-nonfarm, and rural-farm, respectively. The survey indicated that there were approximately 4,100,000 dwelling units in need of major repairs of which 2,700,000 were in urban and rural-nonfarm areas.

In 1947, an estimated 27,300,000 dwelling units were reported as containing both a private bath and a private flush toilet. In urban areas, about 20,500,000, or 84 percent of the units had both a private bath and private flush toilet and in rural-nonfarm areas about 5,300,000 dwelling units were in this category. On the other hand, only about 1 1/2 million of the rural-farm dwelling units had both a private bath and private flush toilet. Only about 800,000 of the 27 million dwelling units having both a private bath and private flush toilet were in need of major repairs. There were 15,100,000 dwelling units in the United States that were in need of major repairs or without private bath.

Approximately 20,000,000 dwelling units in 1947, or 48 percent of all dwelling units, had central heating equipment. Approximately 64 percent of the homes in urban places had central heating. There are, of course, important regional variations in the number of homes with central heating.

45031

About 9 out of every 10 of the dwelling units in the United States had electric lighting equipment. This type of lighting equipment was provided in about 37,100,000 homes in 1947. As expected, urban homes had the highest percentage, 98 percent, with the corresponding figures for rural-nonfarm being about 90 percent and only 59 percent for rural-farm homes.

Ninety-six percent, or close to 40 million, of the ordinary dwelling units in 1947 had installed cooking facilities. The urban areas had 98 percent, rural-nonfarm areas 94 percent, and in the rural-farm areas 92 percent of the dwelling units had installed cooking facilities.

The survey indicated that about 2 out of every 3 dwelling units in the Nation had all of the following designated facilities: Electric lighting and running water; and flush toilet, bathtub or shower, and installed cooking facilities for exclusive use of unit's occupants. The highest proportion of dwelling units having all designated facilities was in urban areas, about 83 percent, while the rural-nonfarm and rural-farm areas had 54 percent and 19 percent, respectively.

SIZE OF HOUSEHOLD AND DWELLING UNITS

Almost one-fourth of the dwelling units in the United States contained 5 or more persons in 1947. Households of this size group represented about 21 percent of the occupied dwelling units in urban areas, about the same (23 percent) in rural-nonfarm areas, and 32 percent in rural-farm areas. Of all of the households in the Nation, one-person households accounted for about 7 percent of the total, 2-person households, for 27 percent, 3-person households, for 23 percent, and 4-person households, for 19 percent.

The size of a household is defined as the number of persons who live in an occupied dwelling unit. The figures include not only related family members but also lodgers, servants, and other unrelated persons who regularly live in the unit.

Dwelling units in 1947 contained about the same number of rooms as those in 1940. The median number of rooms in 1947 was about 4.8 and in 1940 it was 4.7. In the United States, 4- and 5-room dwelling units represented 42 percent of all dwelling units, while 35 percent of the dwelling units had more than 5 rooms and 23 percent had fewer than 4 rooms. In urban areas 42 percent of the dwelling units were in the 4- and 5-room groups, in rural-nonfarm areas about the same proportion (44 percent) were in this group while in rural-farm areas only 37 percent were 4- and 5-room dwelling units. The number of rooms includes all rooms available for use throughout the year. Bathrooms, closets, halls, screened porches, and unfinished rooms in the basement or attic were not counted as rooms.

The survey indicated that the extent of overcrowding, as measured by the proportion of dwelling units with more than 1 1/2 persons per room was approximately 6 percent, or about 2,400,000 occupied dwelling units, in 1947. In 1940, 9 percent, or 3,100,000 of the occupied dwelling units contained more than 1 1/2 persons per room. In the rural-farm areas the rate declined from 16 percent in 1940 to about 10 percent in 1947. In urban areas, about 4 percent of the occupied dwelling units contained more than 1 1/2 persons per room while in the rural-nonfarm areas this proportion was 8 percent. Comparable figures for 1940 were 6 percent and 11 percent, respectively.

About 6 percent of the ordinary occupied dwelling units in 1947 contained one or more husband-wife subfamilies. This proportion was about the same in all three urban-rural residence groups.

MONTHLY RENT

The median rent for tenant-occupied dwelling units in 1947 was about $29.33 in the total of the urban and rural-nonfarm areas; $31.64 in urban areas, and $18.62 in rural-nonfarm (table 22). Approximately 4,100,000 of the tenant-occupied urban and rural-nonfarm dwelling units had rents of less than $20 per month. Monthly rents of $50 or more were reported for 1,900,000 of the 15,300,000 reporting units, or approximately 1 in every 8 units. The rental data presented in this report are not comparable with the figures on changes in rent obtained by the Bureau of Labor Statistics for its consumers' price index, for reasons given below in the section on Comparability of rental data.

VETERAN HOUSEHOLDS

About 27 percent of the occupied dwelling units were reported as containing a veteran household (that is, households in which the head or a relative of the head was a veteran of World War II). About 14 percent of the dwelling units occupied by veteran households contained one or more husband-wife subfamilies as compared with only 4 percent of the nonveteran households. The condition and facilities of the dwelling units occupied by these veteran and nonveteran households were about the same. However, while the median number of rooms of dwelling units occupied by veteran households was about the same as that for nonveteran households, the median number of persons in veteran households was 3.6 as compared with 3.0 for nonveteran households.

45031

VACANCY

Of the total dwelling units in the United States only about 327,000, or 0.8 percent, were habitable nonseasonal vacant units offered for rent and 112,000, or 0.3 percent, were habitable nonseasonal vacant units offered for sale only. In urban areas only about 87,000, or 0.4 percent, were habitable nonseasonal vacant units offered for rent while in rural-nonfarm areas about the same situation existed (79,000, or 0.8 percent, were offered for rent) and in rural-farm areas 161,000, or 2.1 percent, were in this category. The vacant habitable nonseasonal dwelling units reported for sale were about the same for each urban-rural residence group as for the Nation as a whole.

Including turnover vacancies (those already rented or sold but not yet occupied), and those being held off the market for various reasons, the total habitable nonseasonal vacancy rate was approximately 2.5 percent (about 1,000,000 such units) for the Nation. In urban areas, the proportion was even smaller, 1.4 percent. On the other hand, the rate in rural-nonfarm areas was 3.1 percent and in rural-farm areas 5.0 percent.

In addition to the habitable nonseasonal vacant units an additional 330,000, or about 0.8 percent, were not habitable and 1,087,000, or 2.6 percent, were vacant seasonal units. Thus the gross vacancy rate for the Nation was approximately 5.9 percent. In urban areas, this rate was 2.1 percent, while in rural-nonfarm areas and rural-farm areas the rates were about the same (11.4 and 10.9 percent, respectively).

DEFINITIONS, EXPLANATIONS, AND TECHNICAL NOTES

Arrangement of tables.--The summary tables at the end of this report present further details for 1947 on the housing characteristics of the United States and the four major regions. Table 1 presents data on occupancy and vacancy status for total dwelling units in the United States by urban-rural areas. The characteristics are shown for ordinary dwelling units rather than for all dwelling units in all of the remaining tables. Tables 4 to 15 present characteristics of all ordinary dwelling units by tenure for the United States, urban and rural, and similar data, not by tenure, for the four major regions. Tables 2, 3, and 16 to 21 contain characteristics of occupied ordinary dwelling units. Table 22 presents data on contract monthly rent for tenant-occupied urban and rural-nonfarm dwelling units only for the United States and the four major regions. Table 23 presents revised data on occupancy and vacancy status in the United States, by urban-rural areas for November, 1945. This table contains revisions of the data on rural-nonfarm and rural-farm vacancies which supersedes the 1945 data published in Series H-46, No. 2.

Urban and rural areas.--The housing statistics are presented separately for the urban, rural-nonfarm, and rural-farm areas in the following tables. The urban and rural areas are those that were classified as urban or rural in 1940 on the basis of the results of the 1940 census, in general, taking into account annexations to such urban places that have occurred since 1940. The urban area is made up in general of cities and other incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more, and all territory outside these places is classified as rural.

The classification of rural population by farm and nonfarm residence is based on the residence at the time of enumeration in 1947. Thus, the 1947 rural-farm population is the population living on farms in 1947 in areas that were classified as rural.

Rural-nonfarm dwelling units are those located outside the boundaries of urban places but not on farms. This group is composed of dwelling units in a wide variety of locations, ranging from isolated nonfarm homes in the open country to homes in small unincorporated areas adjacent to a large city.

Rural-farm dwelling units are those located on farms outside urban places. Dwelling units on farms within the boundaries of urban places are included in the totals for urban places. In 1940 rural-farm dwelling units represented about 99 percent of all farm dwelling units.

Dwelling units.--In general, in the April, 1947, survey a dwelling unit is defined as a house or a group of rooms or a single room occupied or intended for occupancy as separate living quarters by a family or other group of persons living together or by a person living alone. A group of rooms (occupied or intended for occupancy by a family or other group of persons living together or a person living alone) is considered a dwelling unit provided it has separate cooking facilities or a separate entrance. A single room (occupied or intended for occupancy by a family or other group of persons living together or a person living alone) is considered a dwelling unit provided it has separate cooking facilities or provided it has a separate entrance and a private bath or provided it has a separate entrance and is rented unfurnished.

45031

In the 1940 census a dwelling unit was defined as the living quarters occupied or intended for occupancy by one household. A household is a family or any other group of persons living together with common housekeeping arrangements. While there is no basic difference between the definitions used in 1940 and 1947, the definition of 1947 is more specific. Because of the differences in the definitions used in 1940 and 1947 living quarters may have been classified as separate dwelling units on one date and not on the other.

Enumerators in April, 1947, were supplied with lists which specified the living quarters that were to be included in their enumeration. These lists were prepared without detailed consideration of the characteristics of the living quarters or of the occupants of the quarters. It was assumed that the separate dwelling units would be designated on the basis of the more detailed information obtained during the enumeration. In some cases the enumerators might have been unduly influenced by the dwelling unit determination of the lister and might not have revised the designation when it was incorrect.

The lists furnished the enumerators in April, 1947, included vacant places that were in serious disrepair. The enumerators included these places in their canvass and reported whether each vacant place was "uninhabitable," "in need of major repairs" or "in good condition or in need of minor repairs." The total of all dwelling units in 1947 shown in the various tables of this report include 474,000 dwelling units which were uninhabitable vacant units. Of this group 230,000 were reported to be uninhabitable by the enumerators and 244,000 were reported as in need of major repairs but were in neighborhoods where units in similar condition were not being occupied. The enumerators in the 1940 census had been instructed to omit any vacant units which were uninhabitable. Thus, it is probable that some portion of the 230,000 dwelling units which were reported as vacant and uninhabitable in 1947 would not be included in the total if the 1940 procedure had been followed.

Dwelling units were classified by type as "ordinary dwelling units" and "other dwelling places." "Other dwelling places" include dwelling units in trailers, tourist cabins, shacks, river boats, barns, sheds, railroad cars, warehouses, and the like. "Ordinary dwelling units" include all remaining types of dwelling units. The characteristics of all dwelling units in 1940 are based on totals which include occupied dwelling units in other dwelling places. Since the statistics relating to the various housing characteristics in April, 1947, were obtained for only the "ordinary dwelling units," the group of 122,000 occupied dwelling units in other dwelling places has been omitted from most of the 1947 statistics presented in this report. Living quarters in hotels, dormitories, rooming houses with 10 or more rooms rented or for rent, institutions, jails, hospitals, military or labor camps, etc., are not included in the 1947 statistics in this report.

45031

Occupancy and tenure.--Ordinary dwelling units are classified according to occupancy as "occupied," "occupied by nonresident," or "unoccupied." To be classified as "occupied" a dwelling unit must be inhabited by persons who make it their usual place of residence. If, at the time of the enumeration, a dwelling unit was occupied solely by persons whose usual place of residence was elsewhere, it was classified as "occupied by nonresident." The category "unoccupied" includes seasonal as well as nonseasonal vacancies.

Occupied dwelling units are further classified by tenure as "owner-occupied" and "tenant-occupied." An "owner-occupied" dwelling unit is one owned by the head of the household or a member of his family who is living in the dwelling unit or temporarily absent from it. All other occupied dwelling units are classified as "tenant-occupied."

Unoccupied dwelling units are classified as seasonal or nonseasonal on the basis of intended occupancy. "Nonseasonal" includes units which are not intended for occupancy on a seasonal basis. A dwelling unit located in the closely built up areas of most cities is considered nonseasonal even though it is used on a seasonal basis by its occupants. "Seasonal" includes all units intended for occupancy during only a portion of the year. Although seasonal dwellings are found primarily in resort areas, certain dwelling units in rural areas used only for a portion of the year to house migratory workers are included as "seasonal."

Unoccupied or vacant nonseasonal dwelling units are classified as habitable or not habitable. The category "not habitable" includes not only units reported by the enumerator as uninhabitable but also units in need of major repairs where similar units in the same neighborhood are not occupied. Vacant, habitable units are further classified as "offered for rent"; "rented, not yet occupied"; "for sale only"; "sold, not yet occupied"; and "other." A vacant dwelling unit offered both for sale and for rent is classified as "offered for rent." The category "other" includes dwelling units being held to settle an estate, awaiting demolition, being held for absent households, and the like.

Vacant dwelling units under construction or undergoing repairs or alterations are included in the categories "for rent," "rented, not yet occupied," "for sale only," or "sold, not yet occupied" if the vacant unit would be ready for occupancy within one month of the survey date.

Color of occupants.--The color of occupants is determined according to the race of the head of the household. "Nonwhite" includes Negroes, Indians, Chinese, Japanese, and other nonwhite races.

State of repair.--Dwelling units reported as "in need of major repairs" include those dwelling units which require major repair or replacement of floors, roof, plaster, walls, foundation, or other major structural components. A repair is major when its neglect seriously impairs the soundness of the structure and creates a hazard to its safety as a place of residence or if the repair has been neglected so long that the structure is already unsound.

Dwelling units reported as "in good condition or in need of minor repairs" include those which require no structural repairs or only such work as papering, painting, general maintenance, stopping of small leaks, pointing up of masonry, or similar work.

There was no material difference between the definition of major repairs in 1940 and 1947. The enumerators were instructed to base their report on their observation of the condition of the dwelling unit and not on the respondent's opinion. Thus, changes between 1940 and 1947 may be affected by the enumeration procedure and by the judgment of the enumerators.

In 1940, the enumeration schedule provided space for the enumerator to report whether or not the dwelling unit "needed major repairs," while in 1947 space was provided to indicate whether the dwelling unit was "in need of major repairs" or "in good condition or in need of minor repairs." This difference in schedule design may have resulted in a decrease in the number of units reported as "in need of major repairs."

Installed cooking facilities.--By "installed cooking facilities" is meant something more substantial than a one- or two-burner hot plate or other electrical appliance such as a toaster or percolator; stoves either standing on the floor or built into a cabinet are regarded as installed cooking facilities. Statistics on number of dwelling units without installed cooking facilities in 1947 are not comparable with the figures on number of dwelling units with no cooking fuel in 1940, since the 1940 number is limited to those units that had no installed cooking equipment of any type.

45031

Electric lighting.--"Electric lighting" includes lights that are wired to a power line or a home plant even though service may be temporarily suspended.

Central heating.--"Central heating" is heating from a steam, hot water, or hot air system, piped to the rooms in the dwelling unit from a furnace or central boiler or furnished by a pipeless hot air system. There was no material difference between the definition of central heating in 1940 and 1947. In 1940 the enumeration schedule provided space for the enumerator to report whether the dwelling unit had "steam or hot water system," "piped warm air system," "pipeless warm air furnace," "heating stove," or "other or none." Dwelling units with any of the first three types were classified as "with central heating." In 1947 the schedule provided space to report whether or not the dwelling unit had central heating. This difference in schedule design may have resulted in some difference in the enumerators' reports.

Designated facilities.--The classification of ordinary dwelling units according to designated facilities is based on whether or not they had all of the following facilities: Electric lighting and running water; and flush toilet, bathtub or shower, and installed cooking facilities for exclusive use of the unit's occupants.

Number of rooms.--All rooms used or available for use as living quarters are included in the count of rooms. Bathrooms, strip or pullman kitchens, halls, foyers, pantries, laundries, unfinished rooms, basement or attic rooms not intended for living quarters, and rooms used for office or business purposes are not included. However, rooms used for office purposes by a person living in the dwelling unit, such as a doctor, lawyer, or dentist are included in the count of rooms.

The definition of number of rooms was substantially the same in 1940 and 1947. No mention was made of half-rooms in the instructions for 1940 but in 1947 the enumerator was instructed to report a dinette, kitchenette, breakfast room, or dressing room as a half room. Dwelling units reported to contain 1 1/2 or 2 1/2 rooms in 1947 are included in the statistics as two-room units. The half-room was dropped from the reported number of rooms for 3 1/2- and 4 1/2-room units and larger units with reported number of rooms ending in 1/2-room.

Number of persons.--All persons enumerated as members of the household (including lodgers, servants, and other unrelated persons having no other usual place of residence) are counted in determining the number of persons who occupied each dwelling unit. Students away from home at school and other members temporarily absent are included as members of the household.

Persons per room.--The number of persons per room, used as an index of crowding, was obtained by dividing the number of persons in the household by the number of rooms in the dwelling unit. This computation was made for each occupied dwelling unit, after rounding the reported number of rooms in 1947 to a full number (see the section on Number of rooms).

Monthly rent.--The rent shown for tenant-occupied units is that actually paid. If, however, no money rent was paid, as in the case of a doctor, minister, teacher, or farm tenant who receives the use of the house as part of his wages, the monthly rent was based on the monthly rent paid for similar dwelling units in the neighborhood.

Veteran and nonveteran households.--"Veteran households" are those in which the head of the household or some member of the household related to the head is a veteran of World War II.

A household in which the only veteran is a lodger or other nonrelative of the head is classified as a nonveteran household. Further, the figures on dwelling units occupied by veteran and nonveteran households relate to those in ordinary dwelling units only and exclude those in rooms in hotels, institutions, and "other dwelling places" such as trailers, tourist cabins, and boats.

There is evidence that in the survey, veterans of World War II were underrepresented in the sample relative to nonveterans and that some veterans were misreported as nonveterans. It is not certain, therefore, that veteran households identified as such in the survey adequately represent all veteran households.

These statistics are not strictly comparable with those presented in the H-Vet reports of the Bureau of the Census since dwelling units in which the only veteran is a nonrelative of the household head are included as dwelling units occupied by veteran households in those reports. Also, in H-Vet reports occupied dwelling units containing doubled-up families include dwelling units which contain married women (other than household head) whose husbands are absent.

"Husband-wife" subfamilies.--A husband-wife subfamily is a married couple, with or without children, living in an ordinary dwelling unit but not including the head of the household. The married couple is generally related to the head of the household, but in some cases it is a group of lodgers, servants, or other nonrelatives of the head. Married couples living in large lodginghouses, dormitories, transient hotels, etc., are not occupants of ordinary dwelling units and consequently are not counted as subfamilies.

Comparability of rental data.--The rental data presented in this report are not comparable with the figures on changes in rent obtained by the Bureau of Labor Statistics for its consumers' price index. The data compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics represent changes in rent charged for identical qualities of housing—essentially rents for identical units with identical services and facilities. The data in this release, on the other hand, reflect any changes in the size and type of rented units, the rent level of new housing and other units coming on the rental market for the first time, and possibly also a trend toward more frequent inclusion in rent of charges for furniture and utilities. Furthermore, the comparisons between 1940 and 1947 shown in this release may be affected by changes in vacancy rates among units in various rental groups and also by shifts of units to owner-occupancy status.

The statistics presented in this report make it clear that the rental figures for 1940 and for 1947 do not pertain to the same group of units, since there took place between those years a considerable shift in the groups of occupied dwelling units to which the rental data pertain.

Source and reliability of the estimates.--The 1947 estimates presented in this report are based on data obtained in connection with the Census Bureau's Survey of Population, Labor Force, and Housing conducted in April, 1947. This survey consisted of about 30,000 households located in 148 sample areas in 44 States and the District of Columbia, each area comprising 1 or more counties or parts of counties.

Data for 1940 are presented in some of the tables of this report. These data were obtained in the Census of Housing of 1940 and are presented in part 1 of Volume II of the Sixteenth Decennial Census Reports on Housing.

Since the 1947 estimates are based on a sample survey, they are subject to sampling variability. The following table presents the approximate sampling errors of estimates of selected sizes for April, 1947, for the United States and its urban-rural residence groups. Estimates by region are subject to somewhat greater errors due to sampling variability.

45031

Size of estimate	The chances are about 19 out of 20 that the difference between the estimate and the figure which would have been obtained from a complete census is less than:
50,000.....	39,000
100,000.....	54,000
300,000.....	94,000
500,000.....	120,000
1,000,000.....	170,000
3,000,000.....	290,000
5,000,000.....	380,000
10,000,000.....	530,000
20,000,000.....	750,000
40,000,000.....	1,050,000

The reliability of an estimated percentage depends upon both the size of the percentage and the size of the total on which it is based. The following table presents the approximate sampling errors of estimated percentages of selected sizes based on the total number of ordinary occupied dwelling units or total dwelling units in April, 1947.

Estimated percentage	The chances are about 19 out of 20 that the difference between the estimated percentage and the percentage which would have been obtained from a complete census is less than:
2.....	0.4
5.....	0.6
10.....	0.8
30.....	1.2
50.....	1.3
70.....	1.2
90.....	0.8
95.....	0.6
98.....	0.4

The estimates of sampling error shown in the above tables are not directly applicable to differences obtained by subtracting one published figure from another. The error due to sampling variability in an observed difference depends on the sampling variability of each of the estimates and the correlation between them.

The reliability of an estimated median depends upon the size and the form of the distribution on which it is based. For example, the estimated median rent of tenant-occupied ordinary dwelling units in April, 1947, was $29.33, and the chances are about 19 out of 20 that a complete census would have yielded a figure between $28.43 and $30.26.

In addition to sampling variation, the estimates are subject to biases due to errors of response and to nonreporting, but the possibility of such errors is not included in the above measures of reliability, since a complete census would be similarly affected.

Comparisons of 1947 and 1940 figures are subject to sampling variability. Since sampling variability is not present in a complete enumeration, the sampling error of a net change from 1940 to 1947 depends only upon the sampling error of the 1947 estimate. For example, in 1940 the census showed 15,196,000 owner-occupied units in the United States, while the 1947 sample survey showed about 21,347,000, an increase of 6,151,000 units. Since the chances are about 19 out of 20 that a complete enumeration in 1947 would have shown a figure not more than 800,000 greater or less than that obtained in the sample study, the indicated increase between 1940 and 1947 can be regarded as significant. The comparability of these figures is also affected by minor changes in the definition of some of the housing characteristics and by possible differences in the applications of the definitions by the enumerators. These changes and differences are explained in the sections relating to these separate items.

Statistics similar to those obtained in April, 1947, on the characteristics of housing were obtained by the Bureau of the Census in October, 1944, and in November, 1945, in conjunction with the enumeration for its Current Population Survey. The Current Population Survey is a sample survey which is conducted each month in order to obtain information on labor supply, employment, and other characteristics of the population. The sample is distributed in 68 areas in 42 States and the District of Columbia, each area comprising one or more counties. About 20,000 households were surveyed in November, 1945, and about 30,000 in October, 1944. The results of these earlier housing surveys are presented in the releases, Series H-45, No. 2 and Series H-46, No. 1 and No. 2. For statements on the reliability of 1944 and 1945 estimates, see these releases.

Comparisons of 1944, 1945, and 1947 estimates are influenced by the fact that all of these figures are subject to errors due to sampling variability. These sample surveys of the housing situation have been designed primarily to reflect the condition of the housing inventory as of a given date rather than to measure net changes occurring between two closely adjacent points in time. While it is possible to use the studies to measure the approximate order of magnitude of significant changes over time, errors due to sampling variability are such that the figures may not satisfactorily measure small changes. For example, the sample housing survey conducted by the Census Bureau in October, 1944, estimated the number of occupied urban and rural-nonfarm dwelling units to be about 30,750,000 and the chances are about 19 out of 20 that the result which would have been obtained from a complete census using the same schedules, instructions, and enumerators is between 30,050,000 and 31,450,000, a deviation of about 2 percent. The survey conducted in November, 1945, using the same sample design in the same 68 sample areas as in October, 1944, estimated the number of occupied urban and rural-nonfarm dwelling units to be about 31,300,000; the chances are about 19 out of 20 that the result which would have been obtained from a complete census is between 30,500,000 and 32,100,000, a deviation of only about 3 percent. While a comparison of the sample survey results would indicate an increase of 550,000 occupied urban and rural-nonfarm dwelling units between the two studies, the chances are about 19 out of 20 that because of sampling variation the actual change might have been greater or less than the survey results by as much as 1,000,000 units. In other words, due to sampling, while there might be an error of only about 2 or 3 percent in the level of a given survey figure, there may easily be a relative variation of 100 percent or more on the observed change between the figures in two surveys when that change has been relatively small.

45.31

As a further example, the survey conducted in November, 1945, estimated the total number of urban and rural-nonfarm dwelling units to be about 33,340,000. The survey conducted in April, 1947, estimated the total number of urban and rural-nonfarm dwelling units to be about 34,250,000. The chances are about 19 out of 20 that if there were no real change between the two dates the sample estimates might differ up to 1,100,000. However, since the observed difference is about 900,000, a complete census on the two dates could have shown a slight decrease, or an increase as large as 2,000,000.

Furthermore, comparisons of net changes in vacancy rates between two sample survey dates must be made with extreme caution, especially when the change is relatively small, because of the possible difference resulting from sampling variation. Occasionally the difference may be statistically significant. For example, the November, 1945, survey showed a gross vacancy rate of 7.3 percent. The April, 1947, survey showed a gross vacancy rate of 5.9 percent. Considering the difference which might arise through sampling variability alone, the chances are about 19 out of 20 that if there were no real change between the two dates the sample estimates might differ by not more than 1.1. Since the observed difference is greater than the sampling variation the direction of the change can be regarded as significant.

45031

Table 1.--VACANCY AND OCCUPANCY, FOR THE UNITED STATES: APRIL, 1947

ITEM	United States	URBAN AND RURAL-NONFARM			Rural-farm
		Total	Urban	Rural-nonfarm
Total dwelling units	41,747,000	34,248,000	24,463,000	9,785,000	7,499,000
All ordinary dwelling units	41,625,000	34,133,000	24,430,000	9,703,000	7,492,000
Occupied by residents	39,016,000	32,354,000	23,835,000	8,519,000	6,662,000
Owner-occupied	21,347,000	17,025,000	11,547,000	5,478,000	4,322,000
Tenant-occupied	17,669,000	15,329,000	12,288,000	3,041,000	2,340,000
Occupied by nonresidents	164,000	152,000	87,000	65,000	12,000
Unoccupied	2,445,000	1,627,000	508,000	1,119,000	818,000
Seasonal	1,087,000	839,000	112,000	727,000	248,000
Nonseasonal	1,358,000	788,000	396,000	392,000	570,000
Habitable	1,028,000	651,000	352,000	299,000	377,000
Rental	415,000	233,000	129,000	104,000	182,000
Offered for rent	327,000	166,000	87,000	79,000	161,000
Rented, not yet occupied	88,000	67,000	42,000	25,000	21,000
Sale	295,000	242,000	135,000	107,000	53,000
For sale only	112,000	94,000	49,000	45,000	18,000
Sold, not yet occupied	183,000	148,000	86,000	62,000	35,000
Other	318,000	176,000	88,000	88,000	142,000
Not habitable	330,000	137,000	44,000	93,000	193,000
Other dwelling places	122,000	115,000	33,000	82,000	7,000
PERCENT
Total dwelling units	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0
All ordinary dwelling units	99.7	99.7	99.9	99.2	99.9
Occupied by residents	93.5	94.5	97.4	87.1	88.8
Owner-occupied	51.1	49.7	47.2	56.0	57.6
Tenant-occupied	42.3	44.8	50.2	31.1	31.2
Occupied by nonresidents	0.4	0.4	0.4	0.7	0.2
Unoccupied	5.9	4.8	2.1	11.4	10.9
Seasonal	2.6	2.4	0.5	7.4	3.3
Nonseasonal	3.3	2.3	1.6	4.0	7.6
Habitable	2.5	1.9	1.4	3.1	5.0
Rental	1.0	0.7	0.5	1.1	2.4
Offered for rent	0.8	0.5	0.4	0.8	2.1
Rented, not yet occupied	0.2	0.2	0.2	0.3	0.3
Sale	0.7	0.7	0.6	1.1	0.7
For sale only	0.3	0.3	0.2	0.5	0.2
Sold, not yet occupied	0.4	0.4	0.4	0.6	0.5
Other	0.8	0.5	0.4	0.9	1.9
Not habitable	0.8	0.4	0.2	1.0	2.6
Other dwelling places	0.3	0.3	0.1	0.8	0.1

45031

Table 2.--COLOR OF OCCUPANTS BY TENURE, FOR THE UNITED STATES

AREA AND COLOR OF OCCUPANTS	ALL ORDINARY OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS, 1947						ALL OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS, APRIL, 1940
	Total		Owner-occupied		Tenant-occupied
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
UNITED STATES
Total	39,016,000	100.0	21,347,000	100.0	17,669,000	100.0	34,855,000	100.0
White	35,495,000	91.0	20,202,000	94.6	15,293,000	86.6	31,561,000	90.5
Nonwhite	3,521,000	9.0	1,145,000	5.4	2,376,000	13.4	3,294,000	9.5
URBAN AND RURAL-NONFARM
Total	32,354,000	100.0	17,025,000	100.0	15,329,000	100.0	27,748,000	100.0
White	29,511,000	91.2	16,071,000	94.4	13,440,000	87.7	25,459,000	91.8
Nonwhite	2,843,000	8.8	954,000	5.6	1,889,000	12.3	2,289,000	8.2
URBAN
Total	23,835,000	100.0	11,547,000	100.0	12,288,000	100.0	20,597,000	100.0
White	21,594,000	90.6	10,868,000	94.1	10,726,000	87.3	18,869,000	91.6
Nonwhite	2,241,000	9.4	679,000	5.9	1,562,000	12.7	1,728,000	8.4
RURAL-NONFARM
Total	8,519,000	100.0	5,478,000	100.0	3,041,000	100.0	7,151,000	100.0
White	7,917,000	92.9	5,203,000	95.0	2,714,000	89.2	6,590,000	92.2
Nonwhite	602,000	7.1	275,000	5.0	327,000	10.8	561,000	7.8
RURAL-FARM
Total	6,662,000	100.0	4,322,000	100.0	2,340,000	100.0	7,107,000	100.0
White	5,984,000	89.8	4,131,000	95.6	1,853,000	79.2	6,102,000	85.9
Nonwhite	678,000	10.2	191,000	4.4	487,000	20.8	1,005,000	14.1
OCCUPIED BY VETERAN HOUSEHOLDS
Total	10,543,000	100.0	5,195,000	100.0	5,348,000	100.0	-	-
White	9,856,000	93.5	4,965,000	95.6	4,891,000	91.5	-	-
Nonwhite	687,000	6.5	230,000	4.4	457,000	8.5	-	-
OCCUPIED BY NONVETERAN HOUSEHOLDS
Total	28,473,000	100.0	16,152,000	100.0	12,321,000	100.0	-	-
White	25,639,000	90.0	15,237,000	94.3	10,402,000	84.4	-	-
Nonwhite	2,834,000	10.0	915,000	5.7	1,919,000	15.6	-	-

Table 3.--COLOR OF OCCUPANTS, FOR THE UNITED STATES, BY REGIONS

REGION AND COLOR OF OCCUPANTS	1947										ALL OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS, APRIL, 1940
	All ordinary occupied dwelling units		Urban and rural-nonfarm						Rural-farm
			Total		Urban		Rural-nonfarm
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
THE NORTHEASTERN STATES
Total	10,716,000	100.0	10,130,000	100.0	8,118,000	100.0	2,012,000	100.0	586,000	100.0	9,479,000	100.0
White	10,160,000	94.8	9,579,000	94.6	7,574,000	93.3	2,005,000	99.7	581,000	99.1	9,123,000	96.2
Nonwhite	556,000	5.2	551,000	5.4	544,000	6.7	7,000	0.3	5,000	0.9	356,000	3.8
THE NORTH CENTRAL STATES
Total	12,064,000	100.0	9,759,000	100.0	7,446,000	100.0	2,313,000	100.0	2,305,000	100.0	10,964,000	100.0
White	11,543,000	95.7	9,252,000	94.8	6,975,000	93.7	2,277,000	98.4	2,291,000	99.4	10,566,000	96.4
Nonwhite	521,000	4.3	507,000	5.2	471,000	6.3	36,000	1.6	14,000	0.6	398,000	3.6
THE SOUTH
Total	11,070,000	100.0	8,003,000	100.0	5,076,000	100.0	2,927,000	100.0	3,067,000	100.0	10,278,000	100.0
White	8,824,000	79.7	6,359,000	79.5	3,958,000	78.0	2,401,000	82.0	2,465,000	80.4	7,870,000	76.6
Nonwhite	2,246,000	20.3	1,644,000	20.5	1,118,000	22.0	526,000	18.0	602,000	19.6	2,408,000	23.4
THE WEST
Total	5,166,000	100.0	4,462,000	100.0	3,195,000	100.0	1,267,000	100.0	704,000	100.0	4,134,000	100.0
White	4,968,000	96.2	4,321,000	96.8	3,087,000	96.6	1,234,000	97.4	647,000	91.9	4,002,000	96.8
Nonwhite	198,000	3.8	141,000	3.2	108,000	3.4	33,000	2.6	57,000	8.1	132,000	3.2

Note.--The regions, and the geographic divisions and States within each region, are shown in the map on page 26.

45031

Table 4.--STATE OF REPAIR AND PLUMBING EQUIPMENT BY TENURE, FOR THE UNITED STATES

AREA AND STATE OF REPAIR AND PLUMBING EQUIPMENT	1947								ALL DWELLING UNITS, APRIL, 1940
	All ordinary dwelling units		All ordinary occupied dwelling units
			Total		Owner-occupied		Tenant-occupied
	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent
UNITED STATES
Total	41,625,000	100.0	39,016,000	100.0	21,347,000	100.0	17,669,000	100.0	37,325,000	100.0
With private bath and private flush toilet	27,329,000	65.7	26,436,000	67.8	15,019,000	70.4	11,417,000	64.6	20,573,000	55.1
With private flush toilet, no private bath	1,633,000	3.9	1,522,000	3.9	627,000	2.9	895,000	5.1	1,611,000	4.3
With running water, no private flush toilet	3,643,000	8.8	3,432,000	8.8	1,560,000	7.3	1,872,000	10.6	3,866,000	10.4
No running water in dwelling unit	9,020,000	21.7	7,626,000	19.5	4,141,000	19.4	3,485,000	19.7	11,275,000	30.2
In good condition or in need of minor repairs	37,505,000	90.1	35,574,000	91.2	20,114,000	94.2	15,460,000	87.5	30,534,000	81.8
With private bath and private flush toilet	26,510,000	63.7	25,667,000	65.8	14,777,000	69.2	10,890,000	61.6	19,093,000	51.2
With private flush toilet, no private bath	1,362,000	3.3	1,262,000	3.2	554,000	2.6	708,000	4.0	1,250,000	3.3
With running water, no private flush toilet	3,037,000	7.3	2,863,000	7.3	1,387,000	6.5	1,476,000	8.4	3,001,000	8.0
No running water in dwelling unit	6,596,000	15.8	5,782,000	14.8	3,396,000	15.9	2,386,000	13.5	7,190,000	19.3
In need of major repairs	4,120,000	9.9	3,442,000	8.8	1,233,000	5.8	2,209,000	12.5	6,791,000	18.2
With private bath and private flush toilet	819,000	2.0	769,000	2.0	242,000	1.1	527,000	3.0	1,480,000	4.0
With private flush toilet, no private bath	271,000	0.7	260,000	0.7	73,000	0.3	187,000	1.1	361,000	1.0
With running water, no private flush toilet	606,000	1.5	569,000	1.5	173,000	0.8	396,000	2.2	865,000	2.3
No running water in dwelling unit	2,424,000	5.8	1,844,000	4.7	745,000	3.5	1,099,000	6.2	4,085,000	10.9
URBAN AND RURAL-NONFARM
Total	34,133,000	100.0	32,354,000	100.0	17,025,000	100.0	15,329,000	100.0	29,683,000	100.0
With private bath and private flush toilet	25,822,000	75.7	24,980,000	77.2	13,782,000	81.0	11,198,000	73.1	19,763,000	66.6
With private flush toilet, no private bath	1,527,000	4.5	1,424,000	4.4	556,000	3.3	868,000	5.7	1,571,000	5.3
With running water, no private flush toilet	2,807,000	8.2	2,627,000	8.1	991,000	5.8	1,636,000	10.7	3,364,000	11.3
No running water in dwelling unit	3,977,000	11.7	3,323,000	10.3	1,696,000	10.0	1,627,000	10.6	4,985,000	16.8
In good condition or in need of minor repairs	31,430,000	92.1	29,944,000	92.6	16,260,000	95.5	13,684,000	89.3	25,485,000	85.9
With private bath and private flush toilet	25,041,000	73.4	24,249,000	74.9	13,564,000	79.7	10,685,000	69.7	18,363,000	61.9
With private flush toilet, no private bath	1,254,000	3.7	1,172,000	3.6	490,000	2.9	682,000	4.4	1,216,000	4.1
With running water, no private flush toilet	2,302,000	6.7	2,151,000	6.6	881,000	5.2	1,270,000	8.3	2,512,000	8.8
No running water in dwelling unit	2,823,000	8.3	2,372,000	7.3	1,325,000	7.8	1,047,000	6.8	3,293,000	11.1
In need of major repairs	2,703,000	7.9	2,410,000	7.4	765,000	4.5	1,645,000	10.7	4,198,000	14.1
With private bath and private flush toilet	781,000	2.3	731,000	2.3	218,000	1.3	513,000	3.3	1,400,000	4.7
With private flush toilet, no private bath	263,000	0.8	252,000	0.8	66,000	0.4	186,000	1.2	355,000	1.2
With running water, no private flush toilet	505,000	1.5	476,000	1.5	110,000	0.6	366,000	2.4	751,000	2.5
No running water in dwelling unit	1,154,000	3.4	951,000	2.9	371,000	2.2	580,000	3.8	1,692,000	5.7
URBAN
Total	24,430,000	100.0	23,835,000	100.0	11,547,000	100.0	12,288,000	100.0	21,616,000	100.0
With private bath and private flush toilet	20,490,000	83.9	20,095,000	84.3	10,368,000	89.8	9,727,000	79.2	16,590,000	76.7
With private flush toilet, no private bath	1,187,000	4.9	1,137,000	4.8	400,000	3.5	737,000	6.0	1,290,000	6.0
With running water, no private flush toilet	1,663,000	6.8	1,589,000	6.7	429,000	3.7	1,160,000	9.4	2,324,000	10.8
No running water in dwelling unit	1,090,000	4.5	1,014,000	4.3	350,000	3.0	664,000	5.4	1,411,000	6.5
In good condition or in need of minor repairs	22,772,000	93.2	22,267,000	93.4	11,169,000	96.7	11,098,000	90.3	19,142,000	88.6
With private bath and private flush toilet	19,869,000	81.3	19,505,000	81.8	10,210,000	88.4	9,295,000	75.6	15,446,000	71.5
With private flush toilet, no private bath	953,000	3.9	912,000	3.8	345,000	3.0	567,000	4.6	964,000	4.6
With running water, no private flush toilet	1,285,000	5.3	1,224,000	5.1	357,000	3.1	867,000	7.1	1,816,000	8.4
No running water in dwelling unit	665,000	2.7	626,000	2.6	257,000	2.2	369,000	3.0	896,000	4.1
In need of major repairs	1,658,000	6.8	1,568,000	6.6	378,000	3.3	1,190,000	9.7	2,474,000	11.4
With private bath and private flush toilet	621,000	2.5	590,000	2.5	158,000	1.4	432,000	3.5	1,144,000	5.3
With private flush toilet, no private bath	234,000	1.0	225,000	0.9	55,000	0.5	170,000	1.4	306,000	1.4
With running water, no private flush toilet	378,000	1.5	365,000	1.5	72,000	0.6	293,000	2.4	509,000	2.4
No running water in dwelling unit	425,000	1.7	388,000	1.6	93,000	0.8	295,000	2.4	515,000	2.4
RURAL-NONFARM
Total	9,703,000	100.0	8,519,000	100.0	5,478,000	100.0	3,041,000	100.0	8,067,000	100.0
With private bath and private flush toilet	5,332,000	55.0	4,885,000	57.3	3,414,000	62.3	1,471,000	48.4	3,173,000	39.3
With private flush toilet, no private bath	340,000	3.5	287,000	3.4	156,000	2.9	131,000	4.3	281,000	3.5
With running water, no private flush toilet	1,144,000	11.8	1,038,000	12.2	562,000	10.3	476,000	15.7	1,032,000	12.9
No running water in dwelling unit	2,887,000	29.8	2,309,000	27.1	1,346,000	24.6	963,000	31.7	3,574,000	44.3
In good condition or in need of minor repairs	8,658,000	89.2	7,677,000	90.1	5,091,000	92.9	2,586,000	85.0	6,348,000	78.6
With private bath and private flush toilet	5,172,000	53.3	4,744,000	55.7	3,394,000	61.2	1,350,000	44.7	2,317,000	28.7
With private flush toilet, no private bath	311,000	3.2	260,000	3.1	145,000	2.6	115,000	3.8	232,000	2.9
With running water, no private flush toilet	1,017,000	10.5	927,000	10.9	524,000	9.6	403,000	13.3	797,000	9.9
No running water in dwelling unit	2,158,000	22.2	1,746,000	20.5	1,062,000	19.5	678,000	22.3	2,397,000	29.7
In need of major repairs	1,045,000	10.8	842,000	9.9	387,000	7.1	455,000	15.0	1,724,000	21.4
With private bath and private flush toilet	160,000	1.6	141,000	1.7	60,000	1.1	81,000	2.7	256,000	3.2
With private flush toilet, no private bath	29,000	0.3	27,000	0.3	11,000	0.2	16,000	0.5	49,000	0.6
With running water, no private flush toilet	127,000	1.3	111,000	1.3	38,000	0.7	73,000	2.4	242,000	3.0
No running water in dwelling unit	729,000	7.5	563,000	6.6	278,000	5.1	285,000	9.4	1,177,000	14.6

45031

Table 4.--STATE OF REPAIR AND PLUMBING EQUIPMENT BY TENURE, FOR THE UNITED STATES--Continued

AREA AND STATE OF REPAIR AND PLUMBING EQUIPMENT	1947								ALL DWELLING UNITS, APRIL, 1940
	All ordinary dwelling units		All ordinary occupied dwelling units
			Total		Owner-occupied		Tenant-occupied
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
RURAL-FARM
Total	7,492,000	100.0	6,662,000	100.0	4,322,000	100.0	2,340,000	100.0	7,642,000	100.0
With private bath and private flush toilet	1,507,000	20.1	1,456,000	21.9	1,237,000	28.6	219,000	9.4	810,000	10.6
With private flush toilet, no private bath	106,000	1.4	98,000	1.5	71,000	1.6	27,000	1.2	40,000	0.5
With running water, no private flush toilet	836,000	11.2	805,000	12.1	569,000	13.2	236,000	10.1	502,000	6.6
No running water in dwelling unit	5,043,000	67.3	4,303,000	64.6	2,445,000	56.6	1,858,000	79.4	6,290,000	82.3
In good condition or in need of minor repairs	6,075,000	81.1	5,630,000	84.5	3,854,000	89.2	1,776,000	75.9	5,049,000	66.1
With private bath and private flush toilet	1,469,000	19.6	1,418,000	21.3	1,213,000	28.1	205,000	8.8	730,000	9.6
With private flush toilet, no private bath	92,000	1.2	90,000	1.4	64,000	1.5	26,000	1.1	34,000	0.4
With running water, no private flush toilet	735,000	9.8	712,000	10.7	506,000	11.7	206,000	8.8	388,000	5.1
No running water in dwelling unit	3,773,000	50.4	3,410,000	51.2	2,071,000	47.9	1,339,000	57.2	3,897,000	51.0
In need of major repairs	1,417,000	18.9	1,032,000	15.5	468,000	10.8	564,000	24.1	2,593,000	33.9
With private bath and private flush toilet	38,000	0.5	38,000	0.6	24,000	0.6	14,000	0.6	80,000	1.0
With private flush toilet, no private bath	8,000	0.1	8,000	0.1	7,000	0.2	1,000	-	6,000	0.1
With running water, no private flush toilet	101,000	1.3	93,000	1.4	63,000	1.5	30,000	1.3	114,000	1.5
No running water in dwelling unit	1,270,000	17.0	893,000	13.4	374,000	8.7	519,000	22.2	2,393,000	31.3
OCCUPIED BY VETERAN HOUSEHOLDS
Total	-	-	10,543,000	100.0	5,195,000	100.0	5,348,000	100.0	-	-
With private bath and private flush toilet	-	-	7,627,000	72.3	3,890,000	74.9	3,737,000	69.9	-	-
With private flush toilet, no private bath	-	-	400,000	3.8	122,000	2.3	278,000	5.2	-	-
With running water, no private flush toilet	-	-	895,000	8.5	348,000	6.7	547,000	10.2	-	-
No running water in dwelling unit	-	-	1,621,000	15.4	835,000	16.1	786,000	14.7	-	-
In good condition or in need of minor repairs	-	-	9,786,000	92.8	4,979,000	95.8	4,807,000	89.9	-	-
With private bath and private flush toilet	-	-	7,406,000	70.2	3,849,000	74.1	3,557,000	66.5	-	-
With private flush toilet, no private bath	-	-	342,000	3.2	117,000	2.3	225,000	4.2	-	-
With running water, no private flush toilet	-	-	769,000	7.3	317,000	6.1	452,000	8.5	-	-
No running water in dwelling unit	-	-	1,269,000	12.0	696,000	13.4	573,000	10.7	-	-
In need of major repairs	-	-	757,000	7.2	216,000	4.2	541,000	10.1	-	-
With private bath and private flush toilet	-	-	221,000	2.1	41,000	0.8	180,000	3.4	-	-
With private flush toilet, no private bath	-	-	58,000	0.6	5,000	0.1	53,000	1.0	-	-
With running water, no private flush toilet	-	-	126,000	1.2	31,000	0.6	95,000	1.8	-	-
No running water in dwelling unit	-	-	352,000	3.3	139,000	2.7	213,000	4.0	-	-
OCCUPIED BY NONVETERAN HOUSEHOLDS
Total	-	-	28,473,000	100.0	16,152,000	100.0	12,321,000	100.0	-	-
With private bath and private flush toilet	-	-	18,809,000	66.1	11,129,000	68.9	7,680,000	62.3	-	-
With private flush toilet, no private bath	-	-	1,122,000	3.9	505,000	3.1	617,000	5.0	-	-
With running water, no private flush toilet	-	-	2,537,000	8.9	1,212,000	7.5	1,325,000	10.8	-	-
No running water in dwelling unit	-	-	6,005,000	21.1	3,306,000	20.5	2,699,000	21.9	-	-
In good condition or in need of minor repairs	-	-	25,788,000	90.6	15,135,000	93.7	10,653,000	86.5	-	-
With private bath and private flush toilet	-	-	18,261,000	64.1	10,928,000	67.7	7,333,000	59.5	-	-
With private flush toilet, no private bath	-	-	920,000	3.2	437,000	2.7	483,000	3.9	-	-
With running water, no private flush toilet	-	-	2,094,000	7.4	1,070,000	6.6	1,024,000	8.3	-	-
No running water in dwelling unit	-	-	4,513,000	15.9	2,700,000	16.7	1,813,000	14.7	-	-
In need of major repairs	-	-	2,685,000	9.4	1,017,000	6.3	1,668,000	13.5	-	-
With private bath and private flush toilet	-	-	548,000	1.9	201,000	1.2	347,000	2.8	-	-
With private flush toilet, no private bath	-	-	202,000	0.7	68,000	0.4	134,000	1.1	-	-
With running water, no private flush toilet	-	-	443,000	1.6	142,000	0.9	301,000	2.4	-	-
No running water in dwelling unit	-	-	1,492,000	5.2	606,000	3.8	886,000	7.2	-	-

45031

Table 5.--STATE OF REPAIR AND PLUMBING EQUIPMENT, FOR THE UNITED STATES, BY REGIONS

REGION AND STATE OF REPAIR AND PLUMBING EQUIPMENT	1947										ALL DWELLING UNITS, APRIL, 1940
	All ordinary dwelling units		Urban and rural-nonfarm						Rural-farm
			Total		Urban		Rural-nonfarm
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
THE NORTHEASTERN STATES
Total	11,370,000	100.0	10,698,000	100.0	8,304,000	100.0	2,394,000	100.0	672,000	100.0	10,313,000	100.0
With private bath and private flush toilet	9,595,000	84.4	9,303,000	87.0	7,576,000	91.2	1,727,000	72.1	292,000	43.5	7,806,000	75.7
With private flush toilet, no private bath	466,000	4.1	440,000	4.1	339,000	4.1	101,000	4.2	26,000	3.9	638,000	6.2
With running water, no private flush toilet	650,000	5.7	532,000	5.0	341,000	4.1	191,000	8.0	118,000	17.6	945,000	9.2
No running water in dwelling unit	659,000	5.8	423,000	4.0	48,000	0.6	375,000	15.7	236,000	35.1	924,000	9.0
In good condition or in need of minor repairs	10,735,000	94.4	10,130,000	94.7	7,942,000	95.6	2,188,000	91.4	605,000	90.0	9,104,000	88.3
With private bath and private flush toilet	9,294,000	81.7	9,014,000	84.3	7,365,000	88.7	1,649,000	68.9	280,000	41.7	7,255,000	70.3
With private flush toilet, no private bath	395,000	3.5	371,000	3.5	276,000	3.3	95,000	4.0	24,000	3.6	496,000	4.8
With running water, no private flush toilet	544,000	4.8	439,000	4.1	271,000	3.3	168,000	7.0	105,000	15.6	728,000	7.1
No running water in dwelling unit	502,000	4.4	306,000	2.9	30,000	0.4	276,000	11.5	196,000	29.2	625,000	6.1
In need of major repairs	635,000	5.6	568,000	5.3	362,000	4.4	206,000	8.6	67,000	10.0	1,209,000	11.7
With private bath and private flush toilet	301,000	2.6	289,000	2.7	211,000	2.5	78,000	3.3	12,000	1.8	551,000	5.3
No private bath or private flush toilet	334,000	2.9	279,000	2.6	151,000	1.8	128,000	5.3	55,000	8.2	658,000	6.4
THE NORTH CENTRAL STATES
Total	12,806,000	100.0	10,256,000	100.0	7,566,000	100.0	2,690,000	100.0	2,550,000	100.0	11,597,000	100.0
With private bath and private flush toilet	8,223,000	64.2	7,659,000	74.7	6,338,000	83.8	1,321,000	49.1	564,000	22.1	6,183,000	53.3
With private flush toilet, no private bath	552,000	4.3	512,000	5.0	410,000	5.4	102,000	3.8	40,000	1.6	566,000	4.9
With running water, no private flush toilet	1,088,000	8.5	837,000	8.2	572,000	7.6	265,000	9.9	251,000	9.8	1,181,000	10.2
No running water in dwelling unit	2,943,000	23.0	1,248,000	12.2	246,000	3.3	1,002,000	37.2	1,695,000	66.5	3,667,000	31.6
In good condition or in need of minor repairs	11,687,000	91.3	9,481,000	92.4	7,075,000	93.5	2,406,000	89.4	2,206,000	86.5	9,576,000	82.6
With private bath and private flush toilet	7,985,000	62.4	7,431,000	72.5	6,139,000	81.1	1,292,000	48.0	554,000	21.7	5,729,000	49.4
With private flush toilet, no private bath	465,000	3.6	431,000	4.2	336,000	4.4	95,000	3.5	34,000	1.3	442,000	3.8
With running water, no private flush toilet	907,000	7.1	675,000	6.6	438,000	5.8	237,000	8.8	232,000	9.1	933,000	8.0
No running water in dwelling unit	2,330,000	18.2	944,000	9.2	162,000	2.1	782,000	29.1	1,386,000	54.4	2,472,000	21.3
In need of major repairs	1,119,000	8.7	775,000	7.6	491,000	6.5	284,000	10.6	344,000	13.5	2,021,000	17.4
With private bath and private flush toilet	238,000	1.9	228,000	2.2	199,000	2.6	29,000	1.1	10,000	0.4	454,000	3.9
No private bath or private flush toilet	881,000	6.9	547,000	5.3	292,000	3.9	255,000	9.5	334,000	13.1	1,567,000	13.5
THE SOUTH
Total	11,905,000	100.0	8,437,000	100.0	5,254,000	100.0	3,183,000	100.0	3,468,000	100.0	10,876,000	100.0
With private bath and private flush toilet	5,371,000	45.1	5,013,000	59.4	3,714,000	70.7	1,299,000	40.8	358,000	10.3	3,482,000	32.0
With private flush toilet, no private bath	497,000	4.2	465,000	5.5	359,000	6.8	106,000	3.3	32,000	0.9	311,000	2.9
With running water, no private flush toilet	1,252,000	10.5	982,000	11.6	518,000	9.9	464,000	14.6	270,000	7.8	1,186,000	10.9
No running water in dwelling unit	4,785,000	40.2	1,977,000	23.4	664,000	12.6	1,314,000	41.3	2,808,000	81.0	5,897,000	54.2
In good condition or in need of minor repairs	9,906,000	83.2	7,304,000	86.6	4,592,000	87.4	2,712,000	85.2	2,602,000	75.0	7,937,000	73.0
With private bath and private flush toilet	5,148,000	43.2	4,801,000	56.9	3,537,000	67.3	1,264,000	39.7	347,000	10.0	3,221,000	29.6
With private flush toilet, no private bath	404,000	3.4	372,000	4.4	277,000	5.3	95,000	3.0	32,000	0.9	239,000	2.2
With running water, no private flush toilet	1,037,000	8.7	799,000	9.5	392,000	7.5	407,000	12.8	238,000	6.9	913,000	8.4
No running water in dwelling unit	3,317,000	27.9	1,332,000	15.8	386,000	7.3	946,000	29.7	1,985,000	57.2	3,564,000	32.8
In need of major repairs	1,999,000	16.8	1,133,000	13.4	662,000	12.6	471,000	14.8	866,000	25.0	2,939,000	27.0
With private bath and private flush toilet	223,000	1.9	212,000	2.5	177,000	3.4	35,000	1.1	11,000	0.3	261,000	2.4
No private bath or private flush toilet	1,776,000	14.9	921,000	10.9	485,000	9.2	436,000	13.7	855,000	24.7	2,678,000	24.6
THE WEST
Total	5,544,000	100.0	4,742,000	100.0	3,306,000	100.0	1,436,000	100.0	802,000	100.0	4,539,000	100.0
With private bath and private flush toilet	4,140,000	74.7	3,847,000	81.1	2,862,000	86.6	985,000	68.6	293,000	36.5	3,102,000	68.3
With private flush toilet, no private bath	118,000	2.1	110,000	2.3	79,000	2.4	31,000	2.2	8,000	1.0	96,000	2.1
With running water, no private flush toilet	653,000	11.8	456,000	9.6	232,000	7.0	224,000	15.6	197,000	24.6	554,000	12.2
No running water in dwelling unit	633,000	11.4	329,000	6.9	133,000	4.0	196,000	13.6	304,000	37.9	787,000	17.3
In good condition or in need of minor repairs	5,177,000	93.4	4,515,000	95.2	3,163,000	95.7	1,352,000	94.2	662,000	82.5	3,917,000	86.3
With private bath and private flush toilet	4,083,000	73.6	3,795,000	80.0	2,828,000	85.5	967,000	67.3	288,000	35.9	2,888,000	63.6
With private flush toilet, no private bath	98,000	1.8	90,000	1.9	64,000	1.9	26,000	1.8	8,000	1.0	73,000	1.6
With running water, no private flush toilet	549,000	9.9	389,000	8.2	184,000	5.6	205,000	14.3	160,000	20.0	427,000	9.4
No running water in dwelling unit	447,000	8.1	241,000	5.1	87,000	2.6	154,000	10.7	206,000	25.7	529,000	11.7
In need of major repairs	367,000	6.6	227,000	4.8	143,000	4.3	84,000	5.8	140,000	17.5	622,000	13.7
With private bath and private flush toilet	57,000	1.0	52,000	1.1	34,000	1.0	18,000	1.3	5,000	0.6	214,000	4.7
No private bath or private flush toilet	310,000	5.6	175,000	3.7	109,000	3.3	66,000	4.6	135,000	16.8	408,000	9.0

45031

Table 6.--CENTRAL HEATING BY TENURE, FOR THE UNITED STATES: APRIL, 1947

AREA AND CENTRAL HEATING	ALL ORDINARY DWELLING UNITS		ALL ORDINARY OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS
			Total		Owner-occupied		Tenant-occupied
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
UNITED STATES
Total	41,625,000	100.0	39,016,000	100.0	21,347,000	100.0	17,669,000	100.0
With central heating	20,016,000	48.1	19,565,000	50.1	11,303,000	52.9	8,262,000	46.8
Without central heating	21,609,000	51.9	19,451,000	49.9	10,044,000	47.1	9,407,000	53.2
URBAN AND RURAL-NONFARM
Total	34,133,000	100.0	32,354,000	100.0	17,025,000	100.0	15,329,000	100.0
With central heating	18,839,000	55.2	18,419,000	56.9	10,361,000	60.9	8,058,000	52.6
Without central heating	15,294,000	44.8	13,935,000	43.1	6,664,000	39.1	7,271,000	47.4
URBAN
Total	24,430,000	100.0	23,835,000	100.0	11,547,000	100.0	12,288,000	100.0
With central heating	15,550,000	63.7	15,296,000	64.2	8,003,000	69.3	7,293,000	59.4
Without central heating	8,880,000	36.3	8,539,000	35.8	3,544,000	30.7	4,995,000	40.6
RURAL-NONFARM
Total	9,703,000	100.0	8,519,000	100.0	5,478,000	100.0	3,041,000	100.0
With central heating	3,289,000	33.9	3,123,000	36.7	2,358,000	43.0	765,000	25.2
Without central heating	6,414,000	66.1	5,396,000	63.3	3,120,000	57.0	2,276,000	74.8
RURAL-FARM
Total	7,492,000	100.0	6,662,000	100.0	4,322,000	100.0	2,340,000	100.0
With central heating	1,177,000	15.7	1,146,000	17.2	942,000	21.8	204,000	8.7
Without central heating	6,315,000	84.3	5,516,000	82.8	3,380,000	78.2	2,136,000	91.3
OCCUPIED BY VETERAN HOUSEHOLDS
Total	-	-	10,543,000	100.0	5,195,000	100.0	5,348,000	100.0
With central heating	-	-	5,520,000	52.4	2,924,000	56.3	2,596,000	48.5
Without central heating	-	-	5,023,000	47.6	2,271,000	43.7	2,752,000	51.5
OCCUPIED BY NONVETERAN HOUSEHOLDS
Total	-	-	28,473,000	100.0	16,152,000	100.0	12,321,000	100.0
With central heating	-	-	14,045,000	49.3	8,379,000	51.9	5,666,000	46.0
Without central heating	-	-	14,428,000	50.7	7,773,000	48.1	6,655,000	54.0

Table 7.--CENTRAL HEATING, FOR THE UNITED STATES, BY REGIONS: APRIL, 1947

REGION AND CENTRAL HEATING	ALL ORDINARY DWELLING UNITS		URBAN AND RURAL-NONFARM						RURAL-FARM
			Total		Urban		Rural-nonfarm
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
THE NORTHEASTERN STATES
Total	11,370,000	100.0	10,698,000	100.0	8,304,000	100.0	2,394,000	100.0	672,000	100.0
With central heating	8,738,000	76.9	8,438,000	78.9	6,928,000	83.4	1,510,000	63.1	300,000	44.6
Without central heating	2,632,000	23.1	2,260,000	21.1	1,376,000	16.6	884,000	36.9	372,000	55.4
THE NORTH CENTRAL STATES
Total	12,806,000	100.0	10,256,000	100.0	7,566,000	100.0	2,690,000	100.0	2,550,000	100.0
With central heating	7,452,000	58.2	6,767,000	66.0	5,682,000	75.1	1,085,000	40.3	685,000	26.9
Without central heating	5,354,000	41.8	3,489,000	34.0	1,884,000	24.9	1,605,000	59.7	1,865,000	73.1
THE SOUTH
Total	11,905,000	100.0	8,437,000	100.0	5,254,000	100.0	3,183,000	100.0	3,468,000	100.0
With central heating	1,973,000	16.6	1,854,000	22.0	1,465,000	27.9	389,000	12.2	119,000	3.4
Without central heating	9,932,000	83.4	6,583,000	78.0	3,789,000	72.1	2,794,000	87.8	3,349,000	96.6
THE WEST
Total	5,544,000	100.0	4,742,000	100.0	3,306,000	100.0	1,436,000	100.0	802,000	100.0
With central heating	1,853,000	33.4	1,780,000	37.5	1,475,000	44.6	305,000	21.2	73,000	9.1
Without central heating	3,691,000	66.6	2,962,000	62.5	1,831,000	55.4	1,131,000	78.8	729,000	90.9

45031

Table 8.--ELECTRIC LIGHTING BY TENURE, FOR THE UNITED STATES

AREA AND ELECTRIC LIGHTING	1947								ALL DWELLING UNITS, APRIL, 1940
	All ordinary dwelling units		All ordinary occupied dwelling units
			Total		Owner-occupied		Tenant-occupied
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
UNITED STATES
Total.....	41,625,000	100.0	39,016,000	100.0	21,347,000	100.0	17,669,000	100.0	37,325,000	100.0
With electric lighting.....	37,117,000	89.2	35,414,000	90.8	19,576,000	91.7	15,838,000	89.6	29,363,000	78.7
Without electric lighting..	4,508,000	10.8	3,602,000	9.2	1,771,000	8.3	1,831,000	10.4	7,962,000	21.3
URBAN AND RURAL-NONFARM
Total.....	34,133,000	100.0	32,354,000	100.0	17,025,000	100.0	15,329,000	100.0	29,683,000	100.0
With electric lighting.....	32,667,000	95.7	31,199,000	96.4	16,526,000	97.1	14,673,000	95.7	26,973,000	90.9
Without electric lighting..	1,466,000	4.3	1,155,000	3.6	499,000	2.9	656,000	4.3	2,710,000	9.1
URBAN
Total.....	24,430,000	100.0	23,835,000	100.0	11,547,000	100.0	12,288,000	100.0	21,616,000	100.0
With electric lighting.....	23,987,000	98.2	23,414,000	98.2	11,428,000	99.0	11,986,000	97.5	20,698,000	95.8
Without electric lighting..	443,000	1.8	421,000	1.8	119,000	1.0	302,000	2.5	918,000	4.2
RURAL-NONFARM
Total.....	9,703,000	100.0	8,519,000	100.0	5,478,000	100.0	3,041,000	100.0	8,067,000	100.0
With electric lighting.....	8,680,000	89.5	7,785,000	91.4	5,098,000	93.1	2,687,000	88.4	6,275,000	77.8
Without electric lighting..	1,023,000	10.5	734,000	8.6	380,000	6.9	354,000	11.6	1,792,000	22.2
RURAL-FARM
Total.....	7,492,000	100.0	6,662,000	100.0	4,322,000	100.0	2,340,000	100.0	7,642,000	100.0
With electric lighting.....	4,450,000	59.4	4,215,000	63.3	3,050,000	70.6	1,165,000	49.8	2,390,000	31.3
Without electric lighting..	3,042,000	40.6	2,447,000	36.7	1,272,000	29.4	1,175,000	50.2	5,252,000	68.7
OCCUPIED BY VETERAN HOUSEHOLDS
Total.....	-	-	10,543,000	100.0	5,195,000	100.0	5,348,000	100.0	-	-
With electric lighting.....	-	-	9,898,000	93.9	4,883,000	94.0	5,015,000	93.8	-	-
Without electric lighting..	-	-	645,000	6.1	312,000	6.0	333,000	6.2	-	-
OCCUPIED BY NONVETERAN HOUSEHOLDS
Total.....	-	-	28,473,000	100.0	16,152,000	100.0	12,321,000	100.0	-	-
With electric lighting.....	-	-	25,516,000	89.6	14,693,000	91.0	10,823,000	87.8	-	-
Without electric lighting..	-	-	2,957,000	10.4	1,459,000	9.0	1,498,000	12.2	-	-

Table 9.--ELECTRIC LIGHTING, FOR THE UNITED STATES, BY REGIONS

REGION AND ELECTRIC LIGHTING	1947										ALL DWELLING UNITS, APRIL, 1940
	All ordinary dwelling units		Urban and rural-nonfarm						Rural-farm
			Total		Urban		Rural-nonfarm
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
THE NORTHEASTERN STATES
Total.....	11,370,000	100.0	10,698,000	100.0	8,304,000	100.0	2,394,000	100.0	672,000	100.0	10,313,000	100.0
With electric lighting.....	11,151,000	98.1	10,576,000	98.9	8,275,000	99.7	2,301,000	96.1	575,000	85.6	9,781,000	94.8
Without electric lighting..	219,000	1.9	122,000	1.1	29,000	0.3	93,000	3.9	97,000	14.4	532,000	5.2
THE NORTH CENTRAL STATES
Total.....	12,806,000	100.0	10,256,000	100.0	7,566,000	100.0	2,690,000	100.0	2,550,000	100.0	11,597,000	100.0
With electric lighting.....	11,676,000	91.2	10,003,000	97.5	7,543,000	99.7	2,460,000	91.4	1,673,000	65.6	9,637,000	83.1
Without electric lighting..	1,130,000	8.8	253,000	2.5	23,000	0.3	230,000	8.6	877,000	34.4	1,960,000	16.9
THE SOUTH
Total.....	11,905,000	100.0	8,437,000	100.0	5,254,000	100.0	3,183,000	100.0	3,468,000	100.0	10,876,000	100.0
With electric lighting.....	8,991,000	75.5	7,448,000	88.3	4,890,000	93.1	2,558,000	80.4	1,543,000	44.5	5,926,000	54.5
Without electric lighting..	2,914,000	24.5	989,000	11.7	364,000	6.9	625,000	19.6	1,925,000	55.5	4,950,000	45.5
THE WEST
Total.....	5,544,000	100.0	4,742,000	100.0	3,306,000	100.0	1,436,000	100.0	802,000	100.0	4,539,000	100.0
With electric lighting.....	5,299,000	95.6	4,640,000	97.8	3,279,000	99.2	1,361,000	94.8	659,000	82.2	4,019,000	88.5
Without electric lighting..	245,000	4.4	102,000	2.2	27,000	0.8	75,000	5.2	143,000	17.8	520,000	11.5

45031

Table 10.--INSTALLED COOKING FACILITIES BY TENURE, FOR THE UNITED STATES: APRIL, 1947

AREA AND INSTALLED COOKING FACILITIES	ALL ORDINARY DWELLING UNITS		ALL ORDINARY OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS
			Total		Owner-occupied		Tenant-occupied
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
UNITED STATES
Total	41,625,000	100.0	39,016,000	100.0	21,347,000	100.0	17,669,000	100.0
With installed cooking facilities	39,913,000	95.9	37,860,000	97.0	20,887,000	97.8	16,973,000	96.1
Without installed cooking facilities	1,712,000	4.1	1,156,000	3.0	460,000	2.2	696,000	3.9
URBAN AND RURAL-NONFARM
Total	34,133,000	100.0	32,354,000	100.0	17,025,000	100.0	15,329,000	100.0
With installed cooking facilities	33,034,000	96.8	31,551,000	97.5	16,753,000	98.4	14,798,000	96.5
Without installed cooking facilities	1,099,000	3.2	803,000	2.5	272,000	1.6	531,000	3.5
URBAN
Total	24,430,000	100.0	23,835,000	100.0	11,547,000	100.0	12,288,000	100.0
With installed cooking facilities	23,871,000	97.7	23,367,000	98.0	11,453,000	99.2	11,914,000	97.0
Without installed cooking facilities	559,000	2.3	468,000	2.0	94,000	0.8	374,000	3.0
RURAL-NONFARM
Total	9,703,000	100.0	8,519,000	100.0	5,478,000	100.0	3,041,000	100.0
With installed cooking facilities	9,163,000	94.4	8,184,000	96.1	5,300,000	96.8	2,884,000	94.8
Without installed cooking facilities	540,000	5.6	335,000	3.9	178,000	3.2	157,000	5.2
RURAL-FARM
Total	7,492,000	100.0	6,662,000	100.0	4,322,000	100.0	2,340,000	100.0
With installed cooking facilities	6,879,000	91.8	6,309,000	94.7	4,134,000	95.7	2,175,000	92.9
Without installed cooking facilities	613,000	8.2	353,000	5.3	188,000	4.3	165,000	7.1
OCCUPIED BY VETERAN HOUSEHOLDS
Total	-	-	10,543,000	100.0	5,195,000	100.0	5,348,000	100.0
With installed cooking facilities	-	-	10,274,000	97.4	5,101,000	98.2	5,173,000	96.7
Without installed cooking facilities	-	-	269,000	2.6	94,000	1.8	175,000	3.3
OCCUPIED BY NONVETERAN HOUSEHOLDS
Total	-	-	28,473,000	100.0	16,152,000	100.0	12,321,000	100.0
With installed cooking facilities	-	-	27,586,000	96.9	15,786,000	97.7	11,800,000	95.8
Without installed cooking facilities	-	-	887,000	3.1	366,000	2.3	521,000	4.2

Table 11.--INSTALLED COOKING FACILITIES, FOR THE UNITED STATES, BY REGIONS: APRIL, 1947

REGION AND INSTALLED COOKING FACILITIES	ALL ORDINARY DWELLING UNITS		URBAN AND RURAL-NONFARM						RURAL-FARM
			Total		Urban		Rural-nonfarm
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
THE NORTHEASTERN STATES
Total	11,370,000	100.0	10,698,000	100.0	8,304,000	100.0	2,394,000	100.0	672,000	100.0
With installed cooking facilities	11,140,000	98.0	10,513,000	98.3	8,222,000	99.0	2,291,000	95.7	627,000	93.3
Without installed cooking facilities	230,000	2.0	185,000	1.7	82,000	1.0	103,000	4.3	45,000	6.7
THE NORTH CENTRAL STATES
Total	12,806,000	100.0	10,256,000	100.0	7,566,000	100.0	2,690,000	100.0	2,550,000	100.0
With installed cooking facilities	12,417,000	97.0	10,023,000	97.7	7,479,000	98.9	2,544,000	94.6	2,394,000	93.9
Without installed cooking facilities	389,000	3.0	233,000	2.3	87,000	1.1	146,000	5.4	156,000	6.1
THE SOUTH
Total	11,905,000	100.0	8,437,000	100.0	5,254,000	100.0	3,183,000	100.0	3,468,000	100.0
With installed cooking facilities	11,130,000	93.5	7,984,000	94.6	5,010,000	95.4	2,974,000	93.4	3,146,000	90.7
Without installed cooking facilities	775,000	6.5	453,000	5.4	244,000	4.6	209,000	6.6	322,000	9.3
THE WEST
Total	5,544,000	100.0	4,742,000	100.0	3,306,000	100.0	1,436,000	100.0	802,000	100.0
With installed cooking facilities	5,226,000	94.3	4,514,000	95.2	3,160,000	95.6	1,354,000	94.3	712,000	88.8
Without installed cooking facilities	318,000	5.7	228,000	4.8	146,000	4.4	82,000	5.7	90,000	11.2

45031

Table 12.--DESIGNATED FACILITIES BY TENURE, FOR THE UNITED STATES: APRIL, 1947

AREA AND DESIGNATED FACILITIES	ALL ORDINARY DWELLING UNITS		ALL ORDINARY OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS
			Total		Owner-occupied		Tenant-occupied
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
UNITED STATES
Total	41,625,000	100.0	39,016,000	100.0	21,347,000	100.0	17,669,000	100.0
Having all designated facilities	26,873,000	64.6	26,102,000	66.9	14,860,000	69.6	11,242,000	63.6
Lacking one or more designated facilities	14,752,000	35.4	12,914,000	33.1	6,487,000	30.4	6,427,000	36.4
URBAN AND RURAL-NONFARM
Total	34,133,000	100.0	32,354,000	100.0	17,025,000	100.0	15,329,000	100.0
Having all designated facilities	25,429,000	74.5	24,700,000	76.3	13,665,000	80.3	11,035,000	72.0
Lacking one or more designated facilities	8,704,000	25.5	7,654,000	23.7	3,360,000	19.7	4,294,000	28.0
URBAN
Total	24,430,000	100.0	23,835,000	100.0	11,547,000	100.0	12,288,000	100.0
Having all designated facilities	20,238,000	82.8	19,893,000	83.5	10,295,000	89.2	9,598,000	78.1
Lacking one or more designated facilities	4,192,000	17.2	3,942,000	16.5	1,252,000	10.8	2,690,000	21.9
RURAL-NONFARM
Total	9,703,000	100.0	8,519,000	100.0	5,478,000	100.0	3,041,000	100.0
Having all designated facilities	5,191,000	53.5	4,807,000	56.4	3,370,000	61.5	1,437,000	47.3
Lacking one or more designated facilities	4,512,000	46.5	3,712,000	43.6	2,108,000	38.5	1,604,000	52.7
RURAL-FARM
Total	7,492,000	100.0	6,662,000	100.0	4,322,000	100.0	2,340,000	100.0
Having all designated facilities	1,444,000	19.3	1,402,000	21.0	1,195,000	27.6	207,000	8.8
Lacking one or more designated facilities	6,048,000	80.7	5,260,000	79.0	3,127,000	72.4	2,133,000	91.2
OCCUPIED BY VETERAN HOUSEHOLDS
Total	-	-	10,548,000	100.0	5,195,000	100.0	5,348,000	100.0
Having all designated facilities	-	-	7,536,000	71.5	3,855,000	74.2	3,681,000	68.8
Lacking one or more designated facilities	-	-	3,007,000	28.5	1,340,000	25.8	1,667,000	31.2
OCCUPIED BY NONVETERAN HOUSEHOLDS
Total	-	-	28,473,000	100.0	16,152,000	100.0	12,321,000	100.0
Having all designated facilities	-	-	18,566,000	65.2	11,005,000	68.1	7,561,000	61.4
Lacking one or more designated facilities	-	-	9,907,000	34.8	5,147,000	31.9	4,760,000	38.6

Table 13.--DESIGNATED FACILITIES, FOR THE UNITED STATES, BY REGIONS: APRIL, 1947

REGION AND DESIGNATED FACILITIES	ALL ORDINARY DWELLING UNITS		URBAN AND RURAL-NONFARM						RURAL-FARM
			Total		Urban		Rural-nonfarm
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
THE NORTHEASTERN STATES
Total	11,370,000	100.0	10,698,000	100.0	8,304,000	100.0	2,394,000	100.0	672,000	100.0
Having all designated facilities	9,488,000	83.4	9,203,000	86.0	7,516,000	90.5	1,687,000	70.5	285,000	42.4
Lacking one or more designated facilities	1,882,000	16.6	1,495,000	14.0	788,000	9.5	707,000	29.5	387,000	57.6
THE NORTH CENTRAL STATES
Total	12,806,000	100.0	10,256,000	100.0	7,566,000	100.0	2,690,000	100.0	2,550,000	100.0
Having all designated facilities	8,140,000	63.6	7,602,000	74.1	6,310,000	83.4	1,292,000	48.0	538,000	21.1
Lacking one or more designated facilities	4,666,000	36.4	2,654,000	25.9	1,256,000	16.6	1,398,000	52.0	2,012,000	78.9
THE SOUTH
Total	11,905,000	100.0	8,437,000	100.0	5,254,000	100.0	3,183,000	100.0	3,468,000	100.0
Having all designated facilities	5,218,000	43.8	4,878,000	57.8	3,628,000	69.1	1,250,000	39.3	340,000	9.8
Lacking one or more designated facilities	6,687,000	56.2	3,559,000	42.2	1,626,000	30.9	1,933,000	60.7	3,128,000	90.2
THE WEST
Total	5,544,000	100.0	4,742,000	100.0	3,306,000	100.0	1,436,000	100.0	802,000	100.0
Having all designated facilities	4,027,000	72.6	3,746,000	79.0	2,784,000	84.2	962,000	67.0	281,000	35.0
Lacking one or more designated facilities	1,517,000	27.4	996,000	21.0	522,000	15.8	474,000	33.0	521,000	65.0

45031

Table 14.--NUMBER OF ROOMS BY TENURE, FOR THE UNITED STATES

AREA AND NUMBER OF ROOMS	1947								ALL DWELLING UNITS, APRIL, 1940
	All ordinary dwelling units		All ordinary occupied dwelling units
			Total		Owner-occupied		Tenant-occupied
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
UNITED STATES
Total	41,625,000	100.0	39,016,000	100.0	21,347,000	100.0	17,669,000	100.0	37,325,000	100.0
1 room	973,000	2.3	707,000	1.8	138,000	0.6	569,000	3.2	1,325,000	3.5
2 rooms	3,063,000	7.4	2,598,000	6.7	509,000	2.4	2,089,000	11.8	3,258,000	8.7
3 rooms	5,786,000	13.9	5,265,000	13.5	1,366,000	6.4	3,899,000	22.1	5,403,000	14.5
4 rooms	8,408,000	20.2	7,887,000	20.2	3,289,000	15.4	4,598,000	26.0	6,984,000	18.7
5 rooms	8,971,000	21.6	8,601,000	22.0	5,414,000	25.4	3,187,000	18.0	7,400,000	19.8
6 rooms	7,458,000	17.9	7,230,000	18.5	5,205,000	24.4	2,025,000	11.5	6,406,000	17.2
7 rooms	3,469,000	8.3	3,349,000	8.6	2,662,000	12.5	687,000	3.9	2,907,000	7.8
8 or more rooms	3,497,000	8.4	3,379,000	8.7	2,764,000	12.9	615,000	3.5	3,642,000	9.8
Median number of rooms	4.79	-	4.85	-	5.49	-	4.00	-	4.73	-
URBAN AND RURAL-NONFARM
Total	34,133,000	100.0	32,354,000	100.0	17,025,000	100.0	15,329,000	100.0	29,683,000	100.0
1 room	826,000	2.4	632,000	2.0	101,000	0.6	531,000	3.5	1,118,000	3.8
2 rooms	2,537,000	7.4	2,265,000	7.0	365,000	2.1	1,900,000	12.4	2,537,000	8.5
3 rooms	4,840,000	14.2	4,486,000	13.9	1,044,000	6.1	3,442,000	22.5	4,268,000	14.4
4 rooms	6,925,000	20.3	6,569,000	20.3	2,574,000	15.1	3,995,000	26.1	5,455,000	18.4
5 rooms	7,668,000	22.5	7,404,000	22.9	4,570,000	26.8	2,834,000	18.5	6,235,000	21.0
6 rooms	6,250,000	18.3	6,086,000	18.8	4,346,000	25.5	1,740,000	11.4	5,324,000	17.9
7 rooms	2,669,000	7.8	2,574,000	8.0	2,077,000	12.2	497,000	3.2	2,221,000	7.5
8 or more rooms	2,418,000	7.1	2,338,000	7.2	1,948,000	11.4	390,000	2.5	2,525,000	8.5
Median number of rooms	4.75	-	4.80	-	5.47	-	3.95	-	4.73	-
URBAN
Total	24,430,000	100.0	23,835,000	100.0	11,547,000	100.0	12,288,000	100.0	21,616,000	100.0
1 room	559,000	2.3	470,000	2.0	36,000	0.3	434,000	3.5	771,000	3.6
2 rooms	1,840,000	7.5	1,753,000	7.4	174,000	1.5	1,579,000	12.8	1,732,000	8.0
3 rooms	3,481,000	14.2	3,370,000	14.1	562,000	4.9	2,808,000	22.9	3,145,000	14.5
4 rooms	4,730,000	19.4	4,613,000	19.4	1,492,000	12.9	3,121,000	25.4	3,864,000	17.9
5 rooms	5,563,000	22.8	5,470,000	22.9	3,164,000	27.4	2,306,000	18.8	4,710,000	21.8
6 rooms	4,676,000	19.1	4,634,000	19.4	3,238,000	28.0	1,396,000	11.4	4,054,000	18.8
7 rooms	1,904,000	7.8	1,862,000	7.8	1,485,000	12.9	377,000	3.1	1,579,000	7.3
8 or more rooms	1,677,000	6.9	1,663,000	7.0	1,396,000	12.1	267,000	2.2	1,761,000	8.1
Median number of rooms	4.79	-	4.81	-	5.61	-	3.92	-	4.78	-
RURAL-NONFARM
Total	9,703,000	100.0	8,519,000	100.0	5,478,000	100.0	3,041,000	100.0	8,067,000	100.0
1 room	267,000	2.8	162,000	1.9	65,000	1.2	97,000	3.2	347,000	4.3
2 rooms	697,000	7.2	512,000	6.0	191,000	3.5	321,000	10.6	805,000	10.0
3 rooms	1,359,000	14.0	1,116,000	13.1	482,000	8.8	634,000	20.8	1,123,000	13.9
4 rooms	2,195,000	22.6	1,956,000	23.0	1,082,000	19.8	874,000	28.7	1,591,000	19.7
5 rooms	2,105,000	21.7	1,934,000	22.7	1,406,000	25.7	528,000	17.4	1,525,000	18.9
6 rooms	1,574,000	16.2	1,452,000	17.0	1,108,000	20.2	344,000	11.3	1,270,000	15.7
7 rooms	765,000	7.9	712,000	8.4	592,000	10.8	120,000	3.9	642,000	8.0
8 or more rooms	741,000	7.6	675,000	7.9	552,000	10.1	123,000	4.0	764,000	9.5
Median number of rooms	4.66	-	4.77	-	5.15	-	4.04	-	4.61	-
RURAL-FARM
Total	7,492,000	100.0	6,662,000	100.0	4,322,000	100.0	2,340,000	100.0	7,642,000	100.0
1 room	147,000	2.0	75,000	1.1	37,000	0.9	38,000	1.6	207,000	2.7
2 rooms	526,000	7.0	333,000	5.0	144,000	3.3	189,000	8.1	721,000	9.4
3 rooms	946,000	12.6	779,000	11.7	322,000	7.5	457,000	19.5	1,135,000	14.9
4 rooms	1,483,000	19.8	1,318,000	19.8	715,000	16.5	603,000	25.8	1,529,000	20.0
5 rooms	1,303,000	17.4	1,197,000	18.0	844,000	19.5	353,000	15.1	1,165,000	15.2
6 rooms	1,208,000	16.1	1,144,000	17.2	859,000	19.9	285,000	12.2	1,082,000	14.2
7 rooms	800,000	10.7	775,000	11.6	585,000	13.5	190,000	8.1	686,000	9.0
8 or more rooms	1,079,000	14.4	1,041,000	15.6	816,000	18.9	225,000	9.6	1,117,000	14.6
Median number of rooms	4.99	-	5.19	-	5.62	-	4.31	-	4.70	-
OCCUPIED BY VETERAN HOUSEHOLDS
Total	-	-	10,543,000	100.0	5,195,000	100.0	5,348,000	100.0	-	-
1 room	-	-	149,000	1.4	24,000	0.5	125,000	2.3	-	-
2 rooms	-	-	724,000	6.9	84,000	1.6	640,000	12.0	-	-
3 rooms	-	-	1,649,000	15.6	318,000	6.1	1,331,000	24.9	-	-
4 rooms	-	-	2,227,000	21.1	812,000	15.6	1,415,000	26.5	-	-
5 rooms	-	-	2,223,000	21.1	1,302,000	25.1	921,000	17.2	-	-
6 rooms	-	-	1,838,000	17.4	1,249,000	24.0	589,000	11.0	-	-
7 rooms	-	-	832,000	7.9	668,000	12.9	164,000	3.1	-	-
8 or more rooms	-	-	901,000	8.5	738,000	14.2	163,000	3.0	-	-
Median number of rooms	-	-	4.74	-	5.55	-	3.91	-	-	-
OCCUPIED BY NONVETERAN HOUSEHOLDS
Total	-	-	28,473,000	100.0	16,152,000	100.0	12,321,000	100.0	-	-
1 room	-	-	558,000	2.0	114,000	0.7	444,000	3.6	-	-
2 rooms	-	-	1,874,000	6.6	425,000	2.6	1,449,000	11.8	-	-
3 rooms	-	-	3,616,000	12.7	1,048,000	6.5	2,568,000	20.8	-	-
4 rooms	-	-	5,660,000	19.9	2,477,000	15.3	3,183,000	25.8	-	-
5 rooms	-	-	6,378,000	22.4	4,112,000	25.5	2,266,000	18.4	-	-
6 rooms	-	-	5,392,000	18.9	3,956,000	24.5	1,436,000	11.7	-	-
7 rooms	-	-	2,517,000	8.8	1,994,000	12.3	523,000	4.2	-	-
8 or more rooms	-	-	2,478,000	8.7	2,026,000	12.5	452,000	3.7	-	-
Median number of rooms	-	-	4.90	-	5.48	-	4.03	-	-	-

45031

Table 15.--NUMBER OF ROOMS, FOR THE UNITED STATES, BY REGIONS

REGION AND NUMBER OF ROOMS	1947										ALL DWELLING UNITS, APRIL, 1940
	All ordinary dwelling units		Urban and rural-nonfarm						Rural-farm
			Total		Urban		Rural-nonfarm
	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent
THE NORTHEASTERN STATES
Total	11,370,000	100.0	10,698,000	100.0	8,304,000	100.0	2,394,000	100.0	672,000	100.0	10,313,000	100.0
1 room	84,000	0.7	83,000	0.8	55,000	0.7	28,000	1.2	1,000	0.1	190,000	1.8
2 rooms	355,000	3.1	342,000	3.2	276,000	3.3	66,000	2.8	13,000	1.9	458,000	4.4
3 rooms	1,331,000	11.7	1,310,000	12.2	1,138,000	13.7	172,000	7.2	21,000	3.1	1,243,000	12.1
4 rooms	2,139,000	18.8	2,084,000	19.5	1,684,000	20.3	400,000	16.7	55,000	8.2	1,797,000	17.4
5 rooms	2,247,000	19.8	2,179,000	20.4	1,661,000	20.0	518,000	21.6	68,000	10.1	1,922,000	18.6
6 rooms	2,549,000	22.4	2,417,000	22.6	1,858,000	22.4	559,000	23.4	132,000	19.6	2,282,000	22.1
7 rooms	1,270,000	11.2	1,153,000	10.8	862,000	10.4	291,000	12.2	117,000	17.4	995,000	9.6
8 or more rooms	1,395,000	12.3	1,130,000	10.6	770,000	9.3	360,000	15.0	265,000	39.4	1,426,000	13.8
Median number of rooms	5.29	-	5.20	-	5.10	-	5.52	-	6.89	-	5.26	-
THE NORTH CENTRAL STATES
Total	12,806,000	100.0	10,256,000	100.0	7,566,000	100.0	2,690,000	100.0	2,550,000	100.0	11,597,000	100.0
1 room	300,000	2.3	264,000	2.6	189,000	2.5	75,000	2.8	36,000	1.4	377,000	3.3
2 rooms	880,000	6.9	760,000	7.4	581,000	7.7	179,000	6.7	120,000	4.7	742,000	6.4
3 rooms	1,279,000	10.0	1,113,000	10.9	806,000	10.7	307,000	11.4	166,000	6.5	1,210,000	10.4
4 rooms	2,180,000	17.0	1,870,000	18.2	1,341,000	17.7	529,000	19.7	310,000	12.2	1,897,000	16.4
5 rooms	3,010,000	23.5	2,601,000	25.4	1,972,000	26.1	629,000	23.4	409,000	16.0	2,621,000	22.6
6 rooms	2,509,000	19.6	2,013,000	19.6	1,551,000	20.5	462,000	17.2	496,000	19.5	2,210,000	19.1
7 rooms	1,354,000	10.6	918,000	9.0	629,000	8.3	289,000	10.7	436,000	17.1	1,157,000	10.0
8 or more rooms	1,294,000	10.1	717,000	7.0	497,000	6.6	220,000	8.2	577,000	22.6	1,383,000	11.9
Median number of rooms	5.09	-	4.93	-	4.94	-	4.91	-	5.97	-	5.10	-
THE SOUTH
Total	11,905,000	100.0	8,437,000	100.0	5,254,000	100.0	3,183,000	100.0	3,468,000	100.0	10,876,000	100.0
1 room	281,000	2.4	245,000	2.9	160,000	3.0	85,000	2.7	36,000	1.0	425,000	3.9
2 rooms	1,121,000	9.4	815,000	9.7	526,000	10.0	289,000	9.1	306,000	8.8	1,481,000	13.6
3 rooms	2,328,000	19.6	1,669,000	19.8	1,037,000	19.7	632,000	19.9	659,000	19.0	2,217,000	20.4
4 rooms	2,903,000	24.4	1,932,000	22.9	1,030,000	19.6	902,000	28.3	971,000	28.0	2,396,000	22.0
5 rooms	2,443,000	20.5	1,770,000	21.0	1,134,000	21.6	636,000	20.0	673,000	19.4	1,852,000	17.0
6 rooms	1,695,000	14.2	1,240,000	14.7	854,000	16.3	386,000	12.1	455,000	13.1	1,375,000	12.6
7 rooms	560,000	4.7	388,000	4.6	253,000	4.8	135,000	4.2	172,000	5.0	520,000	4.8
8 or more rooms	574,000	4.8	378,000	4.5	260,000	4.9	118,000	3.7	196,000	5.7	610,000	5.6
Median number of rooms	4.27	-	4.27	-	4.38	-	4.15	-	4.25	-	4.05	-
THE WEST
Total	5,544,000	100.0	4,742,000	100.0	3,306,000	100.0	1,436,000	100.0	802,000	100.0	4,539,000	100.0
1 room	308,000	5.6	234,000	4.9	155,000	4.7	79,000	5.5	74,000	9.2	333,000	7.3
2 rooms	707,000	12.8	620,000	13.1	457,000	13.8	163,000	11.4	87,000	10.8	577,000	12.7
3 rooms	848,000	15.3	748,000	15.8	500,000	15.1	248,000	17.3	100,000	12.5	733,000	16.1
4 rooms	1,186,000	21.4	1,039,000	21.9	675,000	20.4	364,000	25.3	147,000	18.3	894,000	19.7
5 rooms	1,271,000	22.9	1,118,000	23.6	796,000	24.1	322,000	22.4	153,000	19.1	1,005,000	22.1
6 rooms	705,000	12.7	580,000	12.2	413,000	12.5	167,000	11.6	125,000	15.6	539,000	11.9
7 rooms	285,000	5.1	210,000	4.4	160,000	4.8	50,000	3.5	75,000	9.4	235,000	5.2
8 or more rooms	234,000	4.2	193,000	4.1	150,000	4.5	43,000	3.0	41,000	5.1	223,000	4.9
Median number of rooms	4.27	-	4.24	-	4.30	-	4.13	-	4.45	-	4.20	-

45031

Table 16.--NUMBER OF PERSONS BY TENURE, FOR THE UNITED STATES

AREA AND NUMBER OF PERSONS	ALL ORDINARY OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS, 1947						ALL OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS, APRIL, 1940
	Total		Owner-occupied		Tenant-occupied
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
UNITED STATES
Total	39,016,000	100.0	21,347,000	100.0	17,669,000	100.0	34,855,000	100.0
1 person	2,864,000	7.3	1,256,000	5.9	1,608,000	9.1	2,677,000	7.7
2 persons	10,596,000	27.2	5,568,000	26.1	5,028,000	28.5	8,630,000	24.8
3 persons	8,954,000	22.9	4,769,000	22.3	4,185,000	23.7	7,796,000	22.4
4 persons	7,359,000	18.9	4,280,000	20.0	3,079,000	17.4	6,325,000	18.1
5 persons	4,344,000	11.1	2,601,000	12.2	1,743,000	9.9	4,013,000	11.5
6 persons	2,273,000	5.8	1,373,000	6.4	900,000	5.1	2,360,000	6.8
7 persons	1,140,000	2.9	659,000	3.1	481,000	2.7	1,341,000	3.8
8 or more persons	1,486,000	3.8	841,000	3.9	645,000	3.7	1,713,000	4.9
Median number of persons	3.18	-	3.31	-	3.03	-	3.29	-
URBAN AND RURAL-NONFARM
Total	32,354,000	100.0	17,025,000	100.0	15,329,000	100.0	27,748,000	100.0
1 person	2,604,000	8.0	1,074,000	6.3	1,530,000	10.0	2,316,000	8.3
2 persons	9,010,000	27.8	4,468,000	26.2	4,542,000	29.6	7,242,000	26.1
3 persons	7,549,000	23.3	3,836,000	22.5	3,713,000	24.2	6,383,000	23.0
4 persons	6,099,000	18.9	3,435,000	20.2	2,664,000	17.4	5,063,000	18.2
5 persons	3,508,000	10.8	2,079,000	12.2	1,429,000	9.3	3,066,000	11.0
6 persons	1,710,000	5.3	1,038,000	6.1	672,000	4.4	1,704,000	6.1
7 persons	854,000	2.6	489,000	2.9	365,000	2.4	912,000	3.3
8 or more persons	1,020,000	3.2	606,000	3.6	414,000	2.7	1,062,000	3.8
Median number of persons	3.10	-	3.27	-	2.93	-	3.18	-
URBAN
Total	23,835,000	100.0	11,547,000	100.0	12,288,000	100.0	20,597,000	100.0
1 person	1,983,000	8.3	660,000	5.7	1,323,000	10.8	1,671,000	8.1
2 persons	6,627,000	27.8	2,911,000	25.2	3,716,000	30.2	5,441,000	26.4
3 persons	5,659,000	23.7	2,661,000	23.0	2,998,000	24.4	4,800,000	23.3
4 persons	4,466,000	18.7	2,370,000	20.5	2,096,000	17.1	3,801,000	18.5
5 persons	2,544,000	10.7	1,452,000	12.5	1,092,000	8.9	2,272,000	11.0
6 persons	1,246,000	5.2	758,000	6.6	488,000	4.0	1,233,000	6.0
7 persons	607,000	2.5	324,000	2.8	283,000	2.3	645,000	3.1
8 or more persons	703,000	2.9	411,000	3.6	292,000	2.4	734,000	3.6
Median number of persons	3.08	-	3.33	-	2.87	-	3.16	-
RURAL-NONFARM
Total	8,519,000	100.0	5,478,000	100.0	3,041,000	100.0	7,151,000	100.0
1 person	621,000	7.3	414,000	7.6	207,000	6.8	645,000	9.0
2 persons	2,383,000	28.0	1,557,000	28.4	826,000	27.2	1,801,000	25.2
3 persons	1,890,000	22.2	1,175,000	21.4	715,000	23.5	1,583,000	22.1
4 persons	1,633,000	19.2	1,065,000	19.4	568,000	18.7	1,262,000	17.6
5 persons	964,000	11.3	627,000	11.4	337,000	11.1	794,000	11.1
6 persons	464,000	5.4	280,000	5.1	184,000	6.1	471,000	6.6
7 persons	247,000	2.9	165,000	3.0	82,000	2.7	267,000	3.7
8 or more persons	317,000	3.7	195,000	3.6	122,000	4.0	328,000	4.6
Median number of persons	3.16	-	3.15	-	3.18	-	3.21	-
RURAL-FARM
Total	6,662,000	100.0	4,322,000	100.0	2,340,000	100.0	7,107,000	100.0
1 person	260,000	3.9	182,000	4.2	78,000	3.3	361,000	5.1
2 persons	1,586,000	23.8	1,100,000	25.5	486,000	20.8	1,388,000	19.5
3 persons	1,405,000	21.1	933,000	21.6	472,000	20.2	1,413,000	19.9
4 persons	1,260,000	18.9	845,000	19.6	415,000	17.7	1,262,000	17.8
5 persons	836,000	12.5	522,000	12.1	314,000	13.4	947,000	13.3
6 persons	563,000	8.5	335,000	7.8	228,000	9.7	656,000	9.2
7 persons	286,000	4.3	170,000	3.9	116,000	5.0	429,000	6.0
8 or more persons	466,000	7.0	235,000	5.4	231,000	9.9	651,000	9.2
Median number of persons	3.56	-	3.44	-	3.82	-	3.81	-
OCCUPIED BY VETERAN HOUSEHOLDS
Total	10,543,000	100.0	5,195,000	100.0	5,348,000	100.0	-	-
1 person	103,000	1.0	20,000	0.4	83,000	1.6	-	-
2 persons	2,069,000	19.6	628,000	12.1	1,441,000	26.9	-	-
3 persons	2,961,000	28.1	1,314,000	25.3	1,647,000	30.8	-	-
4 persons	2,245,000	21.3	1,284,000	24.7	961,000	18.0	-	-
5 persons	1,432,000	13.6	860,000	16.6	572,000	10.7	-	-
6 persons	809,000	7.7	513,000	9.9	296,000	5.5	-	-
7 persons	388,000	3.7	250,000	4.8	138,000	2.6	-	-
8 or more persons	536,000	5.1	326,000	6.3	210,000	3.9	-	-
Median number of persons	3.56	-	3.99	-	3.20	-	-	-
OCCUPIED BY NONVETERAN HOUSEHOLDS
Total	28,473,000	100.0	16,152,000	100.0	12,321,000	100.0	-	-
1 person	2,761,000	9.7	1,236,000	7.7	1,525,000	12.4	-	-
2 persons	8,527,000	29.9	4,940,000	30.6	3,587,000	29.1	-	-
3 persons	5,993,000	21.0	3,455,000	21.4	2,538,000	20.6	-	-
4 persons	5,114,000	18.0	2,996,000	18.5	2,118,000	17.2	-	-
5 persons	2,912,000	10.2	1,741,000	10.8	1,171,000	9.5	-	-
6 persons	1,464,000	5.1	860,000	5.3	604,000	4.9	-	-
7 persons	752,000	2.6	409,000	2.5	343,000	2.8	-	-
8 or more persons	950,000	3.3	515,000	3.2	435,000	3.5	-	-
Median number of persons	2.99	-	3.05	-	2.91	-	-	-

45031

Table 17.--NUMBER OF PERSONS, FOR THE UNITED STATES, BY REGIONS

REGION AND NUMBER OF PERSONS	1947										ALL OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS, APRIL, 1940
	All ordinary occupied dwelling units		Urban and rural-nonfarm						Rural-farm
			Total		Urban		Rural-nonfarm
	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent
THE NORTHEASTERN STATES
Total	10,716,000	100.0	10,130,000	100.0	8,118,000	100.0	2,012,000	100.0	586,000	100.0	9,479,000	100.0
1 person	743,000	6.9	710,000	7.0	585,000	7.2	125,000	6.2	33,000	5.6	662,000	7.0
2 persons	2,762,000	25.8	2,645,000	26.1	2,065,000	25.4	580,000	28.8	117,000	20.0	2,265,000	23.9
3 persons	2,505,000	23.4	2,384,000	23.5	1,940,000	23.9	444,000	22.1	121,000	20.6	2,161,000	22.8
4 persons	2,166,000	20.2	2,045,000	20.2	1,635,000	20.1	410,000	20.4	121,000	20.6	1,822,000	19.2
5 persons	1,238,000	11.6	1,161,000	11.5	932,000	11.5	229,000	11.4	77,000	13.1	1,149,000	12.1
6 persons	663,000	6.2	607,000	6.0	506,000	6.2	101,000	5.0	56,000	9.6	653,000	6.9
7 persons	287,000	2.7	266,000	2.6	218,000	2.7	48,000	2.4	21,000	3.6	353,000	3.7
8 or more persons	352,000	3.3	312,000	3.1	237,000	2.9	75,000	3.7	40,000	6.8	414,000	4.4
Median number of persons	3.24	-	3.22	-	3.23	-	3.18	-	3.68	-	3.34	-
THE NORTH CENTRAL STATES
Total	12,064,000	100.0	9,759,000	100.0	7,446,000	100.0	2,313,000	100.0	2,305,000	100.0	10,964,000	100.0
1 person	978,000	8.1	862,000	8.8	650,000	8.7	212,000	9.2	116,000	5.0	837,000	7.6
2 persons	3,500,000	29.0	2,872,000	29.4	2,147,000	28.8	725,000	31.3	628,000	27.2	2,840,000	25.9
3 persons	2,758,000	22.9	2,228,000	22.8	1,740,000	23.4	488,000	21.1	530,000	23.0	2,521,000	23.0
4 persons	2,180,000	18.1	1,758,000	18.0	1,367,000	18.4	391,000	16.9	422,000	18.3	2,018,000	18.4
5 persons	1,247,000	10.3	1,011,000	10.4	779,000	10.5	232,000	10.0	236,000	10.2	1,250,000	11.4
6 persons	654,000	5.4	469,000	4.8	348,000	4.7	121,000	5.2	185,000	8.0	701,000	6.4
7 persons	343,000	2.8	259,000	2.7	191,000	2.6	68,000	2.9	84,000	3.6	374,000	3.4
8 or more persons	404,000	3.3	300,000	3.1	224,000	3.0	76,000	3.3	104,000	4.5	423,000	3.9
Median number of persons	3.06	-	3.01	-	3.03	-	2.95	-	3.27	-	3.22	-
THE SOUTH
Total	11,070,000	100.0	8,003,000	100.0	5,076,000	100.0	2,927,000	100.0	3,067,000	100.0	10,278,000	100.0
1 person	586,000	5.3	528,000	6.6	371,000	7.3	157,000	5.4	58,000	1.9	638,000	6.2
2 persons	2,810,000	25.4	2,139,000	26.7	1,402,000	27.6	737,000	25.2	671,000	21.9	2,322,000	22.6
3 persons	2,555,000	23.1	1,915,000	23.9	1,231,000	24.3	684,000	23.4	640,000	20.9	2,196,000	21.4
4 persons	2,033,000	18.4	1,476,000	18.4	906,000	17.8	570,000	19.5	557,000	18.2	1,803,000	17.5
5 persons	1,365,000	12.3	921,000	11.5	550,000	10.8	371,000	12.7	444,000	14.5	1,239,000	12.1
6 persons	728,000	6.6	460,000	5.7	291,000	5.7	169,000	5.8	268,000	8.7	810,000	7.9
7 persons	400,000	3.6	250,000	3.1	145,000	2.9	105,000	3.6	150,000	4.9	513,000	5.0
8 or more persons	593,000	5.4	314,000	3.9	180,000	3.5	134,000	4.6	279,000	9.1	757,000	7.4
Median number of persons	3.34	-	3.20	-	3.12	-	3.33	-	3.80	-	3.49	-
THE WEST
Total	5,166,000	100.0	4,462,000	100.0	3,195,000	100.0	1,267,000	100.0	704,000	100.0	4,134,000	100.0
1 person	557,000	10.8	504,000	11.3	377,000	11.8	127,000	10.0	53,000	7.5	540,000	13.1
2 persons	1,524,000	29.5	1,354,000	30.3	1,013,000	31.7	341,000	26.9	170,000	24.1	1,203,000	29.1
3 persons	1,136,000	22.0	1,022,000	22.9	748,000	23.4	274,000	21.6	114,000	16.2	918,000	22.2
4 persons	980,000	19.0	820,000	18.4	558,000	17.5	262,000	20.7	160,000	22.7	682,000	16.5
5 persons	494,000	9.6	415,000	9.3	283,000	8.9	132,000	10.4	79,000	11.2	375,000	9.1
6 persons	228,000	4.4	174,000	3.9	101,000	3.2	73,000	5.8	54,000	7.7	196,000	4.7
7 persons	110,000	2.1	79,000	1.8	53,000	1.7	26,000	2.1	31,000	4.4	101,000	2.4
8 or more persons	137,000	2.7	94,000	2.1	62,000	1.9	32,000	2.5	43,000	6.1	119,000	2.9
Median number of persons	2.94	-	2.86	-	2.78	-	3.10	-	3.59	-	2.85	-

45031

Table 18.--PERSONS PER ROOM BY TENURE, FOR THE UNITED STATES

AREA AND PERSONS PER ROOM	ALL ORDINARY OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS, 1947						ALL OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS, APRIL, 1940
	Total		Owner-occupied		Tenant-occupied
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
UNITED STATES
Total	39,016,000	100.0	21,347,000	100.0	17,669,000	100.0	34,855,000	100.0
0.50 or less	13,651,000	35.0	9,025,000	42.3	4,626,000	26.2	10,976,000	31.5
0.51 to 1.50	22,998,000	58.9	11,506,000	53.9	11,492,000	65.0	20,756,000	59.5
1.51 or more	2,367,000	6.1	816,000	3.8	1,551,000	8.8	3,123,000	9.0
URBAN AND RURAL-NONFARM
Total	32,354,000	100.0	17,025,000	100.0	15,329,000	100.0	27,748,000	100.0
0.50 or less	11,299,000	34.9	7,233,000	42.5	4,066,000	26.5	8,888,000	32.0
0.51 to 1.50	19,346,000	59.8	9,229,000	54.2	10,117,000	66.0	16,880,000	60.8
1.51 or more	1,709,000	5.3	563,000	3.3	1,146,000	7.5	1,980,000	7.1
URBAN
Total	23,835,000	100.0	11,547,000	100.0	12,288,000	100.0	20,597,000	100.0
0.50 or less	8,234,000	34.5	4,945,000	42.8	3,289,000	26.8	6,471,000	31.4
0.51 to 1.50	14,553,000	61.1	6,353,000	55.0	8,200,000	66.7	12,942,000	62.8
1.51 or more	1,048,000	4.4	249,000	2.2	799,000	6.5	1,184,000	5.7
RURAL-NONFARM
Total	8,519,000	100.0	5,478,000	100.0	3,041,000	100.0	7,151,000	100.0
0.50 or less	3,065,000	36.0	2,288,000	41.8	777,000	25.6	2,417,000	33.8
0.51 to 1.50	4,793,000	56.3	2,876,000	52.5	1,917,000	63.0	3,938,000	55.1
1.51 or more	661,000	7.8	314,000	5.7	347,000	11.4	796,000	11.1
RURAL-FARM
Total	6,662,000	100.0	4,322,000	100.0	2,340,000	100.0	7,107,000	100.0
0.50 or less	2,352,000	35.3	1,792,000	41.5	560,000	23.9	2,088,000	29.4
0.51 to 1.50	3,652,000	54.8	2,277,000	52.7	1,375,000	58.8	3,876,000	54.5
1.51 or more	658,000	9.9	253,000	5.9	405,000	17.3	1,143,000	16.1
OCCUPIED BY VETERAN HOUSEHOLDS
Total	10,543,000	100.0	5,195,000	100.0	5,348,000	100.0	-	-
0.50 or less	2,109,000	20.0	1,263,000	24.3	846,000	15.8	-	-
0.51 to 1.50	7,728,000	73.3	3,709,000	71.4	4,019,000	75.1	-	-
1.51 or more	706,000	6.7	223,000	4.3	483,000	9.0	-	-
OCCUPIED BY NONVETERAN HOUSEHOLDS
Total	28,473,000	100.0	16,152,000	100.0	12,321,000	100.0	-	-
0.50 or less	11,542,000	40.5	7,762,000	48.1	3,780,000	30.7	-	-
0.51 to 1.50	15,270,000	53.6	7,797,000	48.3	7,473,000	60.7	-	-
1.51 or more	1,661,000	5.8	593,000	3.7	1,068,000	8.7	-	-

Table 19.--PERSONS PER ROOM, FOR THE UNITED STATES, BY REGIONS

REGION AND PERSONS PER ROOM	1947										ALL OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS, APRIL, 1940
	All ordinary occupied dwelling units		Urban and rural-nonfarm						Rural-farm
			Total		Urban		Rural-nonfarm
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
THE NORTHEASTERN STATES
Total	10,716,000	100.0	10,130,000	100.0	8,118,000	100.0	2,012,000	100.0	586,000	100.0	9,479,000	100.0
0.50 or less	4,130,000	38.5	3,829,000	37.8	2,907,000	35.8	922,000	45.8	301,000	51.4	3,343,000	35.3
0.51 to 1.50	6,346,000	59.2	6,071,000	59.9	5,046,000	62.2	1,025,000	50.9	275,000	46.9	5,791,000	61.1
1.51 or more	240,000	2.2	230,000	2.3	165,000	2.0	65,000	3.2	10,000	1.7	345,000	3.6
THE NORTH CENTRAL STATES
Total	12,064,000	100.0	9,759,000	100.0	7,446,000	100.0	2,313,000	100.0	2,305,000	100.0	10,964,000	100.0
0.50 or less	4,826,000	40.0	3,720,000	38.1	2,721,000	36.5	999,000	43.2	1,106,000	48.0	3,972,000	36.2
0.51 to 1.50	6,804,000	56.4	5,675,000	58.2	4,493,000	60.3	1,182,000	51.1	1,129,000	49.0	6,367,000	58.1
1.51 or more	434,000	3.6	364,000	3.7	232,000	3.1	132,000	5.7	70,000	3.0	625,000	5.7
THE SOUTH
Total	11,070,000	100.0	8,003,000	100.0	5,076,000	100.0	2,927,000	100.0	3,067,000	100.0	10,278,000	100.0
0.50 or less	2,982,000	26.9	2,248,000	28.1	1,504,000	29.6	744,000	25.4	734,000	23.9	2,309,000	22.5
0.51 to 1.50	6,820,000	61.6	4,956,000	61.9	3,114,000	61.3	1,842,000	62.9	1,864,000	60.8	6,177,000	60.1
1.51 or more	1,268,000	11.5	799,000	10.0	458,000	9.0	341,000	11.7	469,000	15.3	1,792,000	17.4
THE WEST
Total	5,166,000	100.0	4,462,000	100.0	3,195,000	100.0	1,267,000	100.0	704,000	100.0	4,134,000	100.0
0.50 or less	1,713,000	33.2	1,502,000	33.7	1,102,000	34.5	400,000	31.6	211,000	30.0	1,352,000	32.7
0.51 to 1.50	3,028,000	58.6	2,644,000	59.3	1,900,000	59.5	744,000	58.7	384,000	54.5	2,421,000	58.6
1.51 or more	425,000	8.2	316,000	7.1	193,000	6.0	123,000	9.7	109,000	15.5	361,000	8.7

45031

Table 20.--NUMBER OF "HUSBAND-WIFE" SUBFAMILIES BY TENURE, FOR THE UNITED STATES: APRIL, 1947

(The term "subfamily" as used in this report includes married couples not related to the head of the household as well as those couples related to the head)

AREA AND NUMBER OF "HUSBAND-WIFE" SUBFAMILIES	ALL ORDINARY OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS		OWNER-OCCUPIED		TENANT-OCCUPIED
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
UNITED STATES
Total ordinary occupied dwelling units	39,016,000	100.0	21,347,000	100.0	17,669,000	100.0
Containing no "husband-wife" subfamilies	36,503,000	93.6	19,654,000	92.1	16,849,000	95.4
Containing one or more "husband-wife" subfamilies	2,513,000	6.4	1,693,000	7.9	820,000	4.6
URBAN AND RURAL-NONFARM
Total ordinary occupied dwelling units	32,354,000	100.0	17,025,000	100.0	15,329,000	100.0
Containing no "husband-wife" subfamilies	30,240,000	93.5	15,633,000	91.8	14,607,000	95.3
Containing one or more "husband-wife" subfamilies	2,114,000	6.5	1,392,000	8.2	722,000	4.7
URBAN
Total ordinary occupied dwelling units	23,835,000	100.0	11,547,000	100.0	12,288,000	100.0
Containing no "husband-wife" subfamilies	22,180,000	93.1	10,485,000	90.8	11,695,000	95.2
Containing one or more "husband-wife" subfamilies	1,655,000	6.9	1,062,000	9.2	593,000	4.8
RURAL-NONFARM
Total ordinary occupied dwelling units	8,519,000	100.0	5,478,000	100.0	3,041,000	100.0
Containing no "husband-wife" subfamilies	8,060,000	94.6	5,148,000	94.0	2,912,000	95.8
Containing one or more "husband-wife" subfamilies	459,000	5.4	330,000	6.0	129,000	4.2
RURAL-FARM
Total ordinary occupied dwelling units	6,662,000	100.0	4,322,000	100.0	2,340,000	100.0
Containing no "husband-wife" subfamilies	6,263,000	94.0	4,021,000	93.0	2,242,000	95.8
Containing one or more "husband-wife" subfamilies	399,000	6.0	301,000	7.0	98,000	4.2
OCCUPIED BY VETERAN HOUSEHOLDS
Total ordinary occupied dwelling units	10,543,000	100.0	5,195,000	100.0	5,348,000	100.0
Containing no "husband-wife" subfamilies	9,047,000	85.8	4,210,000	81.0	4,837,000	90.4
Containing one or more "husband-wife" subfamilies	1,496,000	14.2	985,000	19.0	511,000	9.6
OCCUPIED BY NONVETERAN HOUSEHOLDS
Total ordinary occupied dwelling units	28,473,000	100.0	16,152,000	100.0	12,321,000	100.0
Containing no "husband-wife" subfamilies	27,456,000	96.4	15,444,000	95.6	12,012,000	97.5
Containing one or more "husband-wife" subfamilies	1,017,000	3.6	708,000	4.4	309,000	2.5

Table 21.--NUMBER OF "HUSBAND-WIFE" SUBFAMILIES, FOR THE UNITED STATES, BY REGIONS: APRIL, 1947

REGION AND NUMBER OF "HUSBAND-WIFE" SUBFAMILIES	ALL ORDINARY OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS		URBAN AND RURAL-NONFARM						RURAL-FARM
			Total		Urban		Rural-nonfarm
	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent	Number	Per-cent
THE NORTHEASTERN STATES
Total ordinary occupied dwelling units	10,716,000	100.0	10,130,000	100.0	8,118,000	100.0	2,012,000	100.0	586,000	100.0
Containing no "husband-wife" subfamilies	9,873,000	92.1	9,342,000	92.2	7,456,000	91.8	1,886,000	93.7	531,000	90.6
Containing one or more "husband-wife" subfamilies	843,000	7.9	788,000	7.8	662,000	8.2	126,000	6.3	55,000	9.4
THE NORTH CENTRAL STATES
Total ordinary occupied dwelling units	12,064,000	100.0	9,759,000	100.0	7,446,000	100.0	2,313,000	100.0	2,305,000	100.0
Containing no "husband-wife" subfamilies	11,342,000	94.0	9,160,000	93.9	6,946,000	93.3	2,214,000	95.7	2,182,000	94.7
Containing one or more "husband-wife" subfamilies	722,000	6.0	599,000	6.1	500,000	6.7	99,000	4.3	123,000	5.3
THE SOUTH
Total ordinary occupied dwelling units	11,070,000	100.0	8,003,000	100.0	5,076,000	100.0	2,927,000	100.0	3,067,000	100.0
Containing no "husband-wife" subfamilies	10,345,000	93.5	7,455,000	93.2	4,705,000	92.7	2,750,000	94.0	2,890,000	94.2
Containing one or more "husband-wife" subfamilies	725,000	6.5	548,000	6.8	371,000	7.3	177,000	6.0	177,000	5.8
THE WEST
Total ordinary occupied dwelling units	5,166,000	100.0	4,462,000	100.0	3,195,000	100.0	1,267,000	100.0	704,000	100.0
Containing no "husband-wife" subfamilies	4,943,000	95.7	4,283,000	96.0	3,073,000	96.2	1,210,000	95.5	660,000	93.7
Containing one or more "husband-wife" subfamilies	223,000	4.3	179,000	4.0	122,000	3.8	57,000	4.5	44,000	6.2

45231

Table 22.--CONTRACT MONTHLY RENT IN TENANT-OCCUPIED DWELLING UNITS, FOR THE UNITED STATES, BY REGIONS

AREA AND CONTRACT MONTHLY RENT	URBAN AND RURAL-NONFARM TENANT-OCCUPIED ORDINARY DWELLING UNITS, 1947						ALL TENANT-OCCUPIED URBAN AND RURAL-NONFARM DWELLING UNITS, APRIL, 1940
	Total		Urban		Rural-nonfarm
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
UNITED STATES
Tenant-occupied ordinary dwelling units	15,329,000	100.0	12,288,000	100.0	3,041,000	100.0	16,335,000	100.0
Under $10	1,102,000	7.2	481,000	3.9	621,000	20.4	2,862,000	17.5
$10 to $19	3,038,000	19.8	2,052,000	16.7	986,000	32.4	4,543,000	27.8
$20 to $29	3,585,000	23.4	2,966,000	24.1	619,000	20.4	3,885,000	23.8
$30 to $39	3,442,000	22.5	3,015,000	24.5	427,000	14.0	2,546,000	15.6
$40 to $49	2,260,000	14.7	2,043,000	16.6	217,000	7.1	1,310,000	8.0
$50 or more	1,902,000	12.4	1,731,000	14.1	171,000	5.6	1,189,000	7.3
Median monthly rental.....(dollars)	29.33	-	31.64	-	18.62	-	21.46	-
THE NORTHEASTERN STATES
Tenant-occupied ordinary dwelling units	5,468,000	100.0	4,804,000	100.0	664,000	100.0	5,715,000	100.0
Under $10	52,000	1.0	16,000	0.3	36,000	5.4	249,000	4.4
$10 to $19	701,000	12.8	526,000	10.9	175,000	26.4	1,354,000	23.7
$20 to $29	1,484,000	27.1	1,293,000	26.9	191,000	28.8	1,609,000	28.2
$30 to $39	1,329,000	24.3	1,229,000	25.6	100,000	15.1	1,175,000	20.6
$40 to $49	1,027,000	18.8	921,000	19.2	106,000	16.0	660,000	11.5
$50 or more	875,000	16.0	819,000	17.0	56,000	8.4	668,000	11.7
Median monthly rental.....(dollars)	33.24	-	34.11	-	25.84	-	27.30	-
THE NORTH CENTRAL STATES
Tenant-occupied ordinary dwelling units	4,079,000	100.0	3,499,000	100.0	580,000	100.0	4,641,000	100.0
Under $10	152,000	3.7	78,000	2.2	74,000	12.8	639,000	13.8
$10 to $19	939,000	23.0	684,000	19.5	255,000	44.0	1,425,000	30.7
$20 to $29	893,000	21.9	761,000	21.7	132,000	22.8	1,144,000	24.6
$30 to $39	960,000	23.5	873,000	24.9	87,000	15.0	751,000	16.2
$40 to $49	672,000	16.5	655,000	18.7	17,000	2.9	392,000	8.4
$50 or more	463,000	11.4	448,000	12.8	15,000	2.6	290,000	6.2
Median monthly rental.....(dollars)	30.08	-	32.09	-	17.97	-	21.74	-
THE SOUTH
Tenant-occupied ordinary dwelling units	3,828,000	100.0	2,458,000	100.0	1,370,000	100.0	4,073,000	100.0
Under $10	839,000	21.9	358,000	14.6	481,000	35.1	1,744,000	42.8
$10 to $19	1,128,000	29.5	689,000	28.0	439,000	32.0	1,191,000	29.2
$20 to $29	674,000	17.6	495,000	20.1	179,000	13.1	585,000	14.4
$30 to $39	567,000	14.8	422,000	17.2	145,000	10.6	284,000	7.0
$40 to $49	278,000	7.3	213,000	8.7	65,000	4.7	135,000	3.3
$50 or more	342,000	8.9	281,000	11.4	61,000	4.5	134,000	3.3
Median monthly rental.....(dollars)	19.03	-	23.18	-	14.15	-	11.96	-
THE WEST
Tenant-occupied ordinary dwelling units	1,954,000	100.0	1,527,000	100.0	427,000	100.0	1,906,000	100.0
Under $10	59,000	3.0	29,000	1.9	30,000	7.0	230,000	12.1
$10 to $19	270,000	13.8	153,000	10.0	117,000	27.4	573,000	30.1
$20 to $29	534,000	27.3	417,000	27.3	117,000	27.4	547,000	28.7
$30 to $39	586,000	30.0	491,000	32.2	95,000	22.2	336,000	17.6
$40 to $49	283,000	14.5	254,000	16.6	29,000	6.8	123,000	6.5
$50 or more	222,000	11.4	183,000	12.0	39,000	9.1	97,000	5.1
Median monthly rental.....(dollars)	31.45	-	32.85	-	25.18	-	22.24	-

45031

Table 23.--VACANCY AND OCCUPANCY IN PRIVATELY AND PUBLICLY FINANCED DWELLING UNITS IN THE UNITED STATES: NOVEMBER, 1945

SUBJECT	United States	URBAN AND RURAL-NONFARM			Rural-farm[1]
		Total	Urban	Rural-nonfarm[1]
Total dwelling units	40,581,000	33,343,000	24,338,000	9,005,000	7,238,000
Occupied dwelling units	37,600,000	31,281,000	23,748,000	7,533,000	6,319,000
Unoccupied	2,981,000	2,062,000	590,000	1,472,000	919,000
Seasonal	944,000	898,000	27,000	871,000	46,000
Nonseasonal	2,037,000	1,164,000	563,000	601,000	873,000
Habitable[2]	1,459,000	890,000	447,000	443,000	569,000
Rental	736,000	504,000	287,000	217,000	232,000
Offered for rent	628,000	416,000	223,000	193,000	212,000
Rented, not yet occupied	108,000	88,000	64,000	24,000	20,000
Sale	183,000	118,000	64,000	54,000	65,000
For sale only	87,000	54,000	29,000	25,000	33,000
Sold, not yet occupied	96,000	64,000	35,000	29,000	32,000
Other[3]	540,000	268,000	96,000	172,000	272,000
Not habitable [2]	578,000	274,000	116,000	158,000	304,000
PERCENT
Total dwelling units	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0
Occupied dwelling units	92.7	93.8	97.6	83.7	87.3
Unoccupied	7.3	6.2	2.4	16.3	12.7
Seasonal	2.3	2.7	0.1	9.7	0.6
Nonseasonal	5.0	3.5	2.3	6.7	12.1
Habitable[2]	3.6	2.7	1.8	4.9	7.9
Rental	1.8	1.5	1.2	2.4	3.2
Offered for rent	1.5	1.2	0.9	2.1	2.9
Rented, not yet occupied	0.3	0.3	0.3	0.3	0.3
Sale	0.5	0.4	0.3	0.6	0.9
For sale only	0.2	0.2	0.1	0.3	0.5
Sold, not yet occupied	0.2	0.2	0.1	0.3	0.4
Other[3]	1.3	0.8	0.4	1.9	3.8
Not habitable[2]	1.4	0.8	0.5	1.8	4.2

[1] Revised data.

[2] Included as habitable are units in good condition or in need of minor repairs, also those in need of major repairs which are in no worse condition than similar occupied units in the same neighborhood. Included as not habitable are units in need of major repairs where similar units in the same neighborhood are not occupied as well as units unfit for human habitation.

[3] Other vacancies include units held off the sale or rental market such as units held for absent households, units to be demolished, units in litigation, units undergoing extensive repairs, etc.

45031

MAP OF THE UNITED STATES SHOWING REGIONS, DIVISIONS, AND STATES

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

BUREAU OF THE CENSUS

45031

THE HOUSING SITUATION

the factual background

HOUSING AND HOME FINANCE AGENCY
Raymond M. Foley, Administrator
Washington, D.C.
JUNE, 1948

FREEDOM AGENDA

Jack Peltason

Constitutional Liberty and Seditious Activity

A community adventure
in the discussion of freedom

2-9-55

CLSA Reports
COMMISSION ON LAW AND SOCIAL ACTION
of the AMERICAN JEWISH CONGRESS
15 East 84th St., New York 28, N. Y. • TRafalgar 9-4500

A MODEL STATE HUMAN RELATIONS COMMISSION BILL

TITLE

STATE COMMISSION ON HUMAN RELATIONS

1.0. Policy

In the State of with its great population consisting of large numbers of people of every race, color, religion, national origin and ancestry, there is no greater danger to the health, morals, safety and welfare of the state and its inhabitants than the existence of groups prejudiced against one another and antagonistic to each other because of differences of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry.

The legislature hereby finds and declares that prejudice, intolerance, bigotry and discrimination and disorder occasioned thereby threaten the rights and proper privileges of its inhabitants and menace the institutions and foundations of a free, democratic state. A state agency is hereby created through which the State of officially may encourage and bring about mutual understanding and respect among all groups in the state, eliminate prejudice, discrimination and disorder occasioned thereby and give effect to the guarantee of equal rights for all assured by the constitution and the laws of this state and of the United States of America.

2.0. Definitions

As used in this law:

(1) "Discrimination" shall mean any difference in treatment based on race, religion, color, national origin or ancestry ~~and~~ shall include segregation, except that it shall not be discrimination for any religious or denominational institution to prefer members of its own religion or denomination.

(2) "Religious or denominational institution" shall mean an institution which is operated, supervised or controlled by a religious or denominational organization.

3.0. Commission on Human Relations

There is hereby created a commission on human relations. It shall consist of fifteen members, broadly representative of the social, economic and cultural interests of the state, to be appointed by the governor, one of whom shall be designated by him as its chairman. Of the fifteen members first appointed, five shall be appointed for one year, five for two years and five for three years; thereafter, all appointments to the commission shall be for a term of three years. In the event of the death or resignation of any member, his successor shall be appointed to serve for the unexpired period of the term for which such member had been appointed. Members shall serve without compensation but shall be reimbursed for actual and necessary expenses.

4.0. Functions

The functions of the commission shall be:

(1) To foster mutual understanding and respect among all racial, religious and ethnic groups in the State of ;

(2) To encourage equality of treatment for, and prevent discrimination against, any racial, religious or ethnic group or its members;

(3) To cooperate with governmental and non-governmental agencies and organizations having like or kindred functions; and

(4) To make such investigations and studies in the field of human relations as in the judgment of the commission will aid in effectuating its general purposes.

5.0. Powers and Duties

The Commission is empowered:

(1) To act as conciliator in matters involving race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry but no decision of the Commission shall be binding upon any of the parties to the conciliation.

(2) To work together with Federal, state and city agencies in developing courses of instruction on techniques for achieving harmonious intergroup relations within the State of for presentation to state employees and in public and private schools, public libraries, museums and other suitable places.

(3) To enlist the cooperation of the various racial, religious and ethnic groups, community organizations, labor organizations, fraternal and benevolent associations and other groups in the State of in programs and campaigns devoted to eliminating group prejudice, intolerance and discrimination.

(4) To create such advisory committees as in its judgment will aid in effectuating the purposes of this law and to empower them to study the problems of prejudice and discrimination and disorder occasioned thereby in any field of human relationship;

(5) To receive and investigate complaints and to initiate its own investigations of (a) racial, religious and ethnic group tensions and prejudice and disorder occasioned thereby; (b) discrimination against any person or group of persons, whether practiced by private persons or organizations or by state officials or agencies.

(6) To hold both public and private hearings, compel the attendance of witnesses, administer oaths, take the testimony of any person under oath and in connection therewith to require the production of any evidence relating to any matter under investigation or in question before the commission. The powers enumerated in this sub-section may be exercised by any three or more members of the commission so authorized by it. The commission after the completion of any public hearing, shall make a public report in writing to the governor setting forth the facts found by it and its recommendations and shall use its best efforts to bring about compliance with its recommendations;

(7) To issue publications and reports of investigations and research designed to promote good will and to minimize or eliminate prejudice and discrimination and disorder occasioned thereby;

(8) To appoint an executive director and, subject to the provisions of the state civil service law, such additional personnel as it may deem necessary and to fix their compensation within the limits of funds made available to the commission.

(9) To recommend to the governor and the state legislature such legislation as will aid in carrying out the purposes of this law;

(10) To submit an annual report to the governor and the state legislature.

6.0. Relations with State Departments and Agencies

So far as practicable, the services of all other state departments and agencies shall be made available by their respective heads to the commission for the carrying out of the functions herein stated. Information in the possession of any department or agency shall be furnished to the commission when it is requested. Whenever necessary and requested by the commission, one or more attorneys from the staff of the state attorney general shall be made available to it to assist in the conduct of its investigations or hearings.

7.0. Separability

If any provision of this law or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance shall be held invalid, the remainder of such law or the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those to which it is held invalid shall not be affected thereby.

8.0. Effective Date

This law shall become effective .

February 9, 1955

CLSA Reports
COMMISSION ON LAW AND SOCIAL ACTION
of the AMERICAN JEWISH CONGRESS
15 East 84th St., New York 28, N. Y. • TRafalgar 9-4500

DIGEST OF MODEL STATE HUMAN RELATIONS COMMISSION BILL

1. Introduction

You are no doubt familiar with the operation of state and municipal statutory commissions empowered to take action against discrimination in employment, education, public accommodations and the like. In recent years a new type of commission has been developed which has no regulatory functions but which attacks the underlying problems of racial and religious prejudice and intergroup hostility. These commissions, particularly those in Wisconsin and Minnesota, have been successful in dealing with problems no FEP commission is authorized to handle. In response to a number of requests we have drafted a model bill for the establishment of such a commission, a copy of which is enclosed.

2. Powers and Duties

The bill creates a commission consisting of fifteen members including a chairman, appointed by the governor, to be broadly representative of the social, economic and cultural interests of the state. Members serve without compensation.

The Commission would be empowered to receive and investigate (and initiate its own investigations of) complaints of group hostility, tension and prejudice and would also be authorized to investigate discrimination against individuals and groups, both by private persons or organizations and by state officials or agencies.

It could hold public and private hearings at which it could compel the attendance of witnesses, the production of evidence and take testimony under oath. It would be authorized to use its efforts to bring about compliance with its recommendations. It might issue general publications and reports of investigations and research and would be empowered to recommend to the governor and state legislature such legislation as would aid in limiting prejudice or discrimination.

The Commission would function through an executive director and a civil service staff. The services of other departments in the state government are also to be made available.

3. Program

As part of its overall program, the Commission would collect information on local conditions, the existence of tensions, the extent of discrimination and on problems arising from population and neighborhood changes. It would engage in "trouble-shooting" or "tension control" by watching for antagonisms and by taking remedial action to remove the causes of tension. It would have an educational program designed to disseminate information, promote good will and influence attitudes. It would encourage citizen participation in the pressing problems of intergroup relations. Finally, it is directed in cooperation with other governmental agencies to develop educational and training programs for its employees.

The Commission's decisions and recommendations would be advisory and not binding on anyone. It would be authorized to cooperate with private civic organizations and to create advisory committees of private citizens.

2/9/55
AB

The one great rule of composition is to speak the truth.
—Thoreau

The Texas Observer

An Independent Liberal Weekly Newspaper

We will serve no group or party but will hew hard to the truth as we find it and the right as we see it.

VOL. 47 | AUGUST 3, 1955, AUSTIN, TEXAS | 10c per Copy | NO. 10

The Citizens' Council

* * * * * * *

Kilgore Group Forms To Resist Integration

KILGORE

HERE, deep in the Piney Woods of East Texas, in a town with 10,000 people and 1,200 oil derricks inside its city limits, the first Texas organization for the preservation of school segregation has been formed.

The Citizens' Council of Kilgore claims 1,660 members and hopes for 2,500. About 175 people attended its second meeting last week and heard two speakers damn integration, miscegenation, "mongrelization," and the "Supreme Court leftists."

The purpose of the council is to maintain segregated schools. To do it, the members will have to intimidate the Negroes one way or another. There is little doubt that most Negroes who seek integration will lose their jobs. Leaders of the council steadfastly deny any intention of using violence, but no one denies its possibility.

One of the key men in the town explains the plan this way:

"They realize that if a nigger ever knocks on the schoolhouse door, he'll get in; there won't be any battle. Their idea is to stop them from ever going up to the door."

John T. Crim, Jr., president of the Jaycees and a member of the oil-rich Crim family of Kilgore, concedes that "we may have to" use economic boycotts against Negroes "as a last resort," though he says he hopes not. He is the secretary-treasurer of the council.

Dr. B. E. Masters was the temporary chairman of the group and is now a director. He first went to Mississippi to study the councils there, then called the first meeting. A wire service quoted him as expressing distaste for the phrase, "economic pressure," and saying instead that the councilmen will co-operate with those who co-operate with them. This remark infuriated Charles Devall, owner and publisher of the Kilgore News-Herald which has been supporting the council. ("He had no authority to say that," Devall snapped in his newspaper office.) Masters said he had been misquoted—that he meant to stress "friendship between the races."

No Violence 'in Mind'

Foster T. Bean, a prominent lawyer who is first vice-president of the Kilgore Council, says the group "doesn't have any violence in mind." Will the members use economic boycotts against Negroes? "I wouldn't say that we would," he replied, and then he smiled, very broadly, as though suppressing a sudden amusement.

When the new president, A. G. Morton, Jr., took office at last week's meeting, he said he was opposed to "mongrelization" and wanted to use every legal means to preserve segregation. But he did not flatly oppose coercion or boycotts. Instead, he "recommended" and "hoped" that the council would not "intimidate any person ... by force or threats of force or by use of an economic boycott." This was greeted by a stony silence.

Kilgore Negroes are not intimidated yet. They planned this week to submit a petition to the school board asking for desegregation. But the prospect is not reassuring for them. One of their leaders says that they have the impression that "if you don't do this, you're out of a job." He believes no Kilgore Negroes will join a Negro Citizens' Council (as proposed by Masters) without being coerced, with the exception of the Negro teachers, whose economic dependence on the school board makes them especially vulnerable.

Some of the best people, as they say, are members of the council. The Crims, the Lairds, and the Elders, the three oldest rich families of the town because they were dominant here when the oil field was discovered in 1932, are represented in the council's membership. Ben W. "Buster" Laird, the second vice-president of the new council, owns Pioneer Hardware and some oil wells and is a member of the Board of the Kilgore National Bank. Bean, the first vice-president, is a partner in the town's biggest law firm, Bean and Ford, and head of the Kilgore Federal Savings and Loan Association as well as city attorney of Kilgore. Mrs. Pete Long, oil operator, and Lynch Reynolds, an old settler and land owner.

Newspaper a Factor

Although not among the officers, J. Malcolm Crim was on hand for the second meeting. An old original, very wealthy, he is the patriarch of the Crim family. He used to walk around town smoking a corn cob pipe, and people would point him out: "See that fellow over there? He's got millions."

Devall, who gave the report of the nominating committee at the second meeting and is a key man in the organization, says the Kilgore News-Herald he publishes has supported the council "by inference." He says the community is behind it. As to methods, he comments:

"Most of the fellows say certainly not any violence, and not any economic pressure."

Devall appears to be very busy. He has a ready smile that flashes on and off suddenly. He winks at you intimately. He was wearing a neon blue suit the day of the meeting last week. He is a friend of Governor Allan Shivers, and he is not reticent about this in his newspaper. He runs a picture of the Governor and himself now and then.

Devall's wife was appointed to the Board of Regents of the University of Texas by the Governor recently. She led the Women for Shivers organization last year. She is also president of the United Churchwomen of Texas. Natural and friendly on the telephone, she said she would rather not comment on the Citizens' Council. She has not been to any of the meetings. Had she joined? "I haven't

'GUILTY—3 YEARS'

'I Didn't Expect ... That'

AUSTIN

For 23 days Bascom Giles had been on trial, and now it was evening and the jury was out and Giles was moving courtroom and in the hallway where the heat was even more unbearable. Giles joked with newsmen and traded guesses on who would be elected foreman of the jury. He seemed to know about the doorway where there was a little breeze and talked with reporters. The newsmen were fishing for some idea of when a verdict could be expected. Some had hoped for and predicted an early decision council steadfastly deny any intention of using violence, but no one denies its possibility.

One of the key men in the town explains the plan this way:

"They realize that if a nigger ever knocks on the schoolhouse "economic pressure," and saying instead that the councilmen will co-operate with those who co-operate with them. This remark infuriated Charles Devall, owner and publisher of the Kilgore News-Herald which has been supporting week's meeting, he said he was opposed to "mongrelization" and wanted to use every legal means to preserve segregation. But he did not flatly oppose coercion or boycotts. Instead, he "recommended" and "hoped" that the council would vulnerable.

Some of the best people, as they say, are members of the council. The Crims, the Lairds, and the Elders, the three oldest rich families of the town because they were dominant here when the oil field was discovered in 1932, are represented in the council's membership. Ben W. "Buster" Laird, the second vice-president of the new council, owns Pioneer Hardware and some oil wells and is a member of the Board of the Kilgore National Bank. Bean, the first vice-president, is a partner in the town's biggest law firm, Bean and Ford, and head of the Kilgore Federal Savings and Loan Association as well as city attorney of Kilgore. Mrs. A. L. Elder and Mrs. Frank Elder were among the workers who canvassed the town signing up members. (E. C. Elder is the mayor, but he was unavailable for comment.) J. J. Jenkins, a very wealthy oilman also influential in banking circles, is a member of the council's board of directors, as are you intimately. He was wearing a neon blue suit the day of the meeting last week. He is a friend of Governor Allan Shivers, and he is not reticent about this in his newspaper. He runs a picture of the Governor and himself now and then.

Devall's wife was appointed to the Board of Regents of the University of Texas by the Governor recently. She led the Women for Shivers organization last year. She is also president of the United Churchwomen of Texas. Natural and friendly on the telephone, she said she would rather not comment on the Citizens' Council. She has not been to any of the meetings. Had she joined? "I haven't yet, no," she said. And does she plan to? "I just don't know yet," she said.

Kilgore has a comparatively small middle class, a large wealthy class, and a large underprivileged class. The wealthy are mostly very strong for Governor Shivers, and

(Continued on Page 4)

'GUILTY—3 YEARS'

'I Didn't Expect . . . That'

AUSTIN

For 23 days Bascom Giles had been on trial, and now it was evening and the jury was out and Giles was moving about a crowded courtroom, smiling and confident as he has always been.

Several hundred persons, the curious, the sympathetic, and the unconcerned, were in the courtroom to watch this last step in the first trial stemming from the veterans' land scandal. The jury had retired at 8:50 after a full afternoon and evening of summation by prosecution and defense attorneys. District Attorney Les Procter had asked for the full penalty for felony theft—ten years.

A television newsreel cameraman was busy setting up some large floodlights. Reporters and photographers milled about the courtroom and in the hallway where the heat was even more unbearable. Giles joked with newsmen and traded guesses on who would be elected foreman of the jury. He seemed to know about each of the jurors, where they worked, what sort of persons he thought they were.

He talked for a while with his wife at the back of the courtroom and later with his attorneys. Only his eyes showed any distress, and you felt somehow that it didn't concern this particular trial—that perhaps it was the weight of the many more indictments hanging over him, the other trials to come, which surely pulled and hauled and badgered his emotions so.

There were a good many friends of the Giles family present. The Giles family has been in Travis County more than a century.

Judge Charles O. Betts had retired to his office, but he stood in the doorway where there was a little breeze and talked with reporters. The newsmen were fishing for some idea of when a verdict could be expected. Some had hoped for and predicted an early decision. Some figured the jurors would decide to retire to their hotel rooms to sleep and think a bit about their decision. Others expected a long wait: "They've been here 30 days, locked up and bored and away from their families. If they're even close to a verdict they'll want to stick it out here to a verdict. They want to go home."

False Alarm

A courtroom employe came in and told Betts that "the jury is knocking on the door." There was a little rush for courtroom seats before it was learned that the jury was only ordering some coffee.

Within the hour, there were two more knocks on the jury room door, and it was only then that Giles seemed to be disturbed. Both jury requests were for state exhibits, documents presented in evidence concerning the charges of felony theft of Veterans' Land Program funds.

Reporters played a kind of game to pass the time, each taking his turn at writing down his prediction of the verdict. The first prediction was for "guilty—two years," but most of the others were either "not guilty" or "hung jury." A good many courthouse observers had figured the State's case had been a feeble one—that "something sure smelled," but proving conspiracy beyond any reasonable doubt was quite another thing. Judge Betts, himself, had pointed out in his charge to the jury that the State's case was built on circumstantial evidence.

Toward midnight the chief defense attorney, former State Senator Clint Small, packed up his briefcase and retired for the night. His two assistants, Clint Small, Jr., and Rogan Giles, Bascom's son, remained to wait out the verdict.

At 12:24 a.m. the jury knocked again, and this time they were ready. The crowd had thinned out, but about 75 persons remained in the courtroom. The television newsreel floodlights came on for the first time, and Betts, taking his seat, blinked at the lights before turned to the jury as it filed in.

Giles and his wife and son took seats facing the jurors. They had

(Continued on Page 5)

MR. AND MRS. BASCOM GILES
Leaving the Courthouse After Hearing the Verdict

Dr. Masters on Race

KILGORE

For twenty years, Dr. B. E. Masters was Kilgore's leading educator. Now he is its leading champion of segregation in the schools.

After retiring from the presidency of Kilgore Junior College, he made a special trip to Mississippi to study the anti-integration councils that have formed there to bring economic pressure to bear against Negroes and progressive whites.

As the temporary chairman of the Kilgore council, he got most of the first statewide publicity. He says he didn't like it, but "they came to me and thought I could do it." The powers in Kilgore who are really behind the council like him to do most of the talking.

He is a slight man, with the veins of age in his cheeks, a prominent nose, a thin layer of white hair, parted at the side and combed, but with a strand down across his forehead. For an hour he explained his racial theories to the Observer in the lobby of the Kilgore Hotel. He was wearing a white dress shirt and a charcoal, lightly striped tie. He talks to you from his profile, his eyes cast forward and down, his nose dominating.

A Baptist deacon for 25 years, he believes that the scattering of the people from the Tower of Babel to the far corners of the world was the decisive racial act of God. And that when Noah sent forth his three sons, one went to Africa and fathered there a "backward race," the Negroes.

"The Nordics, the Northern Europeans, they weren't heard of until Christ," he says. "Oh, the Greeks, they were Caucasian, and the Egyptians, but they weren't Nordic. We were a hardy band, cruel sometimes, at first. The English and French, they're our blood brothers, our parents. Just one went one way and one the other. Scandinavians, all Northwestern Europe—the Nordics." He said the last phrase with satisfaction, nodding his head.

Admires the Germans

Since he has been a college president, his approach is "scholarly."

"I traced back the races," he says, "the ethnologists, and, of course, the anthropologists. I found out that there's no history of a mixed race that ever showed much power and held it. Now you take Russia, well," (he looked around the lobby to see if anybody was near enough to hear, then rushed it out word atop word), "Genghis Khan went in there with a million men and raped every woman in Russia. They're all mixed up now. Germany! Germany — there's your race, son, there's your race. If they hadn't got off Christianity and got on that philosophy . . . well, they're getting armed and strong again. They're great people, unmixed—largely unmixed." (He paused a minute.) "There're a lot a nigger babies over there now. It's bad."

All the talk about integration of the schools is, to Masters, merely a

(Continued on Page 4)

This was presented by John Wheeler in a w.

A REPORT

To The

North Carolina Legislature

By

A Group of Representative Negro Citizens

Drawn from Various Parts of North Carolina

To The Honorable Members of the Legislature:

We appreciate the opportunity of appearing before you to present our views concerning legislation which has been proposed to you by the North Carolina Advisory Committee on Education to the Governor, the General Assembly, the State Board of Education, County and local School Boards of North Carolina.

Our group is composed of many of the same persons who appeared before the Joint Committees on Education of the House and Senate during the 1955 Legislature to discuss the bills which were before you at that time. We have come to Raleigh again because of the deep concern which the Negro citizens of North Carolina have in preserving the uniform public school system of which we are justly proud. As before, our group is an unorganized body of individuals from various parts of North Carolina. Most of these persons, however, are identified with major organizations located within our State. The Grand Master of Free and Accepted Prince Hall Masons, the Executive Secretary of the North Carolina Teachers Association, the President and Secretary of the General Baptist State Convention, the President of the North Carolina Federation of Women's Clubs, the editors of North Carolina's three Negro weekly newspapers, the North Carolina correspondent of the Pittsburg Courier, a member of the State Executive Committee of the Democratic Party, members of the Judiciary and Senatorial Committees of the Party, three Negro members of City Councils in North Carolina, two Bishops presiding over Conferences of the AME and AME Zion Churches and numerous business and professional men, and labor leaders are in our group.

Except for our appearance before the 1955 Legislature and except for the counsel of three Negro employees of the State of North Carolina who were appointed to the original Advisory Committee on Education by Governor William B.Umstead, the deliberations by State officials and the Legislature, having to do with school problems occasioned by the United States Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954 and its implementing decree of May 31, 1955, have not had the benefit of the thinking of North Carolina's one million Negro citizens who constitute one-fourth of the state's population. These loyal citizens are vitally interested in securing the best possible education for all of the people and are hopeful that we shall maintain a record of continued progress for our state. We, therefore, appear before you in a spirit of good will to make our point of view on pending legislation a matter of record and to ask your earnest and thoughtful consideration of the material which we shallpresent to you.

Our immediate concern is with the bills proposed by the Legislative Advisory Committee on July 13, 1956. These bills seek to alter the effect upon our public schools of the March 17, 1954 decree of the United States Supreme Court and propose specifically; (1) To amend Article IX of the Constitution of North Carolina so as to authorize education expense grants and to authorize local option to suspend operations of public schools; (2) To provide for education expense grants for private schooling of children whose parents may be dissatisfied with their assignment to a public school attended by a child of another race; (3) To provide for local option to suspend operations of the public schools by vote of the people based upon action of the local school board or upon petition of at least 15% of the registered voters of the local unit, and presumably at such time as a Federal Court order may have required the admission of a Negro child to a school attended by white children, and (4) To amend G.S. 115-166 relating to compulsory school attendance in such manner as to permit children to remain out of school by agreement of their parents and local school boards.

I

EFFECT OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION UPON OPERATION OF THE NORTH CAROLINA PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEM

After careful study we are convinced that instead of preserving our schools, the plans described and authorized by these bills will actually undermine and destroy the public school system which North Carolina has supported wholeheartedly and which we have spent more than sixty years in developing to its present state of excellence. We also believe that the proposed legislation is unsound, impracticable, and does not comply with the Mandate of the United States Supreme Court with reference to segregation in the public schools.

Throughout the years North Carolina has been known as a progressive state and our record of progress is one of which we are indeed proud. It is noteworthy, however, that although proponents of these bills have conducted an intensive sales program of convincing the people of North Carolina that they are necessary for the preservation of our school system, at no time have they been advertised as being designed to improve the quality of education offered by our public schools. A distinguished citizen of our state has described the plan as a "Long Step Backward"; one newspaper editor describes it as a "Plan for Greater Trouble"; another editor urges us to look at the plan honestly and states that "it is a plan to evade compliance with the Supreme Court decision against segregation; it is not a plan for gradual compliance with the decision; it is a plan that holds out ... a false hope--that North Carolina somehow will be able to maintain its segregated schools on and on and without defying the law of the land". In our own opinion, the passage of these bills will open a veritable Pandora's box of undesirable forces of reaction and prejudice capable of destroying the present school system and tearing down such standards of educational efficiency as we have been able to build through great sacrifice and effort.

As proud as we are of our present system of public schools, it should be sobering to North Carolina to know that the best we have been able to do is not enough to place us in a competitive position with school systems of more progressive states of our nation. In this respect we quote from our report made to you during the month of February, 1955 which states that:

> "Many recent reports have called attention to the low efficiency with which North Carolina operates its 121 million dollar a year public school system. One such report is that developed in 1947 by the well-seasoned researcher and President Emeritus of Iowa State College, Raymond Hughes and his able associate, William Lancelot. Lancelot and Hughes compared the 48 states on the basis of commonly accepted measures of educational ability, educational effort and educational accomplishment. According to these authors, North Carolina ranked 44th among the states in ability to support education, 27th in effort put forth, but 40th in accomplishment.[1] They point out that the state receives a relatively small income for school purposes and has many children to educate; that only nine states devote a larger percentage of income to education, but that the effort goes unrewarded due to too many small schools, too many small school systems, and the dual system within the small systems. Thus, North Carolina makes a great financial sacrifice for a relatively small accomplishment."

As to our legal responsibility, there seems to be a mistaken impression in our state that the word "integration" is not to be found anywhere in the decision of the United States Supreme Court. We wish, however, to call attention to the May 17, 1954 decision which quotes liberally from the court below in the Kansas Case of Brown vs the Board of Education as follows:

> "Segregation of white and colored children in public schools has a detrimental effect upon the colored children. The impact is greater when it has the sanction of the law; for the policy of separating the races is usually interpreted as denoting the inferiority of the Negro group. A sense of inferiority affects the motivation of a child to learn. Segregation with the sanction of law, therefore, has a tendency to retard the educational and mental development of Negro children and to deprive them of some of the benefits they would receive in a racially integrated school system."

---

[1]Lancelot and Hughes, Education: America's Magic. Ames: Iowa State College Press, 1947, pp. 33-34.

The Court also states:

"To separate them (Negro pupils) from others of similar age and qualifi cations solely because of their race generates a feeling of inferiority as to their status in the community."

And at another point:

"That separate educational facilities are inherently unequal."

In other words, segregation per se in public education is in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. In addition to the foregoing, it is to be noted that the decree issued on May 31, 1955 incorporates the entire 1954 decision by reference and the Court states that the defendants in these cases must made "A prompt and reasonable start toward our May 17, 1954 ruling," and that once such a start has been made the burden rests upon the State or local unit to establish that additional time is necessary in the public interest and that it is consistent with "good faith compliance at the earliest practicable date."

We submit to you, therefore, that these bills are moving in the opposite direction to that prescribed by the Supreme Court of the United States. Instead of good faith compliance, they constitute obvious evidence of bad faith, and can be the source of long periods of needless and expensive litigation. It is here that we urge you to reconsider the proposed legislation and to vote against its passage, first, because, besides posing a threat to the continued existence of our public school system, they are obviously not intended as a device for improving the efficiency of the schools; and secondly, they are in direct opposition to the Mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States and show evidence of bad faith and defiance of the supreme law of the land.

II

THE PLACE OF CHILDREN AND TEACHERS IN THE PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Through accident or by design, the bills on education that this legislature is asked to consider, fail to take into account the influence of the proposed action upon the quality of education provided for North Carolina's children. Rather, the bills seek to make parents shoulder the responsibility for making the decision as to who shall attend school with their children. It is a matter of record that this decision has already been made. It was made when American citizens committed themselves to the task of building our democracy; it was re-affirmed when we fought two wars in one generation for democracy; and it was again re-affirmed when the matter of segregation was referred to the Supreme Court of the land. To suggest that this question is yet to be decided is not only a direct denial of our democratic way of life and the authority of the court, but it saddles citizens with the responsibility of deciding whether or not democracy can be rejected at will by individuals. Adults should not be forced to take roles in the lives of children that restrict the child's opportunity to accept and gain faith in democracy. Admittedly, children need the counsel and advice of their parents as they build a world that they must life in and take responsibility for long after their elders have passed. But, to assure children one day that the democratic way is the best way and to reject the very foundation of democracy the next day by exhibiting doubt about basic individual rights in our way of life, will confuse children. One of the basic premises in the proposed tuition plan is that no child shall be forced to attend a school attended by a child of another race. This premise is unsound (1) because it provides for the separation of races in defiance of the Supreme Court; (2) because it discourages even gradual compliance as recommended by the court and requested by the southern states; and (3) because it has been held by the Court that separate schools can never be equal. There is hardly any way to explain to a child why he is being shifted from school to school and why he cannot attend school with any children in his neighborhood without confusing that child and shaking his faith in adult leadership. Children learn the importance of wise and effective adult leadership only as they watch adults behave. None of us has any right to expect a better world for ourselves and our children than we are actually striving to create.

The urgent need today, throughout the world, is to learn the ways of cooperation. Among the 200,000 babies who are born every 24 hours, one in four is white and all the rest are colored. Modern means of travel and communication along with close dependence of one nation on another, make it imperative for our economic survival that our children learn to accept and respect all people regardless of their color. They cannot learn this as long as they are forced to live apart from the people they are expected to know, to deal with, and to cooperate with. We have become our brother's keeper whether we like it or not and even if the adults of past generations have fumbled the matter of race relations, there is little wisdom in continuing to fumble and confuse this matter. Everybody in all sections of the world is beginning to learn the facts about the effects of segregation on a group's economy as well as on the minds and hearts of both the minority and the majority groups. One of these facts is that no group can hope to continue to hold another group in an inferior position. Any short-term gains of the majority, such as cheap labor, exploitation of the minority in business deals, and special privileges, are known to backfire everytime in the form of substantial losses in regional or state wealth, prestige, self-respect, and participation in the larger economy.[1] Thus, the pay-off for segregated schools will be as it always has been, except more so, loss in educational efficiency, in economic power, and in moral strength. We cannot afford to handicap another generation by insisting on segregation in the schools.

Over the years, intelligance and achievement tests have invariably shown that southern children, Negro and white, perform at a lower level than groups of children of like age and grade in other sections of the country. White children as a group do better than Negro children as a group, although there is much overlapping when individual scores are compared. Up to the third grade, little or no difference has been found in the performance of the two groups of children. But after the third grade, because of segregated schools, the difference between the scores of the two groups gets wider and wider, in favor of the white child. However, when the white southern child is compared with white children in other sections of the country, the same kind of difference is observed, but this time in favor of children who are not southerners. This same differential can be seen in the percentage of army rejections, the scores of teachers on examinations for teachers, and in level of performance of southerners in industrial jobs. This state of affairs can be laid directly at the doors of our schools, Negro and white, that have short-changed both groups on their education in a defenseless effort to maintain the costly duplications in a segregated public school system. It has been shown repeatedly that two school systems, one white, and one colored, have the effect of lowering the quality of education in both systems. The State does not have enough money to operate two separate school systems. How then can it expect to efficiently operate three systems, one white, one Negro, and one private? This practice is bound to create greater inequality in educational opportunity for both white and Negro children. It is difficult enough to enforce state school standards in public schools and it will probably not be possible at all to enforce the standards in private schools that do not now exist and which are not likely to exist because of clearly unsurmountable legal obstacles. Under these circumstances, it would be foolhearty for any parent, white or Negro, to withdraw his child from a public school system, taking in exchange and impoverished, inaccessible, and unaccredited school, manned by teachers who have no tenure, no retirement benefits, and no opportunity to plan an educational program, except from day to day. Our nation is in desperate need of trained workers and it is unwise and also unfair to the children of North Carolina to cripple them educationally simply because we do not dare to remove the cause for their inadequate education.

---

[1] Milton Gordon and John Roche, "Segregation -- A Two Edged Sword", New York Times Magazine, April 25, 1954.

Not only is the effect of the proposed bills on the lives of children ignored but many teachers, principals, and top-flight educators in our state have been pressured into silence on these matters. No teacher who understands and loves children would deny any child the right to be educated to its full capacity. Teachers know that children are different but sincere teachers accept and love all children. They have to do so, to make certain that they do not fall into the practice of accepting some children in their classes and rejecting others. Within the state, teachers generally have been silent on the secregation question but as members of the National Education Association, both our Negro and our white teachers have endorsed the Association's firm stand against segregated schools. It should be clear that local options on school enrollment, tuition fees, and the chances for upsetting the morale of schools that teach democracy everyday in all grades, place an unreasonable burden on teachers and principals, whose job is to teach and guide the development of any child who presents himself to be educated for democracy. This legislature, therefore, cannot afford to take a backward step by ordering teachers and principals to be a party to something undemocratic; it cannot afford to open the way for children to learn to openly defy the law; and it cannot afford to use political pressure to make the people take responsibility for even considering circumvention of the law of the land. Change is the basic law of life but it should take place through intelligent and democratic planning rather than through schemes that obviously invite chaos, and set-backs in our efforts to perfect the American democracy.

III

THE EFFECT OF THE PROPOSED LEGISLATION UPON THE ECONOMY OF NORTH CAROLINA

Every citizen of North Carolina should be deeply concerned over the economic condition of our state which last year ranked 48th among the states in average weekly earnings paid to manufacturing employees. The effect of these bills upon our economy is therefore of vital concern to all of us especially since they are designed to perpetuate the pattern of racial segregation first in the schools and later in all types of public and private employment. At present North Carolina's greatest single industrial asset is the large source of untapped, well-schooled labor supply to be found among the one million Negro citizens who are the key to prosperity and further industrial growth within our state. The only way in which this asset can be fully utilized, however, is under an integrated way of life in which the measure of a person's eligibility to hold a given job or position shall be his ability and not his race. The experience of other states proves that the secret of learning to work together in a satisfactory manner and in a spirit of good will and understanding lies in early training of all races together in the schools. It should be apparent, therefore, that our future prosperity depends almost entirely upon the extent to which the talents of our Negro population are allowed full and unhampered development.

The present situation, however, does not present an encouraging picture. A recent study prepared by the National Urban League indicates that in fifty-eight of the industrial plants established in southern states since 1945, there are approximately one-hundred thousand employees of which only 6.2% are Negroes, more than three-fourths of whom are classified as semi-skilled or unskilled laborers. It has also been disclosed that one nationally-known electrical manufacturing corporation employs twenty-seven thousand employees in its southern plants, only 461 of which employees are Negroes. This company has expressed its dissatisfaction that local conditions have prevented it from utilizing the available talents of Negro persons living hear their plants, even though they find themselves dipping already into the dregs of the supply of competent white labor.

As further evidence that industry is become reluctant to move into states which refuse to comply with the Supreme Court decision relative to the schools, we have been authorized to quote Mr. Julius A. Thomas, Director of the Department of Industrial Relations of the National Urban League, who advises that within the last two months he has interviewed the top management of at least twenty multi-plant manufacturing corporations whose operations are nationwide in scope. At least half of these corporations have stated frankly their reluctance to construct additional plant facilities in those southern states where local conditions prevent them from following the same non-discriminatory employment policies followed by their plants elsewhere in the United States. These concerns have also indicated that they are running the risk of losing government contracts for products to be manufactured in their southern plants because they are unable to observe the non-discriminatory hiring policies required by the President's Committee on Government Contracts.

By inquiry from other sources we learn that numerous gigantic corporations in the fields of paper manufacturing, electrical manufacturing, chemicals, roofing, shoes, etc., have halted their consideration of plans for new southern plants. One of these companies is reported to be extremely unhappy over four large plants which are now being built in North Carolina and Virginia. Another concern is now constructing in Omaha, Nebraska a plant designed to employ four thousand persons. This plant was originally planned for one of the cities in the Piedmont section of North Carolina but was moved to Omaha because of local customs and restrictions on the employment policies used by the company in its other plants. In addition, usually reliable sources of information have verified for us the contents of a recent article by Miss Sylvia F. Porter, well-known financial writer, who stated that one of the reputable Factory Locating Services in New York City has been told by approximately twenty of its large industrial clients that they are no longer interested in locating new plants in those southern states which are trying to hold to a pattern of racial segregation in their schools and in industry.

It should be evident, therefore, that the pattern which we follow in respect to our schools leads also to economic suicide for the entire state. Not only are our prospects poor for obtaining new industries but we stand to lose some of the industry which is already located in our state but whose management is dissatisfied with the present employment pattern and is also fearful that the children of its key personnel may not be able to obtain satisfactory schooling within the state, The needless hysteria generated by certain forces within the state is indeed regrettable, especially when North Carolina has traditionally been blessed with enlightened and progressive leadership. This hysteria, however, has not blinded the vision of many industrial leaders and thoughtful citizens of our state who do not favor enactment of the proposed bills and who are deeply concerned lest our extreme reluctance to adhere to democratic principles shall surely lead us to economic ruin.

IV

NORTH CAROLINA MUST MAKE ITS CHOICE

Based upon the material which we have brought to your attention, we are convinced that North Carolina is faced with the task of choosing the course which it will follow in the future. Assuredly, our choice must be a wise one calculated to lead us to prosperity and an amicable relationship between all of the people of our state. It should be apparent, however, that our great potential power for growth must be developed fully and to such an extent that we may compete effectively with other regions of the country in industry and education. Shall we choose the path which leads to new productive capacity for North Carolina industries, increased consumer purchasing power, and general prosperity, or shall we follow the reactionary trail which will cripple the industries which we now have and stop the flow of new industries into our state?

In the field of public education shall we develop our public schools in such manner as to provide white and Negro technicians who are competent and who have learned to work together in an efficient manner, or shall we reduce the public school system to a loosely knit unaccredited group of make-shift private institutions located in lodge halls and various kinds of abandoned buildings?

As we see it, it is within the power and wisdom of this Legislature to chart a course of progress for North Carolina and we urge that after considering the reactionary nature of the proposed legislation, you will decide that you do not want to be known as the Legislature which turned back the clock of progress in the history of our state. On the other hand, we are hopeful that the more wise, experienced and competent members of this body will give consideration to the great benefits to be derived from a positive and direct approach to the problems relating to our public schools.

To accomplish the desegregation of our public school system will require patience and understanding by all of the people. It will also require that the lines of communication between the races will be opened to free discussion and cooperative planning although such has not been the case since May 17, 1954. We respectfully submit that it is hard to conceive of the appointment of an Advisory Committee to the Governor and to the Legislature without the inclusion of representative Negro citizens on the Committee. It has also been difficult for us to understand why the present Advisory Committee in December, 1955 addressed a confidential letter to 174 local school superintendents suggesting that they halt "for the time being" further activity by local interracial advisory committees w ho at the time were studying problems of school segregation in their respective communities.

It is doubtful that the Legislature and the Governor of the State are aware of the extent to which we have failed to utilize the talents and opinions of the competent Negro citizens who are to be found within our state. Evidence of our failure in this respect to establish adequate lines of communication can be observed by a casual study of the personnel of the eighty-seven agencies, boards and commissions appointed by the Governor or the Legislature and having the responsibility of determining policy and making regulations concerning virtually every phase of life in North Carolina. Although the total membership of these boards exceeds 1100 persons, the Governor and Legislature have seen fit to appoint only four Negro citizens to membership on these agencies exclusive of twelve other Negro citizens who are minority members of the Board of Trustees of the four State-supported Negro colleges. While it is true that the late Governor Umstead appointed three Negro citizens to the original Advisory Committee on Education and that each of them signed the Committee's report, it is generally believed that they did so because they were employees of the State of North Carolina and did not feel free to submit a minority report. This view is supported by a statement just received from Dr. J. W. Seabrook, distinguished retiring President of Fayetteville State Teachers College, who advises that he and the late Dr. F. D. Bluford, President of A & T College tried in vain to have the original Advisory Committee recommend a policy of compliance with the Supreme Court decision taking into account the necessity for adequate time within which to overcome local difficulties of custom, sentiment and administration. He was disappointed to find, however, that most of the Committee disagreed with him and doubted that he could speak for the majority of the Negroes in North Carolina. It is also a well know fact that until his death, Dr. Bluford, another member of the original Committee, resisted all official entreaties for him to make a public statement in support of a program of voluntary school segregation.

Could it possibly be that the position taken by these men has engendered a feeling that it is useless to discuss our school problems with members of the Negro race? Certainly, we do not believe this to be the case and we come today offering our counsel and pledging patience and understanding in any effort which is designed to place the operation of our public school system in compliance with the requirement of the United States Supreme Court's decision that we shall make a "prompt and reasonable start toward full compliance with the May 17, 1954 rulinh"

Ladies and Gentlemen of the Legislature, your rendezvous with Destiny makes it incumbent upon you to put North Carolina back into the forward march of progress in human relations.

One of the great editorial writers of this State wrote during the 1930 depression that "North Carolina's destiny is as high and as free asNorth Carolina's courage will let it be." It is a part of your randezvous with destiny that a practical, legal, and amicable solution be found to the problem of providing a uniform and non-discriminatory system of public education for all children.

There have been delays and understandable difficulties in facing up to this problem, but this, too, is a part of our Destiny. Since the basic Law of Life is Change, North Carolina can accomplish the integration of our society intelligently, peacefully, and with a minimum of social conflict if we but plan nobly and courageously, utilizing the highest intelligence of all groups concerned.

It is clear that we cannot continue to advance into the complexities of tomorrow with the duplicities of today. Within the memory of those of us here, there have been radical changes in scientific developments and industrial advances that would have startled our imaginations when we were younger. The changes in human relations are likewise inevitable.

The people of North Carolina have proved on countless past occasions their abilities to meet the challenge of change.

It is not yet too late to get in the march of progress and compliance. Intelligent self-interest of the citizenry of North Carolina demands that we move in the direction of compliance. In compliance, we can find the road to a better economic life for our people. We can raise the living standards of all North Carolinians by using the cooperative intelligence and human resources latent in our leaders at community levels and in our research specialists in the universities, as well as in the business, professional and religious leadership which surrounds us on every turn.

The Negro Press

A GREAT DEAL has been said and written about the Negro press in the last year or two, but few white people have actually bothered to read it. And this includes a number of the writers who, in leading magazines and newspaper columns, have presumed to put the race press on warning. In most cases, what they have actually known about the Negro press, or truly understood, has been superficial. They have seen a number of blatant headlines which irate white readers or clipping services have mailed to them; they have bought a few issues of these newspapers and read them with a mounting indignation that passed all understanding; and those few who actually read the Negro press consistently over a long period have had the experience of watching it grow too big and tough for the focus of their prejudiced visions. They have accused the Negro press of creating something to which it has only given expression: the American Negro's drive for the freedoms, rights, privileges and human happiness for which the war itself is being fought.

An excellent, concise history of the race press, by Dr. W. E. B. DuBois of Atlanta University, has appeared recently in The Chicago Defender. It begins in 1827, when Samuel Cornish, first Negro graduate of an American college, and a man named John B. Russworm started The Freedman's Journal. The Negro journals didn't amount to much for a long time. The best ones were organs of personal opinion for individual editors, and the worst were scandal sheets and shakedowns. When the race press gained maturity, it began to feature personal news, so that Negroes might read of their friends in other cities.

The First World War brought a great change. Negroes demanded real news of Negroes in the war and the war's effect upon race issues. The Associated Negro Press and other agencies were formed, and the larger papers began to make sizable budgets for news-gathering. During the war, Dr. DuBois was editor of a weekly magazine, The Crisis. He had access to information, which none of the other journals could get, about the treatment of Negro soldiers in Washington, in Southern camps, and in France. In one month the magazine's circulation jumped to over 100,000, an extraordinary accomplishment for a small journal with meager backing. It is this same understandable hunger for wartime race news which is booming Negro newspapers today. A Negro buys a Negro paper to find out what happens to Negroes. If there are strong stories to tell, he wants them served up strong. Westbrook Pegler, Virginius Dabney and other critics have attacked the Negro press for giving the news a race slant and thereby damaging Negro morale. Race news in a great majority of cases is given the race slant right at the source. It is given a race slant, for example, by the big army generals who sit around a table in the War Department and turn down requests for experimental mixed units of white and black volunteers; requests emanating from responsible sources such as Bishop Bernard Sheil of Chicago, who came to his views on the race issue from observing the way mixed groups worked together in the athletic clubs of his diocese. In most cases where war stories have proved damaging to Negro morale, the damage was accomplished before the papers hit the street. When the crucial FEPC railroad hearings into the glaring discrimination against Negro firemen were canceled, the damage was accomplished as Paul McNutt announced the cancellation. It was foreordained the moment President Roosevelt accepted the word of a group of politicians and plausible Southerners in Washington who told him that righting a wrong against a group of Negro railroad firemen was going to hurt the war effort. This is how stories get race-angled.

The race press has grown up to fill a need as important to the Negro as the home-town paper to any white man. Since the World War, it has become an important implement of the Negro minority in making its pressure effective. The glaring light of publicity which the Negro press has focused for twenty years on crimes like lynching has been in good measure responsible for their decline. It was easier for white groups to get away with these things when a Negro could be swallowed up and no more heard of him, except for the muttered talk of his terrified friends.

Everybody knows about the five Sullivan brothers who were lost on a warship in the Pacific. We have all seen their pictures, five fine-looking young white men. The navy named a destroyer after the Sullivans. Does everybody know about the five Holden brothers who died on the battleship Arizona at Pearl Harbor? They were five of nine brothers in military service. It happened fifteen months ago. I read about it last week in The Chicago Defender. The Defender picked up and headlined a brief Associated Press story by John Moroso. The details were obscure and it took an AP reporter stationed with the Atlantic fleet to dig up a story that happened in the Pacific. The navy doesn't make heroes out of Negroes, nor do white newspapers.

How many white people know who Dorie Miller is? The name means as much to Negroes as Colin Kelly's does to white newspaper readers. The Negro press has built up more war morale with Dorie Miller's story than official Washington tears down in a month. He was the Negro messman who quit being a cook at Pearl Harbor and grabbed a machine gun. With bombs crashing, and terror and excitement in the air, Dorie Miller wanted to fight with a gun, like everybody else. And he did, against standing orders. The story was told with approval in the white press, along with the hundreds of other stories that came out of Pearl Harbor. At first the navy wouldn't reveal his name. The Negro press had to work hard to get it. Finally Dorie Miller got a medal, and the Negro people got a hero they could feel proud of.

When a nineteen-year-old gets a Ph.D. from Chicago, they are proud of him and want the details; when the body of a Negro soldier, hands tied, is found hanging from a tree at Fort Benning, they are enraged; when the first Negro captain of an American freighter takes her through the submarines, they want to know; when a radio show reveals a Negro in the character of a self-respecting human being, they want to thank the director; when the President's valet goes into the navy they want a bigger story than The New York Times or The Richmond Times-Dispatch can give them; when young Lt. Maria August, RN, of Atlanta, arrives in North Africa with thirty white nurses, they want to know; when William Thaddeus Colemen, brilliant Harvard law student, goes into the army they want to read about it. All these things affect them in their personal feelings as Negroes, and make them furious or proud. Why? Because they are a Jim-Crowed minority who, brought here long ago against their wishes, have never been allowed to feel that they were just the same as other Americans. When they achieve the integration into our national life for which the race press is crusading, then the race press as it exists today will have served its purpose, and must either disappear or begin to operate from a non-racial basis. But this change cannot be achieved by pious lectures from white newspaper editors. A fundamental change in the attitude of white Americans has got to precede it. When the white Southern editors state flatly that the Negroes must always expect to be segregated in the South, then these editors must always expect to be confronted by a segregated Negro press.

When a squat little redneck, with none of the graces he says are inherent in his race, gets up in the Senate and proposes that 13,000,000 people—who for three centuries spilled their sweat into the American earth—be torn away from it and sent to the fever coast of Africa, Negroes want their press to call him a liar, a thug and a cheat. They don't want him handled with calm disdain, as The New York Times might handle him. They know what he is. They want to see it in print, or as near to it as possible under the libel laws. When they put out ten cents for their weekly budget of current reading they also want the details of spicy Negro divorce cases and bloody crime stories. White critics have hammered this aspect of the Negro press as though they have never seen the white newspapers which built up circulations in the millions by featuring sex and crime. And in fairness it should be pointed out that it is not these stories but political news which the race press features. The Negro press goes out to cooks, servants, elevator boys and truck drivers. Not exclusively, but almost so; 95 percent of the race are classed as laborers. They are fighting their way up, but what they have been able to win as a group, against the odds, in the fields of education, money and mores, is not high when looked at from the white end of the telescope. They wouldn't buy a black New York Times if one were available. As a matter of fact, there are a few Negro newspapers—when things like drive, courage, purpose and readability are taken into consideration with The Times's vaunted thoroughness and propriety—that I would rather read than The Times. More than one white man has picked up a Negro newspaper to scoff and remained to read, and to read with a sense of discovery. Rose Wilder Lane, author of "Free Land" and other books, who never saw a Negro until she was fully grown, took a look at the race papers because such a controversy was being raised about them. The hard-hitting, fighting columns were a new experience. She became an avid reader and finally a columnist herself. She writes a column in The Pittsburgh Courier and she has never enjoyed any writing more than this.

When a white man first reads a Negro newspaper, it is like getting a bucket of cold water in the face. There is hardly a white man alive—whether a product of the Emerson tradition and the abolitionist soil of Harvard, or whether of the Mississippi Delta—who is not a ruddy sahib in his heart. If we get to understand this fact about ourselves, we can disarm it. It would do many a Southerner and many a South-hating Yankee sahib a lot of good to take a look at the Negro press. They won't get their accustomed deference in the Negro press. The Negro writers, over and over, in all possible variations, with a variety of tones and shadings, with none of the ambiguous and deceitful language by which hard facts are softened in the white press, tell the Negro exactly what the white man is doing for him and to him. It is not a bad thing for a white man to see how he looks through Negro eyes, and it is even better for him to try to understand why it is so.

In his first two columns on the Negro press printed about a year ago, Pegler, the great foul-blow artist of our time, even criticized the race press because it derived much of its advertising income from rackets like magic-powder companies, purveyors of love secrets, hair-straighteners and race books. Where would he have them go for their income? Negro purchasing power is low and the press simply cannot get high-grade advertising. It takes what it can get. The white press has passed through the same phase. Pegler also found the writing in the Negro newspapers undistinguished. If he did, he confined himself to police-court stories. But probably he only skimmed through a few papers before writing his article. His statements were so unfair and vulnerable that he reopened the subject in a later column, took some of it back in effect, and gave the Negro people a few encouraging pats on the back. But the knifing had done real damage, and set off a whole train of critical articles.

The best writing in the Negro press is found in the numerous signed columns which all of the papers feature; the next best in the unsigned editorials. The news stories are not literature, but they are very often vivid with the hard, lean structure which is one of the few virtues a news story can have as a form of writing. Some of them are sloppy. Their editorializing is open and frank, when it occurs, which is pretty frequently. Editorializing in white newspapers is more subtle, but it occurs just as constantly.

These columnists are fighting for Negro equality; they are fighting the white people who oppose it and the Negroes who show no heart for the fight. In some of their columns, fierceness is apparent in every sentence. In others it lies beneath a calm and subtle prose, and sometimes dullness. The white reader will not find dullness very often. Almost everything in the Negro press will be new to him, or if not new, written in a strange new key. Sometimes these columnists are inaccurate with facts and careless in their attitudes. But the white reader must be careful about what he allows to anger him, for there is a vast amount of raw, solid fact which they handle well within the bounds of accuracy, and which the white reader simply has got to gulp down and let it educate him. There is one flavor of the white press fortunately absent from the Negro: the dreary, pedestrian writing of men who are bored with their jobs. There are a lot of white columnists and reporters who are drawing pay today on writing they did in the 1920's, and their weariness is inescapable. The white reader doesn't find this weariness in the Negro columnists. They live and write at the beginning of a new era for their people, and they are swept along by it.

In my opinion, George S. Schuyler, who writes in The Pittsburgh Courier, is about the best. He is a clear and vivid writer. Sometimes he writes with a mordant sarcasm, but he does not let it unbalance the order of his ideas. And he hammers what seems to me the soundest line of all: that the Negro's natural friend, and natural ally, is the white worker, and that the two should strive for a unity of purpose in the labor movement.

Critics of the race press fail to mention the better-conduct campaigns. Those who can gloss over this effort of Negro writers to arm their people with the tools of morality and dignity are prejudiced indeed. Week after week papers like The Pittsburgh Courier and The Chicago Defender have carried thousands of words lecturing Negroes on their behavior. They have campaigned against loud clothes, loose personal habits, cursing, drinking, laxness at work. They have warned that race immaturity will lose the Negroes' newly won jobs after the war is over. No white newspaper could be more frank. The Courier carries a front-page box on the subject. Joseph D. Bibb, in The Courier, one of the first to pursue this theme, and Lucius C. Harper, in The Defender, have written brilliant columns.

Enoc P. Waters, reporter for The Chicago Defender, has written the best series on the South and the wartime race problem that has been written. It is still running. He has dug for information in the good places and he has dug deep. By any standards, he is a first-rate reporter. The editorial page of The Norfolk Journal and Guide is one of the best in the country and Arthur Davis, whose column appears on the page, has written columns defending the Negro press that were far better writing and reasoning than the attacks. It is unfortunate that few white people will ever see them.

These few accolades are based on no inclusive judgment of Negro writers. There are many outstanding columns and newspapermen which have not been mentioned and many which I don't even know about. Furthermore, there are a whole lot of brickbats which would have to be thrown along with the bouquets in any criticism of individual writers. Many of the gossip columns, for instance, seem to me vulgar and immature, with lower standards, if possible, than the usual gossip columns in the white press. I have seen a number of columns which might well have been rejected by the editors as part of the better-conduct campaign.

The fundamental weakness of the Negro press is its strong tendency to overcompensate. Where Negro achievement is slighted in the white press, it is often overpraised in the race press. Negro crime is apt to be given subjective and apologetic treatment. Most white newspapers in New York have overplayed and emphasized recent robberies and assaults in Harlem, suggesting that race, rather than deplorable social conditions, was responsible. The Negro press in New York has been carried to another extreme in its reaction against these stories. They have counter-attacked the white man on the basis of his own criminal record, and have tried to explain away Harlem's numerous recent crimes instead of discussing both the existence of these crimes and their causes. Where the Negro race is systematically disparaged in the white press (frequently unintentionally or through ignorance) and the white man given the benefit of every doubt, the reverse is true in the Negro press. There are two ways of looking at such overcompensation; one is to say superficially that its fundamental cause is the white man's treatment of the Negro; but it is far more important to the Negro people and to the goals they hope to achieve that the men who write for the Negro press try to rise to a larger point of view than the eye-for-an-eye philosophy. It will take this sort of greatness on the part of the Negro's leaders to carry the fight for him against enormous odds.

Racism is a bad game no matter who plays it. Despite such outspoken features as the better-conduct campaigns, or the fact that much of the criticism of white affairs is justified, there is an accompanying tendency to create a chauvinistic racism among the Negro people, and a feeling of subjective bitterness toward all whites. "The crafty Caucasian," writes one columnist, "seems to derive a certain sadistic delight in seeing us handicap ourselves, and he will pay us his good money to indulge us in these sordid and miserable roles" (blackface roles in radio plays). Another says, "What will it take to make her [a white woman living near the Tuskegee airfield] and the rest of the white devils of the South believe in us and let us have a fair chance?" This is a moving sentence, but calling the Southern people white devils creates destructive resentment on both sides of the color line, when an understanding of the race problem and a knowledge of the things which have to be done to solve it, are needed. Short fiction in the Negro press deals most often with lynching and white criminality. Most Southerners have become stereotyped villains with names like "Ratley" and "Stalk." This is no more inaccurate than the mawkish self-glorification which Southern newspapers and writers have engaged in for a century. It is difficult for a Negro to feel objective about a Southern society which has used him as a beast of burden for generations.

But the Negro press must learn objectivity before anything approaching a solution of the race problem can be achieved. Programs of action are needed: programs for Negroes as individuals, and programs for Negroes as political and social groups. A sound and workable attitude toward the white majority, particularly toward the Southern white people, is needed. It seems to me that the Negro press should adopt an editorial policy toward Southern affairs which coincides with the political manifesto of the group of Southern Negroes who met recently in Durham in an attempt to bring some order and reason into the unsettled field of race relations in the South. This statement outlined the Negro's aspirations for political, economic and educational equality; then, turning to the major question, it said, "We are fundamentally opposed to the principle and practice of compulsory segregation in our American society," but it acknowledged the "strength and age of these patterns of segregation." From this point it continued to furnish a thorough outline of the Southern Negro's goals and methods of procedure in industry, politics, education, agriculture and other fields. The effect of this statement has been to relieve the fears of a large section of the white South that the Negro might attempt some revolutionary political coup, under cover of the war, to abolish segregation; but at the same time, with great skill, it declared itself fundamentally against the principle of segregation and thus has left a basis for operations against this primary and fundamental injustice when the war is over and wartime fears and excitements have ebbed from the high-tide mark which they reached about the time of the Durham conference in the fall.

Most of the Negro newspapers wrote approvingly of the Durham conference. They would do well to adopt the Durham line as their own policy toward the Southern white people. It is a far cry from the Booker T. Washington line which accepted permanent humility and segregation as a basis for race relations. On the other hand it gives the Negro possible goals to work for during the war, and furnishes a positive program rather than one of vague and negative bitterness. The strength of the Durham statement is its honesty in refusing to accept the principle of segregation, and its realism in admitting segregation to be an established fact, a deeply rooted Southern institution too substantial and too much in the forefront of the thoughts of white Southerners today to be successfully resisted by Southern Negroes.

The fault of overcompensation grows out of the fact that Negro newspapers are money-making businesses: their first function is to put out a readable, and salable, product. Negro publishers are apt to be primarily business men whose interest in race welfare is secondary to their interest in selling newspapers. It is not they, but the men they hire, who make their papers worth-while; the editors, the columnists, the reporters. These are the men who are qualified to speak of the sufferings and aspirations of Negroes, for they are still part of the race. Some of their publishers have been rich men so long that they have almost forgotten what it feels like to be a Negro. The only one with whom I have become personally acquainted is as pleasant individually as his counterparts in the white publishing field. But he is also a patronage politician, a political reactionary and an anti-Semite. And I soon saw it was a travesty to speak to him about race issues. The fact that he had had to battle his way up against ruthless odds made him like this, but it did not change the fact that he was what he was. He was exactly like the majority of white newspaper publishers. His newspaper was guilty of certain faults and excesses which paralleled those of the average white newspaper. He had rounded up a good staff of writers and for that reason his newspaper was somewhat above average, by both white and Negro newspaper standards. Furthermore, its big issue was not anti-liberal, anti-labor, pro-big-business tub thumping—the pattern of most white newspapers—but advancing the cause of an abused minority in a democracy. This gave it a certain intrinsic worth which redeemed many of the faults which grew out of its commercial character. And it seems to me that this is not an unusual pattern in the Negro press.

THOMAS SANCTON

SOUTHERN
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
ATLANTA, GEORGIA
CLIPPING SINCE 1895
ORDER NUMBER
This Clipping from Savannah, Ga., News
October 4, 1948

being held in the county jail at Beaufort, but nature of charges against them was not learned.

Paul Robeson to Sing, Speak Here Tomorrow

Paul Robeson, famous negro singer and actor and one of the most ardent supporters of Henry Wallace, will speak and sing in Savannah on Tuesday evening of this week at the Municipal Auditorium before a public rally sponsored by Locals 870 and 888 of the Mine, Mill Smelter Workers Union, J. P. Mooney, MMSW international representative, announced yesterday.

Known throughout the world not only for his singing and acting, but for his association with many liberal causes, Robeson has had many honors bestowed upon him in recognition of his artistic and social contributions. These include honorary degrees from Rutgers University, Howard University, Hamilton College and Moorhouse College.

Robeson is expected to review political developments in the United States during his remarks to the rally, which will begin at 7:30 p. m. Admission is free.

SOUTHERN
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
ATLANTA, GEORGIA
ORDER NUMBER
Savannah, Ga., News
October 4, 1948

... with blond hair, blue eyes, fair complexion, and slightly protruding front teeth. He was wearing a medium blue suit with pin stripes, a white shirt, tan shoes, and blue socks.

Auditorium Incident "Shocks" J. L. Barfoot

Late last night, James L. Barfoot, Progressive party candidate for the governorship of Georgia, issued the following "personal statement" to the Morning News in regard to the incident at the auditorium:

"As a Georgia citizen and as a guest in the historic city of Savannah, I was shocked and deeply humiliated at the action of certain local authorities in refusing the people of Savannah the privilege of hearing the world renowned artist, Paul Robeson.

"In defense of our state, I would like to say publicly that I know the great majority of the people of Georgia will not approve this kind of police censorship.

"My faith in the Progressive Party's future was redoubled when the audience, colored and white, displayed a genuine reluctance to leave. Dozens of people came to me to ask if somehow the concert could not go on.

"This expression of a democratic people's will is what made Georgia great. It has enabled the Progressive Party to place its national candidates, Wallace and Taylor, on the ballot in Georgia, and it will enable the Progressive Party to place its state candidates on the ballot, thus assuring the voters a real choice in the general election November 2."

SOUTHERN
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
ATLANTA, GEORGIA
CLIPPING SINCE 1895
ORDER NUMBER
This Clipping from Savannah, Ga., News
October 1948

... or indulgence in personal attacks are not acceptable. The Morning News reserves the right to condense or reject.

Negro Dislikes Robeson Tactics

Editor Morning News:

Approximately one thousand persons gathered at the City Auditorium Tuesday night with only one objective in mind, and that was to hear Paul Robeson sing. The fact that it was rumored that he was to speak in the interest of the candidacy of Henry A. Wallace for the presidency of the United States was lost in the fact that Paul Robeson—the hero of "Emperior Jones," world traveler, famous singer, and actor, was to appear in our city.

By the strange twist of events it now appears to some of us that Robeson did not come to Savannah to sing, but that he came for the purpose of forcing us to disregard and violate our existing laws.

I have never claimed to be a leader of my race, in fact I have no leadership aspirations. I merely exercise my constitutional rights to express my opinion as I see it. But even if the intentions of our visitors were good, they adopted the wrong approach. The City Auditorium has been the scene of many great affairs which afforded equal accommodations for white and colored; among them were The Southernairs, Rolland Hayes and the Silas Green Show. The Rev. R. M. Gilbert has packed the auditorium on many occasions without the occurrence of a single unpleasant incident, and everybody went home after enjoying a pleasant evening.

But now our visitors have come to tell us that we were all wrong and our acts heretofore were "un-American." This is as a man and wife who have lived together for years peaceable and then a visitor comes in to tell them how to live. The sincerity of our visitors would be better understood if they came to us for the purpose of contributing to our educational program, and aiding us in the promotion of better race relations, rather than frustrating it.

In the event our visitors should desire to return or to go to any other section of this country, it will be well for them to remember the words of Paul, "When in Rome do as the Romans." We honor Paul Robeson as being a great educator and humanitarian but we do not believe these qualifications will justify him for his interference in our private lives, or in trying to force changes without our consent.

Savannah. L. L. SCOTT.

SOUTHERN
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
ATLANTA, GEORGIA
CLIPPING SINCE 1885
ORDER NUMBER
This Clipping from

Augusta, Ga., Herald
October 8, 1948

livestock and wholesale meat prices. As the agency issued its report, hog prices at major Midwestern markets began recovering from 25 to 75 cents of recent losses.

Robeson Meetin When Segregat

SAVANNAH. —(AP)— An estimated 1,000 persons, nearly all Negroes, who assembled Tuesday night to hear Paul Robeson sing and speak at the municipal auditorium, dispersed after announcement that the meeting would not proceed unless the audience was segregated. A few boos from the crowd followed the announcement but there was no disorder.

There were less than 50 white persons at the rally which advance notices said was to be held under the sponsorship of the Mine, Mill Smelter Workers union.

Robeson did not make an appearance as the meeting broke up before the hour he was scheduled to appear. There were a half dozen uniformed policemen in the crowd.

FOLLOWING announcement by Herschel V. Summerlin, manager of the auditorium, that the meeting could not proceed unless the audience was segregated, the crowd, after a few "boos" filed out slowly but quietly.

A spirited discusison took place between Summerlin and J. P. Mooney, international representative of the sponsoring union, as the audience left the auditorium. Mooney previously had announced to the audience that an order had been issued by the mayor and chief of police that the meeting could not go on unless the audience was segregated.

CHIEF OF POLICE Truman F. Ward denied Wednesday that police officers at the auditorium had used physical force to close the meeting.

"There was not even an ugly word spoken; no force was necessary.; not a policeman had a nightstick." Chief Ward declared in denying a report that policemen had swarmed over the auditorium and pushed speakers about.

SOUTHERN
SS CLIPPING BUREAU
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

Savannah, Ga., News
October 6, 1948

SEGREGATION RULE BREAKS UP RALLY

Robeson Schedued to Sing And Speak

CROWD PUT AT 1,000

Union Official Declines to Separate Races

The Paul Robeson rally, scheduled for 7:30 last night in the city auditorium, disbanded in an orderly fashion shortly after assembling when H. V. Summerlin, manager of the auditorium, refused to allow the curtain raised because the sponsors declined to permit segregation of whites and negroes in the seating arrange-

Mr. Summerlin said that J. P. Mooney, international representative of the Mine, Mill Smelter Workers, CIO, approached him some time ago and asked for use of the auditorium for last night for a union rally, not specifying that Robeson was to appear on the occasion.

Mr. Summerlin said he agreed to allow the auditorium to be used by Locals 870 and 888, MMSW, sponsors of the affair here. On Sunday, the auditorium manager said, after hearing that Robeson was to be present, he telephoned Mr. Mooney and reminded him of the segregation laws, upon which Mr. Mooney is said to have promised to have ushers at the auditorium last night to separate the races.

However, according to Mr. Summerlin, when the approximately 1,000 persons—about 150 of whom were said to be white—gathered, they took their seats without reference to color. Mr. Summerlin ordered stagehands not to pull the curtain until segregation was effected, whereupon Mr. Mooney took the microphone and began speaking to the audience about the "un-Americanism of the policy of segregation," reportedly stating that separation of whites and colored would not be allowed.

It was then that the auditorium manager, Mr. Summerlin, announced that the meeting could not proceed, and asked the crowd to withdraw quietly. Police Lieutenant L. S. McCord, in charge of a police detail at the auditorium, said Mr. Summerlin's request was carried out.

The auditorium manager said that he recognized few white Savannahians in the audience, and that, in his opinion, most of them were from out of town.

Groups of negroes stood quietly about in the vicinity of the auditorium for thirty or forty minutes after leaving the building. Those questioned expressed disappointment at not being able to hear Robeson sing, but no resentment at the turn of affairs. Several volunteered the statement that they were not interested in Robeson's political message, but had looked forward to his singing.

Robeson himself had not arrived at the auditorium when the meeting broke up, having been scheduled to make his appearance about 8:30 p. m.

after the preliminaries had been finished.

In a release to the Morning News late last night, the meeting's sponsors alleged that "city police forcibly broke a single man carried a nightstick then or at any other time.

Lieutenant McCord added that the lights were not cut off until the last person was out of the auditorium.

"They led us to believe right up until the last moment that they were going to practice segregation, as they had been informed long beforehand by Mr. Summerlin, by Chief Ward, and by myself that they would have to do or the meeting could not be held," the officer stated.

When one of the meeting's leaders insisted on going out in front of the curtain and trying to talk against his orders, the lieutenant said he told an officer to bring the man back. The officer so instructed only took the man by the arm and led him back, walking side by side, he added. The union statement had said the man was "seized by Detective Walker, who pushed and half carried him behind the curtain."

seats without reference to color. Mr. Summerlin ordered stagehands not to pull the curtain until segregation was effected, whereupon Mr. Mooney took the microphone and began speaking to the audience about the "un-Americanism of the policy of segregation," reportedly stating that separation of whites and colored would not be allowed.

It was then that the auditorium manager, Mr. Summerlin, announced that the meeting could not proceed, and asked the crowd to withdraw quietly. Police Lieutenant L. S. McCord, in charge of a police detail at the auditorium, said Mr. Summerlin's request was carried out.

The auditorium manager said that he recognized few white Savannahians in the audience, and that, in his opinion, most of them were from out of town.

Groups of negroes stood quietly about in the vicinity of the auditorium for thirty or forty minutes after leaving the building. Those questioned expressed disappointment at not being able to hear Robeson sing, but no resentment at the turn of affairs. Several volunteered the statement that they were not interested in Robeson's political message, but had looked forward to his singing.

Robeson himself had not arrived at the auditorium when the meeting broke up, having been scheduled to make his appearance about 8:30 p. m.

after the preliminaries had been finished.

In a release to the Morning News late last night, the meeting's sponsors alleged that "city police forcibly broke up" the session.

"City police shoved speakers from the microphone, cut off the electrical current, seized and shoved other speakers off the stage and officers swarmed over the auditorium with nightsticks as the meeting commenced," the union statement read.

"That is an absolute lie," Police Lt. L. S. McCord stated for publication when informed of the statement. "There was no force used whatever. It was not needed."

The police official said there were only five policemen at the auditorium when the meeting began and that not a single man carried a nightstick then or at any other time.

Lieutenant McCord added that the lights were not cut off until the last person was out of the auditorium.

"They led us to believe right up until the last moment that they were going to practice segregation, as they had been informed long beforehand by Mr. Summerlin, by Chief Ward, and by myself that they would have to do or the meeting could not be held," the officer stated.

When one of the meeting's leaders insisted on going out in front of the curtain and trying to talk against his orders, the lieutenant said he told an officer to bring the man back. The officer so instructed only took the man by the arm and led him back, walking side by side, he added. The union statement had said the man was "seized by Detective Walker, who pushed and half carried him behind the curtain."

SOUTHERN
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
ATLANTA, GEORGIA
CLIPPING SINCE 1895
ORDER NUMBER
This Clipping from

Albany, Ga. Herald
October 7, 1948

Hewin, Franklin, and Billy Thompson, Montgomery.

Robeson Boomed For U. S. Office

SAVANNAH, Oct. 7 (AP)—For the sake of world peace, says the Progressive Party candidate for governor of Georgia, the Negro singer Paul Robeson should be Secretary of State.

James Barfoot, the gubernatorial candidate, last night addressed a party rally at the Negro Masonic Temple, attended by a sprinkling of white persons in the audience of about 500.

With Robeson sitting nearby, Barfoot, a former teacher at the University of Georgia, declared.

"I would like to see Paul Robeson Secretary of State. No two nations of the world would go to war if he were."

The rally was not interrupted by police, who Tuesday night stopped a meeting in the City Auditorium, at which the noted Negro singer was to appear, when sponsors declined to abide by the city's segregation law. Police officials explained that since last night's meeting was in a a private building the segregation law did not apply.

Both meetings were sponsored by two locals of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union affiliated with the CIO. Union spokesmen charged the police used violent methods in halting the meeting in the City Auditorium—a charge that Police Chief Truman F. Ward stoutly denied.

Clark Foreman, a leader of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, said the officers shoved speakers from the microphone and swarmed throughout the auditorium with night sticks.

Ward replied that Savannah police have not carried night sticks for some time and reported to no violence because none was required."

Robeson received an ovation at last night's meeting.

than 250 yards from the

SOUTHERN
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
ATLANTA, GEORGIA
CLIPPING SINCE 1895
ORDER NUMBER
This Clipping from

Nashville, Tenn., Banner
December 8, 1948

E-10

Segregation Is Necessary, McGill Says

Birmingham, Ala., Dec. 8—(AP)—Editor Ralph McGill of the Atlanta Constitution says the South has brought most of its woes on itself so far as civil rights legislation is concerned.

In an dddress before the Birmingham branch of the American Association of University Women, McGill said yesterday.

"Until our Negroes are given more opportunity to acquire skills and are paid accordingly, we will be vulnerable to FEPC and held down economically."

The reason there is a demand for Congress to enact an anti-lynching law, the editor continued, is that the South has not always abided by its own laws.

"There would be no such demand if the South had always done what was recently done in Wetumpka," he said. (Two white men were sentenced to terms of 45 years last week at Wetumpka, Ala., on charges they raped two Negro women).

As for the poll tax, he said it would soon disappear, "there is no valid argument for it."

"I don't believe the South's racial and economic problems can be solved through federal controls," McGill said.

"I believe we in the South must have segregation. But we have not been honest enough to say we are going to maintain segregation because of our . . . population ratio; that, even so, in educational and public health facilities, both races will get equal treatment.

"That is why we are now vulnerable, why so-called civil rights legislation will be in troduced."

He criticized the States' Rights party as "a negative party" which is on "a dead end street politically."

SOUTHERN
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
ATLANTA, GEORGIA
CLIPPING SINCE 1895
ORDER NUMBER
This Clipping from

Savannah, Ga., News
October 21, 1948

permission to publish signature. The signature which must be that of the real name of the writer, must be accompanied by the correct address or telephone number. Discussions of race, creeds or indulgence in personal attacks are not acceptable. The Morning News reserves the right to condense or reject.

In Praise of Southern Negroes

Editor Morning News:

The excellent article by L. L. Scott in the People's Forum October 8, I believe, expresses the majority opinion of the Savannah negro population who are good Christians and real Americans.

Since the unfortunate incident at the City Auditorium several prominent negro leaders have told me that the only thought in the minds of their people was to hear Paul Robeson sing.

Those of us who live in the South well know and understand this desire on their part.

The Southern folk songs and negro spirituals are among the most beautiful music we have when rendered by the melodious voices of some of these people whose love of music is known throughout the world.

Many of these men and women proved their love and loyalty to their country and their fellowmen when they went forth on the battlefield, as soldiers and nurses, willing to make the supreme sacrifice for their country.

The exemplary manner in which these people conducted themselves at the auditorium is the best repudiation that could be given to Communism and outside interference in our section.

By their conduct they have proved that loyalty and patriotism are above race, creed and color.

In these crucial times may all of us conduct ourselves so that we may be worthy to follow in the footsteps of the Master, Whose love enfolds us all.

BYRDENA K. FALLIGANT
(Mrs. Philip L. Falligant).

Coffee Bluff.

tion for Kids

11-10-56

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

PROPOSED BUDGET

For Fiscal Year - October 1, 1956--September 30, 1957

CENTRAL OFFICE ONLY

	Budget 1955-56	Actual 1955-56	Estimated 1956-57
Income:
Contributions from Individuals, organizations, Churches, etc.	$ 14,000.00	$ 31,865.00	$ 45,970.00
Dues	500.00	356.00	350.00
New South Subscriptions	6,000.00	6,222.17	10,000.00
Sale of Literature	3,000.00	1,325.48	1,500.00
Honararia	1,000.00	1,567.80	1,000.00
Interest Income	800.00	2,432.00	1,000.00
Fund for the Republic	25,000.00	25,000.00	10,000.00
Unexpended balance in Duke and Field Funds - 1955-56	12,100.00	8,350.00	4,350.00
Unexpended Balance in Christopher Reynolds Fund - 1955-56			3,300.00
Unexpended Balance in State Funds for 1955-56			6,000.00
Surplus - Prior year	2,500.00	3,022.17
Sub-Total	64,900.00	80,140.62	83,470.00
Anticipated Revenue from other sources to balance budget	28,180.00	18,868.40	16,861.00
TOTAL	$ 93,080.00	99,009.02	100,331.00

Estimated expenditures for four months of fiscal year 1956-57 -- October 1, 1956 to January 31, 1957, in comparison with budget and actual expenditures for fiscal year 1955-56.

Expenses:	Budget 1955-56	Actual 1955-56	Proposed 10/1/56-1/31/57 4 Months	% Change in rate of Expenditures
Salaries	$ 61,600.00	63,122.74	23,317.00	10.8%
Social Security Tax	800.00	889.08	467.00	**
Travel	7,500.00	8,469.39	2,834.00
Printing New South & Postage	6,500.00	6,285.43	2,133.00
Printing - Other	2,000.00	1,146.28	400.00
Rent	1,680.00	1,680.00	560.00
Telephone & Telegraph	2,500.00	2,775.94	833.00
Postage	2,000.00	1,049.40	400.00
Books & Subscriptions	300.00	399.97	100.00
Accounting Fees & Legal	500.00	565.00	167.00
Ins. & Misc. Expense	300.00	244.61	100.00
Office Supplies & Equip.	2,900.00	2,243.45	833.00
Annual Meeting & Executive Committee Meetings	2,000.00	2,169.03	2,000.00
Special Meetings - Women's Work	2,500.00	1,000.00	2,400.00
Printing Special Pamphlet		1,004.22
	$ 93,080.00	93,044.54	36,544.00	11.0%

* Increase covers within-grades promotions for staff.

 Slight increase

FUNCTIONAL DISTRIBUTION OF EXPENSES

	Budget 1955-56	Actual 1955-56	Proposed 10/1/56-1/31/57 (4 Months)
Administration and Overhead
Salaries	$ 24,100.00	24,912.65	8,534.00
Social Security Tax	800.00	889.08	467.00
Annual Meeting & Executive Committee Meetings	2,000.00	2,169.03	2,000.00
Travel	7,000.00	8,469.39	2,667.00
Rent	1,680.00	1,680.00	560.00
Telephone & Telegraph	2,500.00	2,775.94	833.00
Office Supplies & Equipment	2,500.00	2,243.45	833.00
Postage (other than New South)	2,000.00	1,049.40	400.00
Printing (other than New South)	2,000.00	1,146.28	400.00
Audit Fees	500.00	565.00	167.00
Miscellaneous Expense & insurance	300.00	244.61	100.00
Sub-Totals	$ 45,380.00	46,144.83	16,961.00
Information Services and New South
Salaries	$ 21,750.00	22,247.78	9,299.00
New South, printing & postage	6,500.00	6,285.43	2,133.00
Envelopes, addressograph plates, etc.	400.00	(Included in Printing & Postage)
Books and Materials	300.00	399.97	100.00
Sub-Totals	$ 28,950.00	28,933.18	11,532.00
Laison - State Organizations
Salaries	$ 9,750.00	10,086.42	3,417.00
Women's Work
Salaries	$ 6,000.00	5,912.36	2,067.00
Travel	500.00		167.00
Meetings	2,500.00	1,000.00	2,400.00
Sub-Totals	$ 9,000.00	6,912.36	4,634.00
TOTAL	$ 93,080.00	92,076.79	36,544.00
Special Project *
Program Development (John Hope)
Salaries	$ 3,000.00	4,270.00	1,500.00
Consultants Travel & Fees	4,000.00	3,899.89	2,167.00
Travel	1,500.00	1,883.24	1,500.00
Total	$ 8,500.00	10,053.13	5,167.00

* Funds available from 1956 grant of $17,000.00 from New World Foundation

11/10/56

NEWS FROM
Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc.
822 Perdido St., Suite 404
New Orleans 12, La.

LWD
HMS
file

A Lane College official was arrested and fined for taking this photograph.

January 13, 1961

JACKSON, Tenn.--A college dean was arrested and fined because he photographed a Coca-Cola vending machine for "white customers only."

After Preston E. Stewart, Jr., Dean of Men at Lane College, photographed the Coca-Cola machine in Ham House, a Jackson sporting goods store, the proprietor asked him to leave. As Dean Stewart was walking to his parked automobile, the proprietor called a policeman on a nearby corner and had the Dean arrested.

Dean Stewart was charged with disorderly conduct and fined $15.00. At the trial both the policeman and the proprietor testified there was no disorder. Said Judge Holt, in concluding the case, "There is too much tension in Jackson and it must be stopped."

Attorneys for Dean Stewart were H. T. Lockard and Odell Horton of Memphis, Tennessee.

The Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc., in a letter to the president of the Coca-Cola Company concerning the incident, asked for an explanation of the company's policy with respect to discriminatory practices on the part of its distributors.

Note to Editors: In reproducing the above photograph, please give credit as follows: Photo by Preston E. Stewart, Jr., Courtesy of SCEF.

JF

Keep Public Schools, Emory Educators Ask

Sunday Journal & Const.

250 Faculty Members See Gains for Reds Otherwise

Nov. 30, 58

By KAY McLEOD

More than two-thirds of the faculty members at Emory University Saturday issued a statement opposing the closing of public schools anywhere in the nation.

They said such interruption of the education of American youth could result in the loss of an entire generation of specialists and allow communism to gain in the vital battle of education.

The Emory statement, signed by 250 of the university's 360 full-time faculty members, said that closing public schools would result in "irreparable damage . . . not only to the people of any particular community, but also to the state and nation at large."

The educators declared:

"Even a partial interruption during one year of schooling will result in a decrease during the following years of the trained specialists.

* * *

"IF SUCH an interruption continues even for a few years, the services of an entire generation . . . will be lost.

"This will amount to nothing less than willful discrimination by people of this region against themselves and their own children."

Dr. S. Walter Martin, president of Emory did not sign the statement, but said, "I do agree with the sentiment of the document."

He said he had been given a copy of the statement for information and his signature was not requested since only full time teaching faculty members were asked to sign.

Emory is concerned over the possibility of many faculty members leaving the university should public education facilities be closed to their children, Dr. Martin said.

* * *

THE STATEMENT said that "many industries will not find it possible to remain . . . where there are no stable public educational facilities for children of employes and no adequate supply of high school and college graduates for these industries.

"Furthermore, new businesses and industries will be reluctant to come to such a section. This is bound to have an unfavorable effect on the economic welfare of the state and all its citizens."

The number of trained specialists such as physicians, dentists, nurses, county agricultural agents, engineers, scientists, lawyers, librarians, clergymen and teachers would be greatly reduced should any interruption in public education be allowed, the statement warned.

"The folly of a weakened educational system cannot be afforded in the face of "Russia's systematic attempt to overawe us educationally. . . . To close the public schools in any city, county, state or region of America at this critical stage of world history is to play directly into the hands of communism," the report warned.

* * *

THE EDUCATORS said that although private schools contribute greatly to education, "both history and contemporary experience clearly indicate that the major portion of the educational load can be adequately borne only by the public school system."

Emory is a private university owned and operated by the Methodist church. There are no Negro students at the university, and no official statement has been made as to whether or not qualified Negroes would be admitted if they applied.

The Emory faculty statement, following by a week the manifesto signed by 311 Atlanta clergymen calling for preservation of public schools, makes no mention of race, segregation or integration.

* * *

SEVERAL of the Candler School of Theology faculty signed both the manifesto and the Emory statement.

Dr. Martin said Saturday a 15-man committee has been appointed to study the possibility of setting up an elementary and high

Turn to Page 6, Column 1

Sunshine Raises Hopes For Record Sales Event

By FRED HARTLEY

Saturday's crisp, sunny weather brought hordes of shoppers to Atlanta stores for the second day in a row and raised hopes that the 1958 Yuletide shopping spree is off to a record start.

Reports of Friday's sales from Atlanta merchants varied, with some posting healthy gains over last year, others reporting dips and still others holding their own. Most merchants agreed that the chill downpour in the late afternoon cut the potential total.

Rich's, Inc., reported another record-breaker for the day after Thanksgiving. For the third year in a row, sales ran above the million-dollar mark. Volume for Friday was 7 to 8 per cent over the corresponding day last year, spokesmen said.

* * *

SEARS, ROEBUCK & Co.'s main Ponce de Leon store reported a "satisfactory" day Friday and a considerable pickup in traffic Saturday.

Other retailers, observing "encouraging" crowds in their stores Saturday, believed the second day of the big sales promotion would offset any adverse effects of Friday's weather.

Merchants were virtually unanimous in the prediction that sales of the entire 1958 Christmas shopping season would exceed last year's volume.

* * *

FRANKLIN SIMON & Co. said sales there about equaled last year's. Prospects for record sales Saturday appeared "excellent," a spokesman commented.

A spokesman for Regenstein's said, "We made our day Friday, and Saturday should be a good day."

A Rich's official remarked that "never in my 18 years here have I seen such crowds. They came early and stayed late."

Rainy weather Friday was responsible for an unusually large volume of automobiles on downtown streets. These taxed parking facilities and slowed traffic flow.

Text of Statement By Emory Faculty

Here is the full text of the Emory statement:

We the undersigned, who are full-time members of the faculties of Emory University, are opposed to the closing of the public schools in any section of the United States. We wish to point out the irreparable damage that will result from the closing of public schools, not only to the people of any particular community, but also to the state and nation at large.

Every citizen should realize that even a partial interruption during one year of schooling will result in a decrease during the following years of the services of trained specialists such as physicians, dentists, nurses, county agricultural agents, engineers, scientists, lawyers, librarians, clergymen and teachers. If such an interruption continues for even a few years, the services of an entire generation in such profession and skills will be lost; and this will amount to nothing less than wilfull discrimination by the people of this region against themselves and their own children.

* * *

WE AS CITIZENS should also realize that many industries will not find it possible to remain in any section where there are no stable public educational facilities for children of employes and no adequate supply of high school and college graduates for these industries. Furthermore, new businesses and industries will be reluctant to come to such a section. This is bound to have an unfavorable effect on the economic welfare of the state and all its citizens.

Those of us who are educators are seriously concerned with the consequences of Russia's systematic attempt to overtake us educationally, an attempt that has been alarmingly successful, as recent events have indicated. We cannot afford the folly of a weakened educational system, and we can even less afford no education at all. To close the public schools in any city, county, state, or region of America at this critical stage of world history is to play directly into the hands of communism.

* * *

EVEN APART from such considerations, an interruption in public school education would detract disastrously from its role in providing our children with a comprehension of the natural world around them, in appreciation of the heritage of civilized men and an understanding of the society in which they must live.

Although private schools contribute greatly to education for democracy, both history and contemporary experience clearly indicate that the major portion of the educational load can be adequately borne only by the public school system. We therefore earnestly appeal to our fellow citizens not to allow the closing of our schools, but to save them, strengthen them and improve them.

United Press International Photo

SKYLINE SYMBOL

New York City, Nov. 29—Tower skyward as dusk falls across the city, the United Nations Secretariat Building is impressively aglow with light as another busy day draws to a close.

Scout Leader Stiles Dies in Canada

OTTAWA, Nov. 29 (AP)—Dr. John A. Stiles, 82, former head of Canada's Boy Scout movement, died in a hospital Saturday after a long illness.

Dr. Stiles resigned as dean of the faculty of applied science at the University of New Brunswick in 1919 to become assistant dominion scout commissioner. In 1930 he was appointed the first chief executive scout commissioner in this country. He retired in 1946.

Dr. Bonner President of Research Uni

Dr. J. C. Bonner, director the Department of History Georgia State College for W en, was named president of Georgia Society of Historical search Saturday.

Dr. Bonner, an outstan Georgia historian and au succeeds Miss Ida Belle liams of Swainsboro as of the society.

Also named at a meetin society at the Atlanta Club were district vice pre Dr. Spencer B. King Jr. con, Mrs. Leonard Wal Madison, Mrs. Aubrey M of Rome, Col. William Blue Ridge, Webster N Douglas, Miss Ida Belle W of Swainsboro, Dr. John of Carrollton, Mrs. Lester of Cornelia, Dr. Henry T. of Decatur and Mrs. Mary school program for the approximately 200 children of the faculty.

EMORY

Continued From Page 1

"We have so many faculty people who could get jobs anywhere else, and would, if their children did not have schools to attend. If the schools close, we will certainly try to do something for the children," Dr. Martin said.

He also said the committee is studying a proposal that Emory set up a subfreshman program to offer opportunity for some 1,000 rising seniors from Atlanta Public School System to complete their education.

Signers of the Emory Faculty statement include: W. C. Archie, dean and professor of romance languages; William Ragsdale Cannon, dean of the Candler School of Theology and professor of church history and his

Emory Faculty Signers

Here is an alphabetical list of Emory faculty that signed the school statement:

Robert E. Adamson
Joseph Airov
Allen D. Albert Jr.
Arthur T. Allen Jr.
Robert W. Allen
Thomas J. J. Altizer
Barbara Ames
William W. Amis
W. C. Archie
Orico Attauc
Patsy Atwater
Ralph Baer
James A. Bain
Woolford B. Baker
Albert Edward Barnett
Heinz Bauer
William A. Beardslee
Alvin V. Beatty
W. Duane Belt
Immanuel Ben-Dor
Francis S. Benjamin Jr.
William Bevan Jr.
O. Francis Binkley
Jack S. Boozer
Alvin Boskoff
G. H. Bourne
Boone Moss Bowen
David Brandes
George F. Brasington
Gerhard A. Brecher
William E. Brillhart
Jacqueline D. Brimmer
Ignatius W. Brock
H. Eugene Brown
Jack H. U. Brown
Reuben J. Brown
Robert L. Brown
Thomas M. Brumbaugh
Abner Golden
Jacob H. Goldstein
Chauncey G. Goodchild
Richard A. Goodling
Bruce R. Gordon
Paul J. Gordon
Cullen B. Gosnell
James A. Gould
Edward Grace
Willard H. Grant
Stephen W. Gray
Donald Ross Green
John Willis Gregory
Albert Griffin
John A. Griffin
Donald F. Groth
Joseph E. Guillebeau
Helen Hagan
Barnard L. Hallman
Mabel Hamrick
F. Lane Hardy
Marvin H. Harper
Martha Ray Harris
Charles R. Hart
Charles Hartshorne
Curry T. Haynes
Richard L. Henderson
Garland Herndon
Marion Hines
Richard Hocking
Newton C. Hodgson
Lynwood M. Holland
Charles D. Hounshell
Miriam Howell
Ronald F. Howell
Sara Nell Howell
Charles M. Huguley Jr.
Asa A. Humphries Jr.
James M. Hund
Jane A. Russell
Steven E. Mayer
Nancy S. Meleen
C. E. Miller
Faith S. Miller
H. Prentice Miller
Hugh Miller
James A. Miller
Elizabeth Mills
Barbara Montgomery
Neil C. Moran
Martha E. Morehead
Rachel O. Murrah
George Neely
J. Carlton Nunan
Ward Pafford
Evangeline Papageorge
Merrill M. Parvis
Justus R. Pearson Jr.
Garland Perdue
Carl C. Pfeiffer
Robert B. Platt
Alberto Porqueras
R. Waldo Powell
Frederick Carl Prussner
James Rabun
Charles Gray Jr.
Agnes L. Reagan
Allen Rebuck
Ellis Heber Rece
Bryan L. Redd Jr.
John M. Reiner
James I. Robertson Jr.
James V. Rogers Jr.
Robert H. Rohrer
Evelyn Rowe
E. Earl Royals
Theodore Runyon Jr.
Nina E. Rusk

new businesses and industries will

EMORY

Continued From Page 1

school program for the approximately 200 children of the faculty.

"We have so many faculty people who could get jobs anywhere else, and would, if their children did not have schools to attend. If the schools close, we will certainly try to do something for the children," Dr. Martin said.

He also said the committee is studying a proposal that Emory set up a subfreshman program to offer opportunity for some 1,000 rising seniors from Atlanta Public School System to complete their education.

Signers of the Emory Faculty statement include: W. C. Archie, dean and professor of romance languages; William Ragsdale Cannon, dean of the Candler School of Theology and professor of church history and historical theology; Thon H. Goff, professor of business administration and acting dean of the business school; Charles T. Lester, dean of the graduate school and professor of chemistry.

H. Prentice Miller, dean of the Lower Division and associate professor of biochemistry; Ellis Herber Rece, dean of students and professor of Bible and religious education, and Mack Boyd Stokes, professor of systematic theology and associate dean of the school of theology.

The signers included members of the faculties of the schools of medicine, nursing, business administration, law, theology, basic sciences, art and sciences and graduate studies, representatives of Emory-at-Oxford and more than 95 per cent of the 135 members of the schools of arts and sciences and graduate studies signed.

3 WINNERS

Continued From Page 1

ting down on her pay. She has three children, 9 to 14. Her husband is a mechanic.

The Kents moved here last July 4 from Bessemer, Ala. She has been working my puzzle all along, and came close to winning several times.

* * *

MRS. MOOREHEAD, "old enough to retire" from the legal division of the Veterans Administration, said she had been entering the contest "just to pass the time away."

"I can't believe it," she said. "It never occurred to me that I might win anything."

But there she was, one of my three winners.

We have a new puzzle next week, you know, and the jackpot again starts at $500. So all you puzzle lovers turn to Page 22A and get busy.

* * *

WANT TO KNOW why you missed last week, all of you except my three winners?

No. 9 across should have been SHIN, not SKIN.

No. 20 across should have been LOT, not POT.

No. 28 across should have been HEM, not GEM.

No. 5 down should have been DUET, not DUEL.

No. 11 down should have been RUST, not RUSH.

No. 24 down should have been FEW, not NEW.

So there you are, and here we go again. Good luck.

Archbishop Improves

LONDON, Nov. 29 (AP)—The Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Geoffrey Fisher, is making satisfactory progress after a hernia operation, his office announced Saturday. The 71-year-old leader of the Anglican church, underwent the operation Friday.

strengthen them and improve them.

in 1946.

Emory Faculty Signers

Here is an alphabetical list of Emory faculty that signed the school statement:

Robert E. Adamson
Joseph Airov
Allen D. Albert Jr.
Arthur T. Allen Jr.
Robert W. Allen
Thomas J. J. Altizer
Barbara Ames
William W. Amis
W. C. Archie
Orico Attauc
Patsy Atwater
Ralph Baer
James A. Bain
Woolford B. Baker
Albert Edward Barnett
Heinz Bauer
William A. Beardslee
Alvin V. Beatty
W. Duane Belt
Immanuel Ben-Dor
Francis S. Benjamin Jr.
William Bevan Jr.
O. Francis Binkley
Jack S. Boozer
Alvin Boskoff
G. H. Bourne
Boone Moss Bowen
David Brandes
George F. Brasington
Gerhard A. Brecher
William E. Brillhart
Jacqueline D. Brimmer
Ignatius W. Brock
H. Eugene Brown
Jack H. U. Brown
Reuben J. Brown
Robert L. Brown
Thomas M. Brumbaugh
William D. Burbanck
Charles A. Burnett
Lyle E. Campbell
William Ragsdale Cannon
Robert W. Carney
William A. Cassel
Frank J. Charvat
Marion T. Clark
Cooper C. Clements
H. Lawrence Clever
Joseph M. Conant
Melvin L. Conrad
George F. Cooper Jr.
R. Linton Cox Jr.
Howard R. Cramer
George P. Cuttino
R. A. Day Jr.
William J. Dickey
Arthur T. Dietz
John F. Doby
Edward R. Dorney
Elizabeth Donovan
Margaret C. Drummond
R. Bingham Duncan
Eugene Dutton
Virgil Y. C. Eady
Marshall R. Elizer
Patrick F. Elliott
Stanley Ellis
Thomas H. English
Trevor Evans
Frank W. Fales
O. Floyd Feely Jr.
Arva Colbert Floyd
Ada Fort
Herbert E. Francis Jr.
Roland Mushat Frye
Robert W. Funk
E. Clinton Gardner
Allen K. Garrison
Warren E. Gauerke
Alex H. Gay
Hazel Ann Gill
James A. Gentry Jr.
John H. Goff
Abner Golden
Jacob H. Goldstein
Chauncey G. Goodchild
Richard A. Goodling
Bruce R. Gordon
Paul J. Gordon
Cullen B. Gosnell
James A. Gould
Edward Grace
Willard H. Grant
Stephen W. Gray
Donald Ross Green
John Willis Gregory
Albert Griffin
John A. Griffin
Donald F. Groth
Joseph E Guillebeau
Helen Hagan
Barnard L. Hallman
Maoel Hamrick
F. Lane Hardy
Marvin H. Harper
Martha Ray Harris
Charles R. Hart
Charles Hartshorne
Curry T. Haynes
Richard L. Henderson
Garland Herndon
Marion Hines
Richard Hocking
Newton C. Hodgson
Lynwood M. Holland
Charles D. Hounshell
Miriam Howell
Ronald F. Howell
Sara Nell Howell
Charles M. Huguley Jr.
Asa A. Humphries Jr.
James M. Hund
Ernest L. Hunt
Walter Isaac
Augustus W. Jackson
Charlotte Jackson
Evalene Parsons Jackson
Elizabeth H. Jenney
Harold L. Johnson
William H. Jones
Gerald Ray Jordan
G. Stanley Joslin
Elliot Juni
Grant E. Kaiser
Edith Karush
Ruth C. Kelly
Arthur T. Kittle
Roger Klein
Mabel Korsell
Edward T. Ladd
Maurice Curtis Langhorne
Frank Lanni
Yvonne Lanni
Andrew Lasslo
Claiborne G. Latimer
Luis Leal
Ted F. Leigh
Ernest S. Lent
Charles T. Lester
William Lewis
Franklin N. Littell
Bruce Logue
John B. Lyon Jr.
Guy R. Lyle
D. J. McCorquodale
Thomas E. McDonough
James R. Major
William C. Mallard
William Mallard
Cynthia Mallory
Leon Mandell
Harold W. Mann
Edwin T. Martin
Romeo J. Martin
W. Roy Mason Jr.
Joseph J. Mathews
James William May
Steven E. Mayer
Nancy S. Meleen
C. E. Miller
Faith S. Miller
H. Prentice Miller
Hugh Miller
James A. Miller
Elizabeth Mills
Barbara Montgomery
Neil C. Moran
Martha E. Morehead
Rachel O. Murrah
George Neely
J. Carlton Nunan
Ward Pafford
Evangeline Papageorge
Merrill M. Parvis
Justus R. Pearson Jr.
Garland Perdue
Carl C. Pfeiffer
Robert B. Platt
Alberto Porqueras
R. Waldo Powell
Frederick Carl Prussner
James Rabun
Charles Gray Jr.
Agnes L. Reagan
Allen Rebuck
Ellis Heber Rece
Bryan L. Redd Jr.
John M. Reiner
James I. Robertson Jr.
James V. Rogers Jr.
Robert H. Rohrer
Evelyn Rowe
E. Earl Royals
Theodore Runyon Jr.
Nina E. Rusk
Jane A. Russell
Annelle Samply
Robert L. Scranton
Raymond Shapira
Walter H. Sheldon
Samuel M. Shiver Jr.
James W. Simmons
Alfred G. Smith
Garland G. Smith
James M. Smith
Philip E. Smith
Ernest L. Snodgrass
Nan L. Springstead
John C. Stephens
Peter A. Stewart
V. W. Steward
Mack Boyd Stokes
John Paul Strain
Walter A. Strauss
Edmund W. Strozier
William A. Strozier
George Szabo
Morris Tager
Neil C. Tappen
Claude Holmes Thompson
William M. Tucker
Barbara S. Uehling
Arthur L. Underwood
Douglas A. Unfug
Nancy W. Walls
Judson C. Ward Jr.
Theodore R. Weber
Sam C. Webb
E. Chappell White
William Tate Whitman
Bell I. Wiley
M. C. Wiley
Alfred E. Wilhelmi
Harriet Williams
Harry L. Williams
Mary Margaret Williams
William R. Williams
R. Hugh Wood
Paul Worley
James Harvey Young

Families who plan together, are more and becoming conscious of teaching the lesson of th their children by opening an account fo at Decatur Federal and encouraging their ch to add to their savings reg
This method has already begun to build funds for education of these children who must compete in a worl demand for unskilled workers will be at a mi Money placed with Decatur Federal before Dec. 1 earn a cash dividend on De

Be sure to see
"You Are There"
Sunday, 4 p.m.
WSB-TV CHANNEL 2

DEC
Fede and Lo
GEORGE C. MUNN, Chai
J. W.

Main Office: 103 SYCAM
Branch Office

ATLANTA JOURNAL May 18, 1961

Southwest Group Urges Racial Calm

The Southwest Atlanta Community Council has appealed to citizens and civic organizations for help in maintaining law and order when schools desegregate this fall.

The council met Wednesday afternoon to put its appeal in the form of a letter to every civic, religious and educational group in southwest Atlanta.

The letter was said to be, in part, a result of the efforts of OASIS (Organizations Assisting Schools in September) to create "a climate of calm, dignified acceptance of desegregation in the fall."

Rev. W. H. Rittenhouse Jr. addressed the council at its luncheon meeting. "I, as a pastor, am going to back the law of the land whatever the law is," he said. "We've got to put into people (the proposition) that here is a law, and now are we going to face it and act congenially and act like people ought to act."

The Rev. Mr. Rittenhouse is pastor of Sylvan Hills Baptist Church.

* * *

THE COUNCIL based its letter on the premise that "in September of this year the 11th and 12th grades of the Atlanta public schools will be desegregated."

"This is a fact we must face. There is no alternative short of closing our schools . . . the first assumption or condition that we must accept is that desegregation is a fact in law," the letter said. "Our purpose in writing this letter is to alert our community service groups, through their leadership, to the great need for a sane approach to this problem."

The council, which is headed by Ed S. Cook Jr., area school superintendent, said it was not attempting to change anyone's personal views on segregation.

* * *

HOWEVER, said the letter, laws must be obeyed whether they are liked or not. Outlined were courses individual citizens should take.

1. Stay calm and exercise "mature and calculated judgment."
2. Act always within the law.
3. Discourage and attempt to calm those of his friends who get emotional over the situation.
4. Support proper authorities as they attempt to preserve order.
5. Inform police of "cladestine" atempts to violence or intimidation.
6. Encourage children to see "the virtue of these same precepts."

* * *

THE LETTER said community groups should:

1. Arrive at, and clearly state, aims and position, publicly, if possible.
2. Adopt resolutions condemning acts of violence and intimidation.
3. Not take sides with "extremists."
4. Conduct a program of education of members and the general public.

"Let's strive with all the sincerity of our beings to preserve peace and tranquility through our time of testing," said the letter. "We can profit from the mistakes and the tragedies of our sister cities."

"We must back up our school officials, cooperate with the police department and discourage those who kindle strife," the letter concluded.

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION May 20, 1961

Obey School Edict, Atlanta Bar Asks

By BRUCE GALPHIN

The governing body of the Atlanta Bar Association called on all Atlantans Friday to abide by the federal court's school desegregation orders next fall and maintain the peace.

"There would be chaos and anarchy if each citizen were free to choose which decisions of the courts he would obey," an official statement of the group's executive committee declared.

The statement, adopted unanimously by the executive committee, was the strongest position yet taken by the group on the school question. Previously it had endorsed open-school legislation.

A spokesman explained that the committee had decided several weeks ago that a clear-cut statement of law was necessary because:

1. The public was being misled by statements of self-styled constitutional authorities.

2. The full impact of desegregation would be coming home to Atlantans when the School Board in June announces assignment of Negroes to formerly all-white schools.

The executive committee chose what it called a "blue-ribbon"

Continued on Page 5, Column 1

Continued From Page 1

panel to draft the statement. Those chosen were Robert B. Troutman Sr., chairman; Edward S. White, Randolph Thrower, Robert B. Sams, F. M. Bird and Joseph L. Abraham.

The statement follows:

"The U.S. District Court sitting in Atlanta has entered an order which ends compulsory segregation of the races in the Atlanta public schools. It will become effective upon the reopening of the schools in September. The questions decided in the case have been before the courts for a long number of years and have been determined by the Supreme Court of the United States, in litigation, in which all parties at interest were heard.

"The District Court had no choice in the matter. The judge adopted the only course open to him in conformity with his oath of office and in conformity with controlling law.

"It is no longer a matter of preference or choice. The judgment is conclusive and binding. It is the fundamental law under our constitutions and under our American system.

"We remind every citizen of the fundamental fact that our very lives, our liberty, our rights to our homes and other property are dependent upon our system of law. Obedience to the decisions of our courts, which protect these rights, is the heart of our system. This is true whether an individual agrees with the court or not. There would be chaos and anarchy if each citizen were free to choose which decisions of the courts he would obey.

MUST BAR HATRED

"Civilization cannot exist without order, and order cannot be maintained without law. Atlanta, as a great and civilized city, is dependent on the determination of its people to avoid the hatred, bitterness and destruction that accompany lawlessness, and the fear and insecurity generated by disrespect for law.

"We recognize the special responsibility of lawyers to encourage respect for law and for our courts. The Atlanta Bar Association, therefore, calls upon all persons in this community to conduct themselves as good citizens, to obey the order of the District Court, and to give sincere help to our school officials as they endeavor to perform their difficult duty under it."

Virginia – Dope

The Southern PATRIOT

(Reprinted from)

Vol. 23, No. 7

September, 1965

Published by the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc.

The Accents are Southern

Experiment in Virginia

(By Staff Correspondent)

BLACKSTONE, Va. — It's very much like the 1964 Mississippi Summer Project in miniature—except that the accents of most of the workers are Southern.

This is the 1965 Summer Project of the Virginia Students Civil Rights Committee (VSCRC), headquartered in Blackstone and fanning out through six Black Belt counties.

Through the summer, 20 young people worked in the project, 15 of them white, virtually all students in seven Virginia colleges, most of them native Southerners.

Ben Montgomery, chairman of VSCRC and a student last year at Hampton Institute. tells how it came about:

"We began talking at a statewide student conference called by SNCC last fall. We decided we didn't need to go to Mississippi to find work that needed doing. We had problems right here."

—Southern Patriot Photo

DISCUSSING VIRGINIA'S 'CONTROLLED SOCIETY' and what to do about it, some members of the Virginia summer student project gather in front of their Blackstone headquarters, (from left) Howard Romaine, University of Virginia, Lucius "Duke" Edwards, Virginia State College, David Lubs, University of Virginia, and Ben Montgomery, Hampton Institute.

The area they chose, Virginia's Black Belt, lies south of Richmond, the state's Fourth Congressional District. Negroes make up 47.9 per cent of the District population and are a majority in 10 of its 18 counties. Last June only 18.6 per cent of those eligible were registered to vote.

Median income for the entire district is $3,532 a year—putting it 405th among the 435 congressional districts in the nation; from one fourth to one third of the Negro families earn less than $1,000 a year. The area is rural, the main crop tobacco.

To the casual observer, however, there is nothing at all like Mississippi's vast flat stretches of cotton fields sprinkled with tiny cabins and then one big mansion where the owner lives. The country here is prettier—hills and greenery and variety.

"The problems are covered up better," explains Lucius "Duke" Edwards, a project worker. "Many people think Virginia Negroes are free just because nobody is shooting at them every few nights."

Edwards says that if Mississippi is the "closed society," Virginia is the "controlled society."

Traditionally, this state has been run from the top by the few. Registration and voting figures are among the lowest in the nation, for white as well as Negro. The government is highly centralized. Real power lies with circuit court judges elected by the legislature; the judges appoint key local officials including those who control schools and welfare.

Even local elected officials are beholden to centralized power, because a state compensation board annually fixes their salaries. The whole system was made to order for machine control, which Virginia has long had.

How do a handful of idealistic college students go about tackling such a formidable force to let some fresh air of democracy in?

You start somewhere, these students say—in one county, now six counties, later more. And you work, you have faith—and when you get discouraged you start all over.

The first thing these students did, last winter, was research. No civil rights project in the South has been more carefully prepared for than this one. They collected facts and figures on the area. Then they visited some local people.

Then they talked among themselves. Stanley Wise of the SNCC staff met with them. By summer they were deeply imbued with the SNCC philosophy that an organizer is not a missionary who goes out to help "the people" but a catalyst who helps people help themselves.

"Our job," explains Howard Romaine of the University of Virginia, "is to find out what people want and need and help them organize themselves."

So this summer they spent a lot of time just listening.

Voter registration was an obvious objective, but far from the only one. Crop allotments were a big issue, for there is often evidence of discrimination.

Lack of jobs is a major problem for Negro young people; most of them leave, a Lunenburg County youth told the Patriot reporter, because they think they will find a job in the North. They rarely do, so usually come back—and join the Army as a last resort.

And sometimes the problem was just food.

"Let's don't talk about civil rights, honey, let's talk about food," one woman told Anne Romaine (Howard's wife; there were two young married couples on the project). This woman had four children and was really hungry. So that set the students to trying to get surplus food into the county.

SCOPE, the summer organizing project of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, also had workers in this area (they were from out of state), and a Presbyterian group had a tutoring project. They all worked together.

What is the reaction of local Negroes to these white students who come to their homes—not Northern students but white Southerners?

"They just don't believe it," laughed Duke Edwards, himself a Negro. "They ask where they are from, and the kids say Virginia Project....

(Continued from Page 1)

Staunton or Lynchburg, or somewhere else in Virginia—and they can't believe it."

Trust, of course, does not come overnight, but it is not impossible, and real relationships grew.

As for the white students themselves, they are an inspiring group; full of the contagious joy of those who have found their way out of the sham of the Southern segregated world. Unlike the mavericks of earlier generations, they are beginning to have the numbers that make them know they are part of a real movement.

There is Howard Romaine, native of Louisiana who was studying bio-chemistry when he discovered the sit-ins and Mississippi and the movement and couldn't get his mind on the chemistry anymore ("It bugged me, man, it bugged me.") There is Nan Grogan, cheerleader at a Virginia high school, social leader at Mary Washington College—until she worked in an Atlanta slum on a YWCA project, saw poverty first-hand, found SNCC, went to Mississippi.

And so on down the list—each with his own story, breaking away, finding freedom.

Nan Grogan thinks they feel it all more deeply than many Northern students who come South. She worked in Mississippi last summer and was amazed during the winter when she visited another summer worker in New England and found that his interest in the movement had cooled.

"They went home to be heroes, had dinners given in their honor, all that," she explains. "If you are from the South and work in the movement, you may go home to ostracism and pain. So you think a long time and when you make up your mind you really believe."

One future objective of the Virginia project will be to organize among the poor white people as well as the Negroes of this impoverished region and to bring them together.

There is also talk of literacy schools, political action to support independent candidates for both local and state offices, and community organizations to make use of anti-poverty programs in a way that makes them really belong to the local people.

The project will continue; some summer workers will stay. Those returning to campuses will be telling their experiences, attempting to bring other searching young people to the wide world of emancipation and social commitment. There will be weekend organizing projects during the year, and hopefully many more on the job next summer.

Here perhaps is the greatest significance of this project: not only Southern black and white students working together, but working in communities close to home and thus bridging the gap that so often separates the intellectual from his fellowman.

(The Virginia student project is not the child of any national organization, so has limited financial resources. You can make a tax exempt donation through the Southern Student Organizing Committee (SSOC) P.O. Box 6403, Nashville, Tenn., which is supporting them. Make checks to SSOC, and mark them for VSCRC.)

Southern Students Organize

—Patriot Photo

THE VIRGINIA STUDENTS and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference's SCOPE workers jointly set up an office, library and community center in Victoria, Va. Here SCOPE worker Bill Monnie of West Virginia Wesleyan College (left) talks with a local civil rights worker, John Boyd.

HELPING LOCAL PEOPLE learn the mechanics of organizing is part of the Virginia students' work. Here two project workers, Howard Romaine (left) and Bill Towe, show Richard Wallace and Lawrence Fowlks how to run the mimeograph machine.

SUPPORT VSCRC NOW

The Work in Virginia Must Continue !!!

Tear Off And Return to:

Enclosed is my contribution of $ Or,

I pledge $ per month to the Virginia Students for Civil Rights Committee (VSCRS).

Name.....

Address.....

City.....State.....

(Zip Code)

Contributors to VSCRC receive a subscription to the NEW VIRGINIA. Send to: VSCRS, Box 79, Kenbridge, Va.

New Rep 1/7/67
Black Power

The Future of "Black Power"

A Movement in Search of a Program

by Andrew Kopkind

In the six months since the Meredith marchers first cried it aloud, "black power" has won a certain acceptance, if not by logical argument then by default. Integration has been whipped by the front-, side-, and back-lash; the war on poverty is in retreat; reform politics stopped abruptly on November 8 and may not start again in this generation. Even so, black power remains an untested evocation of moods and expectations. If it can be the basis for a program of action, the young organizers of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee will have to do much of the hard work. Early in December, they met for ten days in the Catskills to make their plans.

SNCC staff conferences are always something between psychodrama and guerrilla school. People wander in and out of meetings, and in and out of town, at all hours. No one is quite sure when a conference will end, if at all. When it is over, none of the participants can say exactly what happened; as in Marienbad, reality is a very personal thing. But SNCC meetings have had an effect on the country hugely out of proportion to their public visibility. The first ones, in the early 'sixties, formulated the strategy of direct action and established sit-ins as practically a way of life for young Americans. Out of the next set of meetings came the rudiments of black political movements in the South, and led to the formation of the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party. Out of SNCC's experience, as well as its romanticism, came the notion that the very poor, and particularly rural Southern Negroes, are uniquely qualified to direct campaigns for social change. And at the conference last May, Stokely Carmichael was elected national chairman and the outlines of black power were drawn.

The December meeting, logically, would help fill in the outline. But at the beginning, the hundred or so staff members were more concerned with white power than black. Carmichael and others of his particular persuasion arrived to find the conference in the hands of a "nationalist" caucus. Its line was simple: withdrawal. The nationalists wanted the last few remaining white workers in SNCC booted out. They would have nothing to do with white America around them, and if they could not leave it physically, then they would retreat into the fortress of black consciousness.

The Carmichael faction was appalled. "It took them three days to recover, just to the point where they could define their own terms," one worker said. Carmichael and those who came with him out of Howard University in the early 'sixties have never been separatists. "Blackness," Courtland Cox likes to say, "is necessary but not sufficient." They see that whites can help in several ways: on the impersonal (but often controlling) level of money, then as protection against political attacks, and, at the end, as partners in radical social movements. But the major strategic consideration at this point is to get Negroes – the young, the poor, the ghettoized – to believe in their own potential.

"The one thing SNCC is fighting is white supremacy," Charlie Cobb, another of the Howard group, said. "We're fighting the paralysis that it has caused among blacks. We've got to get blacks to unlearn that." Carmichael has been trying to do that since last spring, and his method is the celebration of black power.

A former (white) SNCC member explained it: "You don't get support from mainstream whites, or from Negroes who think they're in the mainstream. You see that the mainstream isn't going to change things, but you aren't strong enough yet to rely on the outsiders. People get bought off, or tempted, or frightened. So you've got to build a whole new culture – of blackness."

SNCC has been more successful in that strategy in a few months than other Negro leaders (except, perhaps, for Malcolm X – posthumously) have ever been. Carmichael "turns on" the people in Watts who kicked Martin Luther King out when he came to quiet the community during the 1965 revolt. He does it by exciting them about their own possibilities in America, and also by painting a historical picture of the development of Africa and the "third world." SNCC people like to talk about a "Black Belt" of a hundred million people, stretching from the Aleutians to the southern tip of the Andes. That view of the world justifies SNCC's charge that the war in Vietnam is "racist," and its characterization of Negro soldiers as "black mercenaries" in the United States Army.

There is a debate in SNCC about whether it is necessary to build its new "culture" on a base of anti-colonialism, or on the history of the struggle of black people in the US. The problem with the former is that as the work of bringing change gets harder, people will engage in fantasies and wait for the Zambian Air Force to save American Negroes.

In one way, SNCC is selecting its own audience, and is sensitizing it to the presence of whites. Much of the audience reacts without the strategic subtlety that Carmichael would like. They have already "unlearned" the lessons of white supremacy; what they have not yet learned (and what SNCC may be failing to teach them) are the tough techniques and discipline of radical political motion. "It's a hard job," one white friend of SNCC said not long ago; "sort of like teaching Trotskyists to be Young Democrats." But Carmichael's new constituents don't want to explain to the young white radicals in their midst that they must work separately, love each other, and develop independently. They just want to bop them on their heads.

The SNCC "nationalists' " hang-up took up half the December conference. They argued that the organization's purpose – as Carmichael himself once wrote – was to "address itself to the problem of helping black communities define their needs, realize their strength, and go into action along a variety of lines which they must choose for themselves." Whites – even sympathetic ones – were not only irrelevant to that mission; they negated the "model" of black movement.

The Carmichael group – composed largely of the veterans of the Southern civil rights campaigns – has its own ambivalence about white-black relationship. But its partisans said that it was at least nonsense, and perhaps self-defeating to worry about the handful of whites in SNCC. The organization was already overwhelmingly black, and it was necessary to keep up contacts with white radicals and somehow important to keep SNCC from freezing. "Organizing in the North is cold," Carmichael said later. "You've got to become like ice. In the South there is some sense of community; in the North everyone is hustling, one against another." Just the effort it takes to "love" whites could have a salutary effect.

The debate dragged on, and a series of votes were taken on the proposal to exclude whites. At one point, former executive secretary James Forman moved to disband SNCC completely; he lost. One long-time white staffer came to talk about a project for organizing poor whites in the South; it was never formally considered. Later, he was asked to leave the meeting while the status of whites in the group was being discussed. Mrs. Fannie Lou Hamer, a SNCC stalwart and a powerful figure in the Mississippi Freedom Democrats, was honored at SNCC's annual dinner, whereupon she turned on her old friends, as much in sadness as in anger, for growing "cold" and unloving. By so saying, Mrs. Hamer invoked the shade of Bob Moses (now called Parris), who still hovers over SNCC meetings. The legend of his hard, gem-like humanism is probably much overdrawn, but much of what goes on in SNCC, black and white, touches the Moses myth at one point or another.

Bob Moses was a young black intellectual from the North who went into Mississippi before anyone else, was forced out, but developed the brilliant Summer Project in 1964 and came back. He left a few months later, agonizing over his role as the "leader" he never wanted to be. He does not come around to SNCC conferences these days – no one is quite sure where he is – but he remains the moral touchstone of the older SNCC people, at least.

The final vote on the "white question" was taken at three in the morning. As a compromise, it was phrased so as to allow whites to remain in fund-raising and administrative work, but exclude them from organizing or policy roles. Carmichael voted against it, but the proposal passed 19 to 18; there were two dozen abstentions, and almost half the staff members were not even present.

When they stopped talking about whites, the SNCC workers began to get down to the crucial problem of their organization, and of the whole Negro movement. "We're in a bind," Carmichael said. "How do we 'program' black power?"

SNCC could not yet resolve the dilemma – partly because of its preoccupation with "white power." It may also be the case that conditions are not yet ripe for the development of those simple "programs" that people tell SNCC to develop. The constituency of black people who are aware of their situation in American society, in SNCC's terms, is small. And the larger society is just liberal enough, and just flexible enough, to smother radical programs almost as they take first breath.

Tentative Conclusions

At least SNCC knows it has to grapple with the problem of rhetoric versus program, and the conference came to a number of tentative conclusions that established a direction for black radical energies over the next years.

First of all, the focus of new activities will definitely swing to Northern urban areas from the rural South. As SNCC sees it, the failure of the Lowndes County Freedom Organization (the "Black Panther Party") and the Mississippi Freedom Democrats to take power is not so much a function of bad organizing as it is of isolation. "The place that really has the power is the North," Carmichael said. That is, it has the troops who are "cold" enough to disrupt the society and build independent movements.

In Northern cities (and perhaps some urbanized areas of the South, which behave like Northern ghettoes), SNCC wants to start "freedom organizations," with their own political, educational, economic, and cultural components. That may mean third political parties, co-op businesses, freedom schools, and "afro" cultural centers. In the past several months, there are examples of all of them, only a few SNCC-inspired, in many cities. But SNCC's resources for nitty-gritty organizing – and perhaps its will to work in a low key over a long period of time – are thin. There are only two SNCC projects going on with much seriousness in the North – in Philadelphia and New York – and neither is yet much more than a first-step affair. The problem of constructing real institutions, not just rhetorical ones, is almost impossibly hard. So far, SNCC has tried to capitalize on other people's crises – a rent strike here, a campaign for "black control" there (as in the attempt of Harlem parents to take over school policy-making at IS 201).

The concept of "black power" itself is creative enough; it has already been appropriated by firmly "established" Negroes and whites as a basis for less radical reforms. The housing proposals of Professors Cloward and Piven (presented in this journal, December 17) were black power ideas. Many of the plans heard by the Ribicoff committee on urban problems were black power plans, although the planners might look on the term with horror.

